1700018471

MORRIS HARVEY COLLEGE
CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA

ANDREW S. THOMAS
MEMORIAL LIBRARY

CALL NUMBER 220.7 G793b
v.2

ACCESSION 1664

Chas D. Lear
Oct 16 - 14

DATE DUE

GAYLORD			PRINTED IN U.S.A.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2026

https://archive.org/details/biblicalencyclop0002jame_f9u6

THE

BIBLICAL ENCYCLOPEDIA

A COLLECTION OF NOTES

EXPLANATORY, HOMILETIC AND ILLUSTRATIVE

FORMING A

COMPLETE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

ESPECIALLY DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF

MINISTERS, BIBLE STUDENTS AND SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS

BY JAMES COMPER GRAY

AND

REV. GEORGE M. ADAMS, D. D.

DISCARD

THE OLD TESTAMENT

VOL. II

CONTAINING CHRONICLES TO PROVERBS INCLUSIVE

CLEVELAND, OHIO
F. M. BARTON CO.
706-712 CAXTON BUILDING
1910

220.7
G793L
v.2

Copyrighted 1903
BY F. M. BARTON

THE BOOKS OF CHRONICLES.

[3]

1664

Introduction.

I. Title. The two Bks. of Chrons., comprised in one by the anc. Jews were called by them "THE WORDS OF DAYS," or "ANNALS;" "prob. fr. the circumstance of their being compiled out of diaries or annals, in wh. were recorded the various events related in these books" (Horne). They are termed in the LXX. "The things that were left or omitted" (PARALEIPOMENA), bec. "they supply omissions in the other historical books" (Litton). The title of Chronicles was given to them by Jerome, bec. they contain an abstract, in order of time, of the whole of the sacred history, to the time when they were written. II. Time. Not composed bef. time of Ezra, for they close with the acc. that Cyrus, by an edict in the first yr. of his reign, allowed the Jews to return to their country (II. xxxvi. 22, ff.), and bring down the genealogical tree of Zerubbabel to his grandchildren. (I. iii. 19–21.)—Keil. About 410 B. C. may be named as the probable time when those books were compiled. III. Author. Gen. ascr. to Ezra. There is much to favor this view, but it cannot be regarded at all as established. In any case some portions (I. iii. 19–24) must be ascribed to a later hand. IV. Design and characteristics. "Their main scope is to raise into conspicuous prominence the religious and eternal aspect of the kingdom of God, as contradistinguished from the civil and temporal form of government under which the people of God were then constrained to live, and so to exhibit such a view of the former course of events as would fitly introduce the state of things presented in the narrative of Ezra and Nehemiah. Recapitulating the history of man before the times of David, they present the higher aspect of that kingdom, which took its origin from his family, had the promise of a perpetual duration, and was to culminate in the Messiah. The history of David and his line is therefore traced to the exclusion of that of the ten tribes, which became, by their apostasy, strangers to the covenant of promise, and with constant reference to the loftier destiny of his throne as the kingdom of God that cannot be moved. Hence the religious, not the civil, undertakings of its kings are dwelt upon with special attention. And the narrative is carried on beyond the burning of the temple and beyond the life of Jehoiachin to the proclamation of Cyrus, authorizing and inviting the banished people to return to Jerusalem, and rebuild the temple and the city. This furnishes the fitting link, to which may be attached the books of Ezra and Nehemiah, containing the history of the remnant who returned on this invitation, until it vanishes in the inert and obscure interval between the Old and the New Testament."—Murphy.

Synopsis.

(According to Horne.)

Part I. — GENEALOGICAL TABLES FROM ADAM TO TIME OF EZRA.

Sect. 1. The patriarchs fr. Adam to Jacob — of posterity of Judah to David — and of his to Zerubbabel, I. i.–iii.

Sect. 2. Of posterity of Judah by Pharez — and of other sons of Jacob, iv.–viii., ix. 1

Sect. 3. Of first inhabs. of Jerusalem after captiv..... ix. 2–34

Part II. — HISTORIES OF SAUL AND DAVID.

Sect. 1. Pedigree of Saul...I. ix. 35–44, x.

Sect. 2. Hist. of reign of David, xi.–xxix. 22

Part III. HISTORY OF UNITED KINGDOMS OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH UNDER SOLOMON.

Sect. 1. Death of David. Wisdom, etc., of Solomon..I. xxix. 23–30, II. i.

Sect. 2. Solomon's temple, etc., II. ii.–viii. 16

Sect. 3. End of Solomon's reign, viii. 17–ix.

Part IV. HISTORY OF KINGDOM OF JUDAH FROM JEROBOAM TO ITS TERMINATION.

Sect. 1. Rehoboam..... II. x.–xii.

Sect. 2. Abijah and Asa. .....xiii. –xvi.

Sect. 3. Jehoshaphat..... xvii.–xx.

Sect. 4. Jehoram, Ahaziah, and Athaliah..... xxi., xxii.

Sect. 4. Joash .....xxiii., xxiv.

Sect. 6. Amaziah, Uzziah, and Jotham, xxv.–xxvii.

Sect. 7. Ahaz.....xxviii.

Sect. 8. Hezekiah.....xxix.–xxxii.

Sect. 9. Manasseh, Amon..... xxxiii.

Sect. 10. Josiah.. .....xxxiv., xxxv.

Sect. 11. Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, Zedekiah; destr. of Jerusalem and temple.....xxxvi.

(Contents according to Murphy.) — These books are naturally divided into four parts. Part I., including nine chapters, consists of a series of genealogies or a bare summary of the ancient history of man in the line of Israel to the time of David. The first chapter brings down the genealogy from Adam to Israel. The following eight chapters trace the pedigree of most of the tribes of Israel generally to the captivity, in which they were removed from their country. The pedigree of David in particular is continued down to the building of the second temple. And that of Aaron is extended to Jozadak, who was carried into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar. Part II., completing the first book, contains the history of David Part III., in nine chapters, comprises the reign of Solomon. And part IV., being the remainder of the second book, continues the history of the line of David and the kingdom of Judah to the proclamation of Cyrus authorizing the return of the people and the rebuilding of the temple.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

B. C. 4004, etc.

Adam's posterity

1—16. (1) This list is taken fr. Ge. v. and x., and the differences in the names arise fr. a more exact reproduction of the Heb. forms. Sheth, R. V., "Seth." (2) Kenan, Cainan. (3) Henoch, Enoch. (5–16) sons, etc., comp. Ge. x. 2–18.

Lessons from genealogies.— Let us think — I. Of the multitudes that have gone through the world, have acted their part in it, and then quitted it. II. Of the providence of God which keeps up the generations of men, and so preserves that degenerate race, though guilty and obnoxious, in being upon earth.— M. Henry.

Nimrod, the first conqueror.— Previous to this verse we find recorded only names. Nimrod is recalled to mind by a brief but suggestive description. "He began to be mighty upon the earth." It is further narrated in Genesis (x. 9) "he was a mighty hunter before the Lord: wherefore it is said, Even as Nimrod the mighty hunter before the Lord." From this it appears that proverbs and legends grew up round his name. "The Eastern traditions make him a man of violent, lawless habits, a rebel against God, and a usurper of boundless authority over his fellow-men." It may suffice, however, to recognize in him the first person to develop war as an agency for subjecting some portions of the human family to the dominion of others. He is the first warrior, the progenitor of the Alexanders and Napoleons, the great world-conquerors. — Pul. Com. The riddle of life. — How true is that old fable of the sphinx, who sat by the wayside, propounding her riddle to the passengers, which, if they could not answer, she destroyed them! Such a sphinx is this life of ours, to all men and societies of men. Nature, like the sphinx, is of womanly celestial loveliness and tenderness; the face and bosom of a goddess, but ending in claws and the body of a lioness. There is in her a celestial beauty, which means celestial order, pliancy to wisdom; but there is also a darkness, a ferocity, a fatality, which are infernal. She is a goddess, but one not yet disimprisoned; one still half imprisoned — the inarticulate, lovely, still encased in the inarticulate, chaotic. How true! And does she not propound her riddles to us? Of each man she asks daily, in mild voice, yet with a terrible significance, "Knowest thou the meaning of this day? What thou canst do to-day, wisely attempt to do." Nature, universe, destiny, existence, howsoever we name this grand unnamable fact in the midst of which we live and struggle, is as a heavenly bride and conquest to the wise and brave, to them who can discern her behests and do them; a destroying fiend to them who can not. Answer her riddle, it is well with thee. Answer it not, pass on regarding it not, it will answer itself; the solution of it is a thing of teeth and claws. Nature is a dumb lioness, deaf to thy pleadings, fiercely devouring. — Carlyle.

"It is to live twice, when you can enjoy the recollection of your former life."— Martial.

B. C. 2348, etc.

Shem's line to Abraham

17—28. (17) Shem,[a] his descendants are fully given, bec. with them the Bible narrative is mainly concerned. Uz, etc., these are, in Ge. x. 23, said to be the sons of Aram. (19) Peleg = division. "The chronicler intersperses his genealogies with short anecdotes about the different families and tribes."—Bennett. (22) Ebal, in Ge. x. 28 Obal. (24–27) vss. 24–54 correspond to Gen. xi.–xxxvi. Shem . . Abraham, summarized record fr. Ge. xi. 10–26. Shelah, in Ge. Salah. (28) sons of Abraham, here those only are mentioned with wh. Bib. history is concerned. Keturah's family is mentioned separately.[b] Isaac mentioned first, because most important to the history. He was fourteen yrs. younger than Ishmael.

Abraham's double name. — F. W. Robertson has some suggestive remarks on the significance of ancient names in his sermon on "Jacob's Wrestling." He recognizes in the Hebrew history three periods in which names and words bore very different characters. We deal with the first of these periods, when "names meant truths, and words were the symbols of realities. The characteristics of the names given then were simplicity and sincerity. They were drawn from a few simple sources: either from some characteristic of the individual, as Jacob, the 'supplanter;' or from the idea of family, as Benjamin, 'son of my right hand;' or from the conception of the tribe or nation, then gradually consolidating itself; or, lastly, from the religious idea of God." Scripture attaches significance to names, and the precise name indicates the minuteness of the Divine knowledge and the tenderness of the Divine care:

a Comp. Ge. x. 21–29.

b 1 Chr. 1. 32, 33.

"We talk of human life as a journey, but how variously is that journey performed. There are those who walk on velvet lawns and smooth terraces, where every gale is arrested and every beam is tempered. There are others who walk on the Alpine paths of life, through stormy sorrows, over sharp afflictions; walk with bare feet and naked breast, jaded, mangled, and chilled." —Sydney Smith.

B. C. 2348, etc.

"I have called thee by name," "I will give him a new name," etc. So a change of a man's name may seal to him the fact of new, more important, and more tender Divine relations. — Pul. Com. The stream of life. — Life bears us on like a stream of a mighty river. Our boat at first glides down the narrow channel, through the playful murmurings of the little brook, and the winding of the grassy borders. The trees shed their blossoms over our young heads, the flowers on the brink seem to offer themselves to our young hands; we are happy in hope, and we grasp eagerly at the beauties around us; but the stream hurries on, and still our hands are empty. Our course in youth and manhood is along a wilder and deeper flood, amid objects more striking and magnificent. We are animated at the moving pictures of enjoyment and industry passing around us; we are excited at some short-lived disappointment. The stream bears us on, and our joys and griefs are alike left behind us. We may be shipwrecked — we cannot be delayed; whether rough or smooth, the river hastens to its home, till the roar of the ocean is in our ears, and the tossing of the waves is beneath our feet, and the land lessens from our eyes, and the floods are lifted up around us, and we take our leave of earth and its inhabitants, until of our further voyage there is no witness save the Infinite and Eternal. — Bp. Heber.

"The sacramental character of a name consists in its divine appointment to represent and commemorate and testify some special grace and blessing." — Wilkinson.

B. C. 1921, etc.

posterity of Abraham

29—42. (29) Ishmael, mentioned first to clear the way for giving posterity of Isaac, the child of promise. God's promise was that he should beget 12 princes.[a] Nebaioth, etc., comp. Ge. xxv. 13–15. (30) Hadad, in Ge. Hadar. (32) Keturah, etc., this is abridged from Gen. xxv. 1–4. (34) Esau, on the principle mentioned in note on vs. 29, Esau's descendants are dealt with before those of Jacob. (35) sons of Esau, see Ge. xxxvi. 10–13. (36) Zephi, in Ge. Zepho. Timna, in Ge. xxxvi. 12, this is not a son, but concubine wife to Eliphaz. (38) sons of Seir, comp. Ge. xxxvi. 20, 21. (39) Lotan, Ge. xxxvi. 22. Timna, poss. same as vs. 36, if the record in Ge. be the correct one. (40–42) sons, etc., Ge. xxxvi. 23–28.

a Ge. xvii. 20.

"The great northern desert of Arabia, including the entire neck, was colonized by these tribes." — Jamieson.

The perils of life. — Go to some man now past the meridian of life, whose character and habits, with the Divine blessing, have made him honored and successful. He was one of a band, more or less numerous, who set out in life together. They came forth from their homes and from the schoolroom, differing, perhaps, but little either in their talents or acquirements. Ask him to tell you where those his early associates are now, and what he remembers of their history. Ah! how painful the recollection and the recital! One, he will say, as he brings back the half-forgotten past, looked on the wine when it was red, and he went early to the drunkard's grave. Another yielded to the love of vain display; and after a brief career of brilliant folly and extravagance, he passed by bankruptcy to poverty, and was soon forgotten by the world. A third indulged, at first, in some trifling dishonesty, and then he was led on till he became a villain, and finally went to prison, or to an ignominious death. A fourth gave loose to sensual appetite; and then from impurity of thought and word he went on step by step, till he suffered the miseries and met at last the fate of the worn-out profligate A fifth was taken in the gambler's snare, and fell by suicide. A sixth — but why should I go on? So daily perish, on life's broad arena, the hopes of fathers and mothers! So sink into the depths of shame and ruin many who should have shone as brilliant stars in the galaxy of intellect — should have found a place among the noblest spirits that have ever done honor to humanity and claimed the enviable heights of fair renown. The roadside of life is all whitened with the bones of the multitudes who have fallen thus, having made, by their own missteps, an utter wreck of their hopes, their characters, and their all. With such evidence of the perils of life, can it be doubted that youth requires a guide with a friendly hand to lead them? — R. Palmer.

All life is a journey, not a home; those transient enjoyments wh. you have in this life, lawful in their way — those incidental and evanescent pleasures which you may sip — are little inns only upon the roadside of life, where you are refreshed for a moment, that you may take again the pilgrim's staff and journey on, seeking what is still before you — the rest that remaineth for the people of God.

How frail is human life! A thin texture of living flesh is the only screen between never-dying souls and their eternal condition.

kings and dukes of Edom

43—54. (43) the kings, etc., comp. Ge, xxxvi. 31–43. (44) Jobab, is by some supposed to be the Job of the Scripture book. (51) Hadad died, this is added to statement in Gen. xxxvi. 39. Possibly he died during the life-time of Moses, after the account in Gen. was written. the dukes, this word indicates a change in the form of government on the death of Hadad. Zöckler, in Lange's Com., translates "Duke of Timnah, Duke of Aligh," etc., and says "the list enumerates not persons but seats of gov't, and has a geographical rather than geneological importance."

"They only have lived long who have lived virtuously."—Sheridan.

B. C. cir. 1752.

Though transient, not vain. — As we read these following verses and find one king mentioned and then another, with simply the record of his name, his reign and his death, we feel how swiftly flows the current of human life, how many generations have come and gone, how slight attention posterity can spare for those who were once great and honored. Three thoughts befit the theme. I. To each man in his time his heritage seems large and lasting. II. The best earthly estate is a painfully transient thing. III. Our short earthly life is long enough to hold and to work much enduring good. — W. Clarkson.

"There is only one king who shall have no successor, and that king's name is Jesus Christ." — J. Parker.

Divineness of human nature. — With our sciences and our cyclopædias, we are apt to forget the Divineness in those laboratories of ours. We ought not to forget it! That once well forgotten, I know not what else were worth remembering! Most sciences, I think, were then a very dead thing — withered, contentious, empty — a thistle in late autumn. The best science, without this, is but as the dead timber; it is not the growing tree and forest — which gives ever-new timber among other things! Man cannot know either, unless he can worship in some way. His knowledge is a pedantry and dead thistle, otherwise. — Carlyle.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

posterity of Israel and Judah

1—12. (1) Israel, the new and permanent name given to Jacob. The order of the names is peculiar; it neither follows seniority nor legitimacy. Vss. 1 and 2 cover Gen. xxix. to xxxv. (3) Judah, mentioned first bec. the right of primogeniture was transferred to him.[a] Er, Ge. xxxviii. 7. (5) Pharez, Ge. xlvi. 12. (6) sons of Zerah, taken from sources unknown to us. Cf. 1 Ki. iv. 31, where it is said that Solomon was wiser than these four men. "Hence it appears that they were eminent among the sons of the East and of Egypt for their wisdom. In Egypt they dwelt when Joseph was in authority, and his family was still in high esteem; and in Egypt, accordingly, their natural talents for the fine arts and for social wisdom were developed and cultivated. These qualities of the Zarhites descended in the tribe of Judah, and attained their highest lustre in David and Solomon." — Murphy. (7) Carmi, not previously mentioned, but a son of Zimri. Achar, same as Achan.[b] Vss. 10–17 give the descendants of Ram, of the line of David. Comp. Ruth iv. 18–22. Nahshon, cf. Num. i. 7. Probably in this list some names have been omitted. (11) Salma, spelt also Salmah or Salmon.

a Ge. xlix. 8.

b Jos. vii. 1.

vs. 3. "The repetition of a vs. in Genesis, in a very unlikely place — in the midst of names and genealogies; God thus giving us to know the stress He lays on it."— Bonar.

"There will be a resurrection of names some day," says Ruskin.

God's dealing with sin and the sinner (vs. 3, last clause). — I. God's estimate of sin, not man's. The judge's, not physician's, or father's, one of condemnation: not disease or misfortune; but guilt, not a thing of sentiment. II. God's treatment of sin. 1. Prompt; 2. Decided; 3. Severe; 4. Watchful. (1) The sinner a firstborn son; (2) The firstborn of Judah. Jesus, the true "firstborn of Judah," was made sin for us. — Bonar.

"Not only the language of a nation, but its spiritual life is written in its names and words. Read in this light, what meaning is thrown into these dry genealogical trees of the old Testament!"

Sons of Israel sons of Judah. — The child is truly and literally "the heir of all the ages." The past, with all its legacies, has existed for it, just as all the future will be its own. To whatsoever heights of human excellence it may rise, or to whatsoever depths of human degradation it may sink, the child is now an element in the sum of human life; a new unit in the aggregate of mankind. It is therefore worthy both of study and reverence. Did we but form an adequate conception of the dignity and also the marvellousness of human existence, the oldest man might well stand bareheaded and thoughtful in the presence of a babe. — Anon.

children of Jesse

13—17. (13) Jesse begat, etc., 1 Sa. xvi. 10.[c] Shimma, Shammah, in 1 Sa.; Shimeah, 2 Sa. xiii. 3. (14) Raddai, prob. Rei of 1 Ki. i. 8. (16) sisters, by the same mother, not by Jesse.[d] sons of Zeruiah, 2 Sa. ii. 18. Abishai may have been eldest born. (17) Ishmeelite, comp. 2 Sa. xvii. 25. The Sept. has "Jesreelite," which is more likely to be correct. Comp. 1 Chr. iv. 3.

c This list only gives seven sons, the vs. in Samuel indicates that David made eight. Perhaps one died young without issue.

d 2 Sa. xvii. 25.

Greatness. — That which especially distinguishes a high order of man from a low order of man — that which constitutes human goodness, human nobleness — is surely not the degree of enlightenment with which men pursue their own advantage; but it is self-forgetfulness, it is self-sacrifice, it is the disregard of personal pleasure and personal indulgence, personal advantages remote or present. — Froude.

posterity of Caleb and Hezron

18—24. (18) Caleb, vs. 9, Chelubai. and of Jerioth, secondary wife: the names of her children are not given. (19) Ephrath, see vs. 50. (20) Hur, who supported Moses in the battle with Amalek, Gen. xvii. 12. Bezaleel,

B. C. cir. 1471.

the great artificer.[a] (21) Machir, Nu. xxvii. 1. (22) Jair, Nu. xxxii. 41; Ju. x. 4; Josh. xix. 34; Deut. iii. 14; Josh. xiii. 30. (23) took, etc.. R. V., "and Geshur[b] and Aram took the towns of Jair from them, with Kenath and the villages thereof, even three-score cities. All these were the sons of Machir," etc. (24) dead in Caleb-ephratah, i. e. probably Bethlehem.

[a] Ex. xxxi. 2; xxxv. 30; xxxvi. 1, 2; xxxvii. 1.

[b] De. iii. 14; Jos. xii. 5; 2 Sa. xv. 8.

The greatness and littleness of man.—

How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicate, how wonderful, is man!
How passing wonder He who made him such!
Who centred in our make such strange extremes
From different natures marvelously mix'd, Connection exquisite of distant worlds!
Distinguish'd link in being's endless chain!
Midway from nothing to the Deity!
A beam ethereal, sullied and absorpt!
Though sullied and dishonor'd, still Divine!
Dim miniature of greatness absolute!
An heir of glory! a frail child of dust!
Helpless, immortal! insect infinite!
A worm!—a God!— Young.

"Whose silent prayers and labors Heaven employs To do the good, whilst others make the noise."
—Jane Taylor.

posterity of Jerahmeel

25—33. (25) Jerahmeel, vs. 9; this genealogy is not given elsewhere. Ahijah, prob. the name of Jerahmeel's first wife. (26) another, wh. seems to involve that one had been mentioned. (27–33) and . . Jerahmeel, merely genealogical interest attaches to these names. (31) children of, R. V., "sons of," The A. V. was evidently intended to harmonize with vs. 34.

Evil and good men.— An evil man is clay to God, wax to the devil. God may stamp him into powder or temper him anew; but none of His means can melt him. Contrariwise, a good man is God's wax, and Satan's clay; he relents at every look of God, but is not stirred at any temptation. I had rather bow than break to God; but, for Satan and the world, I had rather be broken in pieces with their violence than suffer myself to be bowed to their obedience.—Bp. Hall. The consecration to God of the military talent.—We cannot accept fully the facts of human history without recognizing the Divine gift of the genius of the warrior. Different views are held on the righteousness of war. From the Christian standpoint all offensive war must be at once and entirely condemned, but defensive war — and aid to those called to defensive war — appear to be fully consistent with Christian principles. Still, we shall unfeignedly rejoice when the principle of arbitration can be universally adopted, and the "nations learn war no more." It is, even in its best forms, a terrible human scourge and evil. But, whatever our view of it may be, history keeps her testimony, and declares that, in the long story of our race, war has been one of the important agencies used by God, and overruled by Him, to the accomplishment of His gracious ends; and that He has, again and again, raised up men who had "war" for their life-mission, and the military endowment as their precise trust. There have been the Joshuas, the Davids, the Maccabees, the Marlboroughs, and the Wellingtons, etc. Times and circumstances have made war the only possible agency for the punishing of wrong and the deliverance and confirmation of the right.—Pul. Com.

"Sink not beneath imaginary sorrows; call to your aid your courage and your wisdom: think on the sudden change of human scenes; think on the various accidents of war; think on the mighty power of awful virtue; think on the Providence that guards the good."—Johnson.

As the arteries fill the veins with blood, so the Spirit of Christ fills the soul of the believer with a new life.

posterity of Sheshan

34—41. (35) gave, "that a master who had no male issue might marry a slave to his daughter and adopt him in the place of a son is shown by these verses."— Oehler. (36–41) Attai . . Elishama, none of these names are known to us.

Eastern relation of servants. — The usages of the East differ very much from those of the West, with relation to the more than kind treatment of their servants; but they perfectly agree with those that are referred to in the Scriptures. They marry their slaves frequently to their daughters, and that when they have no male issue, and those daughters are what we call great fortunes. That Hassan, of whom Maillet gives a long account in his eleventh letter, and who was kiaia of the Asaphs of Cairo; that is to say, the colonel of four or five thousand men who go under that name, was the slave of a predecessor in that office, the famous Kamel, and married his daughter: "for Kamel," says he, "according to the custom of the country, gave him one of his daughters in marriage, and left him, at his death, one part of the great

"No man ever miscarried because his life was short, but because it was bad. That life is long enough that dispatches the task of it."—Herle.

In each succeeding stage of life there is no higher wisdom than to discern the duties which belong to it.

riches he had amassed together in the course of a long and prosperous life." What Sheshan then did was perhaps not so extraordinary as we may have imagined, but perfectly conformable to old Eastern customs, if not to the arrangements of Moses; at least it is, we see, just the same with what is now practiced. — Harmer.

B. C. cir. 1471.

posterity of Caleb

42—49. (42) Caleb the brother of Jerahmeel, a son of Hezron, poss. by the wife Jerioth of vs. 18. (42) Mesha, same as Mareshah. Some of these names belong to places rather than to persons. "In the original division of the land not only limits of tribal territories were fixed, but inside these also the districts of families." (A certain town would be the district of a certain family.) From this the towns themselves came to be personified and inserted in the tribal registers, in which local dependence is represented as genealogical descent." — Oehler. (49) Achsa, Jos. xv. 16, 17.[a] This locates Caleb and distinguishes him from the son of Hezron (vs. 18). This Caleb was the son of Jephunneh, and one of the twelve spies mentioned in Num. xiii. 6; xxxiv. 19.

Live for something. — Do good and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storms of time can never destroy. Write your name by kindness, love, and mercy on the hearts of thousands you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotten. No, your name, your deeds will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind as the stars on the brow of evening. They shall shine as brightly on earth as stars of heaven. — Chalmers.

[a] Repetition of names in a family was very common.

"Content of mind springing from innocence of life, from the faithful discharge of our duty, from satisfaction of conscience, from a good hope in regard to God and our future state, is much to be preferred before all the delights which any temporal possession or fruition can afford." — Barrow.

B. C. cir. 1451.

posterity of Caleb, the son of Hur

50—55. (50) sons of Caleb, this is the third Caleb, (cf. vss. 18 and 42,) not a Jerahmeelite like the second, but a son of Hur, (vs. 19) and grandson of the first Caleb. Ephratah, comp. vs. 19. Kirjath-jearim, manifestly the name of a place.[b] (51) Beth-gader, the Gedor of Jos. xv. 58. (52) Haroeh, comp. ch. iv. 2. half, etc., Manaheth, a town in Judah, being part peopled by descendants of Shobal and Salma, vs. 54. (53) Ithrites, descendants of some one named Jether. Two of David's heroes were Ithrites, 2 Sam. xxiii. 38. Zareathites, of Zareah, Jos. xix. 41. Eshtaulites, of Eshtaol, Jos. xv. 33. (54) Netophathites, 2 Sa. xxiii. 28, 29. the house of, read Ataroth-beth-Joab, as the name of a place. (55) Jabez. ch. iv. 9, 10. Kenites, Ge. xv. 19, a people mixed with tribe of Judah.[c] Rechab, the famous family referred to in Jos. xxxv. 2–19; also in 2 Ki. x. 15, 23, where Jehonadab helps Jehu in the destruction of Baal-worship. "The Rechabites were a kind of nomadic ascetics."

Scribes. — A class devoted to exposition of law, instruction of the nation, and preservation of its records. 1. A noble calling. To study and expound sacred books, intone society, and spread the will of God. 2. A family calling. "The families of the scribes." Hereditary pursuits in all communities. Advantageous to fix traditions and habits in persons, to pursue studies in cities, colleges, and schools. 3. A needful calling. The revelation of God, written and printed, requires study, application, and circulation. A literary profession useful to society; a learned ministry the want of the times. "Writing is now the mightiest instrument on earth." — Channing.

[b] Jos. ix. 17.

[c] Ex. xviii. 10–19; Nu. x. 29–32; 1 Sa. xv. 6.

Thackeray asks, "What boots it whether it be Westminster or a little country spire which covers your ashes; or if a few days sooner or later the world forgets you!"

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

B. C. cir. 1053.

the sons of David

1–9. This chapter is occupied with the descendants of David — nine verses with his own sons, the remaining verses with the line of kings of his house. (1) Amnon, 2 Sa. iii. 2. Daniel, in Samuel called Chileab. (2) Absalom, 2 Sa. iii. 3. Adonijah, 2 Sa. iii. 4. (3) fifth, etc., 2 Sa. iii. 4, 5. (4) in Hebron, 2 Sa. ii. 11; v. 5; 1 Ki. ii. 11. (5) these, etc., comp. 2 Sa. v. 14–16; 1 Ch. xiv. 4–7. The differences are chiefly in the pronunciation of names. Bath-shua, Bathsheba. (6) Elishama, also Elishud.[d] Eliphelet, Elpalet.[e] (7) Nogah, omitted in 2 Sa. v. (8) Eliada, also Beeliada.[f] (9) Tamar, 2 Sa. xiii. There were other sons; but their names are not recorded. (2 Sam. v. 13; xv. 16.)

The scribes. — As a class they date from the close of the Captivity; and from that time onward they appear to have exercised great and growing influence over the national life and religion. In the time of our Saviour they were evidently a very important class of the community. In their two grades — the lower, the interpreters of the classic Hebrew into the colloquial Aramaic; the higher, the doctors learned in the Pentateuch — they supplied to Israel much of the intellectual and moral element in the national life. Jesus

[d] 1 Chr. xiv. 5

[e] 1 Chr. xiv. 5.

[f] 1 Chr. xiv. 7.

"Few minds are sun-light, sources of light to themselves and to others. Many more are moons that shine with a derivative and reflected light. Among the tests to distinguish them is this: the former are always full; the latter only now and then,

B. C. cir. 1015.

admitted the excellence of their work when He denominated his ministers "scribes instructed unto the kingdom of heaven:" He pointed out their defects when He required of his followers a higher righteousness than theirs. And the evangelists contrast the professional formalism of the Jewish scholars with the freshness and authority of the Great and Divine Teacher. — Pul. Com.

when their suns are shining full upon them.—Hare.

David's line to Zedekiah

10—16. The line of David to the captivity.[a] (10) Abia, R. V., "Abijah" is the same as Abijam, 1 Ki. xv. 1. Queen Athaliah, being out of the line of David, is omitted. (11) Ahaziah, called in 2 Chron. xxii. 6 Azariah, and in 2 Chr. xxi. 17 Jehoahaz. (12) Azariah, in 2 Kings xv. 13 and 17, etc., called sometimes Uzziah. Comp. 2 Chron. xxvi. 1; xxvii. 2 and Matt. i. 7–8. (15) Shallum, (Jer. xxii. 11) same as Jehoahaz (2 Kings xxiii. 30). (16) Jeconiah, same as Coniah (Jer. xxii. 24) and Jehoiachin (2 Ki. xxiv. 6, etc). Zedekiah, prob. an otherwise unknown son of Jehoiakim, not his successor, who was Jehoiakim's brother.

[a] Compare for the changes in names of the later kings, 2 Ki. xxiii. 34; xxiv. 17, 18, etc.

Moral varieties in prosperity. — I. Note the words of Solomon, the head of this list, Ecc. ii. 18, 19. II. Of the kings who succeeded Solomon some were wise, but most were foolish. III. Their moral character not inherited, but affected by the condition of things that grew up under their predecessors. IV. Men should remember that though they cannot determine what the moral relations of their children shall be, they may affect those relations by — 1. The example they set; 2. The laws they pass; 3. The institutions they found.

Great men stand like solitary towers in the city of God, and secret passages, running deep beneath external nature, give their thoughts intercourse with higher intelligences, wh. strengthens and consoles them, and of wh. the laborers on the surface do not even dream.

The irony of names. — Abia, signifies "God is Father;" Jehoshaphat, "God judgeth;" Joram, (Jehoram), "God is high;" Amaziah points to strength; Azariah points to help; Jotham indicates perfectness; and Hezekiah signifies "God is my strength." We have often had occasion to point out the irony of names. Whilst in our case there may be no irony of a nominal kind, that is to say, no discrepancy between our names and our actions, yet there may be palpable irony of a circumstantial kind; for example, a man may be surrounded by wealth and yet may be known for his meanness, so that the poor receive nothing from his table, nor are the weak assisted by his hands. The wealthy man who is mean is a self-contradiction. Others of us may have the privilege of living in Christian families, yet in our spirit and thought we may belong to the coldest paganism. The family altar may be but a pile of stones, and the family repute for Christian consecration may be but a concealment of the deepest worldiness of thought and desire. — J. Parker.

successors of Jeconiah

17—24. (17) Assir, Salathiel, etc., R. V., reads "Jeconiah the captive; Shealtiel his son." (Comp. Mat. i. 12). Shealtiel was prob. the son of Neri, (Luke iii. 27), of the line of Nathan, but heir of Jeconiah.[b] (19) Zerubbabel is elsewhere invariably called the son of Shealtiel.[c] Perhaps we are to regard Malchiram, etc., as the sons of Shealtiel and therefore Zerubbabel as his grandson. So in 1 Chr. i. 17, we read "Aram and Uz and Hul," though Rez and Hul are sons of Aram (Gen. x. 23). (20) five, from this word we may perhaps infer that Hashubah, etc., were the sons of Meshullam. (22) six, this seems to include Shemaiah, acc. to the compiler's habit of linking together descendants of different degrees. — Murphy.

[b] Comp. Je. xxii. 30. Failing Solomon's line, the inheritance passed to the next of kin according to the Jewish law. Nu. xxvii. 8-11. — Spk. Com.

[c] Ez. iii. 2, 8; v. 2; Ne. xii. 1; Hag. i 1, 12, 14. ii. 2, 23; Mat. i. 12; Lu. iii. 27.

Zerubbabel. — I. Distinguished in work. 1. Leading a liberated people to their own land. 2. Rebuilding the temple. 3. Instituting civil government. II. Distinguished in the prosecution of that work. Courage, patience, faith, and enthusiasm. A personal example and a power among his people. III. Distinguished as the object of prophecy. Often addressed by name by Haggai and Zechariah; received glorious predictions concerning temple he was building and future magnificence of Jerusalem and Judah, which exercised great influence upon his mind and preserved a spirit which endured till the coming of Christ. A name suggestive of important events. 1. Return of captives. 2. Restoration of national government. 3. Establishment of religious worship. "The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house," etc. (Zech. iv. 9). — Hom. Com.

Of all acts, is not for a man repentance the most divine? The greatest of faults is to be conscious of none." — Thomas Carlyle.

Zerubbabel. — In verses nineteen and twenty, we come upon a name with which we are familiar, Zerubbabel — this was the famous prince, who, with Joshua the high priest, led the first colony of restored exiles from Babylon to Canaan under the edict of Cyrus. This occurred some five centuries before the birth of Christ. The name of Zerubbabel's father was Pedaiah, which signifies "God hath redeemed." The name of the father would seem to have "The religious pleasure of a well-disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly. It does not affect by ecstasy and rapture, but is like the pleasure of been an inspiration to the son. For truly he was a redeemer and a leader of his people. Thus all the names of the kindred and sons of Zerubbabel indicate the religious hopefulness of the people at the dawn of the restoration. All this matter connected with the signification of names is notable, because it points to the greatest incident of all, which we find in the person of the Son of God, who was called Jesus, because he should save his people from their sins. — J. Parker.

B. C. 1700, etc.

health, still and sober, yet greater and stronger than when the senses make grosser impressions."—South.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1—8. (1) "This list of the sons of Judah is characteristic of the author. Pharez is a son, Hezron a second in descent, Carmi a third in another line, Hur a fourth, and Shobal a sixth."[a] — Murphy. (2) Reaiah is the Harach of ii. 52. Zorathites, see ii. 53. (3) were of the father, R. V., "were the sons of the father." But Murphy would read "were the fathers (i. e. joint founders) of Etam." Jud. xv. 8; 2 Chr. xi. 6. Hazelelponi, means, "Give shade, Thou who turnest to me Thy countenance," an interesting illustration of names with a meaning. — Oehler. (4) father of Bethlehem, i. e. chief or founder. Salma, Hur's son, is called "father of B.," ii. 51. (7) Jezoar, R. V., "Izhar." (8) Coz, R. V., "Hakkoz."

posterity of Judah by Caleb of Hur

[a] Ge. xxxviii. 29; xlvi. 12.

Heredity. — We are the creatures and debtors of the past, though we are slow to own our obligations. We have nothing that we have not received; but we are apt to consider ourselves self-made men, the architects and builders of our own fortunes, who have the right to be self-satisfied, self-assertive, and selfish. The heir of all the ages, in the full vigor of youth, takes his place in the foremost ranks of time, and marches on in the happy consciousness of profound and multifarious wisdom, immense resources, and magnificent opportunity. He forgets or even despises the generations of labor and anguish that have built up for him his great inheritance. The genealogies are a silent protest against such insolent ingratitude. They remind us that in bygone days a man derived his gifts and received his opportunities from his ancestors; they show us men as the links in a chain, tenants for life, as it were, of our estate, called upon to pay back with interest to the future the debt which they have incurred to the past. We see that the chain is a long one, with many links; and the slight estimate we are inclined to put upon the work of individuals in each generation recoils upon our own pride. We also are but individuals of a generation that is only one of the thousands needed to work out the Divine purpose for mankind. We are taught the humility that springs from a sense of obligation and responsibility. A genealogy is a brief and pointed reminder that God has been working through all the countless generations behind us. The bare series of names is an expressive diagram of His mighty process. — W. H. Bennett.

High hearts are never long without hearing some new call, some distant clarion of God, even in their dreams; and soon they are observed to break up the camp of ease, and start on some fresh march of faithful service. — Anon.

9—20. (9, 10) "The episode of these two verses, offering itself amid what should seem, superficially, a dry mass of dead names, is welcome and grateful as the oasis of the desert, and it warns us that life lies hidden at our every footfall on this ground, spread over though it is with monument and inscription, and hollow, as we thought, with the deadest of the dead. But the glimpse of old real life given us in this brief fragment of a biography is refreshing and is very suggestive." — Pulpit Com. grieve me, playing on the meaning of his name.[b] (13) Kenaz, was bro. to Caleb the son of Jephunneh, Josh. xv. 17. (18) Bithiah, = daughter of Jehovah, seems to indicate that she became a proselyte. "This sentence has a peculiar interest. It indicates that these descendants, probably of Hamul, certainly of Pharez, his father, belonged to the early period of the sojourn in Egypt, when Israel was free and prosperous, and acknowledged by Pharaoh to be of noble descent. It was then as becoming for a sovereign of Egypt to give a daughter in marriage to Mered, as at a later period a sister-in-law to Hadad." — Murphy.

Jabez

[b] Grant that the grief implied in my name may not come upon me. — Spk. Com.

Jabez (vs. 9). — I. A concise memoir. II. Comprehensive prayer: includes — 1. Best blessings; 2. Enlargement of coast; 3. Divine presence; 4. Divine support. III. The complete answer. Subject teaches us how to pray, and for what — enlargement of coast (or border).

Jabez. — Judging the case within the narrow limits of the history given in verses nine and ten, it would seem as if Jabez started life in an act of prayer. The image is at once graphic and beautiful; think of a young man standing at the door of his house, looking abroad at the unknown and unmeasured

"Jabez was the founder of the schools or colleges of the Scribes, mentioned 1 Chr. ii. 55." — Wordsworth.

B. C. 1700, etc.

world, listening to the conflicting voices which troubled his native air, and then turning his eyes to heaven and asking Divine direction, before he would take a single step from the threshold of his home. — Peop. Bib.

posterity of Shelah

21—23. (21) Shelah, Ge. xxxviii. 5; 1 Chr. ii. 3. Mareshah, Jos. xv. 44. linen, the finest of flax was grown in Egypt and the best of linen was used there by the Hebrews. Comp. Exodus xxvi. 31, 36; xxviii. 6, 8, 15, 39, etc. (22) Chozeba, poss. same as Chezib, Ge. xxxviii. 5. ancient things, R. V. "and the records are ancient," i. e., the deeds of these men are ancient history. (23) potters, employed in the plantations and enclosures of the royal demesnes; and noticed in the prophetical books.[a] dwelt, etc., R. V. "the inhabitants of Netaim and Gaderah,"[b] two towns belonging to Judah. with the king, i. e. on the king's property.[c]

The works of man and of nature. — Man has never woven a tapestry like that which May spreads beneath us, in its green and flowery meadows; and where are the imitative works of art that can compete with a flower-garden — can even approach to a single flower? But we admire the imitations and almost forget to look at the reality and the original. Yet, while the former are costly, or even inaccessible, the others are given freely, without cost, and they are given freely to all. The Creator has even empowered us to create for ourselves, and almost without labor, beauty which no art can approach, and no price could teach it to rival. We sow a few seeds in a few minutes, and we become artists, under the kindness of the Great Artist, producing pictures, imperfect imitations of which we must have purchased with gold — as not all the gold of the universe could have stimulated an artist to approach to them. — MacCulloch.

a Je. xviii. 1, 2; xix. 1, 2.

b Jos. xv. 36.

c For the country estates of the kings comp. 1 Chr. xxvii. 25-31; 2 Chr. xxvi. 10; xxvii. 4; xxxii. 28, 29.

vs. 22. "Thus writeth Ezra; who yet lived afore that Socrates taught in Athens and afore any chronicles of the world now extant in the world. Such is the antiquity of Holy Writ." — Trapp.

posterity and cities of Simeon

24—38. The second of the twelve tribes is here taken. (24–27) sons of Simeon, comp. Ge. xlvi. 10; Ex. vi. 15; Nu. xxvi. 12–14. (28–31) Beersheba, etc., comp. Jos. xix. 2–6. unto reign of David, about wh. time they appear to have lost some of them;[d] or some may have been reckoned as belonging to Judah. (32–33) Baal, the Baalathbeer of Jos. xix. 8. (34–38) princes, or chiefs of cities.

"Princes in their families." — Words transferred from one language, and one state of society to another, are often misleading. By "princes" here we are to understand head-men of certain towns which were in possession of families among the Simeonites. They were persons of importance, of consideration, and influence in their localities. The record of them bears witness to a settled state of society, and to the establishment of civil order and subordination. — Pul. Com.

d 1 Sa. xxvii. 6

Life becomes useless and insipid when we have no longer either friends or enemies.

Gedor: Amalekites in Mt. Seir

39—43. (39) Gedor, means a fort, and is a name often occurring. Ge. xxvi. 6-12. (40) they of Ham, "certain descendents of Ham, who halted there on their way to Africa, induced by the fertility of the soil." — Murphy. (41) these, etc., vss. 35–37. Comp. 2 Ki. xviii. 8. the habitations, R. V., "the Meunim," i. e. citizens of Maon. (42) mount Seir,[e] Ge. xiv. 6; De. ii. 12. (43) rest, etc., fr. the slaughter of Saul. 1 Sa. xv. 7, 8.[f]

Right of pasturage (vss. 39, 40). — Our people, who are extremely watchful over their public pastures, to guard them from intruders, and so ready to go to law with their next neighbors about their right to common, or the number of beasts they shall feed there, may think it very strange that Abraham and Lot, the Kenites and Rechabites, should have been permitted to move up and down, and feed their flocks and herds unmolested, in inhabited countries as well as in deserts. But this ancient custom still continues in Palestine, which, depopulated as it is, probably has as many inhabitants in its towns as it had in the days of Abraham. — Harmer.

e Comp. Isa. xxi 11, 12.

f Comp. for later existence of Amal., 1 Sa. xxvii. 8; xxx. 1; 2 Sa viii. 12.

"The place of habitation of these park-keepers 'seems to have been near the valley of Hinnom, on the S. of Jerus.'" — Wordsworth.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

the line of Reuben

1—10. (1) firstborn, Reuben, though the firstborn, is made the third in the order of the chronicles, comp. Ge. xxxv. 22; xlix. 4. given, etc., the double portion of firstborn was given. De. xxi. 16, 17; Jos. xvi., xvii. "The birthright, as respected dignity and pre-eminence, fell to Judah." (2) prevailed, Ge. xlix. 8. chief ruler, R. V., "the prince," David, we may suppose, with fuller reference to the Messiah.[g] (3–6) sons . . of Reuben, Ge. xlvi. 9. Tiglath- g Ge. xlix. 10; Micah v. 2.

pilneser, 2 Ki. xv. 29. (7, 8) when, etc., see vs. 17. (9) he inhabited, i. e. Reuben. (10) Hagarites, or Ishmeelites,[a] "were a tribe of N. Arabia, perhaps the Agraioi of Shabo."—Murphy.

B. C. 1700, etc.

Dwelling in tents (vs. 10).—The shepherds are not the only class of people that live in tents; many Orientals forsake their villages at the approach of summer, for the more airy and refreshing shelter which they afford. Persons of distinction often retired from the towns into the fields, and lived under tents during the heats of summer. Tahmasp, a Persian monarch, used to spend the winter at Casbin, and to retire in the summer three or four leagues into the country, where he lived in tents at the foot of Mount Alouvent, a place famed for its cool and pleasant retreats. His successors acted in the same manner, till the time of Abbas the Great, who removed his court to Ispahan.—Paxton.

[a] Comp. 1 Chr. xxvii. 30, 31; Ps. lxxxiii. 6.

11–17. Gad was the seventh of the sons of Jacob. The chronicler appears to be guided by local settlement and association in military valor. (11) over against, etc., Jos. xiii. 24–28. Bashan, Nu. xxi. 33–35.[b] Salcah, De. iii. 10; Jos. xii. 5. Modern Sulkhad, on the southern spur of the Jebel Hauran. (12–15) 21 persons in all of "the sons of Gad," none of whom are spoken of elsewhere. children, etc., i. e. the persons mentioned in vs. 13. (16) Sharon, De. iii. 12, 13. (17) days, etc., this indicates two occasions, one applying to the kingdom of Judah, the other to that of Israel; and the date was not the same.[c] chiefs and cities of Gad

[b] Jos. xiii. 30.

[c] Jeroboam reigned about B.C. 825, and Jotham about B. C. 758. 2 Ki. xiv. 16; xv. 32.

History.—As a matter of fact, history can never be exhaustively written. It may be questioned whether any man who has lived a long and active life can really write his own biography. Let him take what pains he may he will be conscious that much has been left out; even where a diary has been sedulously kept, it can tell but little of motive, purpose, desire, and all the mysterious operations of the soul; the spirit will not be imprisoned in words; after the words have expended their whole strength in embodying life there is something in life which will not condescend to be represented in symbols or uttered in signs. Let us continually remind ourselves of the lesson we have had so much occasion to set forth, that two or three famed sons in a family do not blot out all the sweet life, the gentle piety, the unobtrusive industry, and the anxious prayers of many an unknown member of the household. We belong to one another. We cannot always trace the influences which have culminated in eminence and power. Be assured that how famous soever any man may be there is a vital defect in his character in so far as he fails to remember all that made his home the beginning of his greatness.—J. Parker.

"Nothing unites people like companionship in intellectual enjoyment. It does more—it gives them mutual respect, and to each among them self-respect—that corner-stone of all virtue."—Sir John Herschel.

18–22. (18) valiant men, sons of valor as shown later, 1 Chron. xii. 8, 21. (19) Hagarites, or Hagarenes, a tribe of North Arabia. Jetur[d] and Nephish, comp. chap. i. 31; Ge. xxv. 15. (20) helped, by God; comp, vs. 22 and 2 Chron. xxvi. 15; Ps. xxviii. 7. (21) they took, comp. Nu. xxxi. 32–35. (22) the captivity, is that of two kings, xv. 29, when these tribes were carried away from their homes.

census of Reuben, Gad, and half-tribe of Manasseh

[d] "His descendants were called Ituræans."—Jamieson.

The best battle-cry (vs. 20).—I. Common battle-cries are usually—1. Shouts of defiance; 2. Personal vauntings; 3. Incitements of passion or patriotism. II. The Christian battle-cry is a cry to God in prayer.

Battle-cries.—It would be interesting, and not without instruction, could a complete list be compiled of the war-cries and military watchwords of different lands, times, and men. Since the days of King Ramirez (A. D. 939), the war-cry of the Spanish armies has been "Santiago!" of England, it used to be, "St. George! for merry England;" and of France, "Montjoye St. Denis!" "The King and Constitution!" was the war-cry of Rupert; and "The Lord of Hosts is with us!" of Cromwell. "Victory or Westminster Abbey!" was one of Nelson's; and another of his was "England expects every man to do his duty!" In the latter part of the Sepoy rebellion, the war-cry of the British troops was, "Remember Cawnpore!"

Bef. the bat. of Edgehill, Lord Ashley prayed, "O Lord, if, while I am busy to-day, I forget Thee, do not Thou forget me;" and the K. of Sweden, before the bat. of Lutzen, prayed, "Jesus, vouchsafe this day to be my strong Helper; and give me courage to fight for the honor of Thy name."

23–26. (23) Baal-hermon, another name for Hermon; or same as Baal-Gad. Josh. xii. 7; xiii. 5. Thomson identifies with Suibeah, on S. of Hermon. Senir, De. iii. 9. (24) mighty men, none of these are heard of again by name. Comp. ch. xii. 21. (25) went, etc., 2 Ki. xvii. All these tribes mentioned transgressed. (26) Pul, 2 Ki. xv. 19. He was the last of a dynasty and half-tribe of Manasseh

"Honor and shame from no condition rise; act well your part, there all the honor lies."—Pope.

B C. cir. 1700, etc.

"Whatever that be which thinks, which understands, which wills, which acts, it is something celestial and Divine, and upon that account must necessarily be eternal." — Cicero.

may have been a Chaldean, hence the failure to learn of him from Assyrian monuments. Tiglath-pilneser, vs. 6. Halah, etc., 2 Ki. xvii. 6, xviii. 11.

Famous men (vs. 24). — Famous men — I May be known only by name. II. How many such have lived and died of whom not even their names are known! III. The record of the really famous is on high. IV. The best that is known of these is that they were the heads of their households.

Reuben's fall. — We now come to the fall of the very people who, only a few verses before, had been so conspicuous for prayer and faith and victory. And what was the cause of it? They went after the gods of the people of the land. The world around; the pleasure-seeking, self-seeking world; the attractive, smiling, seducing world; — this drew them aside, this stole their hearts from God. What the Hagarites had failed to do, the "gods of the people of the land" did. Satan comes to God's people in one of two forms — either as a "roaring lion" or as an "angel of light." Where he cannot succeed in one way he will try the other. He came as a "roaring lion" in the form of the "Hagarites," but he failed. He then came as an "angel of light" in the "gods of the people of the land;" thus they fell. It is the same always. — Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

sons of Levi and line of priests to captivity

a Ezr. ii. 61, 62; Ne. vii 64. Ge. xlvi. 11; Ex.vi. 16

b Ex. vi. 16, 18.

c Comp. Ezr. vii. 1–5.

"The powers of the mind are like the stars, they do not always shine equally brilliant and striking; sometimes clouds may cover them for a time altogether; at other times intermittent clouds may pass over them; a heavy atmosphere at other times may affect them; seldom, in this climate, do they shine in their full glory. But, shine or no shine, the stars are still there." — J. Bate.

1—15. (1) sons of Levi, the whole chapter is devoted to the tribe of Levi, and yet it is not complete, the lists of several families (e. g. Gershom, Kohath, Merari, etc.) being imperfect. "No one was allowed to execute any sacred office who could not prove his Levitical descent."[a] (2) Kohath, the second son put first, bec. Aaron and the priests came fr. him.[b] (3) Nadab, etc., Le. x. 1; Nu. iii. 4. (4–10) Eleazar, etc., this is a list of high priests.[c] Azariah, the same that repelled King Uzziah; Chr. xxvi. 17. (12) Ahitub, etc., this list is evidently defective, comp. ch. ix. (13) Shallum, i. e. Meshullam, Neh. xi. 11 and Ezra vii. 2. Hilkiah, was he who found "the book of the Law," 2 Ki. xxii. 8 and helped Josiah in the reformation, also cf. 2 Chron. xxxv. 1–19. (14) Seraiah, cf. 2 Ki. xxv. 18–21. He was an ancestor of Ezra. (Ezra vii. 1.)

Two high priests. — Among the sons of Levi the family of Aaron was the most conspicuous, inasmuch as the Lord selected this family for the priestly office. The high priest was always of Aaronic blood. And the succession of high priests could no more be omitted from the chronicles of Israel than the succession of popes from those of Rome or the series of archbishops of Canterbury from those of England. We select two high priests for special notice. I. The high priesthood in national prosperity. Azariah executed this very important office during that part of the reign of Solomon which saw the dedication of the magnificent first temple. This was the very culmination of the splendor of the Hebrew monarchy, and the office and duties of the national pontiff would be encompassed with peculiar glory. As the religious representative of the nation, Azariah had sacred functions to discharge, especially on the day of atonement, when the sins belonging to the people's prosperity were brought and confessed before the Lord, and favor shown to the sacrificing and repentant nation. II. The high priesthood in national adversity. Jehozadak, as in the succession, nominally filled the same office when the Jews were carried into captivity. He shared the lot, the exile, of his countrymen. It was well that he should go with the others and rather share the fate of the nation, than remain in Jerusalem to fulfil the form of his office. Where the nation was, it became its religious head to be also. — Pul. Com.

families of Gershom, Kohath, Merari vs. 22, Korah. "Howbeit his children came to good, many of them, as Elkanah, Samuel, the sons of Korah, in David's days." — Trapp.

16—27. (16) sons, etc., here the list is of descendants who were not high priests. (17–19) The names here occur also in Ex. vi. Gershom, comp. vs. 1, eldest son of Levi. Merari, Ge. xlvi. 11. (20–21) Of Gershom, compare with longer list of 13 names of descendants of Gershom in vss. 39–43. (22–27) sons of Kohath, other than dealt with, vs. 2. (26) Elkanah, father of Samuel.

Families. — In reading verse 19 — "And these are the families of the Levites according to their fathers" — we must remember that the word "families" does not mean single households, but groups of households or clans. This is important as showing the beginning of an enlargement which is to continue until the whole world shall be regarded as constituting one family. Towards this consummation we can but proceed with painful slowness. The work of grace within us is long in subduing the idea that God is partial in his choices and blessings. The heart almost secretly cherishes the idea that walls of separation between men and men must in some degree contiuue forever. It is hard for one nation to believe that other nations are as near to God as themselves. All this may not be admitted in theory, but an examination of the heart will lead to the conclusion that every man clings more or less to the notion that God is interested in his fortunes more than in the fortunes of other men. The spread of Christianity is important in a social as well as in a theological sense as tending to the instruction of men in mutual interpretation of motive and purpose. Christianity is opposed to all limitation, narrowness, bigotry, exclusiveness; its noble watchword is "the world, the whole world, the whole world for Christ."—J. Parker.

B. C. cir. 1700. etc.

"We do not commonly find men of superior sense amongst those of the highest fortune."—Juvenal.

28—32. (28) Vashni, or Joel, R. V., "The first-born Joel and the second Abiah," of vs. 33. Sa. viii. 2.[a] (29, 30) Merari, vs. 1, 16. (31) David set, ch. xv. 16–24. ark had rest, ch. xvi. 1.[b] (32) R. V., "And they ministered with song before the tabernacle of the tent of meeting," etc. Comp. 2 Chron. v. 12; xxix. 26–31; xxxv. 15, 16.

Song.—The service of song in the house of the Lord should be the most beautiful of all religious exercises. The heavenly ones are continually praising God in the upper sanctuary. We read nothing of preaching in heaven, but we do read of songs and harps, thanksgivings, and of praises louder than the sound of many waters. We are perfectly well aware that there are persons who would pervert the use of music and do injury to the very spirit of the church, but we must not take our rule of procedure from them; but endeavor to displace them by a right adaptation of music; and to supersede them by pointing out and following a more excellent way.—J. Parker.

[a] Comp. 1 Chr. vi. 33.

[b] 2 Sa. vi. 17.

"The three intentions of song: To improve the understanding, to improve the heart, and to soothe the mind."—Catherall.

"It is easy to be humble where humility is a condescension; easy to concede where we know ourselves wronged; easy to forgive where vengeance is in our power."—Mrs. Jameson.

33—48. (33) waited, attending regularly on the temple service to sustain the singing. Heman, chief master of song, was, then, grandson of Samuel the prophet. Ch. xv. 17–19; xxv. 1–6; 1 Ki. iv. 31. Shemuel, R. V., Samuel. (34–39) brother Asaph, 14th from Levi, Heman is 21st. They were cousins. (40–41) Ethni, the Jeaterai of vs. 21. (42–48) Ethan, prob. the Jeduthun of 1 Chr. xvi. 42, 43, etc.

Singing with the understanding.—We are commanded to sing with the understanding; and yet if we did, four hundred and ninety five out of five hundred pieces of music that are published for singing would have to go to the dirt. I will defy anybody to sing with the understanding the music that is trashily printed and trashily performed, whether it be inarticulate on stringed instruments or whether it be vocalized to words. Music has a relation not simply to sensuous pleasure, which is the lowest kind of pleasure, but to imaginative pleasure, and to pleasure of the understanding as well, which it rises up round about as the atmosphere rises round about the pine trees and the oak trees on the mountain side, washing them clean, and making them stand out in majesty and beauty. Music cleanses the understanding, inspires it, and lifts it into a realm which it would not reach if it were left to itself.—Beecher. Old-time music.—The carillonus was at one time a common style of church music, particularly in Holland, before the introduction of the organ. The carillon consisted of a great number of bells, hung in the church belfry, forming a complete series or scale of tones and semitones The carillonus, or performer, worked hard. There were pedals communicating with the bells, upon which he played with his feet, while the hands performed upon the upper species of keys, which were formed by projecting sticks wide enough apart to be struck with violence and velocity by either of the hands edgeways, without being liable to hit the adjoining keys or pins. The performer had a thick leather covering for the little finger of each hand, else he could not endure the pain caused by the percussion to the naked hand. The carillon is now out of use, the nearest approach to it being the modern peal of bells.

"There are two things wh. help to make music—melody and harmony. Now, as most of you know, there is melody in music when the different sounds of the same tune follow each other so as to give us pleasure; there is harmony in music when different sounds, instead of following each other, come at the same time so as to give us pleasure."—C. Kingsley.

"A good ear for music and a taste for music are two very different things, which are often confounded; and so is comprehending and enjoying every object of sense and sentiment."—Greville.

49—53. (49) Aaron, etc., comp. Ex. xxx. 7; Le. i. 9.[c] (50–53) sons of Aaron, a briefer list, similar to that in vss. 3–8. "The line of Eleazar is here traced as far as Ahimaaz, who was active in the days of David (2 Sam. xv. 36). From its place here this appears to be regarded as the legitimate line of high priests. But in fact the line of Eli came into its place for five generations (1 Sam. xiv. 3; xxii. 9, 20), and after Zadok another breach appears to have taken place."—Murphy.

office of Aaron, and his line to Ahimaaz

[c] Also Le. viii. 2; Nu. xviii. 1–7.

B. C. cir. 1700, etc.

The constant work of atonement. — The word "atonement" in the Old Testament means a "covering over," and "hiding from view;" and it is applied to some sacrifice whose acceptableness covers over and hides from view the unworthiness and transgression of him who brings it, or to some act, such as that of Phinehas, which, because it vindicates the Divine honor, law, and righteousness, is regarded as covering over iniquity, and making possible the pardon of the transgressors. But some changes passed in the connotation of the term, so that the New Testament Greek equivalent became the word "reconciliation," which appears to regard the word as at-one-ment, but does not carry over the idea of covering transgression by a sacrifice or a loyal act. The appointment of Aaron and his sons for this particular work emphasizes the fact that, under the older dispensation, there was constant need for atonement. Every individual needed that it should be made for him again and again, and every year a great public atonement was made for the sins of the people. The reason appears to be this: every fresh act of wilfulness and sin imperilled the standing of the individual and the nation as within the Divine covenant, and brought down upon them all the penalties of the broken covenant — penalties involving even the surrender of life. It would help greatly to clearness of view if we recognized that atonement always bears relation to man's standing before God, and not to man's personal cleanness or cleansing. The constant atonement covered the sin which broke the covenant-relations, and restored, for the individual and the nation, the old covenant-conditions. The daily burnt offering was a daily atonement, or vindicatory act, which covered the people's sin and set them again in full covenant-standing. The private burnt offerings did the same thing for the individual. And the "day of atonement" did it, in a sublime way, as a grand national spectacle, for the due impression of the entire nation.— Pul. Com.

"The failure of the mind in old age is often less the result of natural decay than of disuse. Ambition has ceased to operate; contentment brings indolence; indolence, decay of mental power, ennui, and sometimes death. Men have been known to die, literally speaking, of disease induced by intellectual vacancy."—Sir. Benj. Brodie.

cities of priests and Levites

54—60. (54) throughout . . coasts.[a] R. V., "according to their encampments in their borders." the lot, R. V., "the first lot," Josh. xxi. 10. (55) Hebron, Jos. xxi. 11. (56) fields, etc.,[b] comp. Jos. xxi. 12. (57) gave . . Hebron, R. V., "gave the cities of refuge, Hebron;" etc.; the plural "cities" seems to be incorrect, as Hebron, only, was a city of refuge, cf. Josh. xxi. 13. Libnah, Jos. x. 29–32; xv. 42. Jattir, Jos. xv. 48. Eshtemoa, Jos. xv. 50. (58) Hilen, or Holon, Jos. xxi. 15. Debir, Jos. xv. 15. (59) Ashan, or Ain, see Jos. xix. 7; xxi. 16. Beth-shemesh, Jos. xv. 10; xxi. 16. (60) Geba, Jos. xviii. 24; xxi. 17. Alemeth, Almon of Jos. xxi. 18. Anathoth, Jos. xxi. 18.

a Jos. xxi. 4-12.

b "Originally all Hebron had been given to Caleb as his inheritance. (Jos. xv. 13."—Spk. Com.

Man made for a future state. — Canst thou think it worth the while that the Maker of the universe should create a soul, and send it down into the world, on purpose to superintend these trivial affairs — to keep alive a silly piece of well-figured earth while it eats and drinks, to move it to and fro in chase of shadows, to hold it up while others bow the knee and do it homage — as if it had not some higher work to mind in reference to another state? Art thou contented to live long in the world to such purposes? What low, worthless spirit is this that had rather be so employed than in the visions of his Maker's face; that chooses thus to entertain itself on earth rather than partake the effusions of the Divine glory above; that had rather creep with worms than soar with angels; associate with brutes than with the spirits of just men made perfect? Who can solve the phenomenon, or give a rational account why there should be such a creature as man upon the earth, abstracting from the hopes of another world? — J. Howe.

vs. 55. Hebron. "The six cities of refuge where the guilty might be instructed and comforted. King James was wont to say that if God did leave him to kill a man by any means, he should think God did not love him."—Trapp.

"Really great minds seem to have cast off from their hearts the grave's earth, as well as dissipated the clouds which concealed the heaven from our view, and they thus disclose to themselves and to us a clear and blissful world of everlasting repose."—Richter.

61—70. (61) "There is an omission in the text here. For the words of the family . . Manasseh, should be read, 'out of the family of the tribe of Ephraim, out of the tribe of Dan, and out of the half of the tribe of half Manasseh.' This would be in harmony with the following context (vss. 67–70), and with Josh. xxi. 20–26. From these tribes they received ten cities." — Murphy. left, i. e., to the Levites, vss. 61–81 tell of the cities to which Levites were assigned. — Murphy. ten cities, comp. vs. 70; Jos. xxi. 25. (62–66) Comp. Jos. xxi. (64) gave . . cities, "the allotment of these towns is not to be understood as if the Levites were their only possessors, but that they received so many houses and such pasture land in the suburbs as they needed. — Oehler. (67) cities of refuge, Jos. xx. Shechem, Jos. xvii. 7. Gezer, Jos. x. 33. (68) Jokmeam,[c] Jos. xii. 22. Beth-horon, Jos. xxi. 22. (69)

c Kibzaim in Jos. xxi. 22.

Aijalon, here two names have fallen out: Eltekeh and Gibbethon, Jos. xxi. 23. Gath-rimmon, Jos. xix. 45. (70) Aner, Jos. xxi. 25. Bileam, in Jos. called also Gath-rimmon.

B. C. 1700, etc.

The social working of the refuge system. — Its influence may be shown in: 1. Its cultivation of a worthier sense of justice. 2. Its teaching as to the relation of motive to crime, such motive giving the act of crime its serious quality. 3. Its tendency to relieve the individual from the thought of executing his own vengeance. 4. Its claim to have a fixed authority for the settling of all social laws, and their vindication by due punishments. A worthy and strongly enforced legislative system lies at the very foundation of the peaceful order and stable progress of every nation. The element of personal passion must be removed if punishment is to be wisely administered; men must be willing to put aside their own avengings if social order is to be secured. Nations need to be very careful to secure purity in the administration of justice. — Pul. Com.

"If the history of cities and their influence on their respective territories be deducted from the history of humanity, the narrative remaining would be of no very attractive description." —Vaughan.

71—81. (71) Golan, De. iv. 43. Ashtaroth, comp. Beeshterah of Jos. xxi. 27. The full name may be Beth-Ashtaroth.[a] (72) Kedesh, comp. Kishon of Jos. xxi. 28. Daberath takes the place of Dabareh, Ramoth of Jarmuth, and Anem of Engannim, Jos. xxi. 28, 29. (74) Mashal, or Mishal. (75) Hukok, or Helkath. (76) Hammon, or Hammoth-dor. Kirjathaim, or Kartan. (77) the rest . . were given, R. V., "Unto the rest of the Levites, the Sons of Merari, were given." (78) other side, comp. Jos. xxi. 35–39. Bezer, cf. Deut. iv. 43; Josh. xx. 8. This, also, was one of the three cities of refuge east of the Jordan.

[a] De. i, 4; Jos. ix. 10; xii. 4; xiii. 12, 31.

The nature of man. — The essence of our being, the mystery in us that calls itself "I" — ah, what words have we for such things? — is a breath of Heaven; the Highest Being reveals Himself in man. This body, these faculties, this life of ours, is it not all as a vesture for that Unnamed? — "There is but one temple in the universe," says the devout Novalis, "and that is the body of man. Nothing is holier than that high form. Bending before men is a reverence done to this revelation in the flesh. We touch heaven when we lay our hand on a human body!" This sounds much like a mere flourish of rhetoric; but it is not so. If well meditated, it will turn out to be a scientific fact; the expression, in such words as can be had, of the actual truth of the thing. We are the miracle of miracles — the great inscrutable mystery of God. We cannot understand it, we know not how to speak of it; but we may feel and know, if we like, that it is verily so. — Carlyle. Religious culture. — Excellent and ample provision was made for religious culture. Here we have the cities through which the Levites were distributed. They were to be scattered throughout the land, to be mingled with every tribe, in order that they might impart religious instruction to all (Deut. xxxiii. 10; and see 2 Chron. xvii. 9; xxx. 22; xxxv. 3). It was their function to "teach the good knowledge of the Lord," to make known and understood the law of God. The service of Jehovah was to rest on popular intelligence. Ignorance is not the mother of devotion; it is the fruitful parent of superstition and folly. Religion builds on knowledge, thrives on intelligence. — Clarkson.

"All creature minds, like man's, are fallible. The seraph who in heaven highest stands may fall to ruin deepest." — Bailey.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

1—5. (1) sons of Issachar, Ge. xlvi. 13; Nu. xxvi. 23, 24. (2) number, etc., when the census was taken (2 Sa. xxiv. 1–9). This number is not given in any record we possess. The writer had sources at his disposal unknown to us. (3) five, only four are found in the passage. (4) by their generations, the numbers being taken fr. David's census. (5) fourscore, etc., a very large proportion of fighting men.

the sons of Issachar vs. 1. Jashub alias Job, but not Job the patient, as some would have it.

The progress of man. — The sun does not shine brighter than it did on Adam; the ocean is not more grand now than when the old Phœnicians plied it with their oars; the birds do not sing more sweetly now than they did in the bowers of Eden. But how man progresses! Compare England now with what it was when Cæsar landed on its shore; compare the boy Newton with Sir Isaac Newton the astronomer; compare Saul of Tarsus with Paul at Athens. — Thomas.

vs. 2. "And yet this tribe, for the generality, were dull, and desirous of peace." — Trapp.

6—12. (6) three, comp. ch. viii. 1, 2; and Ge. xlvi. 21. (7) these sons of Bela are not elsewhere named. (9) heads, etc., R. V., "heads of their fathers' sons of Benjamin

B. C. 1700, etc.

houses." Tribes were divided into clans and these into "fathers' houses," and these into households (cf. Josh. vii. 14; and Nu. i. 2, 4, 18, etc). It is supposed that tribes sprang from Jacob's sons, clans from his grand-children, and fathers' houses from his great grand-children. — Oehler. (12) Shuppim, etc., comp. Ge. xlvi. 21; Nu. xxvi. 39, "they may have been adopted into the family of Ir." Hushim, comp. Ge. xlvi. 23. This seems like an introduction of the family of Dan, wh. has slipped out of the text.

"There is in some men a dispassionate neutrality of mind, which, though it passes for good temper, can neither gratify nor warm us; it is true that these men can only negatively offend; but then it is also true that they cannot positively please."—Greville.

Fit to go out. — Blessed are they who are really qualified for any needful work in this weary world! A beautiful character is this — "fit to go out." How many men go out before they are fit — how many go out to preach, to teach, to lead, who have no qualifications for the office which they have assumed! Men should not go out until they are sent; in other words, men should not go out to warfare at their own charges. We must find out what we are fit for, and do that particular work with both hands earnestly. Do not let us foolishly wait under the impression that by some dazzling sign God will point out the specialty of our gift. We must put ourselves into practice, and let revelation come through experience. "Stir up the gift that is in thee." "Put on thy strength." "Awake, awake." "Arise, shine." — J. Parker.

sons of Naphtali and Manasseh

13—19. (13) Bilhah, the handmaid of Rachel, whose sons were Dan and Naphtali. The children of Dan are not mentioned as, in the time of the chronicler, the tribe had probably disappeared. (15) Zelophehad, Nu. xxvi. 33; Jos. xvii. 3. daughters, Jos xvii. 3–6; Nu. xxvi.; xxvii.; xxxvi. "The paragraph (14–19) is of peculiar interest, as illustrating the freedom and independence with which the sons of Israel moved in that period before the new king arose who knew not Joseph." — Murphy.

Daughters of Zelophehad. — Women have little recognized legal or public rights in the East. Woman has no standing apart from her husband, and this makes the lot of the Eastern widow so inexpressibly sad. The name Zelophehad recalls a remarkable exception — a case in which women, having no male protector, succeeded in securing and maintaining their own rights; and the story is detailed in the Scripture as affording important instructive features. This Zelophehad was a descendant of Manasseh, who died during the wilderness wanderings, leaving no sons, only five daughters, who, by the custom of the time, would be treated as unable to inherit his estates. These five daughters appealed to Moses (Numb. xxvii. 1–7), on the ground that their father had not died under any such judgment as disabled his children, and they asked to be authorized to stand as his heirs. The matter was a new and difficult one, and Moses took it directly to God, and by Divine direction established the new rule that when there were no sons the daughters might claim the rights of heirs. A remarkable illustration of the wise adjustment of law in its practical application to new and unanticipated cases. Bishop Wordsworth says: "It seems to have been God's design in the Levitical dispensation to elevate woman from the degradation into which she had fallen, and to prepare her gradually for that state of dignity and grace to which she is now advanced in the gospel by the incarnation of the Son of God, the Seed of the woman."— Pul. Com.

"The mind has no horizon; it looks beyond the eye, and seeks for mind in all its sees, or all it sees o'erruling."— Shakespeare.

sons of Ephraim

20—29. This passage is full of chronological difficulties that cannot be explained. (20) sons of Ephraim, Nu. xxvi. 35, 36. (21) men of Gath, etc., settled inhabitants of the district. (22) mourned, comp. Ge. xxxvii. 34, 35. (23) Beriah, in evil. (24) Beth-horon, Jos. x. 10. Uzzen-sherah, not certainly known, perhaps Beit-sira. 3 m. S. W. of nether Beth-horon. (25–27) Ammihud, Nu. i. 10. Non, or Nun. "The descent of Joshua is only traced fr. these personages here." (28, 29) their possessions, Jos. xvi. 1–3.

vs 20. "The Ephraimites were famous for their wealth, power, and prowess; but withal they were noted for being insolent, proud and quarrelsome (Jud. viii. 1, cf. xii. 1)." — Trapp.

A famous woman. — We know nothing else of Sherah than is recorded in this verse. Whether she did herself build or enlarge and fortify these towns, or whether this was the work of her descendants, is not easy to decide. The fact, in any case, is of interest for us, that her name should be put upon record in this passage, and should be associated with great works. I. A woman may be selected by Providence to fulfil some vast design. History records great feats of feminine valor; for women have defended castles and cities by their heroism, and delivered nations, by personal bravery and by the enthusiastic support they have commanded. Some nations number among their sovereigns queens of singular sagacity and statesmanship. In art and in literature, and even in science, women have, in our own times, won for themselves a high position and a wide renown. II. The work of noble women is especially to build. If not cities, societies and families have again and again been built up in strength and stateliness and serviceableness through feminine wisdom, sympathy, and devotedness. III. A gifted woman's worthiest work is work for God. How many such shine from the pages of inspiration! Sarah, Miriam, Ruth, Hannah, Esther, in the Old Testament; the Marys, Priscilla, Dorcas, Lydia, in the New Testament, may serve as examples. IV. A woman who serves the Lord and leaves an example of piety and usefulness is worthy of being held in lasting remembrance. If the inspired writer thought well to record the name of the builder of Beth-horon, surely the memory of the noble women of our Lord's spiritual kingdom should never fade. — Pul. Com.

"Narrow minds think nothing right that is above their own capacity." — La Rochefoucauld.

B. C. 1700, etc.

We can all be servants of God wherever our lot is cast; but He gives us different sorts of works, according as He fits us for it and calls us to it. — George Eliot.

30—40. (30) sons of Asher, Ge. xlvi. 17.[a] (31) Birzavith,[b] name of a place, but unknown. (32) Shomer, Shamer, in vs. 34. Hotham, Helem in vs. 35. (33–39) Of all these persons named nothing is known. (40) the number, reckoned at David's census. father's house, cf. note on vs. 7.

sons of Asher

a Comp. Nu. xxvi. 44.

Military valor formed a large part of ancient virtue. — The history of the ancient peoples, Egyptians, Assyrians, Greeks, Romans, etc., proves this statement with only too monotonous a repetition. The history of the Jews, the ancient people of God, adds one more note of confirmation. We might have supposed it would be otherwise; we might have judged that they would constitute the one exception to the rule. But, so doing, we should have erred. War involves certain most painful incidents, but it is not absolutely and intrinsically wrong. The simple fact that God sanctioned it in many instances, that He commanded His people to engage in it, and that He desired to be inquired of and supplicated in regard to it, distinctly settles that point. 1. It has to be remembered that war does call out the heroic virtues of (1) patient endurance; (2) implicit trust in a faithful leader; (3) courageous daring of utmost danger, and consequent (4) readiness to resign that which is most precious at the call of duty, on behalf of country or in obedience to what seems to be the will of God. 2. It has to be remembered that men have engaged in it without any conscious departure from the obligations they were under to their kind; therefore without any sense of its evil, and therefore without any injury to their conscience and character. The idea that all warfare is positively wrong is modern sentiment. With quite as clear a conscience armies have gone out to battle as merchants have left home to traffic, or travelers to explore, or even missionaries to evangelize. Other thoughts are in our minds, other feeling in our hearts, because we have learned — I. That human life is now to be regarded as a very sacred thing. II. That the worthiest triumphs we can win are those we gain in peaceful contests. — Pul. Com.

b "Meaning the well of the olive trees." — Gesenius.

"The sovereign good of man is a mind that subjects all things to itself, and is itself, subject to nothing; such a man's pleasures are modest and reserved, and it may be a question whether he goes to heaven or heaven goes to him; for a good man is influenced by God Himself, and has a kind of divinity within him."—Seneca.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

B. C. 1700, etc.

1—11. (1) Benjamin, not the son, but the great-grandson of Jacob. Aharah, comp. Ahiram of Nu. xxvi. 38.[c] (2–5) Addar, or Ard, Ge. xlvi. 21: Nu. xxvi. 40. Naaman, Nu. xxvi. 40. (6) Ehud, some think the judge of this name is meant.[d] Spk. Com. says it is a prob. corruption of the Abihud of vs. 3.[e] Geba, Jos. xviii. 24, there called Gaba.[f] Manahath, not identified. See marg. of Ju. xx. 43. (7) Gera, the leader of the migration. (8) sent them away, a probable reading is, "after he hast sent away (divorced) Hushem and Baara, his wives." (9–11) Hodesh, the Moabitish wife, who replaced the divorced ones. The names of some of her sons indicate the Moabite affinity. Mesha was a king of Moab, (2 Ki. iii. 4). Malcham is the name of an idol of Moab (Jer. xlix. 1).

sons and chiefs of Benjamin c Comp. also Ehi of Ge. xlvi 21.

d Ju. iii 15.

e "The names here and in ch. vii. 10 are not the same in the Hebrew." — Spk. Com.

f Jos. xxi. 17; 1 Sa. xiii. 3.

Man a missionary. — Every man is a missionary now and for ever, for good or for evil, whether he intends or designs it or not. He may be a blot, radiating his dark influence outward to the very circumference of society; or he may be a blessing, spreading benediction over the length and breadth of the world, but a blank he cannot be. There are no moral blanks: there are no neutral characters. We are either the sower that sows and corrupts, or the light that splendidly illuminates, and the salt that silently operates; but being dead or alive every man speaks. — Chalmers.

B. C. 1700, etc.

12—28. (12) Ono, near Lydda. Poss. the modern Kefr' Ana. Lod, Lydda, or Diospolis.[a] (13) Aijalon,[b] in Joshua's time belonged to Dan. Jos. xix. 42. Afterwards it belonged to Ephraim, 1 Chr. vi. 66-69. Ultimately it was reckoned with Benjamin. (14-28) dwelt at Jerusalem, this was not till after the return from captivity.[c]

Manufacture of man. — Many pray to be made "men in Christ Jesus," and think in some miraculous way it will be given to them: but God says, "I will try My child, and see if he is sincere;" and so He lays a burden upon him, and says, "Now stand up under it; for thus you are to grow strong." He sends a provocation, and says to him, "Be patient." He throws him into perplexities, and says, "Where now are thy resources?" If the ambitious ore dreads the furnace, the forge, the anvil, the rasp, and the file, it should never desire to be made a sword. Man is the iron, and God is the smith; and we are always either in the forge or on the anvil. God is shaping us for higher things. — Beecher.

a Ac. ix. 32.

b "Aijalon is the modern Yalo, on a long hill, about 14 m fr. Jerus., on the S. side of a broad fertile valley, called Merj-Ibn Omeir." — Ayre.

c 1 Chr. ix. 3; Ne. xi. 4; Josh. xviii. 28.

Gibeon

29—32. (29) Gibeon,[d] Jos. ix. 3-27, mod. El Jib. father of Gibeon, etc. R. V., "father of Gibeon, Jeiel." See ch. ix. 35. (30) Baal and Nadab, bet. these it appears that Ner should be inserted.[e] (31) Zacher, or Zechariah. Mikloth should close the list. He is introduced in next verse; ch. ix. 37. (32) Shimeah, Shimeam, ch. ix. 38. in Jerus., see vs. 28.

"These dwelt in Jerusalem" (vss. 28, 32). When the captives returned from Babylon there was a lack of men to populate the sacred city. In the country were inviting fields waiting for cultivation, while in the city was danger to be dared and civic duty to be discharged. So that "the people blessed all the men that willingly offered themselves to dwell at Jerusalem" (Neh. xi. 2). The fact that their ancestors dwelt in the city would probably operate as a powerful inducement to lead many to offer themselves as citizens, and these would thus be led to serve their country in a very serious crisis. The knowledge of the honorable position taken by our ancestry is a very lawful motive to obedience and aspiration. We should, indeed, range ourselves on the right side, and do the noblest deeds because our God, our Saviour, summons us to His side and to the service of our race. But there are many subsidiary motives by which we may be impelled. And among these is the consideration of the part and place our fathers took in their day. We may well be inspired by the thought of their fidelity, their courage, their piety, their usefulness. We do well to cherish the ambition to be worthy of our sires, to maintain and magnify an honorable name, not only to be "the children of our Father who is in heaven," but the children of our earthly ancestors who dwelt in the city of God and wrought his work in the world. — Pul. Com.

d 1 Sa. x. 26; xiii. 2, 15; xv. 34.

e Comp. 1 Chr. ix. 36.

"What a chimera is man! what a confused chaos! a professed judge of all things, and yet a feeble worm of the earth! the great depositary and guardian of the truth, and yet a mere huddle of uncertainty! the glory and the scandal of the universe. — Pascal.

house of Kish

33—40. (33) Ner, etc., comp. genealogy in 1 Sa. ix. 1; xiv. 50, 51. Kish, nephew and namesake of Kish in vs. 30. Ner had also a son named Abner, 1 Sam. xiv. 51. Abinadab, pos. the same as Ishui.[f] Esh-baal, or Ish-bosheth.[g] Saul had nine children, though four only are named here; cf. 1 Sam. xxxi. 2; xiv. 49; 2 Sam. xxi. 8. (34) Merib-baal, or Mephibosheth.[h] Micah, cf. 2 Sam. ix. 12. (35-39) sons, etc., comp. ch. ix. 41-44. (40) archers, lit. treading the bow: bending it, by putting the foot on it, wh. is done when the bow is large and strong. — Gesenius.

All these sons. — 1. The natural succession of the race. We read of "sons," "children," and "fathers," and "children's children." "One generation passeth away and another generation cometh." "The earth is a stage, persons passing and vanishing before our eyes." 2. The moral connection of the race. Men an honor or dishonor to their own lineage; influenced by their fathers as they are influencing posterity. There are laws of influence and dependence which run through the whole race. Every human being sustains a relation, possesses a right and is endowed with power to subserve the great end. "No man liveth unto himself." — Hom. Com.

Enthusiasm of man. — It is not to taste sweet things, but to do noble and true things, and vindicate himself under God's heaven as a God-made man, that the poorest son of Adam dimly longs. Show him the way of doing that, the dullest day-drudge kindles into a hero. They wrong man greatly who say he is to be seduced by ease. Difficulty, abnegation, martyrdom, death, are the allurements that act on the heart of man. Kindle the inner genial life of him, you have a flame that burns up all lower considerations. Not happiness, but something higher; one sees this even in the frivolous classes, with their

f 1 Sa. xiv. 49.

g 2 Sa. ii. 8.

h 2 Sa. ix. 12.

"Great strength as well as skill was requisite in ancient archery, as the bow, wh. was of steel, was bent by treading with the feet, and pulling the string with both hands." — Jamieson.

"'See where the giant on the mountain stands, his blood-red tresses deepening in the sun, with death shot glowing in his fiery hands, and eye that scorches all it glares upon.'" Byron.

"point of honor" and the like. Not by flattering our appetites; no, by awakening the heroic that slumbers in every heart, can any religion gain followers. — Carlyle.

B. C. cir. 689.

Personification of war. —

Lastly, stood War, in glittering arms yclad,
With visage grim, stern look, and blackly hued;
In his right hand a naked sword he had,
That to the hilts was all with blood imbrued;
And in his left (that kings and kingdoms rued),
Famine and fire, he held, and there withal,
He razèd towns, and threw down towers and all.
Cities he sack'd and realms (that whilom flower'd
In honor, glory, and rule above the rest)
He overwhelm'd, and all their fame devour'd, Consumed, destroy'd, wasted and never ceased,
Till he their wealth, their name and all oppress'd;
His face forehew'd with wounds, and by his side
There hung his targe, with gashes deep and wide. — Sackville.

"A lively and agreeable man has not only the merit of liveliness and agreeableness himself, but that also of awakening them in others." — Greville.

War. — What a fine-looking thing is war! Yet dress it as we may, dress and feather it, daub it with gold, huzza it, and sing swaggering songs about it, what is it, nine times out of ten, but murder in uniform. — Jerrold.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

1—9. "This chapter contains two parts. 1-34 gives the inhabitants of Jerusalem in reign of Josiah; 35-44, The Genealogy of Saul." — Murphy. reckoned . . genealogies, the Hebrew verb is sufficiently satisfied by the rendering were enrolled or were registered. book of the kings, not the books of the Bible that are so called.[a] who were carried, R. V., "and Judah was carried away captive. (2) first inhabitants, of the return fr. captivity.[b] the Israelites, prob. meaning the masses of the people, both fr. the ten tribes and the two. Nethinims,[c] cf. Ezra viii. 20, the servants of the priests, originally confined to descendants of the Gibeonites (Josh. ix. 27); the title means "dedicated ones." (3) in Jerus., etc., comp. Neh. xi. 4–19. Ephraim and Manasseh, comp. ch. xii. 19, and 2 Chron. xxxiv. 9. (9) fathers, R. V., "all these men were heads of fathers' houses by their fathers' houses."

Israel's and Judah's genealogies

a Comp. 2 Chr. xxxiii. 18.

b The first return was under Zerubbabel and Joshua (B. C. 535), then that of Ezra (B. C. 457), and of Nehemiah (B. C. 444).

The purpose and cause of the captivity (vs. 1). — The human view of the captivity. In searching out the reason, men might point to broken treaties, number and strength of enemy, etc. II. The Divine view: "For their transgressions;" their captivity a punishment. III. Sin leads men into captivity.

c A name only used after the exile.

Early history of man. —

Upon the breast of new created earth
Man walked, and when and wheresoe'er he moved,
Alone or mated, solitude was not.
He heard, upon the wind, the articulate voice
Of God; and angels to his sight appeared,
Crowning the glorious hills of Paradise,
Or through the groves gliding like morning mist Enkindled by the sun. He sat and talked With winged messengers, who daily brought,
To his small island in th' ethereal deep,
Tidings of joy and love. From these pure heights Fell human kind — to banishment condemned,
That flowing years repeal'd not, and distress
And grief spread wide; but man escaped the doom
Of destitution — solitude was not.
Jehovah, formless Power, above all powers,
Single and one, the omnipotent God,
By vocal utterance, or blaze of light,
Or cloud of darkness, localized in heaven —
On earth, enshrined within the wandering ark,
Or out of Sion, thundering from His throne

Man was originally created for good, and to do good only; in his new birth, he is re-created on the same principle.

"Man was the highest note in the scale of creation, and when he descended, through all nature there followed a corresponding reduction." — Trench.

"Every man is a volume, if you know how to read him." — W. Ellery Channing.

B. C. cir. 639.

Between the cherubim — in the chosen race
Showered miracles, and ceased not to dispense Judgments that filled the land from age to age
With hope, and love, and gratitude, and fear,
And with amazement smote — thereby to assert His scorned or unacknowledged sovereignty. — Wordsworth.

priests and Levites

10—16. (10, 11) Azariah, called by Neh. Seraiah. ruler, etc., prob. refers to Ahitub, ch. vi. 11.[a] (12, 13) brethren, etc., comp. Ne. xi. 12–14, where the number given is five hundred and sixty-eight less. (14–16) Levites, Ne. xi. 15–18, where many additional details are given.

Very able men. —If responsible posts, influential professions, call for the services of men highly endowed and thoroughly furnished, shall we say that anything is good enough for the work of God? Remembering the honor of serving Him, the difficulties peculiar to His service, let us rather seek to offer to Him the best, There is abundant scope for intellectual vigor, mental acquisitions, tender sympathy, unsparing labors, and all other precious gifts, in the service of our redeeming God. Therefore, the strong and gifted should be especially summoned to enter upon the work of Christ; to come up "to the help of the Lord against the mighty." There is room for others; there is room for all; why not for such? If the temple ministrations offered scope for "very able men," what need is there for wise master-builders, capable pastors, stout-hearted laborers, valiant soldiers, in the work which is dear to the heart of God, and which has been commenced by the grace of the Divine Redeemer! To one and to all we would say, "The Lord has need of you."— Pul. Com.

Sir Thomas More, while a prisoner in the tower, would not suffer himself to be trimmed, saying, "There was a controversy between the king and him for his head; and till that was at a happy end he would be at no cost about it." The first work of man should be to settle the controversy between himself and God concerning his soul.

The seraph within man. — Krummacher gives the legend of Adam reposing under a tree, looking up into heaven, and longing for wings that he might soar to the stars. Then a seraph touched him, and a deep sleep fell upon him, and he dreamed; and it seemed to him he flew up into heaven. But when he awoke he found he was still reclining under the tree. Then he said to the seraph, "Behold! I flew up to the vault of the sky: radiant worlds like the sun rushed past me, and still worlds on worlds were beyond. Didst thou indeed guide me yonder?" But the seraph answered, "This tree has overshadowed thee, and thy body has rested on this hill. But, behold, Adam! within thee dwells a seraph, who is able to rise to these glorious worlds, and who, the higher he soareth, bendeth the knee in deeper humility, before Jehovah. Son of earth! prize and guard this seraph, that worldly lusts paralyze not his flight, to chain him to the earth." The seraph spake thus, and disappeared.

porters and gate-keepers

17—26. (17) porters, whose duty it was to guard entrances to the temple. (18) hitherto waited, or who to this day waits.[b] companies, lit. camps,[c] R. V., "They were porters for the camp of the children of Levi." The eastward gate was that by which the king alone entered (Ezek. xliv. 3). (19) gates, lit. thresholds, or inner doors of the temple.[d] (20) Phinehas, Nu. iii. 32. in time past, or "in presence of the Lord."[e] (21) tabernacle of the congregation, R. V., "tent of meeting," in all places. (22) were two hundred, etc., comp. Neh. xi. 19, where the number is more correctly given as one hundred and seventy-two, or twenty-four for each week (ch. xxvi. 17–18), with four warders for seven weeks in rotation (2 Ki. xi. 5). reckoned, registered. villages, round Jerus., in which they resided. seer, 1 Sa. ix. 9. (24) four quarters, 1 Chr. xxvi. 14–16. (25) after seven days, a weekly course of Levites and porters as of priests. The change was made at the beginning of each Sabbath (2 Ki. xi. 5). (26) four chief porters, these were permanent officials residing in the chambers of the temple.

Porters and door keepers of the house of God. — I. They filled an honorable and important position. II. They were tried men (see vs. 18). III. Much of the comfort and order of the worship depend on their duty being well done. IV. In our day, doorkeepers, etc., should respect their work, and be honored for their work's sake.

The king's gate. — This gate was so called because Solomon built it and the rest of the wall on that side, at an extraordinary trouble and expense, raising the foundation four hundred cubits, or seven hundred and twenty-nine feet seven inches from the bottom of the deep valley of Kidron, by means of large stones, twenty cubits, or thirty-six feet five inches long, and six cubits, or ten a "The high priest at time of return under Zerub. was Joshua (Ezr. iii. 2; Hag. i. 1; Zec. iii. 1–8; vi. 11-13.") — Wordsworth.

b "Whereas Shallum had originally the general superintendence of the gates, a change had been made when the author wrote, and Shallum's charge had become the east gate only."—Spk. Com.

c "According to the ancient mode of speeeh, in wh. the Levites were regarded as soldiers keeping watch and ward about the palace of Jehovah (Nu. i. 50-53; iv. 3-15)." — Wordsworth.

d 2 Chr. xxiii. 4.

e So LXX. and Vulg.

feet ten inches high, so as to be on an equality with the rest of the surface. When Captain Light visited Jerusalem, in 1814, some of these large stones seem to have been remaining, for when describing the Turkish aga's house, which is built on the spot where the house of Pontius Pilate formerly stood, he says, "What attracted my observation most were three or four layers of immense stones, apparently of the ancient town, forming part of the walls of the palace." The ancients delighted in building with these large kinds of stones, for in the ruins which we have of ancient buildings, they are often to be found of great magnitude. Mr. Wood, in his Ruins of Palmyra and Balbec, states that "the stones which compose the sloping wall of the latter are enormous; some are from twenty-eight to thirty-five feet long, and nine feet high. There are three of the following dimensions: fifty-eight feet high, and twelve thick; they are of white granite, with large shining flakes like gypsum." At Bagdad, the gate Al Talism is "now bricked up, in honor of its having been entered in triumph by the Sultan Murad, after his having recovered Bagdad from the Persians and the weak grasp of the unworthy son of the great Abbas. In consequence of this signal event, the portal was instantly closed on the victor having marched through, and from that day has never been reopened. This custom of shutting up any passage that has been peculiarly honored, that it may not be profaned by vulgar footsteps, appears to have prevailed very generally over the East. I found an instance of it at Ispahan, where the Ali Copi gate is, in like manner, held sacred for a similar reason."—Sir R. R. Porter.

B. C. cir. 639.

"Some lives are forgeries. They give out that they are epistles of Christ, while they are not."—Arnot.

"Some must be great. Great officers will have Great talents. And God gives to ev'ry man
The virtue, temper, understanding, taste,
That lifts him into life, and lets him fall
Just in the niche he was ordained to fill."—Cowper.

"Pray and stay are two blessed monosyllables."—Donne.

27—34. (27) round about, prob. within the temple-courts. the opening thereof, lit. they were over the key.[a] (28) by tale, or number, counting them before and after use. (29, 30) spices, etc., various articles required for the service, such as incense, etc. (31) made in the pans, the minchah, or meat-offering.[b] (32) shew bread, Ex. xxv. 30; Lev. xxiv. 5, 6. (33) free, R. V., adds "from other service." (34) throughout their generations, i. e. the position was hereditary.

the opening thereof, the singers, etc.

a Ju. iii. 25; Is. xxii. 22.

b Le. ii. 5, 6; vi. 14.

Homiletic hints (vs. 33).—I. As mercy did not cease to rule either by day or by night, so music did not hush its holy ministry. II. God's praise is constant in heaven, and should be on earth. III. The Lord always deserves to be praised for what He is in Himself, and for His works—especially for redemption. IV. Have we not something to sing about at this moment?—Spurgeon.

Opening the doors.—These actions were simple, mechanical—it might be thought lowly, if not menial. But they were places of trust. It was important that none should be admitted to the holy places but those who had the right of entrance. These men had the purity of the sacred courts at their command; they were trusted to see that these were not profaned by unhallowed feet. When we are trusted by our fellows or by our Master to do anything, whether it be in itself serious or slight, we should feel that we are being honored, and we should put forth all our vigilance, strength, vigor, to prove ourselves worthy of the confidence placed in us. Nothing should make so strong an appeal to our undivided energies as being trusted to see that something is done well in the service of our Saviour.—Clarkson.

Calvin, even in his dying illness, would not refrain from his labors; but when his friends endeavored to persuade him to moderate his exertions he replied: "What! shall my Lord come and find me idle?"

"He was a man, take him for all in all, I shall not look upon his like again!"—Shakespeare.

35—44. This is a repetition of viii. 29–40, given with slight and unimportant variations. (35) Jehiel, see ch. viii. 29. (36) Ner, omitted ch. viii. 30. (37, 38) and Gedor, etc., comp. ch. vii. 31, 32. (39–44) and Ner, etc., comp. ch. viii. 33–38.

Gibeon, Kish, Saul, etc.

Charm in opening manhood.—There is a charm in opening manhood which has commended itself to the imagination in every age. The undefined hopes and promises of the future—the dawning strength of intellect—the vigorous flow of passion—the very exchange of home ties and protected joys for free and manly pleasures, give to this period an interest and excitement unfelt, perhaps, at any other. It is the beginning of life in the sense of independent and self-supporting action. Hitherto life has been to boys, as to girls, a derivative and independent existence—a sucker from the parent growth—a home discipline of authority and guidance, and communicated impulse. But henceforth it is a transplanted growth of its own—a new and free power of activity—in which the mainspring is no longer authority or law from without, but principle or opinion from within. The shoot which has been nourished under the shelter of the parent stem, and bent according to its inclination, is transferred to the open world, where of its own impulse and character it

"His life was gentle, and the elements so mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up and say to all the world, this was a man."—Shakespeare.

"The best thing corrupted is worst; an ill man is the worst of all creatures; an ill Christian the worst of all men; an ill professor the worst of all Christians; an ill minister the worst of all professors." — Bp. Hall.

B. C. 1017.

"Man is greater than a world, than systems of worlds; there is more mystery in the union of soul with the physical than in the creation of a universe."—Henry Giles.

must take root, and grow into strength or sink into weakness and vice. There is a natural pleasure in such a change. The sense of freedom is always joyful, at least at first. The mere consciousness of awakening powers, and prospective work touches with elation the youthful breast. But to every right-hearted youth this time must also be one of severe trial. Anxiety must greatly dash its pleasure. There must be regrets behind and uncertainties before. The thought of home must excite a pang even in the first moments of freedom. Its glad shelter — its kindly guidance — its very restraints, how dear and tender must they seem in parting! How brightly must they shine in the retrospect as the youth turns from them to the hardened and unfamiliar face of the world! With what a sweet, sadly-cheering pathos must they linger in the memory! And then what chance and hazard is there in his newly gotten freedom! What instincts of warning in its very novelty and dim inexperience! What possibilities of failure as well as of success in the unknown future, as it stretches before him! — Tulloch.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

overthrow and death of Saul

1—7. (1) Philistines, etc., this engagement took place on the plain of Jezreel, comp. 1 Sa. xxxi. 1–6; 2 Sa. i. 9, 10. slain, or "wounded," a proportion only actually killed. Gilboa, 1 Sa. xxviii. 4. (2) Abinadab, or Ishui. (3) hit him, etc., R. V., "overtook him; and he was distressed by reason of the archers." (4) abuse me, he feared a prolonged and violent death. (5) the sword, i. e. his own, not Saul's. (6) all his house, 1 Sam. xxxi. 6 reads "all his men." Probably the body-guard is meant. Not all his family perished. (7) forsook their cities, comp. 1 Sa. xxxi. 7.

"O deaf to nature and to heaven's command against thyself to lift the murdering hand! O damn'd despair! to shun the living light, and plunge thy guilty soul in endless night."—Lucretius.

Saul's character.— Saul was not an atheist. He was a religious man in his way. This chapter shows it. Saul calls the Philistines the "uncircumcised ones." Circumcision distinguished him, and he evidently prided himself on it. It had placed him on a pedestal so that he could look on all others and exclaim, "Stand aside; for I am holier than thou." Thus he had the "form of godliness;" but where was the "power?" Was there one iota of what circumcision was intended to represent about him? None. He rested in the ordinance. The meaning of that ordinance had in him no adequate expression. Are there not many now who pride themselves on baptism? But what has baptism in them in its true meaning? Are they dead and buried with Christ? Are they risen with Christ? Are they alive unto God and dead indeed unto sin? Where is the crucifixion of them to the world and the world unto them, which baptism signifies? Alas! they have none of it. They may look with disdain upon the "unbaptized" ones, as Saul did upon the "uncircumcised" ones; but well would it have been for him, and well would it be for them also, if they had never had it.— Whitfield.

the burial of Saul

8—14. (8) strip, etc., the armor formed valuable part of the victor's spoils. (9) stripped, etc., comp. 1 Sa. xxxi. 9, 10. and sent into, i. e. sent the head and armor throughout the land. "According to a common custom the objects just named are not repeated."—Keil. (10) of their gods, in 1 Sa. this reads "of Ashtoreth;" doubtless the famous temple of Venus mentioned by Herodotus. (11) Jabesh-gilead,[a] Ju. xxi. 8–14; 1 Sa. xi. 1–11. (12) body, cf. 1 Sam. xxxi. 10. These bodies had been "fastened to the wall of Beth Shan." buried their bones, after burning the bodies, cf. 1 Sa. xxxi. 12. Cremation was not usual. But this proves that it was not considered sacrilegious. oak, Sam. says tree.[b] (13) for his transgression, esp. refer. to sin of sparing Amalek.[c] asking, etc., consummating his wickedness by turning to witch of Endor. (14) turned the kingdom, etc., the reference to Saul is only made as introduction to the reign of David.

[a] 1 Sa. xxxi. 11—13.

[b] 1 Sa. xxxi. 13.

[c] 1 Sa. xv. 1-9.

"Werre at his bygynnyng hath so greet an entre and so large, that every wight may entre when him liketh, and lightly fynde werre; but certes what ende schal falle therof, it is not lightly to nowe. For sothly whan that werre is oones bygonne,

Tidings sent to the idols (vs. 9).— After Saul had fallen on Mount Gilboa, his enemies "stripped him, and took off his head, and sent the tidings to their idols." When the heathen of the present day gain a victory over their enemies, they always take the tidings to their idols. There is the king, and there his general and troops and priests and people marching in triumph to the temple. Then they relate to the gods all their proceedings; how they conquered the foe, and that to them they have come to give the glory. But this practice is had recourse to, also, in the common affairs of life. A man delivered from prison, or any great emergency, always goes to his gods to carry the joyful tidings. Hear them relate the story: Ah! Swamy, you know Muttoo wanted to ruin me; he therefore forged a deed in my name, and tried to get my estates; but I resisted him, and it has just been decided before the court that he is guilty. I am therefore come to praise you, O Swamy!"—Roberts. Familiar spirits (vs. 13).—Lord Byron, when a boy, was warned by a fortuneteller, that he should die in the 37th year of his age. That idea haunted him, and in his last illness, he mentioned it as precluding all hope of his recovery. It repressed, his physician says that energy of spirit so necessary for nature in struggling with disease. He talked of two days of the week as his unlucky days, on which nothing would tempt him to commence any matter of importance; and mentioned as an excuse for indulging such fancies, that his friend Shelley, the poet, had a familiar who warned him that he should perish by drowning, and such was the fate of that highly-gifted but misguided man.—Whitecross.

B. C. 1010.

ther is ful many a child unbore of his mooder that schal sterve yong, bycause of thilke werre, or ellse lyve in sorwe, and deye in wreechidness; and therefore er that eny werre be bygonne, men moste have gret counseil and gret deliberacioun."—Chaucer.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

David made king in Hebron

1—3. The writer here passes over all that is recorded in 2 Sam. i–iv. (1) all Israel, at death of Ishbosheth, see 2 Sa. v. 1–3. all Israel, i. e. the national assembly, composed of Israelites of twenty yrs old and upwards (Nu. i. 3), to whom leaders and kings were presented for their approval. (2) moreover, etc., two things are here urged on Dav., the eye of the people had long been on him, and he was especially called and anointed of Jehovah. (3) covenant, as 2 Sa. v. 3. "Some kind of a charter, defining the king's rights, was in existence (1 Sam. x. 25): and later on we find the people demanding a limitation of these rights. 1 Ki. xii. 3 ff. The Israelite monarchy was not an absolute and unlimited despotism."—Kirkpatrick. anointed David, for the third time. He was 30 yrs. old (2 Sa. v. 4).

If an angel were sent to find the most perfect man, he would probably not find him composing a body of divinity; but perhaps a cripple in a poorhouse, whom the parish wish dead, but humbled before God, with far lower thoughts of himself than others think of him.

Israel's commissariat-general (vs. 2).—David's commission. I. What it implies. 1. God's care for Israel; 2. God's view of a king's duty; 3. That Israel had not been well fed of late. II. How David discharged it. 1. By securing peace, by victorious wars, he provided for the ingathering of fruits of the earth; 2. By attention to religious affairs he provided for spiritual food of his people; 3. He himself spread a table, in the Bk. of Ps., for the souls of men.

The mission of man.—

How I wish
I could love men! for amid all life's quests
There seems but worthy one — to do men good.
It matters not how long we live, but how.
For as the parts of one manhood while here
We live in every age: we think, and feel,
And feed upon the coming and the gone
As much as on the now time. Man is one:
And he hath one great heart. It is thus we feel,
With a gigantic throb athwart the sea,
Each other's rights and wrongs; thus are we men.
Let us think less of men and more of God.—Bailey.

"Man is a central creature between the animals, that is to say, the most perfect form, which unites the traits of all in the most complete epitome."—Herder.

David takes the castle of Zion

4—9. (4) Jebus, the ancient name of city when associated with the Jebusites. (5) castle, R. V. "stronghold." (6) David said, only a portion of the narrative given (2 Sa. v. 8) is repeated here. Joab, etc., a most important addition to Sam.'s account. (7) city of David, or Zion. (8) built the city, prob. a new town to the north of the old one. Joab repaired,[a] or restored the old city of the Jebusites. (9) Lord of hosts: a title which occurs often in the times of Samuel and David, but not at all in the Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Job, Proverbs, Ezekiel or Daniel. It occurs first in 1 Sa. i. 3, in close connection with the foundation of the monarchy and is probably an ascription of universal sovereignty over hosts earthly and heavenly.

[a] 1 Ki. xviii. 30; Ne. iv. 2.

The true freedom of man.—The free man is he who is loyal to the laws of his universe; who in his heart sees and knows, across all contradictions, that injustice cannot befall him here; that, except by sloth and cowardly falsity, evil is not possible here. The first symptom of such a man is not that he resists and rebels, but that he obeys. The essence of all "religion" that was and that will be, is to make men free. Who is he that, in this life-pil-

"Our Heavenly Father, in His boundless goodness, has made His creatures that they should be happy, and in His wisdom has fitted His means to His ends, giving to all of them different qualities and faculties, in using and grimage, will consecrate himself, at all hazards, to obey God and God's servants, and to disobey the devil and his? With pious valor this free man walks through the roaring tumults invincibly, the way whither he is bound. To him in the waste Saharas, through the grim solitudes peopled by galvanized corpses and doleful creatures, there is a lodestar; and his path, whatever those of others be, is towards the Eternal. A man well worth consulting, and taking the vote of about matters temporal; and, properly, the only kind of man. — Carlyle.

B. C. 1010, etc.

developing which, according to His prescription, they find that happiness which He has intended for them."— Prince Albert.

David's mighty men

10—14. (10) chief, etc., comp. 2 Sa. xxiii. 8-39. mighty men, or heroes. strengthened, R. V., "shewed themselves strong." "strenuously assisted with all Israel in making David king." (11) Hachmonite,[a] R. V., "the son of a Hachmonite." captains, R. V., "thirty." (12) three mighties, the third being Shammah.[b] (13) Pas-dammim, or Ephes-dammim.[c] The spot or boundary of blood; it was the scene of frequent conflicts with the Philistines. Here David slew Goliath. to battle, here several verses are omitted. cf. 2 Sam. xxiii. 9-11. barley, lentils in 2 Sa. xxiii. 11.

David's mighty men (vs. 10). — I. Their history in relation to themselves. Their purpose and work to make David king, "according to the word of the Lord." For this they fought, not thinking of self. II. The lesson of their history for us. Our great work to maintain the throne of our King — David's royal Son.

The mighty men. — The worthies whose deeds are here recorded were rendering a not unimportant service to their race. The reign of David had a certain serious bearing on the whole plan of Providence. It was, perhaps, an essential link in the whole redemptive chain. In this light the exploits of these heroes, who helped to place David in regal power and to sustain him on the throne of Israel, formed a contribution to the work of God and the redemption of man. The tendency of our nature is to overestimate such brilliant feats as those of this chapter. But it is possible, by a reaction of thought, to underestimate them, and even to deny them a place in the account of honorable service. Physical prowess has served and yet may serve the cause of truth, righteousness, wisdom. Now, in these Christian times, it is (1) by moral rather than by physical courage; (2) in obscurity rather than in distinction; (3) with the sword of the spirit rather than with the sword of steel, that we are to win victories and render service to our Lord. — Clarkson. A brave boy. — In the war with France, previous to the Revolution, an English drummer, not more than fifteen years of age, having wandered from his camp too near the French lines, was seized and brought before the French commander. On being asked who he was by the general, he answered, "A drummer in the English service." This not gaining credit, a drum was sent for, and he was desired to beat a couple of marches, which he accordingly did. The Frenchman's suspicion being, however, not quite removed, he desired the drummer to beat a retreat. "A retreat, sir?" replied the youthful Briton; "I don't know what that is." This answer so pleased the French officer that he dismissed the drummer, and wrote to his general, commending his spirited behavior. — Percy Anec.

[a] 1 Chr. xxvii. 2.

[b] 2 Sa. xxiii. 11.

[c] 1 Sa. xvii. 1.

"There are but three classes of men: the retrograde, the stationary, and the progressive." — Lavater.

"The warrior's name would be a name abhorr'd, and every nation that should lift again its hand against a brother, on its forehead should wear forevermore the curse of Cain." — Longfellow.

"A man is like a bit of Labrador spar, which has no lustre as you turn it in your hand, until you come to a particular angle, then it shows deep and beautiful colors." — Emerson.

the well at the gate of Bethlehem

15—19. (15) of the thirty, mentioned in vs. 11 and numerated in vss. 26–40. went down, comp. 2 Sa. xxiii. 13–17. Adullam, 1 Sa. xxii. 1; the traditional site S. E. of Bethlehem is untenable. It was a royal city of the Canaanites 10 miles N. W. of Hebron. Rephaim, 2 Sa. v. 17–25.[d] (16) in the hold, some kind of fortress was so called. (17) the well, according to tradition, was half a mile N. E. of Bethlehem. But the well "at the gate" cannot be identified. (18) brake through, a remarkable feat of chivalry and devotion, revealing the great hold David had on his soldiers, as well as their courage. poured it out, an illustration of the nature which so endeared David to his followers. The act was a libation, offering to God this water made sacred by the heroism that obtained it. (19) drink the blood, water which has been obtained at the peril of life. Comp. 2 Sa. xxiii. 17.[e]

Water. — Eastern people are great connoisseurs in the taste of water. They drink very little else, except coffee without sugar, so they learn to distinguish the peculiar quality of water from different springs. Van Lennep tells us that there are in Constantinople shops in which nothing but water is sold, the price of a glass varying in accordance with the reputation of the spring whence it is brought. A steamer regularly plies between the capital and the island of [d] 2 Sa. xxiii. 13; 1 Chr. xiv. 9-16; Is. xvii. 5.

[e] "In 2 Sa. it is literally, 'blood of men going with their souls or lives,' i. e. putting their lives in their hands to fetch it." — Wordsworth.

"There were three mightiest; there may be a countless host of mighties, and yet the very

Marmora, seventy-five miles off, in order to supply the Sultan's seraglio with the water of a celebrated spring. The actual excellence of the water from the "well of Bethlehem" may partly accout for David's longing to drink of it; but there were probably also home yearnings in his heart. — From Biblical things not generally known. A hero. — The illustrious champion of the Gothic ages, Du Guesclin, Lord High Constable of France, possessed a person by no means favored by nature. He said of himself when he was very young, "I am indeed very ugly; I shall never be a favorite with the ladies; but I trust I shall make myself feared by the enemies of my sovereign." From his earliest youth he breathed nothing but battles and feats of activity. "There never was a more unlucky boy in the world," said his mother, "than my son. He is always wounded in some way or other; his face is always full of scars; he is constantly beating, and being beaten." In the times in which Du Guesclin lived, the nobility were often assembled to fêtes to the ladies. His father and many other courtiers published a tournament, to which they invited all the accomplished cavaliers in France and England. Young Du Guesclin observed with great pleasure the preparations that were making for the tournament, when his father, in consideration of his very early years, ordered him to stay in his chateau, and on no account whatever to follow him to Rennes. Soon after he was set out, young Du Guesclin quitted the castle in disguise, and placed himself among the spectators of this brilliant ceremony. Observing, however, a relation of his, who had retired from the engagement, unhorsed, he followed him to the inn, and with tears in his eyes entreated him to lend him his horse and armor. Having, with some difficulty, effected his purpose, he performed such wonders at the tournament, that the prize was adjudged him; this he offered to the chevalier who had accoutred him, for the honorable distinction which he obtained. This, however, the latter refused, and brought the young hero to his father, who embraced him amidst the applause of the spectators. — Percy Anec.

B. C. 1010, etc.

poorest woman who seeks to touch the hem of the Saviour's garment, may receive power to go forward and heal and comfort others." — J. Parker.

"Look not alone for your relations in your own house or in your own sphere. The blood of Christ is stronger for relationship than blood of father or mother. Look above you. All there are yours. Go down even to the bottom of society. All below you are judgement-day brothers; and God's eternity is on them and you alike." — Beecher.

20—25. (20) Abishai, nephew of David, cf. 2 Sam. x. 10, 14; xviii. 2; 1 Sam. xxvi. 8; 2 Sam. xxi. 17. chief of the three, just mentioned, who did this feat. (21) more honourable, as being the leader in the enterprise. first three, those mentioned in vs. 12. (22) Benaiah, comp. 2 Sa. xxiii. 20–23. many acts, etc., R. V., "mighty deeds," he slew the two sons of Ariel of Moab, 2 Sam. viii. 2. in a snowy day,[a] R. V., "in time of snow," that is in the winter, the lions having taken refuge in a pit or well, 1 Sa. xvii. 34–37. (23) five cubits, seven feet six inches. weaver's beam, comp. 1 Sa. xvii. 7; 2 Sa. xxi. 19. (24) the three mighties, i. e., the second three. (25) honourable among, R. V., "more honourable than." his guard, his bodyguard, this involved personal attendance on David,[b] 2 Sam. xxvii. 6.

A valiant man. — A beautiful expression is this, "a valiant man." This is what the church needs now, both in the pulpit and in the pew. This is no time for indifference, timidity, self-consideration, or cowardice. To his credit or discredit be it said, the devil is valiant enough. He plants his evil places at the corners of the streets; he is up first in the morning and last at night; he studies the tastes of the people, and accommodates himself to them; though a leader, he is yet a follower; there is no man, how low or how high soever, whose peculiarities he does not study with a view to his corruption and overthrow. How is it that the church will operate but in one direction, forgetting the breadth of human life, and the multitudinousness of its necessity? The church is apt to confine its valor to one line or to one point. It does not follow the sinner, tracking his every step, passing with him from chamber to chamber, pleading with him, wrestling with him, and giving him to feel that he will not be let go until he has answered the great appeals of heaven. Is it enough to build a sanctuary and to say that the people may come to it if they please? — J. Parker. Money wasted in war. — Give me the money that has been spent in war, and I will purchase every foot of land on the globe. I will clothe every man, woman and child in an attire that kings and queens might be proud of. I will build a school-house upon every hillside and in every valley over the habitable earth. I will supply that schoolhouse with a competent teacher; I will build an academy in every town, and endow it; a college in every state, and fill it with able professors; I will crown every hill with a church consecrated to the promulgation of the gospel of peace; I will support in its pulpit an able teacher of righteousness, so that on every Sabbath morning the chime on one hill shall answer to the chime a "From this we learn that lions abounded in the land in the time of David; that they retreated into pits, and that they had snowy days even in Palestine." — Thompson.

Abishai and Benaiah

b Gesenius prefers the rendering. "Took him into his privy-council," 2 Sa. viii. 18, xx. 23; 1 Ki. i. 38.

"Courage mounteth with occasion" — Shakespeare.

The most grand and magnificent procession the ancients ever beheld was a Roman triumph. After a decisive battle gained the most illustrious captives in war, with their wives and children, were led in fetters before the general's chariot, through the public streets of Rome, scaffolds being everywhere erected, and the public places crowded to behold the sight.

B. C. 1010.

on another around the earth's broad circumference; and the voice of prayer and the song of praise shall ascend like the smoke of a universal holocaust to heaven. — Stebbins.

the valiant men of the armies

26—33. These verses correspond to 2 Sa. xxiii. 24–31, and seem to be a list of "the thirty" referred to in vs. 15, together with some others; 37 in Samuel and 40 in Chronicles, in all. The names vary. (26) Asahel, 2 Sa. ii. 18–32.[a] (27) Harorite, or Harodite; poss. fr. the spring Harod. Pelonite, or Paltite.[b] (28) Tekoite, of Tekoa, 2 Sa. xiv. 2. Antothite, native of Anathoth, Jos. xxi. 18. (29) Sibbecai, in Sam. he is called Mebunnai. Ilai, in Sam. called Zalmon. (30) Netophathite, of Netophah, a place near Bethlehem, poss. modern Beit-Nettif.[c] Heled, or Heleb. (31) Pirathonite, of Pirathon, Ju. xii. 15. (32) Gaash, Jos. xxiv. 30. Arbathite, native of the Arabah. (33) Baharumite, comp. 2 Sa. xxiii. 31; xvi. 5.

A wise king chooses brave men for captains. — He did so because he recognized the validity of the principle we have just been considering. His valor infused itself into the captains; theirs would be infused into the men. In war an army wants brave leaders, not figure-heads. "Take the kings away, every man out of his place, and put captains in their room," said the sensible military critics of Benhadad, who had made his first invasion of Israel with thirty-two kings as leaders of his troops. But it is not only in military matters, but in all others that courage is wanted. From the teacher of a Sunday school to a prime minister, from a minister of religion to a town councilor, whoever is at the head of his fellows should be brave; wise as well, but brave. Prudence without some daring and enterprise will so shrink from difficulties and risks that it will take ofttimes the most dangerous course of all — doing nothing. There is always at hand, available for whoever can use it, abundance of power to work reforms, to render needed service to mankind, if only there be leaders for it. Are you in a position of influence of any sort, in church or state, with few or many? Remember that David would have none but heroic men for leaders, and if you have not courage to lead men forward, you should give place to those who have. Happy the village church, the Sunday school, the school board, the town council, the land, whose leaders have brave hearts that do not slacken with languor or shrink from danger! With such leading, the community, like Israel, will find safety, prosperity, blessing, in richer measure than languid hearts ever dare to dream of. — Glover.

34—41. (34) sons of, the name of some warrior seems to have fallen out here.[d] (35–38) Joel the brother, etc., comp. in 2 Sa. xxiii. 36 Igal, the son of Nathan. (39–41) Uriah, 2 Sa. xi. 3. The names in this and succeeding verses are added to the list given in Samuel.

Uriah the Hittite (vs. 41.). — Foreigners resident in the country were permitted to serve in the Jewish armies, and they sometimes rose to a very high rank: for both Uriah and Ittai, who seem to have held principal commands in the armies of David, were aboriginal Canaanites. But in succeeding ages the kings of Judah, affecting to imitate the policy of the surrounding potentates, or distrusting the omnipotent protection of Jehovah, occasionally hired large bodies of foreign troops to fight their battles, who, like mercenaries of later times, after expelling the invaders, sometimes turned their arms against their employers, and ravaged the country which they came to protect. — Paxton. Attraction of bravery. — If God has made you a kingly spirit you need not be over-solicitous about the recognition of your claims. He whom God makes to be master is master by a law of gravitation, and finds his level as naturally as material things find theirs. Impatience to reach your throne only delays it. Be still, and if God means you to rule, there is nothing more certain than that you will. Meanwhile, as perhaps you have not that part to play, attach yourself as a learner and a follower to him whom you find better and wiser than yourself, and, sitting at his feet, you will, in the practice of obedience, learn the secret of command. David not only attracts, however, but elevates. Beneath the kindling inspiration of his valor all hearts grow brave. Courage seems so easy and fear so shameful that, with him as leader, each man is twice, ay, sometimes many times himself. A Bruce, a Cromwell, a Nelson, or a Wellington, will never lack brave following. "As iron sharpeth iron, so does a man the countenance of his friend." Valor in one makes many valiant. King Arthur had his knights of the Round Table, and David had his,

a 2 Sa. iii. 27, 30; xxxiii. 24; 1 Chr. xxvii. 7.

b 2 Sa. xxiii. 26; 1 Chr. xxvii. 10.

c Ezr. ii. 22; Ne. vii. 26.

"We make ourselves more injuries than are offered to us; they many times pass for wrongs in our own thoughts that were never meant so by the heart of him that speaketh. The apprehension of wrong hurts more than the sharpest part of the wrong done." — Feltham.

If we stand in the openings of the present moment, with all of the length and breadth of our faculties unselfishly adjusted to what it reveals, we are in the best condition to receive what God is always ready to communicate." — T. C. Upham.

d "Perhaps the most prob. conjecture is, that the 'Beni Hashem' of Chron. and the 'Beni Jashem' of Sam. alike conceal some single name of a man wh. cannot now be recovered." — Spk. Com.

"He is but the counterfeit of a man who hath not the life of a man." — Shakespeare.

"The best hearts, Trim, are ever the bravest, replied my uncle Toby." — Sterne.

and all brave men have theirs. Such a fact is worthy of notice, for we are apt to think evil a stronger thing than good; the fact being that good is the most omnipotent thing on earth, kindling similar goodness in others' lives. Be brave and good, and you will not long be without companions. —Pul. Com.

B. C. cir. 1020.

42—47, (42) thirty with him, whose names are not given, and over whom he was captain. (43–47) Mithnite, of unknown place called Methin. Other unknown places are indicated by the terms Tizite and Mahavite. Mesobaite, R. V., "Mezobaite," a puzzling name. It may be misprint for "for Zobah," cf. 2 Sa. xxiii. 36.

"A brave man is clear in his discourse, and keeps close to truth." —Aristotle.

Mark of bravery. — An unlucky private in one of the New York regiments was wounded in the Battle of Bull Run; and his father arrived at the hospital just as the surgeon was removing the ball from the back of his shoulder. The boy lay with his face downward on the pallet. "Ah, my poor son," said, the father, mournfully, "I am very sorry; but it's a bad place to be hit in — thus in the back." The sufferer turned over, bared his breast, and pointing to the opening above the armpit, exclaimed, "Father, here's where the ball went in." Bravery in death. —At the defeat of Romagnans, Bonivet, wounded, and not able to serve any longer, gave the command of the army up to Bayard, who, as usual, performed prodigies of valor; until he was wounded by a musket shot, which broke the vertebræ of his back. He then caused himself to be helped off his horse, and to be placed at the foot of a tree, "that, at least," said he, "I may die facing the enemy." — Percy Anec. Prince Eugene on war. — "The thirst of renown sometimes insinuates itself into our councils, under the garb of national honor. It dwells on imaginary insults; it suggests harsh and abusive language; the people go on from one thing to another, till they put an end to the lives of half a million of men. A military man becomes so sick of bloody scenes in war, that in peace he is averse to recommence them. I wish that the first minister who is called to decide on peace and war had only seen actual service."

"War,—the trade of barbarians, and the art of bringing the greatest physical force to bear on a single point."—Napoleon.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

David's friends at Ziklag

This chapter supplements Samuel, giving lists of those who joined David while Saul was king (vss. 1–22) and those who came to Hebron to make David king (vss. 23–37). 1—7. (1) Ziklag, 1 Sa. xxvii. 6. close,[a] he remained in Ziklag a year and four months, 1 Sam. xxvii.–xxx. (2) bows, comp. 1 Chr. viii. 40; 2 Chr. xiv. 8. and the left, Ju. iii. 15; xx. 16. Saul's brethren, some of Saul's own tribe casting in their lot with David. Cf. ch. xi. 12. Eleazer vs. 29, Ilai, and vs. 31, Ithai. (3) Azmaveth, ch. xi. 33. (4) Gederathite, Jos. xv. 36. (5) Haruphite, of a place not known. (6) Korhites, of some place in Benj. (7) Gedor, name of three different places.

a "While he was still shut out fr. the presence of Saul."—Bertheau.

Both hands (vs. 2). —I. Some men are, morally, left-handed. Do good and right things; but awkwardly. II. Some who are right-handed are, after all, only single-handed: can do right things, but only one way. III. These men could use equally well both the right hand and the left, and each hand helped the other.

These came to David. — The good and the great draw others after them; they lighten and lift up all who are within the reach of their influence. They are so many living centres of beneficent activity. Let a man of energetic and upright character be appointed to a position of trust and authority, and all who serve under him become, as it were, conscious of an increase of power. — Smiles. The wish of a good man.— I would rather, when I am laid in the grave, that some one in his manhood should stand over me and say, "There lies one who was a real friend to me, and privately warned me of the dangers of the young; no one knew it, but he aided me in time of need; I owe what I am to him." Or would rather have some widow, with choking utterance, telling her children, "There is your friend and mine; he visited me in my affliction, and found you, my son, an employer, and you, my daughter, a happy home in a virtuous family." I would rather that such persons should stand at my grave, than to have erected over it the most beautiful sculptured monument of Parian or Italian marble. The heart's broken utterance of reflections of past kindness, and the tears of grateful memory shed upon the grave, are more valuable in my estimation than the most costly cenotaph ever reared. — Sharpe.

Thoreau used to say that the most serene and happy-looking men that he knew were often not men of leisure, as one might think, but very diligent workers. This steady sailing is not because there is a smooth summer sea before the voyager, but because there is such a strong, firm hand upon the tiller.

B. C. cir. 1020.

the Gadites who aided David

8—14. (8) separated themselves, i. e. from Saul, and the rest of their tribe who followed Saul. hold, prob. Adullam. 1 Sa. xxii. 5. (14) over an hundred,[a] R. V., "equal to an hundred" in military valor and ability. over a thousand, R. V., "(equal to) a thousand."

Separated men (vs. 8). — Consider what they left. Home, family, estate. II. For whom they did this. David, God's anointed. III. When they did this. When David was in danger and distress. IV. David remembered them in the days of his prosperity. How our King will reward His followers.

The Gadites. — Like gathers to like — the brave to the brave, the good to the good. It is human nature at its best which recognizes and rejoices in superiority. Homage and obedience should be freely rendered where they are justly claimed and truly deserved. Observe the qualities and exploits of these sons of Gad who gathered to David and offered him their swords. They were men of might, bold as lions, swift as eagles; men skilled in the use of their weapons, apt for war, brave in danger, "good at need;" men whose deeds were in the lips of a nation, memorable and unforgotten. We may discern in the qualities of these valiant Gadites the qualities which (mutatis mutandis) should characterize Christians as the soldiers of Christ and combatants in the "holy war." — Pul. Com.

[a] "Prob. the true meaning is, a little one of them was equal to a hundred and a great one to a thousand."—Wordsworth.

"What a man is in private duties, that he is in the sight of God, and no more."—Owen.

men of Judah and Benjamin who aided David

15—22. (15) first month, spring-time. overflown, in the rainy season an immense body of water rushes down to the Dead Sea, and makes crossing dangerous. Jos. iii. 15. put . . west, reference is to Saul's guard that watched on either bank of the river the passage of the ford. (16) and Judah, so the company mentioned vss. 3–7 seems to have been a mixed one, not consisting of pure Benjamites. (17) peaceably, being Benj. he naturally suspected that they were of the party of Saul. (18) spirit came upon, Heb. "clothed." That is the Holy Spirit encompassed and took possession of Amasai. The usual O. T. idea as against the N. T. idea of the indwelling Spirit, Nu. xi. 25; Judges xiv. 6, 19. Amasai, some think same as Amasa, David's nephew, and as a Judahite he came forward to speak for the party. (19) with the Phil., see 1 Sa. xxix. 1–11. (20) to Ziklag, when the Phil. sent him back. (21) band of the rovers, 1 Sa. xxx. 1, 2. (22) host of God, i. e. an invincible multitude.[b]

Evidences of Amasai's sincerity. — I. The promptness of the answer. II. Its unqualified frankness. III. The absence of the slightest appearance of feeling offended. IV. The discrimination in the selection of one word used in this reply — Peace. V. The heart and earnestness thrown into the reply. VI. The piety and right, sound practical theology thrown into it. — Pul. Com.

Suspicion. — Many of the supreme facts of our present life, if not all of them, bring us very near indeed to those of our spiritual "unseen" life. But even far within these limits human hearts ask large things of one another, and invoke an immensity of trust and repose, an immensity of trust not unfrequently where it is little recognized, little honored. One walks out with his life in his hand and a weight on his heart almost intolerable, to meet another whose mirth it may be to make mischief, and to hear his sentence and receive his destiny to all human intents from light lip and unthinking heart. This sobers human trust and checks the luxuriant growth of mutual confidence, and justifies David when he prefers to express, rather than seem to disdain, his already hard-bought experience of human compassions and "tender mercies," and finally, sometimes turns the action of suspicion toward men into the virtue of deeper trust toward God. — Pul. Com.

[b] Jon. iii. 3.

"He that does not know those things which are of use and necessity for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know beside."—Tillotson.

"Man is a noble animal, splendid in ashes, pompous in the grave."—Sir T. Browne.

David's army at Hebron

23—28. (23) the bands, R. V., "the heads of them," a more detailed account of the assembly noticed in xi. 1–3. (24) children of Judah, the enumeration begins with the two southern tribes and proceeds northward. (25) Simeon, included within territories of Judah. (26) of Levi, not said to be warriors. (27) Jehoiada, not high priest,[c] but leader of the warriors of house of Aaron.[d] (28) Zadok, the subsequent high priest.[e] His family was very powerful at the time of David's elevation, containing twenty-two "heads of families."

The hearts of all men are in God's hands. — When the proper time came for the promise made to David to be fulfilled, no efforts were needed to secure the throne. One difficulty after another faded away. One section after another of the people came to offer their allegiance. And the signs of God's gracious moving of men's hearts towards David in due time were seen, in the devotion of themselves and their wealth and property to his service. The men of might came, and offered him their weapons, their skill, and their lives. The men of understanding came, and offered him their counsel and powers of rule and magistracy. The men of wealth came, and offered abundant provisions for the host thus gathering round David (vs. 40). Compare the consecration of property in the early Pentecostal days. Often in life we are made to feel that the circumstances of life are in God's hands, and we recognize His wonder-working in the removal of our difficulties and the opening of our path; but even when we seem to be hindered by the action of our fellow-men, we do not see that their hearts are in God's hands, and that, in answer to our prayer and in fulfilment of His purposes, He can move men's feelings and sway them as He may please. Yet this is the fuller and truer view of life; until we can worthily realize this we do not truly say, "Our times are in thy hands." "He maketh the wrath of man praise Him, and the remainder of wrath He can restrain."—Pul. Com.

[c] 1 Sa. xxiii. 9.

[d] Perhaps father of Benaiah, see 1 Chr. xi. 22.

[e] 2 Sa. viii. 17; 1 Ki. i. 8.

B. C. cir. 1020.

"Men who have always thrust obstacles aside come to think their power invincible, and to make themselves a battering-ram against fate and circumstances. And when God comes down to oppose them, at first they try to wrestle with Him: but they limp all their life after, like Jacob of old; for God never wrestles with a man without throwing him."—Beecher.

29—34. (29) had kept ward, R. V., "had kept their allegiance to," hence the smallness of the number. (31) expressed, etc., either full lists being furnished with them: or this number was deputed by the rest of the tribe to represent them (32) understanding,[a] a unique expression; this tribe called "a strong ass" in Gen. xlix. 14, has somehow become pre-eminent in political wisdom. (33) fifty thousand, the largest number from any one tribe. keep rank, R. V., "order the battle array." double heart, Heb. "without a heart and a heart," i. e., they were stable and trusty. (34) with shield and spear, men constituting the rank and file.

[a] Heb. binah, moral and political prudence and wisdom.

The propriety of considering times and circumstances.—From the character here given of the men of Issachar we shall take occasion to show—I. That our conduct must often be affected by times and circumstances of whatever nature. 1. Civil; 2. Social; 3. Personal. II. How far it may be properly affected by them in the concerns of religion. 1. That we may attend to times, etc., is certain (exam. of Christ and Apostles); 2. But how far is not easy to determine. III. What there is in the times, etc., of the present day to affect our conduct. Application: suggest a caution or two. 1. Guard against yielding to any corrupt bias; 2. The future judgment will be according to motives; 3. Seek for wisdom that is profitable to direct.—C. Simeon.

"Happy are those that knowing in their births they are subject to uncertain changes, are still prepared and arm'd for either fortune: a rare principle, and with much labor learn'd in wisdom's school."—Massinger.

The need of forethought.—

When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model·
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the erection:
Which if we find outweighs ability,
What do we then but draw anew the model
In fewer offices; or, at least, desist
To build at all? Much more in this great work (Which is, almost, to pluck a kingdom down,
And set another up) should we survey
The plot of situation, and the model;
Consent upon a sure foundation;
Question surveyors; know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo,
To weigh against his opposite; or else
We fortify in paper and in figures,
Using the names of men instead of men:
Like one who draws the model of a house
Beyond his power to build it; who, half through,
Gives o'er, and leaves his part-created cost
A naked subject to the weeping clouds,
And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.—Shakespeare.

"There is a wicked inclination in most people to suppose an old man decayed in his intellects. If a young or middle-aged man, when leaving a company, does not recollect where he laid his hat, it is nothing; but if the same inattention is discovered in an old man, people will shrug up their shoulders, and say, "His memory is going."—Johnson.

35—40. (35) expert in war, R. V., "that could set the battle in array." (37) on the other, or from the other. (38) perfect, or sincere. (39) eating, a great coronation feast being prepared. (40) nigh them, "the meaning is that not only the "brethren" of Judah and of the nearer neighborhood of Hebron joined to entertain and to show hospitality to the immense throngs of visitors, but that others did so in everwidening circles, even as far as the remoter Issachar, Zebulun, and Naphtali." joy in Israel,[a] "the joy must have been largely enhanced by the national consciousness of divided rule coming to an end, and of the cloud and frown of the Divine countenance having cleared mercifully away. All now could join to show loyalty and to feel it towards one king, of whom they had reason to believe that he was the chosen of God as of themselves."

B. C. cir. 1020.

Under discipline (vs. 38).—I. In this condensed summary of qualities, etc., only particulars of first importance are enumerated. This keeping rank, then, of consequence. II. What keeping rank involves. 1. Obedience to authority: 2. Regard to the general pace of the whole; 3. Mutual help. III. The importance of keeping rank in church life and action.

Joy is Israel.—Joy in the Lord is strength, positive actual power for ministry. It creates around us the most favorable atmosphere for evoking our resources; raises our entire nature to the highest pitch of energy, and gives unwonted elasticity and capacity of tension to all our faculties. When the heart is brimming over with gladness, labor is acceptable, opposition helpful, duty a delight, and responsibility a privilege.—Hom. Com. Employment of oxen in the East (vs. 40).—We see from this that oxen were used as beasts of burden. This kind of service is one which, in the East, they are still often required to perform, and they do it well, although in their usual deliberate and quiet way. At present, in different parts of Asia, they are more or less employed for riding, for burden and for draught. In Western Asia we have frequently seen them ridden by women, children, and old or infirm people of the poorer (but not absolutely the poorest) classes, in removals and journeys to a town or village distant from their own.—Kitto.

[a] Neh. viii. 10.

"Agriculture is the most certain source of strength, wealth, and independence. Commerce flourishes by circumstances precarious, contingent, transitory, almost as liable to change as the winds and waves that waft it to our shores. She may well be termed the younger sister, for, in all emergencies, she looks to agriculture, both for defense and for supply."—Cotton.

"Given a consecrated and undivided heart; given an army animated by such a heart, and the enemy will flee away, and the host of God will bring to Zion banners inscribed with victory."

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH.

B. C. cir. 1010.

the ark brought from Kirjath-jearim

This chapter is parallel to 2 Sa. vi. 1–11. 1—4. Peculiar to Chronicles. (1) consulted, this early reference to the ark indicates the Levitical tone of these Books of Chronicles. The term used suggests that some kind of advisory council had been established.[b] (2) the congregation, described in vs. 1. left, etc. Dav. wanted everybody to be interested in the matter. and with . . suburbs, R. V., "with whom the priests are in their cities that have suburbs." (3) bring again, fr. Kirjath-jearim to Zion. enquired not at it, R. V., "sought not unto it." The only seeming exception is 1 Sa. xiv. 18, where the Sept. says ephod instead of ark. "The ark, after being restored by the Philistines, continued for a long time an object of fear, not of worship."—Oehler. (4) was right, they saw the importance of Dav.'s proposal.

David's first council.—I. Of whom it was composed. A fair representation of the whole. II. The subject for discussion, not how shall we plan the campaign, but shall we bring back the ark? III. The ground on which this was urged. The mind of God had not been considered in the past, vs. 3. IV. A unanimous vote, vs. 4. They all agreed that it should be done, but did not sufficiently consider how it should be accomplished.

Public worship.—Religion has its private spheres. It is strictly an individual and personal thing. Men cannot be saved in masses; the regenerating grace of God only reaches them one by one. But while we see this with the utmost distinctness, we must also admit that religion has its public spheres, and that these are properly a care and anxiety to all sincere and earnest men. We are not to "forsake the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." Our Lord gave us his own example of reverent sharing in public worship. With much suggestiveness the evangelist says, 'Jesus, as his custom was, went into the synagogue" (Luke iv. 16). The apostles afford the example of sharing together in worship and work. And the best men in every age have fully recognized both the duty and the moral value of public religion. It has been left to our times of luxurious self-indulgence to find excuses for attendance at the sanctuaries, which too often grows into entire neglect of all public means of grace. Bishop Wordsworth notices, in ver. 3, that "David, in his charitable spirit towards the memory of the departed king, does not say that Saul, being possessed by an evil spirit, became indifferent and careless to religion, and was given over to a reprobate mind; but he speaks in general terms, and takes a share of the blame to himself: 'We troubled ourselves little about the ark in the days of Saul,' Here is a happy example of mildness and charity, joined with piety and zeal."

[b] For hints of such an arrangement before this, comp. Nu. xxxi. 14; 1 Sa. viii. 12; xvii. 18; 1 Chr. xii. 20; and for further hints of Dav.'s arrangement, 1 Chr. xv. 25; xxvi. 26; xxviii. 1.

"We must love men, ere to us they will seem worthy of our love."—Shakespeare.

"A man who has tested with profound enjoyment the pleasure of agreeable society will eat with a greater appetite than he who rode horseback for two hours. An amusing lecture is as useful for health as exercise of the body."—Kant.

B. C. cir. 1010.

the ark brought out house of Abinadab

5—8. (5) all Israel, in Sam. "all the chosen men of Israel, thirty thousand." (2 Sa. vi. 1.) from Shihor,[a] R. V., "from Shihor the brook of Egypt," commentators seem agreed that this is a small stream flowing into the Mediterranean, wh. was recognized as the S. boundary of Palestine. Hemath, or Hamath, defile bet. mountain ranges of Syria, on the north. The passage means—"from the South to the North." Nu. xxxiv. 8. (6) Baalah, Jos. xv. 9. whose, etc., R. V., "which is called by the Name," i. e. the name which might not be pronounced. In late Jewish writings "The Name" is used to signify God. (7) Abinadab, 2 Sa. vi. 3. (8) played, musical instruments, as signs of great joy. Comp. 2 Sa. vi. 5. with singing, on this occasion, at some time, was undoubtedly composed and sung Ps. xxiv.—Oehler.

Imperfect methods (vs. 7).—I. The end to be attained was a good one. II. In the hurry to secure it the proper method was overlooked. III. The error in choice of means delayed the accomplishment of the end.

Festive joy.—"The festival," says Dean Stanley, "was one which exactly corresponded to what in the Middle Ages would have been 'the Feast of the Translation' of some great relic, by which a new city or a new church was to be glorified. Long sleepless nights had David passed in thinking of it (Ps. cxxxii. 4), as St. Louis of the transport of the Crown of Thorns to the Royal Chapel of Paris." Such joy is natural and becoming, pleasing to men and acceptable to God.—Hom. Com. The city of forests (vs. 6).—David, alluding to this event in Ps. cxxxii., says, "Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah." He got tidings of it at the place of his own birth; and accordingly it is added, "We found it in the fields of the wood." Kirjath-jearim, the city of forests—for that the name signifies—answers exactly to the situation thus poetically described; and the difference between the two modes of designating the place is precisely that which might be expected to distinguish the style of the historian from the style of the poet. Its present Arabic name of Kuriet-el-Enab means the city of grapes—only a very slight modification of its old Scripture designation, and equally suggestive of fertility and fruitfulnes.—Buchanan.

[a] Comp. Nu. xxxiv. 5; Jos. xv. 4, 47; 1 Ki. viii. 65; 2 Ki. xxiv. 7; 2 Chr. vii. 8.

The new heavens and the new earth are for renewed men.

9—14. (9) Chidon, called Nachon, 2 Sa. vi. 6. stumbled, bec. the descent was steep and dangerous, or tempted by the grain on the floor.—Murphy. (10) put his hand,[b] the ark was not to be touched, and it would not have needed this touch if, in obedience to the law, it had been carried by poles on the priests' shoulders. (11) displeased, better grieved; not intending to say that he was angry at God. made a breach, R. V., "broken forth upon," cf. Ex. xix. 22, 24. (12) afraid, with a godly fear that made him henceforth more anxious to know the Divine will. (13) Gittite, 2 Sa. vi. 10. He was a Levite of the family of the Korahites, a descendant of Kohath (1 Chr. xxvi. 1, 4–8. Num. xvi. 1.), to whom the charge of the ark was given. Hence, probably, the choice. (14) blessed, etc., 2 Sa. vi. 11.

Perez-uzza (vs. 11).—I. The principle enforced—that the end does not justify the means. Right things should be secured in the right way. II. This principle may be applied in all departments of life—social, intellectual, political, religious. Zeal that is not according to knowledge. III. Good things are often marred by bad methods. The fury of party and sectarian zeal often defers the worthy ends they aim at.

Good men may be much perplexed at Divine disposals.—We read that David was "displeased" (vs. 11), and also that he was "afraid" (vs. 12). We also often find ourselves both perplexed and alarmed at the dealings of God with us. God's way is often "in the sea, his path in the great waters, and his footsteps are not known." He is sometimes "terrible in his doings toward the children of men." Why he lets the assassin do his deadly work so well, the storm wreck the vessel which is carrying missionaries to their post, the father of the family catch the fatal fever, the irreplaceable minister perish in the railway accident, etc., we do not know and cannot think. Our hearts are saddened, perplexed, troubled, awed. Let us feel that we are but very little children trying to understand a Divine Father, whose wisdom and love must be unfathomably deep, must go down far lower than our poor plummet will sound. "Blessed are they who do not see, and yet believe." We "walk by faith, not by sight."—Clarkson.

Uzza killed for touching the ark

[b] Nu. iv. 15.

Luther tells of a nobleman at Vienna who made a great supper, and, in the midst of his mirth, exclaimed, "If God will leave me this world to live and enjoy my pleasure therein for a thousand years, then let Him take His heaven to Himself!" This man spoke what many men think.

"He that calls a man ungrateful sums up all the evil that a man can be guilty of."—Swift.

"Duties not performed according to the right order are but the half of the service we owe to God, and the worse half too."—T. Boston.

B. C. cir 1010.

CHAPTER THE FOURTEENTH.

This chapter is parallel to 2 Sam. v. 11-25. 1—7. (1) Hiram, 2 Sa. v. 11.[a] (2) because of his people Israel, R. V., "for his people Israel's sake." (3) more wives, comp. 1 Sa. xxv. 42-44; 2 Sa. v. 13; 1 Chr. iii. 9. (4-7) Now . . Eliphalet, comp. other lists.[b]

"David perceived that the Lord had confirmed him." — He had shown much statesmanlike ability since he had been made king, and might have been, as we all are, under the temptation to attribute his success to his own sagacity. But he did not yield to the enemy if thus assailed. He let his prosperity direct his thoughts to him from whom cometh down every good gift. So also shall we, if the spirit of Christ be in us. We shall let all things speak to us of the Father, of his presence with us, his mindfulness of us, his love toward us, his wisdom in all his dealing with us. And we shall not permit our prosperity to do that which it has a tendency to do — elevate us in our own esteem, and hide the Divine Author, of all our mercies from the view of our soul. We shall see that it, with all other experiences, turns our thoughts in reverential love to him. — Pul. Com.

The relation of a wife. —

A wife's a man's best piece; who till he marries Wants making up; she is the shrine to which Nature doth send us forth on pilgrimage;
She was a scion taken from that tree,
Into which if she has no second grafting
The world can have no fruit: she is man's Arithmetic, which teaches him to number
And multiply himself in his own children.
She is the good man's paradise, and the bad's
First step to heaven; a treasure which, who wants,
Cannot be trusted to posterity,
Nor pay his own debts; she's a golden sentence Writ by our Maker, which the angels may Discourse of, only men know how to use. — Shirley.

8—12. (8) to seek David,[c] attempting, by a bold stroke, to crush him before his power was consolidated. (9) spread themselves, R. V., "made a raid." Rephaim, prob. a little S. W. of Jerus. (10) enquired, etc., thro' the high priest. By this act at the beginning Dav. designed to give a tone to his reign. (11) broken . . waters, R. V., "God hath broken mine enemies by mine hand, like the breach of waters." Probably his army had swept down on the Philistines like a mountain torrent. Baal-perazim, 2 Sa. v. 20; Is. xxviii. 21. (12) gods, images carried on expeditions, and into battle fields, to insure victory, even as the Israelites brought out the ark.[d]

Baal-perazim (vs. 11). — I. A battle begun with inquiry of God, vs. 10. II. A battle resulting in victory by the help of God. III. A battle ending with destruction of idols for the honor of God. IV. A battle so begun and finished did not lead to presumption on the part of the victors.

Shall I go up? — The English ambassador to the court of Prussia sat at a table of Frederick the Great, then meditating a war whose sinews were to be mainly formed of English subsidies. Round the table sat infidel French wits, and they and the king made merry over decadent superstitions, the follies of the ancient faith. Suddenly the talk changed to war. Said the ambassador, "England would, by the help of God, stand by Prussia." "Ah!" said the infidel Frederick, "I did not know you had an ally of that name," and the infidel wits smirked applause. "So, please your Majesty," was the swift retort, "He is the only ally to whom we do not send subsidies." — Baxendale.

The battle field. —

And silence was upon that fatal field,
Save when, to nature's anguish forced to yield,
Some fallen soldier heaved a broken sigh
For his far home, and turn'd him round to die;
Or when the wailing voice of woman told
That her long weary search was not in vain,

David's wives

[a] "Elsewhere in Chron. he is always called Huram (2 Chr. ii. 3, 11; viii. 18; ix. 10, 21), and this is the Masoretic reading in the present passage." — Spk. Com.

[b] 2 Sa. v. 14-16; 1 Chr. iii. 5-9.

It was reckoned a crime among the Romans to be without a friend. "Friends," says one, "are to be inventoried as well as goods."

battle of Baal-perazim

[c] "Their hostility arose both fr. a belief that his patriotism would lead him, ere long, to wipe out the national dishonor at Gilboa, and by fear that, in any invasion of their country, his thorough knowledge of their weak points would give him superior advantages."—Jamieson.

2 Sa. v. 17-25.

[d] Comp. 1 Sa. iv. 4-11; 2 Sa. v. 21.

He does not force allegiance. He waits for it. The crown of our own individual love and loyalty must be offered by our own hands."—F. R. Havergal.

B. C. cir. 1010.

And she had found the bosom, stiff and cold,
Where her soft clustering curls had often lain.
'Twas one of these that burst upon my ear
While watching on that field: the wind-harp's tone
Was not more mournful nor more sweetly clear
Than was the sound of that sad woman's moan.
Through the dim twilight I beheld a form,
Her dark brow clouded with grief's passionate storm,
And on her breast an infant calmly slept,
Which she would pause to gaze on; and again,
With bitterness renew'd, she loudly wept,
And call'd on its dead father — but in vain. — Hon. Mrs. Norton.

13—17. (13) in the valley, 2 Sam. v. 22 has "in the valley of Rephaim." (14) not up, i. e. directly meeting them; but come on them by stratagem: get round upon their rear. mulberry trees, R. V., margin gives balsam trees. The name is not certain, the word occurring only here and in the parallel. (15) sound of going, R. V., "sound of marching." (16) Gibeon, now Yefa, in country of Judah.[a] Gazer, R. V. Gezer, a royal city of the Canaanites, Josh. xii. 12, assigned to the Kohathite Levites, Josh. xxi. 21. (17) fame of David, as a warrior.

Victory through obedience (vs. 16). — I. Conquest of self precedes conquest of enemies. David so ruled his spirit that, though victorious, he would not follow up victory but with Divine permission. II. Conquest of self leads to conquest of enemies. David, having confidence in God, surrendered himself to His leadership, and was led on from victory to victory.

The scene of the battle. — Wearying very soon with what we could not understand — the ceremonies in the church of the Holy Sepulchre — we mounted and set off for Bethlehem. Rising out of the valley of Gihon at the point, I presume, where the boundary-line between Judah and Benjamin passed from the valley of Hinnom into the plain of Rephaim, we stopped a while to allow our guide to point out the precise spot where the Philistines had their camp when David "fetched a compass, and came upon them over against the mulberry trees." The plain itself is stony and uneven, and declines rapidly toward the west. — Thomson. The fear which God brings upon men is a religious fear. The nations did not fear David simply because he was a great soldier, but because there was behind him a mysterious force which nothing could resist. Religion is not only a mystery; it is a power. When men observe what this power can do in us, and when what they see is great, pure, and noble, they will begin to think that our religion is the higher reason, and respect it even where they cannot understand it. — J. Parker.

battle of Gibeon

[a] "The line fr. this to Gazer was intersected by the roads wh. led fr. Judah to the cities of the Phil., and to recover possession of it, therefore, as was effected by this decisive battle, was equivalent to setting free the whole mountains of Judah as far as their most westerly slope."—Bertheau.

"What infernal being, all powerful in mischief, fills the bosom of man with such insatiable rage for war! Robbery, blood, butchery, desolation, confound without distinction everything sacred and profane."— Erasmus.

CHAPTER THE FIFTEENTH.

David prepares a place for the ark

The first twenty-five verses of this chapter have no parallel. 1—10. (1) houses, ch. xi. 8; reference may be to the separate houses round his palace built for the accommodation of his wives and their families. a tent, a new one; it is singular that he did not remove the old one fr. Gibeon.[b] (2) None ought, distinct recognition of the Levites as a class and their function as God's servants. Nu. iv. 15.[c] (3) to bring up, etc., it is three months since the previous attempt to bring up the ark. (4) children of Aaron, priests as disting. fr. Levites. (5–10) Kohath, this family was specially appointed to carry the ark. Elizaphan, Ex. vi. 16–22. Hebron, Ex. vi. 18.

Worship due to God. — The Emperor Augustus hearing that a gentleman of Rome, notwithstanding a great burden of debt wherewith he was oppressed, slept quietly and took his ease, desired to buy the bed that he lodged on, remarking that it seemed to him a wonderful bed whereon a man could sleep that was so deeply involved. If we thought of our daily obligations to our God, could we lie down to sleep or rest in peace without having rendered to him the tribute of our praise, and so discharged to that extent the obligation to worship him?

[b] "I cannot conceive why Dav., who knew the law, and was zealous for it, did not either bring the ark to Gibeon, or bring the tabernacle to Zion."—M. Henry. 1 Chr. xvi. 39; 2 Chr. i. 3.

[c] Nu. i. 50; vii. 9; x. 17; Ex. xi. 13. Lev. viii.

the ark brought from house of Obed-edom

11—16. (11) the priests, 2 Sa. viii. 17.[d] (12) chief of the fathers, R. V., "heads of the fathers' houses." sanctify yourselves, according to Mosiac

[d] "Zadok is put first as being of

B. C. cir. 1010.

requirements before engaging in any solemn service.[a] (13) a breach, ch. xiii. 11. due order, i. e. by carrying on shoulders of Levites. (14) to bring up, fitting themselves for the work. (15) staves, etc., Ex. xxv. 14. (16) singers, etc., word is used to include musicians.[b]

God is omniscient. — What would you say if, wherever you turned, whatever you were doing, whatever thinking, whether in public or private, with a confidential friend, telling your secrets, or alone planning them, if, I say, you saw an eye constantly fixed on you, from whose watching, though you strove ever so much, you could never escape; and even if you closed your own eye to avoid, you still fancied that to get rid of was impossible — that it could perceive your every thought? The supposition is awful enough. There is such an Eye, though the business and struggles of the world too often prevent us from considering this awful truth. In crowds we are too much interrupted, in the pursuit of self-interest we are too much perverted, in camps we are struggling for life and death, in courts we see none but the eye of a human sovereign; nevertheless, the Divine Eye is always upon us, and when we least think of it, is noting all, and, whatever we may think of it, will remember all. — De Vere. Reverence.— Without adopting strained ideas of sacramental virtue, we too may learn this lesson. Sanctuaries, sacraments, Bibles, etc., because of their sacred associations and suggestions, properly demand reverent treatment. Only shallow and self-satisfied natures fail in reference. A worthy sense of the infinite glory of the Unseen, Eternal, and Divine, gains fitting expression in the reverent touch of all earth-symbols that bring the Eternal near. There may be danger of stopping with the symbol, even as heathen stopped with the idol; but the fact that danger lies in excess does not relieve us from the claims of the symbolic, as set within wise limitations. There is danger of overdoing forms. But there is also danger of an undue indifference to forms; and this kind of danger is seriously imperiling to some important features of the religious life. They who would sincerely honor God must not be unmindful of the reverence that is due to His ark.— R. Tuck.

the line of Phinehas. . . . He was prob. connected with the service of the tabernacle at Gibeon."— Wordsworth.

a Le. xl. 44; Nu. xl. 18; 2 Chr. xxix. 5. See also Ge. xxxv. 2; Ex. xx 10, 15.

b "Singing had long been recognized as appropriate to religious ceremonies (Ex. xv. 21; Ju. v. 1; 1 Chr. xiii. 8); but this is the first occasion on wh. we find the duty of conducting musical services expressly laid on the Levites. Hitherto music seems to have been chiefly cultivated in the 'schools of the prophets.'"— Spk. Com.

the order of the procession

17—24. (17) Heman, and Ethan are among the wise men with whom Solomon is compared (I Ki. iv. 31). (18) second degree, either subordinate leaders, or forming the second choir. porters, this word applies only to Obed-edom and Jeiel (or Jehiah), vs. 24. (19) So the singers, etc., this is the first occasion on which David gave instructions with respect to music in public worship, in which the service of song was added to instrumental music (cf. ch. xvi.). cymbals, instruments of percussion, producing a clanging sound. (20) psalteries, small kinds of harp, poss. represented by mod. banjo, or guitar. on Alamoth, R. V., "set to Alamoth" (cf. Ps. xlvi., title in R. V. Polychrome Bible translates "with Elamite instruments."), prob. signifies a treble voice, fr. almah, a maiden, Gesenius. (21) Sheminith appears to be derived fr. shemonah, eight, and to signify the lowest or bass voice.[c] on the Sheminith to excel, R. V. "set to the Sheminith, to lead." (cf. Ps. vi., title in R. V. Polychr. Bible transl. "in the eighth mode or key.") (22) for song . . about the song, margin "for (about the) carriage."[d] (23) doorkeepers, see vs. 24. (24) blow, making joyous blasts, not music.

The power of music. — Sultan Amurath, a prince notorious for his cruelty, laid siege to Bagdad; and, on taking it, gave orders for putting thirty thousand Persians to death, notwithstanding they had submitted and laid down their arms. Among the number of the victims was a musician, who entreated the officer to whom the execution of the Sultan's order was entrusted to spare him for a moment, that he might speak to the author of the dreadful decree. The officer consented, and he was brought before Amurath, who permitted him to exhibit a specimen of his art. Like the musician in Homer, he took up a kind of psaltery, which resembles a lyre, and has six strings on each side, and accompanied it with his voice. He sung the capture of Bagdad and the triumph of Amurath. The pathetic tones and exulting sounds which he drew from the instrument, joined to the alternative plaintiveness and boldness of his strains, rendered the prince unable to restrain the softer emotions of his soul. He even suffered him to proceed, until, overpowered with harmony, he melted into tears of pity, and repented of his cruelty. In consideration of the musician's abilities, he not only directed his people to spare those among the prisoners who yet remained alive, but also to give the instant liberty. — K. Arvine.

c Marg. is, "on the eighth to oversee."

d "Probably the marg. reading is to be preferred, and the meaning is that Dav. appointed a person to oversee the bearing or carrying of the ark to insure that Mosaic conditions were observed"— See Wordsworth.

"Can any mortal mixture of earth's mold breathe such divine, enchanting ravishment? Sure something holy lodges in that breast, and with these raptures moves the vocal air to testify his hidden residence." —Milton.

"Music is the only sensual gratification which mankind may indulge in to excess without injury to their moral or religious feelings."—Addison.

25—29. (25) went, etc., 2 Sa. vi. 12, 13.[a] (26) God helped, 2 Sa. vi. 13, in contrast with what had occurred previously. Now His benediction, not His wrath, is with them. (27) robe, the mantle.[b] the song, or burden. ephod,[c] was distinctively a high-priest's garment (Ex. xxviii. 4–12), but worn by Sam'l (1 Sa. ii. 18, 28), and here by David as religious leader of the people. (28) cornet, named for the first time. (29) David dancing, a customary and natural oriental expression of great gladness. In the school of the Prophets David had doubtless been accustomed to it. It was here condemned by Michal, but not apparently by God.

Michal's contempt. — One only incident tarnished its brightness. Michal, his wife, in the proud—we may almost say conservative spirit of the older dynasty, not without a thought of her father's fallen house (2 Sa. vi. 21), poured forth her contemptuous reproach on the king who had descended to the dances and songs of the Levitical procession. He, in reply, vowed an eternal separation, marking the intense solemnity which he attached to the festival. — Stanley. The Duke of Norfolk, seeing Sir Thomas More, when he was Lord Chancellor, sitting in the choir in his parish church, singing the service, said, "Fie, fie, my lord! the Lord Chancellor of England a parish priest, and a paltry singing man! You dishonor the king!" "No, my lord," replied Sir Thomas, "it is no shame for the king if his servant serve his Sovereign and Saviour, who is the King of kings." — Whitecross.

B. C. cir. 1000.

David danced before the ark

a 1 Ki. viii. 1.

b Ex. xxviii. 4; xxix. 5; 1 Sa. ii. 19; xv. 27.

c 1 Sa. ii. 18, 28.

"Worldly hearts see nothing in actions of zeal but folly and madness."—Hall.

"O God, who art the truth, make me one with Thee in everlasting charity."

CHAPTER THE SIXTEENTH.

1—6. (1) in the midst, or middle. Dav. did but take care of the ark until its proper resting place in the temple was provided. burnt sacrifices, for atonement. peace offerings, in thanks for reconciliation effected. (2) blessed,[d] again performing a priestly act as the head of the theocratic nation. (3) dealt, etc., these were the remains of his extensive thank-offerings.[e] flagon of wine, R. V., "cake of raisins," 2 Sa. vi. 18. (4) record, R. V., "celebrate."[f] (5) Asaph, "was chief at the tabernacle of David (vi. 39). His second, Zechariah, with Jeiel (or Jaaziel, xv. 18) and seven others, form a company of nine, who played, six on lutes, and three on harps, while Asaph kept time with cymbals (xv. 19–21). — Murphy. (6) trumpets, ch. xv. 24.

the ark lodged in the tent

d 2 Sa. vi. 18; comp. 1 Ki. viii. 14, 15.

e Comp. 2 Chr. vii. 8, 9, 10.

f Comp. titles of Ps. xxxviii. and lxx.

Love to God and man. — Devotion to God will lead us to think of man. When God blesses us we feel that we should distribute to others. A glad heart will open a wide hand. David's generosity was on a large scale. 1. Suitable in variety. "Bread," "flesh," and "wine." In the house of God a table spread with boundless variety. 2. Universal in application. Women, a recognized place in the assembly, or not forgotten in their homes. Not merely to great men, but "he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Israel" (2 Sam. vi. 19). In that day the people fared well. "That they should make them days of feasting and joy, and of sending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor" (Ezra ix. 22). — Hom. Com.

Music designed to prepare for heaven. — I am persuaded that music is designed to prepare for heaven, to educate for the choral enjoyment of Paradise, to form the mind to virtue and devotion, and to charm away evil and sanctify the heart to God. A Christian musician is one who has a harp in his affections, which he daily tunes to the notes of the angelic host, and with which he makes melody in his heart to the Lord. Does he strike the chord with his hands? it is to bid lute and harp awake to the glory of God. The hand, the tongue, and the ear form a kind of triple chord not to be broken. Bring music to this test, and your vocal hours will not be spent in vain. The instruction of your childhood will supply you through life with a fountain of pleasure, drawn from the true source of legitimate recreation. Sing the songs of Zion, and, amidst the vibrations of the air, may true prayer and praise ascend to heaven, and enter into the ears of the Lord God of our salvation; and then will the harmonious combination be complete. — Legh Richmond.

"The meaning of song goes deep. Who is there that, in logical words, can express the effect music has on us? A kind of inarticulate unfathomable speech, which leads us to the edge of the infinite, and lets us for moments gaze into that!"—Carlyle.

Influence of music. — The diffusion of a taste of music, and the increasing elevation of its character, may be regarded as a national blessing. The tendency of music is to soften and purify the mind. The cultivation of a musical taste furnishes to the rich a refined and intellectual pursuit, which excludes the indulgence of frivolous and vicious amusements, and to the poor a relaxation from toil more attractive than the haunts of intemperance. All music of an elevated character is calculated to produce such effects: but it is to sacred

"The sweetest music is not the peal of marriage-bells, nor tender descants in moonlight woods, nor trumpet-notes of victory; it is the soul's welcome to victory. God grant that, when we die, there may not come booming to our ear the dreadful sound,

B. C. cir. 1000.

'Depart!' but may we hear stealing upon the air the mellow chime of all the celestial bells, saying, 'Come, come, come, ye blessed: enter ye into the joy of your Lord.'"—Beecher.

music, above all, that they are to be ascribed. In the densely peopled manufacturing districts of Yorkshire, Lancashire, and Derbyshire, music is cultivated among the working classes to an extent unparalleled in any other part of the kingdom. Every town has its choral society, supported by the amateurs of the place and its neighborhood, where the sacred works of Handel, and the more modern masters, are performed with precision and effect by a vocal and instrumental orchestra, consisting of mechanics and work-people; and every village church has its occasional holiday oratorio, where a well-chosen and well-performed selection of sacred music is listened to by a decent and attentive audience of the same class as the performers, mingled with their employers and their families. Hence the practice of this music is an ordinary domestic and social recreation among the working classes of these districts; and its influence is of the most salutary kind.—Hogarth.

David's psalm of thanksgiving

7—11. (7) delivered, etc., R. V., "Then on that day did David first ordain to give thanks unto the Lord, by the hand of Asaph, and his brethren." Ref. is not to this psalm, but to the definite appointment of Asaph, etc., to musical duties fr. the very day of the return of the ark.[a] The psalm contained in the foll. verses is a composite one, and represents a service rather than a psalm.[b] (8) people, R. V., "peoples," here, and in many places, meaning "all nations." Important as indicating the universal nature of Hebrew religion. The psalmist exhorts them to make known among the nations the doings of Jehovah. (9) psalms, R. V., "praises." (10) holy name, the name that was hidden from the heathen and too sacred to be uttered even by the Hebrew.

David's thanksgiving at the carrying up of the ark. — We behold religion in its full exercise. Consider — I. The general frame of mind that it requires. 1. That God should be the supreme object of regard; 2. This is truly rational religion. II. The particular duties it enjoins. 1. To thank the Lord for all past mercies; 2. To pray to Him for all future blessings; 3. To glory in Him as our God and portion; 4. To be always mindful of His covenant. — Simeon.

Seeking God. — To seek His face is to desire His presence, smile, and favor consciously enjoyed. First we seek Him, then His strength, then His face; from the personal reverence we pass on to the imparted power, and then to the conscious favor. This seeking must never cease; the more we know the more we seek to know. Finding Him, we must "our minds inflame to seek Him more and more." He seeks spiritual worshippers, and spiritual worshippers seek Him; they are therefore sure to meet face to face ere long. — Spurgeon.

Universality of praise. — Praise is the religious exercise — the one religious exercise — of heaven. Angels are offering it ceaselessly, resting not night or day. Saints are offering it ceaselessly in Paradise. Nature in her every district is offering it ceaselessly. From the heavens, which declare the glory of God and the firmament which showeth His handiwork, down to the dewdrop which sparkles with the colors of the rainbow, and the lark, who tunes her cheerful carol as she salutes the rising sun, the whole creation sends up one grand chorus of praise to the throne of God. — Goulburn.

a "We learn nothing from this passage as to the order in wh. Dav. composed or published his psalms."—Spk. Com.

b "The whole of it will be found, with very slight variations, in Ps. xcvi. cv. 1-15; cvi. 47, 48.

"Music once admitted to the soul, becomes a sort of spirit and never dies. It wanders perturbedly through the halls and galleries of the memory, and is often heard again, distinct and living as when it first displaced the wavelets of the air."—E. B. Lytton.

12—15. (12) works . . judgments, all of this, as is shown by what follows, refers to the experience in Egypt. (13) Israel, in later times the patriarch Jacob was regarded as founder of the race. his chosen, refers to the people, they are to remember because they are God's chosen. (14) our God, peculiarly the God of the Hebrew, but also — "His judgments are in all the earth." (15) covenant,[c] made with Abraham.

Subjects of remembrance. — Marvellous works God has done, and wonderful judgments (words) God has uttered. Or — 1. God's faithfulness. "He hath remembered His covenant." (Ps. cv. 8.) 2. Our mindfulness of this faithfulness. "Remember" (vs. 12), "Be mindful" (vs. 15). "If the Lord keeps His promise in memory, surely we ought not to forget the wonderful manner in which He performs it. To us it should be matter of deepest joy, that never in any instance has the Lord been unmindful of His covenant engagement, nor will He be so, world without end. O that we were as mindful of them as He is!"—Spurgeon.

Praise. — The following passage from a sermon of the great Florentine preacher, Savonarola, refers directly to prayer, but it is equally applicable to c Ge. xii. 1-3.

"Remembrance wakes with all her busy train, swells at my breast, and turns the past to pain."—Goldsmith.

It is related of Beza, one of the reformers, that when he was old and could not recollect the names of persons and things he had heard but a few minutes before, he could remember and repeat the praise: — "In prayer, a man may be attending to the words, and this is a thing of a wholly material nature; he may be attending the sense of the words, and this is rather study than prayer; and lastly, his whole thoughts may be directed to God, and this alone is true prayer. It is unnecessary to be considering either sentences or language — the mind must be elevated above self, and must be wholly absorbed in the thought of God. Arrived at this state, the true believer forgets the world and its wants; he has attained almost a foreshadow of celestial happiness. To this state of elevation the ignorant may arrive as easily as the learned. It even frequently happens that he who repeats a psalm without understanding its words utters a much more holy prayer than the learned man who can explain its meaning."

B. C. cir. 1000.

Epistles of St. Paul which he had committed to memory when he was young.

"Young people say 'Thanks' now, not 'Thank you.' The phrase is of respectable parentage, having descended from classic languages, and being used by our best writers. It occurs fifty-five times in Shakespeare, and four times in the English Bible."— Good Words.

16–19. (16) oath unto Isaac, Ge. xxvi. 2–5. (17) confirmed, etc., Ge. xxviii. 13–15. everlasting, enduring, unchanging. (18) land of Canaan, Ge. xv. 18–21. (19) few, Ge. xxxiv. 30. strangers, R. V., "sojourners."

The disinterestedness of praise. — Praise is the only employment in which self finds no part. In praise we go out of ourselves, and think only of Him to whom we offer it. It is the most purely disinterested of all services. It is gratitude without solicitation, acknowledgment without petition. Prayer is the overflowing expression of our wants, praise of our affection; prayer is the language of the destitute, praise of the redeemed sinner. If the angelic spirits offer their praise exempt from our mixture of infirmity and alloy, yet we have a motive for gratitude unknown even to the angels; they are unfallen and holy beings — they cannot say, as we can, "Worthy the Lamb for He was slain for us!" Prayer is the child of faith, praise of love: prayer is prospective; praise takes in, in its wide range, enjoyment of present, remembrance of past, and anticipation of future blessings: prayer points the only way to heaven; praise is already there. — H. More.

20–22. (20) nation . . people, the former denotes the mass as bound together by a common origin, language, country, descent: the latter as united under one government. — Delitsch. (21) reproved kings,[a] e. g. Pharaoh, and Abimelech. (22) mine anointed, Abr. as called, and set apart by God. prophets, patriots regarded as men to whom God had spoken and witnesses for God in their age.

a Ge. xii. 17; xx. 18; xxvi. 1, 2.

God's protection. — 1. God's people may often be removed. 2. They can never be injured. 3. God's property in them will never be renounced. — Spurgeon.

The singing God's praise, with the spirit and the understanding, always, with the Divine blessing, leaves a precious influence upon those who hear it.

The benefits of praise. — All the benefit which ariseth out of this duty redounds to us, and none to God. His glory is infinite, and eternally the same: there is and can be no accession unto that by all our praises. When a glass reflecteth the brightness of the sun, there is but an acknowledgment of what was, not any addition of what was not. When an excellent orator makes a panegyrical oration in praise of some honorable person, he does not infuse any dram of worth into the person, but only setteth forth and declareth that which is unto others. A curious picture praiseth a beautiful face, not by adding beauty to it, but by representing that which was in it before. The window, which lets in light into a house, does not benefit the light, but the house into which the light shineth; so our praising of God doth serve to quicken, comfort, and refresh ourselves, who have interest in so good a God; or to edify and encourage our brethren, that they may be ambitious to serve so honorable a master: but they add no glory or lustre to God at all. — Bp. Reynolds.

"No ashes are lighter than those of incense, and few things burn out sooner." — Landor.

b Ps. xcv. 6.

23–27. (23) Sing, etc., comp. Ps. xcvi. 1. (24) heathen, R. V., "nations;" tell the whole world of the glory of Jehovah, a missionary command. (25) feared, not the fear of dread, but of reverence, and of love. above all gods, (Ps. xcvi. 5), a very common expression, seeming to mean, not that these other gods have inferior power, but that He is mightier than they all even claimed to be. (26) people, R. V., "peoples," i. e., other nations. idols, marg. "things of nought." This proves that the writer does not hold tribal ideas of gods. made the heavens, which are spread over all the nations. (27) his place, or sanctuary.[b]

"The word rendered praise primarily signifies the irradiation of a luminous body. The high ambition of a penitent soul is that of becoming a reflector, from which the glories of the Sun of Righteousness may be more widely diffused on the world of men and angels." Salter.

Anthem of praise. — It is said that, when the sun is going out of sight, the pious Swiss herdsman of the Alps takes his alpine horn, and shouts loudly through it, "Praise ye the Lord!" Then a brother herdsman on some distant slope takes up the echo, "Praise the Lord!" Soon another answers, still higher up the mountains, till hill shouts to hill, and peak echoes to peak, the sublime anthem of praise to the Lord of all.

B. C. cir. 1000.

a Mal. iii. 8-10.

b So Syriac.

28—31. (28) Give, "we go into God's courts to give rather than to get. This is the principle of all true prayer, ascription rather than petition." — Perowne. kindreds, generations and families. (29) an offering, the usual accompaniment of public worship.[a] before him, comp. Ps. xcvi. 8 (references to the temple are not suitable to this occasion). beauty of holiness, with reverence and thanksgiving:[b] marg. reads, "in holy array" and so the parallel passage in Ps. xcvi. 9. It means worship with solemnity and whatever lends impressiveness and attractiveness to the worship. (30) Fear, R. V., "tremble," recognizing His greatness and perfection. stable, comp. Ps. xcvi. 10.

"Purity is the white linen of the Lord's choristers," says Spurgeon, "righteousness is the comely garment of his priests, holiness is the royal apparel of his servitors."

The claims of God to the worship and homage of His creatures (vs. 29). — What I have to demonstrate is — I. That God is entitled to the homage of His creatures, and claims it as proper and right. II. That these claims are made upon us, His intelligent creatures. It will therefore be necessary to show that we are capable of knowing God to all the extent necessary to excite in our minds the feelings of awe, reverence, and admiration, since these are essential to homage and worship. Also to prove that such claims are not only reasonable, but founded in justice and right. III. That the worship and homage required is such, that it not only does not degrade, but elevates the man that pays it; that it is not the hard requirement of despotism, but the righteous claim of infinite excellence; not the service of flattery and servility, but the free-will offering of a discerning and admiring mind. — T. Robinson.

"The psalmist speaks of singing to the name of the Lord, blessing, extolling, thanksgiving, exalting. Just as the stem which is full of sap throws out many branches, so the believer who is full of a spirit of praise will give vent to it in many different forms." — P. B. Power.

Helps to praise. — The sailors give a cheery cry as they weigh anchor; the ploughman whistles in the morning as he drives his team; the milkmaid sings her rustic song as she sets about her early task; when soldiers are leaving friends behind them they do not march out to the tune of the "Dead March in Saul," but to the quick notes of some lively air. A praising spirit would do for us all that their songs and music do for them; and if only we could determine to praise the Lord, we should surmount many a difficulty which our low spirits never would have been equal to, and we should do double the work which can be done if the heart be languid in its beatings, if we be crushed and trodden down in soul. As the evil spirit in Saul yielded in olden time to the influence of the harp of the son of Jesse, so would the spirit of melancholy often take flight from us if only we would take up the song of praise. — P. B. Power.

c Jos. xxiv. 16-24.

32—36. (32) fulness thereof, a striking poetic repres. of the sea: a peculiarity wh. only the poetic soul would notice. (33) trees of the wood, with poss. allusion to Kirjath-jearim, "the city of woods," where the ark had rested. (34) good, Ps. cvii. 1. This verse is a liturgical formula used in Jeremiah's time (xxxiii. 11), and later (1 Macc. iv. 24); (cf. Ps. cvi. 1). (35) heathen, R.V., "nations." cf. this verse and next with Ps. cvi. 47-48, written after the exile. (36) Amen,[c] the share of the congregation in the musical service seems to have been generally limited to saying "Amen," and praising the Lord, which latter refers to such expressions as "Hallelujah," "Give thanks unto the Lord," and the like (comp. Jer. xxxiii. 11; 2 Ch. v. 13; vii. 3, 6; Ezra iii. 11). On festal occasions, however, and processions, the people sang psalms (Is. xxx. 29; Ps. lxviii. 26. — Oehler. Comp. Ps. lxxii. 19.

It was the law, in some of the old monasteries, that the chanting of praise should never be interrupted, and that one choir of monks should relieve another in the holy service.

Rejoice. — 1 Joy in heaven. "Let the heavens be glad." 2. Joy in earth. "Let the earth rejoice." 3. Joy in which all creatures shall participate. "The sea, no more troubled over shipwrecked mariners, and rehearsing grief of widows and orphans, shall adopt a cheerful note." The fields shall rejoice in culture, abundant harvests, and freedom from repine. The trees of the wood no longer sheltering horrid cruelty, shall "sing out at the presence" of God in the retirement and devotion of men." These verses are full of comprehensive beauty and power. They present the gathering together of everything under the confessed dominion of the reign of Christ. Things in heaven, as well as things on earth, rejoice together in the acknowledged blessing of the Lord of peace. The psalm is throughout a very sweet strain of millennial prophecy. — Arthur Pridham.

"Praise is the rent we owe to God; and the larger the farm the greater the rent."—Bowes.

"The Lord has many fine farms from which He receives but little rent. Thanksgiving is a good thing; thanksliving is better."—P. Henry.

Daily duties. — Every day has its work. We must see to it that there are no arrears in our Christian service. He who leaves over from one day to another what he ought to have done on the first will find his life crowded and confused. Discipline is the very soul of religion. We do not grow in grace by fits and starts, by doing two days' work in one, or by showing our great skill and energy in the discharge of arrears; we grow little by little, line by line, almost imperceptibly, and only at the end do we see how minute has been the process, how detailed the whole exercise through which the mind has passed. David himself had his detailed work to attend to; we read in the forty-third verse, "David returned to bless his house." We cannot always live in public; it is true that we have tent-work to do, temple-work, sanctuary-work, great public and philanthropic appeals to respond to, but when all that which is external or public has been done, every man must bless his own home, make his own children glad, make his own hearthstone as bright as he possibly can, and fill his own house with music and gladness. —J. Parker.

B. C. cir. 1000.

"A line of praises is worth a leaf of prayer; and an hour of praises is worth a day of fasting and mourning." —J. Livingston.

"Thy love has been a shower: the return but a dew-drop, and that dew-drop stained with sin." —Evans.

37—43. (37) left there, this verse marks the establishment by David of a regular and ordered ministry of song and worship, in addition to the priestly services. (38) their brethren, this is not grammatical, and suggests that a name must have fallen out of the text. (39) Zadok, (cf. 2 Sam. viii. 17.) there were for awhile two high priests, Zadok with the tabernacle at Gibeon and Abiathar in the sacred tent in which was the ark at Jerusalem, (2 Sam. xv. 24–29; xix. 11; xx. 25); but Zadok alone remained faithful to David and was made sole high priest, 1 Ki. i. 8, 44; ii. 35. Gibeon, 1 Ki. iii. 4. (40) morning and evening, Ex. xxix. 38.[a] (41) with them, i. e. with Zadok and his sons, vs. 39.[b] (42) Heman and Jeduthan, not in the Sept. and probably repeated here by mistake. porters, lit. for the gate. (43) people, etc. 2 Sa. vi. 19, 20.

David appoints priests, etc.

[a] Nu. xxviii. 3, 6.

David's attention to his household (vs. 43). — Personal religion was exemplified by David — I. By the work in which he had been engaged. 1. It was a glorious work; 2. It had been performed in a manner most acceptable to God. II. By the work to which he returned. He returned to bless his house, that is — 1. To obtain blessing for them by his prayers; 2. To render himself a blessing by his conduct. — Simeon.

[b] Ezr. iii. 11; 2 Chr. v. 13; vii. 3.

The Old and the New Testament (vs. 39). — No object can well be more dull and meaningless than the stained window of an ancient church, as long as you stand without and look toward a dark interior; but when you stand within the temple, and look through that window upon the light of heaven, the still, solemn forms that lie in it start into loveliness. We often meet a verse in the pages of the Old-Testament Scriptures very like those works of art. The beauty of holiness is in it, — put into it by the Spirit from the first, — and yet its beauty was not fully seen until the Sun of Righteousness arose, and the Israel of God, no longer kept in the outer court, entered into the rent veil, and, from the holy of holies, looked through the ancient record on an illumined heaven. —Arnott.

The fireside is a school of infinite importance: it is important because it is universal, and because the education it bestows, being woven in with the woof of childhood, gives form and color to the whole texture of life.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTEENTH.

B. C. cir. 990.

David proposes to build a temple

This chapter is parallel with 2 Sa. vii. 1—5. (1) to Nathan,[c] the time when David made this resolution is uncertain. In Sam'l it is added when "the Lord had given him rest round about from all his enemies," which would imply that it was after the wars recorded in ch. xviii. For Nathan, cf. 2 Sa. xii. 1; ff. 1 Ki. i. 22; ff. etc. curtains, as of tent. (2) Do, etc., an answer given without Divine guidance. (3) word . . came, notice the clear distinction between Nathan's own judgment and the decision of God given through Nathan. A clear case of inspiration changing the man's thought. This caused by a vision; cf. vs. 15. (4) David my servant, a title used by Jehovah only for leaders chosen for some great work. Its use takes away from the sense of rebuke in the words that follow. His work was not to build temples. (5) house, permanent resting-place. tent to tent, comp. 2 Sa. vii. 6.

[c] 2 Sa. xii. 1–25; 1 Ki. i. 8–45; 2 Chr. ix. 29; xxix. 25; Ps. li. title.

Real religion commands homage. — Though religion in its ordinary mode of exhibition commands but little respect, when it rises to the sublime, and is perceived to tincture and pervade the whole character, it seldom fails to draw forth the homage of mankind. The most hardened impiety and daring profligacy will find it difficult to despise the man who manifestly appears to walk with God, whose whole system of life is evidently influenced and directed by the power of the world to come. The ridicule cast on religious characters is not always directed towards their religion, but more often, perhaps, to the little it performs, contrasted with the loftiness of its pretensions ; a ridicule which derives its force from the very sublimity of the principles which the profession of piety assumes. — Robert Hall.

"I venerate the man whose heart is warm, whose hands are pure, whose doctrine and whose life coincident, exhibit lucid proof that he is honest in the sacred cause." — Cowper.

B. C. cir. 990.

God refuses to permit this

6—10. (6) spake I, etc., however proper the desire was, God declares that it was man's desire for Him, not His own desire for Himself. Comp. the demand for a king.[a] judges, in 2 Sa. vii. 7 it is "tribes." (7) sheepcote,[b] or fold. David's idea may have been "Now that I have done all these things I will build a House for God." But Jehovah rebukes it by saying, I have accomplished all this, not you. "I took you from the sheepcote" etc. (8) have . . name, R. V., "will make thee a name," the Lord continues to state what He will do for David. (9) a place, a fixed, settled kingdom. Still it is the Lord, not David, who is to do this. (10) an house, moreover, the Lord will perpetuate his family, and raise up a descendant to David, by whom the temple shall be built. The whole passage seems to mean "this is the Lord's business, not man's."

a 1 Sa. viii. 4, 5.

b "Those low, flat buildings out on the sheltered side of the valley are sheepfolds. . . . This is defended by a wide stone wall, covered all around with sharp thorns, wh. the prowling wolf will rarely attempt to scale."—Thomson.

Build thee a house.— How often God does for His servants what they desire to do for Him ! David desired to build the Lord a house, and the Lord built him a house. When God's servants are not accepted one way, they are another. Neither do they take it ill that the Lord puts them off from the work upon which they had set their desires ; but they learn His will, bow before it, and praise Him for it. David went in and sat before the Lord, and offered prayer, for he felt moved in heart, so that he could not do otherwise. When the Lord promises, we should supplicate: His giving times should create for us special asking times. — Spurgeon. God's care. — God tells David that from "the sheepcote" to his present "house of cedars" He had been with him, He had been training him, He had been evoking good out of all evil, for him personally and for all his people Israel. He had not been living, working, suffering, rejoicing, anguished with fear and cruelty, buoyant with hope and victory, for nothing, nor for a spasmodic, theatric, sensational display, nor for a mockery of collapse at last. No ; it was to make him a name, and a great name, and a name divinely and historically through all time worth having — a model ruler, a model king, and a blessing to his people Israel. All the while, from the first breathing of David's name to this present, David had been drawn through a career which, all appearances nothwithstanding, had been tributary to Divine results. What firmness, what confidence, what glory, is it to any life that can embrace this creed, and that believes it with the heart ! — Pul. Com.

"A man can even here be with God, so long as he bears God within him; and a man must not so much prepare himself for eternity, as plant eternity in himself; eternity, serene, pure, full of depth, full of light, and of all else." — Richter.

"He who would look with contempt upon the farmer's pursuit is not worthy the name of a man.— Beecher.

God promises the temple shall be built by Solomon

11—15. (11) thy seed, indefinitely, one of thy sons. (12) an house, or temple. (13) his father, etc., comp. 2 Sa. vii. 14, 15, observing what is here omitted. "This choice of the house of David for the foundation of the Messianic idea in its strictest sense." Comp. Ps. lxxxix. 27 ff. as I took, etc., alluding to Saul. (14) mine house, etc., expresses the Divine idea of the union of kingship with Divine rulership. (15) vision, see vs. 3.

The purpose of God concerning Solomon. — In the Divine communication made to David through the Prophet Nathan, there is a tone of very tender consideration, and an evident desire to solace and comfort the aged servant of God, whose request it was found necessary to refuse. In one way the desire of his heart could be met. He should have an immortality in his descendants and in his dynasty. He should live on in his son, and accomplish even his purpose concerning the temple. And he may have, before he dies, the comforting assurance that God's purposes were set upon his son, and the Divine favor would overshadow his reign. Those gracious Divine purposes are indicated in these verses. Man's brief life on the earth, which so seldom permits him to accomplish any great thing, would be very painful to him were it not for the hope he cherishes that he will live on in his children, and by them his great life-work may win completion. We cannot bear to think that death cuts off our influence and spoils our work. Man can scarcely say a thing that hurts him more in the saying than this, "My purposes are broken off." — R. Tuck.

"Measure not men by Sundays, without regarding what they do all the week after. — Fuller.

"Is that a deathbed where a Christian dies? Yes ; but not his— "'tis Death itself that dies. — Coleridge.

David's prayer and thanksgiving

16—19. (16) sat before, prob. before the ark within the tabernacle. Who am I, the message has been rightly understood. Lord God, i. e. "Jehovah Elohim," the most august title, recognizing the sovereign God, and corresponds to "David my servant." (17) estate, etc., comp. note on 2 Sa. vii. 19. (18) honour, R. V., "concerning the honour which is done to thy servant." for thou knowest, he relies on the Divine power to read what the life cannot express. (19) servant's sake, comp. 2 Sa. vii. 21.

Oriental ceremony. (vs. 16). — The ceremonial of the Orientals does not end with the introduction of persons to one another, but continues during the whole visit. The most scrupulous attention is paid by all parties to the established tokens of respect; the posture of the body, the parts of the room, and other circumstances, are all regulated by custom, to whose imperious dictates they have implicitly submitted from the remotest antiquity. One of the postures by which a person testifies his respect for a superior is by sitting upon his heels, which is considered as a token of great humility. In this manner, says Dr. Pocock, resting on their hams, sat the attendants of the English consul, when he waited on the caia of the pacha of Tripoli. It was in this humble posture, probably, that David, the king of Israel, sat before the Lord in the sanctuary, when he blessed Him for His gracious promise concerning his family; half sitting and half kneeling, so as to rest the body upon the heels. This entirely removes the ground of perplexity, which some expositors have felt, in their attempts to elicit a meaning from the phrase, sitting before the Lord, at once consistent with the majesty of Jehovah, and the humility of the worshipper; for this attitude expressed among the Orientals the deepest humility, and, by consequence, was every way becoming a worshipper of the true God.— Paxton.

20—24. (20) beside thee, Ex. xx. 3. heard, he appeals from his own experience to the traditions of God's past dealings. (21) redeemed, etc., Ex. xv., i. e. what other nation has been delivered by its deity as Israel has been? (22) their God, in special covenant relations. (23) thing, etc., declared by Nathan. (24) Let, etc., R. V., "and let thy name be established and magnified forever, saying." [a] God of . . God to, i. e. not only is worshipped as God, but has shown Himself to be God.

God's relation to His people (vs. 24).— Let us, for the illustrating of these words, consider — I. The relation which God bears to His people. 1. He has chosen them out of the world, which lieth in wickedness; 2. He has given Himself to them in a peculiar way; 3. He avows that relation to them before the whole universe. II. Inquire what, under that relation, we may expect at His hands. 1. The care of His providence; 2. The communications of His grace; 3. The manifestations of His love; 4. The possession of His glory. III. What, under that relation, He is entitled to expect from us. 1. That we "be a people to Him;" 2. That we give ourselves to Him, as He has given Himself to us. Conclude with two proposals: — (1) That we, at this very hour, accept Jehovah as our God; (2). That we now consecrate ourselves to Him as His people.— Simeon.

Trust in God.— Wesley, preaching at Doncaster, said, a poor Romanist woman, having broken her crucifix, went to her priest, frequently crying out, "Now I have broken my crucifix, I have nothing to trust in but the great God." Wesley, exclaimed, "What a mercy she had a great God to trust in!" A Romanist present was powerfully affected. "The great God to trust in" touched his heart. He was very deeply convinced of his need of salvation, joined the Methodist society, and became an ornament to religion.

25—27. (25) told thy servant, lit. "uncovered the ear of"— as when one lifts the locks to whisper a secret into the ear. a house, family or dynasty. (26) thou art God, in 2 Sa. vii. 28 is added "and thy words be true." (27) let it please, R. V., "it hath pleased thee," etc., comp. 2 Sa. vii. 29.

Living on a promise.— A lady gives the following statement: "I went just before Christmas to see a young friend, who, although surrounded by all the luxuries which wealth can give, was languishing with disease. As words were spoken of the beautiful gifts which devoted friends were expecting to make her, she said with great earnestness, 'There is only one thing which I want; if I have that I shall care for nothing else.' 'What is that gift for which you long?' I inquired. She said 'I want my father to give me a promise that he will take me South; then I shall escape the cold, and I know I shall get well. Oh how I should live on that promise! The hours and the days would pass so quickly, I should forget all my weariness and pain.' I thought: Dear girl, your father may give you his promise, and not be able to

B. C. cir. 990.

"God is a good creditor; he never seeks back the principal sum, and indeed puts up with a poor annual rent."—J. Brown.

"No man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure, and good, without the world being the better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness."—Phillips Brooks.

"When love begins to sicken and decay it useth and enforceth ceremony."— Shakespeare.

[a] "The Lord of hosts, the God whom Israel worships, is indeed by His kindness and care a God to Israel."— Spk. Com.

True religion shows its influence in every part of our conduct; it is like the sap of a living tree, which penetrates the most distant boughs.

"I believe we cannot live better than in seeking to become better, nor more agreeably than having a clear conscience."— Socrates.

"Seeming devotion does but gild the knave, that's neither faithful, honest, just, nor brave, but where religion does with virtue join, it makes a hero like an angel shine."— Waller.

"Piety is a kind of modesty. It makes us cast down our thoughts, just as modesty makes us cast down our eyes in presence of whatever is forbidden."—Joubert.

B. C. cir. 990.

keep it; he may be snatched away by death, or riches may take to themselves wings and fly away. But you could 'live on your father's promise;' and how unwilling I am to live on the words of promise, which my Father in heaven gives! He whose word cannot be broken, whose promise cannot fail! Then came to mind the sweet words of Dr. Hamilton, written many years ago: 'One single promise of Jesus Christ accredited in the heart, unites the soul to God. The graft has taken, and the soul abides as a branch in the vine.'" a Porter identifies with the conspicuous hill called Tell-es-Safieh.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTEENTH.

David's wars

Thomson identifies with Eleutheropolis, now Beit Jibrin.

This chapter is parallel to 2 Sa. viii. 1-18, Time not known. 1—8. (1) smote, etc., 2 Sa. viii. 1. Gath,[a] Jos. xi. 22. The "mother" or capital city of Philistia. her towns, surrounding and dependent villages. Lit. her daughters. (2) Moab, 2 Sa. viii. 2. (3) Hadarezer, 2 Sa. viii. 3. (4) houghed, cut the sinews of the ham. an hundred, R. V., "for an hundred," i. e. "he saved horses for an hundred chariots." (5) Syrians, etc., 2 Sa. viii. 5. (6) gifts, or tribute. preserved, R. V., "gave victory to." (7) shields of gold, probably borne by the body-guard of the king. (8) Tibhath and .. Chun, comp. Beta and Berothai of 2 Sa. viii. 8, prob. other names of the same towns.

Houghed.—The reason of this mutilation was that, horses being forbidden by the Mosaic constitution to the Hebrews, both in war and in agriculture, it was of no use to keep them; and their neighbors placing much dependence on cavalry, but having, for want of native breed, to procure them by purchase, the greatest damage that could be done to such enemies was to render their horses unservicable in war (cf. Gen. xlix. 6; Josh. xi. 6-9).—Jamieson.

Tou sends tribute; Edom subdued

b "Abishai was the principal instrument in the conquest of Edom; it was, however, ascribed to Joab, as generalissimo of the forces (1 Ki. xi. 15, 16), and to David as the king under whose auspices the war was carried on.

9—13. (9) Tou, the Toi of 2 Sa. viii. 9. Hamath, one of the kingdoms tributary to Solomon, cf. 1 Ki. iv. 24; 2 Chr. viii. 4; also Amos vi. 2; 2 Ki. xix. 13; 2 Ki. xiv. 28. (10) Hadoram, or Joram. to enquire .. congratulate him, R. V., "to salute him and to bless him." (11) dedicated, as materials for the proposed temple. (12) Abishai,[b] the honor of this is ascribed to Dav. 2 Sa. viii. 13. Edomites, called the Syrians in the Bk. of Sam. (13) garrisons, to keep the country in subjection. preserved, R. V., "gave victory to;" cf. 1 Ki. xi. 15-16.

"Dedicated."—This is the first instance of a practice uniformly followed by David, of reserving, after defraying expenses and bestowing suitable rewards upon his soldiers, the remainder of the spoil taken in war, to accumulate for the grand project of his life—the erection of a national temple at Jerusalem.

David's chief officers

c "It would seem that we ought to read Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech (1 Sa. xxii. 20)."—Spk. Com.

d 2 Sa. viii. 17.

"The English laws punish vice; the Chinese laws do more, they reward virtue."—Goldsmith.

14—17. (14) executed, made wise rulings and enforced justice. He was a vigorous and just ruler. (15) the host, or army. recorder, chronicler, historian and adviser to the king, cf. 2 Ki. xviii. 18, 37; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 8. (16) Abimelech, or Ahimelech.[c] Shavsha, or Seraiah.[d] (17) chief, heads or princes; chief officers in the palace.

David's officers were eminent men.—The most eminent of the age composed his cabinet. The commander-in-chief, clever, courageous, and renowned for military achievements. Faithful to the king, not always to principle. The chancellor correctly published royal decrees and registered events in the State archives. The body-guard round the king and priests before the altar, each in his place and work, gave influence to the reign, and felt honored in the service. Thus David's rule not only associated with military prowess, but poetic genius and personal piety. Remarkable for men of rank and administrative ability, and did more for Israel than Charlemagne did for Europe or Alfred for England.—Hom. Com.

CHAPTER THE NINETEENTH.

David's messengers to Ammon ill-treated e "A Jewish tradition relates that on the slaughter

This chapter is parallel with 2 Sa. x. 1—5. (1) after this, a formula not indicating strict chronological sequence, cf. ch. xviii. 1; 2 Sa. viii. 1; x. i., etc. Nahash, 1 Sa. xi. 1; 2 Sa. x. 1. (2) shewed kindness,[e] this was prob. during Dav.'s exile, Nahash being an enemy of Saul's. comfort him, he sent ambassadors with messages of condolence. (3) to search, etc., as spies, to prepare the way for the seizure of the country. (4) shaved, comp. 2 Sa. x. 4, which says "shaved off the one half of their beards." sent them away, these men were ambassadors, who, by the laws of all nations are entitled to courtesy. To treat them so was to insult David and his nation. (5) at Jericho,[a] selected as being a border city.

Homiletic hints. — Gratitude not absorbed by death (vs. 2). Kind and seasonable expressions of sympathy (vs. 2). Ungenerous suspicions, betrayals of character (vs. 3). Intended kindnesses disgracefully recompensed (vs. 4). Thoughtful consideration for the respect of others (vs. 5).

David's messengers. — They were treated with the greatest indignity. Shaving their beards and shortening their garments, a double insult in the East, where long beards and long garments are badges of honor. Many Orientals would rather die than lose their beards, and Turks used to regard beardless Europeans as runaway slaves. — Hom. Com. The power of kindness. — I remember once a valued friend of mine, a barrister, now passed away, who spent his Sundays in visiting a hospital. He told me that on one occasion he sat down by the bedside of one of the very poorest, the most ignorant, and, without using the word in any offensive manner, one of the very lowest men he had ever seen in his life — a man whose English, had it been taken down, would have been the most complete and perfect dislocation of the Queen's English that he ever heard. No word seemed to be in its right place. It seemed as if that which should have been a jointed and vertebrated sentence had been separated at every joint, and thrown together anyhow. My friend was a man of the most tender spirit — a man whose tender spirit radiated from one of the most striking faces I ever saw; and I can well understand how he looked when he sat down by that poor man's bed. He began first, as all should who visit the sick, to break ground on temporal matters, to sympathize with them on that which they can understand so well — their bodily sufferings — to show that we are not indifferent to what they are suffering as men; and then after speaking a few kind words, he was proceeding to say something further for his Master, whom he so dearly loved, when he saw the man's face begin to work convulsively. The muscles quivered, and at last, lifting up the sheet, and drawing down his head, he threw the sheet over his face, burst into a violent flood of tears and sobbed aloud. My friend wisely waited till this storm of grief was passed, and then the poor fellow emerged from under the clothes, his face bearing the traces of tears that had flowed down it. When he was able to speak, my friend asked him — "What is it that has so touched you? I hope that I have not said anything that was painful to you. What can have moved you so much?" And as well as the man could sob out, he sobbed out these words: "Sir, you are the first man that ever spoke a kind word to me since I was born, and I can't stand it." — Champneys.

B. C. cir. 990.

of Dav.'s family by the neighboring king of Moab, the one of his brothers who escaped found shelter with Nahash."— Stanley.

a Jos. v. 10, 13; vi. 1, etc.

"How unsuitable is it for us, who live only by kindness, to be unkind."— Edwards.

"Sweet as refreshing dews or summer showers to the longparching thirst of drooping flowers; grateful as fanning gales to fainting swains; and soft as trickling balm to bleeding pains, are thy kind words."— Gay.

"There was an officer in the city of Rome who was appointed to have his doors always open, in order to receive any Roman citizen who applied to him for help. Just so the ear of the Lord Jesus is ever open to the cry of all who want grace and mercy."— Ryle.

6–9. (6) odious.[b] thousand, estimated at a million dollars and upward for the hire of mercenaries![c] Mesopotamia, Heb. Aram-naharaim:[d] Syria of the two rivers. (7) hired . . chariots, probably this is the sum of all kinds of troops, of which the chariots were chief; cf. 2 Sa. x. 6. Medeba, mod. Mâdeba, near Heshbon. Nu. xxi. 30; Jos. xiii. 16. (8) sent Joab, to relieve the city. This was the object of the first campaign. (9) in array, 2 Sa. x. 9. in the field, so hemming Joab in. The kings mentioned here are the Syrian allies.

Ammon hires Syria to war with David

One false step leads on another. — I. Here is a war, like many others, commenced by the evil-doer. II. Here is a war that might have been avoided by an ample and honorable apology. III. Here is a war that ended disastrously for the ill-doers.

False steps. — One sin always leads to another, and the insult of Hanun's princes led on to a bloody war. No doubt the inconsiderate act of Hanun to David's messengers was regretted shortly after it was committed. But it was too late. A little time sufficed to make the princes of Hanun aware that sooner or later there would be a terrible reprisal. David felt the indignity keenly. Yet the retribution did not proceed from him, but from those who had so grossly insulted him. This is invariably the case. A dread of retribution and a guilty conscience go together. The inconsiderate act of a moment, it is foreseen, will lead to consequences which must be averted; and so another is resolved on, and then follows a collapse or utter ruin. Thus it was here. The consequence of a momentary impulse are the destruction and ruin of a kingdom and nation. — Pul. Com. Warriors (vs. 7, comp. 1 Sa. x. 6). — In the first text the children of Ammon are said to have hired 32,000 chariots, which

b "One universal feeling of indignation was roused throughout Israel, and all classes supported the king in his determination to avenge this unprovoked insult on the Heb. nation." — Jamieson.

c For practice of hiring mercenary troops, see 1 Ki. xv. 18-20; 2 Ki. vii. 6; 2 Chr. xxv. 6.

d Aram-beth-Rehob, 2 Sa. x. 6.

"That king shall best govern his realm, that reigneth over his people as a father doth over his children."—Agesilaus.

B. C. cir. 990.

seems an incredible number. However, the original is a collective noun, meaning cavalry or riders. Then the meaning is, they hired 32,000 auxiliaries, who usually were mounted on chariots or horses, but who sometimes fought on foot, which makes it agree with the latter text, in which the Syrian auxiliaries are stated to amount exactly to 32,000, besides 1,000 whom they hired of the king of Maachah, and who very likely were footmen.

Joab defeats Ammon and Syria

a 1 Chr. xviii. 12.

10—15. (10) choice, "Joab found himself between the Ammonites at the city gate and the sons of Aram in the field, and arrayed his choice troops against Aram, the stronger force and the rest againt Ammon. The gate appears to be that of Medeba."—Murphy. (11) Abishai, 2 Sa. ii. 18.[a] (12) Syrians, these mercenary troops, who were well armed, warlike, and fresh for the battle. (13) good courage, this inspiring address indicates the faith and piety of the commander. the cities of our God, the nation belonged to Jehovah, its cities and its people were His. They were fighting to keep His possessions from falling into the hands of the heathen. Therefore they could trust in His help. (14) drew nigh, prob. getting the advantage of attack. (15) into the city, i. e. took refuge behind its walls. Joab came, not being prepared to storm the city nor to undertake a long siege.

"Not parties, but principles. Let us be of no party but God's party, and use all other agencies as we use railroad cars, traveling upon one train as far as it will take us in the right direction, and then leaving it for another."—Beecher.

The Christian call to arms (vs. 13). — I. The enemies by which the peace and prosperity of our homes are threatened. 1. Ungodly pleasures; 2. Injudicious reading; 3. Sinful fashions; 4. Worldly conformity. II. The spirit in which these enemies are to be met. 1. Exalted courage; 2. Self-denying patriotism; 3. Humble reliance upon God.

"The noblest motive is the public good."—Virgil.

Need of our common brotherhood. — The race of mankind would perish, did they cease to aid each other. From the time that the mother binds the child's head, till the moment that some kind assistant wipes the death-damp from the brow of the dying, we cannot exist without mutual help. All, therefore, that need aid, have a right to ask it from their fellow-mortals; no one who holds the power of granting, can refuse it without guilt. — Sir. W. Scott.

"To think well is the way to act rightly."—Paley.

Help of God. — Mr. Oncken told me that he was summoned before the burgomaster of Hamburg, who bade him cease from holding religious meetings. "Do you see that little finger?" cried he. "As long as I can move that finger I will put down the Baptists." "Yes," said Oncken, "I see your little finger, and I also see a great arm which you cannot see. As long as the great arm of God is lifted on our behalf, your little finger will have no terror for us."—Spurgeon.

the Syrians become subject to David

16—19. (16) beyond the river, the Euphrates. Hadarezer now sends for his troops beyond the Euphrates and renews the attack. (17) upon them, comp. 2 Sa. x. 17; came to Helam. This is the better reading but the place Helam is unknown. (18) slew, etc., 2 Sa. x. 18. The general opinion is that neither account is correct. Perhaps best would be "700 chariots," according to Sam'l, and "40,000 footmen" as Chronicles. (19) servants, par. acc't reads, "when all the kings that were servants to Hadarezer."

"Every misery that I miss is a new mercy."

"Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge."—Shakespeare.

"An obstinate man does not hold opinions, they hold him."—Pope.

"Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong."—Dryden.

Humiliation. — Syrians from three places hired and headed by powerful men, fought with chariots, cavalry, and infantry. A vigorous attack was made, and they fled, "as often happens," says Bp. Patrick, "with those that fight for pay alone, without respect to the cause." 1. Defeat most humiliating. Syrians first fled and the Ammonites soon followed, without fighting at all. They retreated to the city, but stone walls are no defense without stone hearts. 2. Defeat most complete. The commander was killed, thousands were slain. Vassal princes submitted to David, and the Syrian nation forsook their allies, and became tributary to Israel. — Hom. Com.

CHAPTER THE TWENTIETH.

B. C. cir. 1035.

conquest of Ammon

The contents of this chapter are scattered through the text of Samuel in various places. 1—3. (1) kings go out, see 2 Sa. xi. 1. wasted, or ravaged, destroying the dwellings and growing and stored crops. Rabbah,[b] 2 Sa. xi. 1. The chronicler omits the story of Bathsheba which occurs at this point in 2 Samuel. How long this siege lasted we cannot tell. Possibly more than a year. (2) took the crown, 2 Sa. xii. 30. a talent, more than 100 lbs. Evidently not to be worn long! (3) cut them, etc., 2 Sa. xii. 31. David probably treated them as they treated Jewish prisoners, according to the b "The metropolis of Ammon, De. iii. 11; Jos. xiii. 25. In later times it received the name Philadelphia fr. Ptolemy Philadelcustom, "eye for an eye," etc. Cf. 1 Sa. xi. 1–2; Amos i. 13. And such barbarity has characterized war down to recent times.

An incorruptible crown. — A French officer who was a prisoner upon his parol at Reading met with a Bible: he read it, and was so impressed with its contents, that he was convinced of the folly of sceptical principles and of the truth of Christianity, and resolved to become a Protestant. When his gay associates rallied him for taking so serious a turn, he said in his vindication, "I have done no more than my old school-fellow Bernadotte, who has become a Lutheran." "Yes; but he became so," said his associates, "to obtain a crown." "My motive," said the Christian officer, "is the same; we only differ as to the place. The object of Bernadotte is to obtain a crown in Sweden; mine is to obtain a crown in heaven."

B. C. cir. 990.

phus. Called Ammân now. There are extensive ruins in an elevated valley on the banks of the stream Moiet Ammân." — Ayre.

4–8. (4) Gezer, called Gob in 2 Sa. xxi. 19.[a] Sibbechai, ch. xi. 29. Sippai, or Saph.[b] they, etc., i. e. the Philistines. (5) Elhanan, 2 Sa. xxi. 19; see 1 Chr. xi. 26. Lahmi, see 2 Sa. xxi. 19, noticing words in italics. (6) Gath, Jos. xi. 22. man, etc., 2 Sa. xxi. 20. (7) Shimea, 1 Sa. xvi. 9. (8) the giant, Rapha, see marg. 2 Sa. xxi. 18–22.

Noted giants. — Emperor Maximen, A. D. 35, 8-ft. 6-in., used his wife's bracelet as a thumb ring. Gabara, an Arabian, described by Pliny, 9-ft. 9-in. John Middleton, born at Hale, in Lancashire, in 1578, called "The Child of Hale," 9-ft. 3-in. Patrick Cotter, the famous Irish giant, born 1761, 8-ft. 7-in., shoe 17-in. long. Big Sam, porter to the Prince of Wales — George IV. — near 8-ft. There is a skeleton in the Museum of Trin. Col., Dublin, 8-ft. 6-in. That of O'Brien, in Museum of College of Surgeons of England, is 8-ft. 2-in. Another, in Museum in Bonn, 8-ft. The body was in each case from 2 to 3 in. longer. Thus O'Brien measured 8-ft. 4-in. after death. A lesson to conquerors. — When Edward the Confessor had entered England from Normandy to recover the kingdom, and was ready to give the Danes battle, one of his captains assured him of victory, adding, "We will not leave one Dane alive." To which Edward replied, "God forbid that the kingdom should be recovered for me, who am but one man, by the death of thousands. No: I will rather lead a private life, unstained by the blood of my fellow men, than be a king by such a sacrifice." Upon which he broke up his camp, and again retired to Normandy, until he was restored to his throne without bloodshed." Percy Anec.

giants of Philistia killed a "As Gezer occurs frequently, whereas we nowhere else hear of Gob, it is prob. that Gezer is the right reading." — Spk. Com. Jos. x. 33; xii. 12; 2 Sa. v. 25.

b 2 Sa. xxi. 18.

When Thomas Hooker was dying, one present said to him: "You are going to receive the reward of your labors." He replied, "I am going to receive mercy."

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIRST.

2 Sa. xxiv. 1–25 is parallel with this ch. and adds some details. 1–4. (1) Satan,[c] the adversary, not "the Lord" as in account in Samuel. This passage shows clearly an idea of Satan which we meet in Job and Zechariah, as "an angel of crafty and hostile disposition toward the covenant people and all who fear God, seeking to deprive them of the favor of God, but only permitted to act as His instrument."— Oehler. Comp. 2 Sa. xxiv. 1. provoked,[d] R. V., "moved," that is tempted, or persuaded. The motive was probably the desire to raise additional taxes; or get more workmen for the public enterprises he had in mind. "The project involved a breach of his theocratic relations." — Geikie. (2) number Israel, to do this was not in itself wrong. (3) servants, "the king counts them as his servants; but the Lord regards them as His, and therefore resents this numeration." — Murphy. (4) went throughout, 2 Sa. xxiv. 4–8.

David numbers Israel

c Job. i. 7; Zech. iii. 1.

"It is alleged by some critics that this introduction of Satan is an evidence of a later date than is commonly assigned to the Chronicles."— Wordsworth.

Practical advice.— One day, as an ancient king of Tartary was riding with his officers of state, they met a dervish crying aloud, "To him that will give me a hundred dinars, I will give a piece of good advice." The king, attracted by this strange declaration, stopped and said to the dervish," What advice is this that you offer for a hundred dinars?" "Sire," replied the dervish, "I shall be most thankful to tell you, as soon as you order the money to be paid me." The king, expecting to hear something extraordinary, ordered the money to be given to the dervish at once. On receiving which, he said, "Sire, my advice is, begin nothing without considering what the end may be." The officers of the state, smiling at what they thought ridiculous advice, looked at the king, who they expected would be so enraged at this insult as to order the dervish to be severely punished. The king, seeing the amusement and surprise which this advice had occasioned, said, "I see nothing to laugh at in the advise of this dervish, but, on the contrary, I am persuaded that if it were

d "This attempt to take the census was not unnaturally suggested by the increase of his power, but it implied a confidence and pride alien to the spirit inculcated on the kings of the chosen people." — Stanley.

"Counsel and conversation is a good second education, improves all the more frequently practiced men would escape many calamities. Indeed, so convinced am I of the wisdom of this maxim, that I shall have it engraved on my plate, and written on the walls of my palace, so that it may be ever before me." The king, having thanked the dervish for his advice, proceeded towards his palace; and on his arrival, he ordered the chief bey to see that the maxim was engraved on his plate, and on the walls of his palace. — Lady M. W. Montague.

B. C. cir. 990.

virtue and corrects all the vice of the former, and of nature itself.—Clarendon.

David confesses his sin

5—8. (5) Joab, took nine months and twenty days to make this census. It was only in a time of peace that this was possible. Peace and prosperity brought to David his greatest temptations. sum, comp. the number given in Samuel. No satisfactory explanation of the discrepancy has been suggested. (6) Levi, according to the precedent given, Nu. i. 47–49.[a] (7) smote Israel, notice that 2 Sa. xxiv. 1 says that it was because "the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel" that David was led to commit this sin. Not David only, therefore, but Israel, suffered the penalty. (8) In Sam'l the penitence precedes the uniting. Vs. 7 is probably a summary of what is narrated after vs. 8. have sinned, etc., penitence and confession were not permitted to remove penalty.[b] a "The omission of Benj must be ascribed to a determination on the part of Joab to frustrate the king's intention, whereby he might hope to avert God's wrath from the people." — Spk. Com.

Confession of sin. — This language may be regarded as a model of sincerely uttered confession. 1. It was offered to God. "David said unto God." So in Ps. li., "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned." Not against society, not against the state; but against the Searcher of hearts and the Judge of all. 2. It was a taking to himself of the guilt. "I have sinned." Instead of laying the blame upon another, the king accepted it for himself. It is a sad thing when men take excuses into the presence of God. 3. David had a just sense of the heinousness of his sin. He felt that he had sinned greatly. It was not in his view a light thing of which he had been guilty. How can we, as Christians, regard sin as a light matter, when we remember that sin brought our holy Saviour, the Lord of Glory, to the ignominious cross? 4. The folly of sin was very apparent to David's mind when he poured out his soul in contrite confessions before the Lord. "I have done very foolishly." — Thomson.

"As in the order followed, Judah and Benj. were the last tribes to be taken. Dav. may have come to a better mind before it was completed." — Wordsworth and Jamieson.

Practical advice. — Some time after this occurrence (see last illustration), one of the nobles of the court, a proud, ambitious man, resolved to destroy the king, and place himself on the throne. In order to accomplish his diabolical purpose, he secured the confidence of one of the king's surgeons, to whom he gave a poisoned lancet, saying, "If you will bleed the king with this lancet, I will give you ten thousand pieces of gold; and, when I ascend the throne you shall be my vizier." This base surgeon, dazzled by such brilliant prospects, wickedly assented to the proposal. An opportunity of effecting his evil design soon occurred. The king sent for this man to bleed him: he put the poisoned lancet into a side pocket, and hastened into the king's presence. The arm was tied, and the fatal lancet was about to be plunged into the vein, when suddenly the surgeon's eye read this maxim at the bottom of the basin — "Begin nothing without considering what the end may be." He immediately paused, as he thought within himself, "If I bleed the king with this lancet, he will die, and I shall be seized and put to a cruel death; then of what use will all the gold in the world be to me?" Then, returning the lancet to his pocket, he drew forth another. The king, observing this, and perceiving that he was much embarrassed, asked why he changed his lancet so suddenly. He stated that the point was broken: but the king, doubting his statement, commanded him to show it. This so agitated him that the king felt assured all was not right. He said, "There is treachery in this: tell me instantly what it means, or your head shall be severed from your body." The surgeon, trembling with fear, promised to relate all to the king, if he would only pardon his guilt. The king assented, and the surgeon related the whole matter, and acknowledged that had it not been for the words in the basin, he should have used the fatal lancet. The king summoned his court, and ordered the traitor to be executed. Then, turning to his officers of state, he said, "You now see that the advice of the dervish, at which you laughed, is most valuable: it has saved my life. Search out this dervish, that I may amply reward him for his wise maxim." — Lady Montague

b 2 Sa. xxiv. 10.

"If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men's cottages princes' palaces. It is a good divine that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching." — Shakespeare.

Gad, the seer, reproves David

9—13. (9) Gad, (1 Sa. xxii. 5; 2 Sa. xxiv. 11), was undoubtedly David's confidential counselor from the time of his wanderings, but his position was not official, as is shown by the omission of all names of prophets from the lists of officers in reigns of David and Solomon. Even the high priest was a royal functionary, but the prophetic office maintained its independence. Gad probably wrote the narrative before us. (10) choose, his choice would indicate what was really the attitude of his mind. (12) three years', comp. seven years of 2 Sa. xxiv. 13. Each of these punishments involved a reduction of the population, wh. would make the new census quite worthless. Famine, sword and pestilence, cf. Ezek. xiv. 21 ; Deut. xxviii. 21–25 ; Rev. vi. 4–8. advise thyself, R. V., "consider." (13) great strait,[a] very difficult to decide. of the Lord, the decision of a man who had abundantly experienced the Divine mercy, and in spite of his blunders and sins was a true child of God.

David's falling into the hand of God (vs. 13). — Regard David's exclamation — I. As indicating what is a natural tendency in all souls, trust. II. As revealing the true spirit of Life, trust in God. 1. His preference was right ; 2. It was expedient. Trust in man — (a) Destroys freedom ; (b) Degrades the character ; (c) Issues in disappointment. III. As foreshadowing the inevitable doom of all. In one of two ways we must fall into God's hands. 1. Voluntarily, by the influences of grace ; or, 2. Compulsorily, by the forces of justice. — Homilist.

In the hand of God. — The whole world is in the hand of God, let us be thankful. The whole past is under His review ; let us leave it with the assurance that His judgment is righteous. The whole future is under His control; let us pass into it with the steadiness, the quietness and the majesty of those who know that all the resources of God are placed at the disposal of all who put their whole trust in His wisdom and love. We can talk but inadequately about these things now ; poor are our best notions about the goodness of the Divine rule and the blessedness of falling into the Divine hands. Not until we reach heaven can we fully know how good a thing it is to have given up our whole heart and life to the keeping and direction of our heavenly Father. — J. Parker. Danger of beginnings. — For hundreds of years the north of Holland has been threatened with submersion by the Northern ocean. Ramparts have been raised along the whole coast, in the form of massive embankments, to keep the water out. Walking within this lofty embankment, you hear the sea roar and rave without, high above your head. In seasons of storm, the waves have been blown in upon the ramparts higher and higher, until they surged in over the top, washed an opening through a hole which a handful of earth might have stopped, and soon tore it into an immense break, through which "Old Ocean" deluged half a kingdom. At first a child might have stopped the leak ; now millions cannot arrest the break, or rescue the grassy meadows from their watery desolation. Whenever the storm arises, and the waves approach the top, the alarm-bell is rung in every city and hamlet far and near ; multitudes rush to the rescue, to raise the walls by means of wicker-work and loam. It is a symbol of the human heart.

14–17. (14) pestilence, the peculiar form of it is not known.[b] (15) sent an angel, "Angels are God's ministers in temporal judgment now as well as in final judgment hereafter."—Kirkpatrick. (Comp. Ex. xii. 23. Ps. lxxviii. 49; 2 Ki. xix. 35, etc.) repented him,[c] now regrets his action, but, for the penitence of man, mitigates or brings to an end the punishment which would otherwise have followed. In Nu. xxiii. 19; 1 Sa. xv. 29 we are taught that God does not repent. Scripture "boldly states the two truths and leaves conscience to harmonize them," vs. 8. Ornan, also called Araunah, Aranyah, and Haornah. (16) saw the angel, as in a vision. the elders,[d] not only the king but the people repent, and the punishment is stayed. The king was not alone guilty though he humbly confessed the sin as his only, cf. 2 Sa. xxiv. 1. sackcloth, Ge. xxxvii. 34. (17) sheep, creature often treated as emblem of innocence.

David and Israel (vs. 17). — Wisdom of David's act, vs. 13. God's hand safest to hold the rod — hand of King, Master, Father. I. The progressive course of sin. 1. Temptation, vs. 1; 2. Transgression, vs. 2; 3. Punishment, vss. 10–12. II. The progressive course of reconciliation. 1. The messenger, vs. 9; 2. Conviction, vs. 8 ; 3. Penitence, vs. 16; 4. Acceptance, vss. 18, 26, 27; 5. Praise, vs. 24. III. Underlying truths. 1. Though tempted, sin is man's own act ; 2. Our sin affects others ; 3. Though sin be pardoned, it leaves terrible scars behind. — R. Berry.

David's confession (vs. 17). — David, when he numbered the people, though it is expressed that Satan provoked him thereunto, and though David probably a 2 Sa. xxiv. 14.

B. C. cir. 990.

"Nothing is less sincere than our method of asking and of giving advice. He who asks advice would seem to have a respectful deference for the opinion of his friend, whilst yet he only aims at getting his own approved of, and his friend responsible for his conduct. On the other hand, he who gives it repays the confidence supposed to be placed in him by a seemingly disinterested zeal, whilst he seldom means anything by the advice he gives but his own interest or reputation."—Rochefoucauld.

"They fall deepest into hell who fall backwards into hell. None so near heaven as those that are convinced of sin ; none so near hell as those who have quenched conviction."—Bunyan.

Punishment.—"He that would be safe from the acts of evil must wisely avoid the occasions."—Bp. Hall.

God smites Israel with a pestilence

b "It can hardly be doubted that one of these pestilences must have been that fatal sickness wh. has even to our own time especially ravaged Egypt and the East, and wh. formerly visited Western Europe; the plague described as virulent typhus, in the highest degree contagious, and accompanied with extreme debility."—Ayre.

c Ge. vi. 6; Ex. xxxii. 14; 2 Sa. xxiv.16; Jer.xxvi. 19.

d No mention is made of their pres-

B. C. cir. 990.

might be sensible of his temptation, yet he never accused the devil, but took all the guilt upon himself. Good reason! Satan hath no impulsive power; he may strike fire till he be weary (if his malice can be weary), except man's corruption brings the tinder, the match cannot be lighted. — J. Fuller. Insidious influence of sin. — What used to be called a death-ring was often employed in the Italian states three or four hundred years ago. If a man hated another, and desired to murder him, he would present him with one of them. In the inside was a drop of deadly poison, and a very small hole, out of which it would not make its way except it was squeezed. When the poor man was wearing it the murderer would come and shake his hand violently, the lion's claw would give his finger a scratch, and in a few hours he was a dead man. One of these rings retained its destructive power sufficiently to imperil human life for nearly four hundred years. A person who put it on was saved only by great skill on the part of his physician, and by the strongest medicines. How like this poison is to sin! You commit a sin now, and for the present forget it; and perhaps ten or twelve years hence the wound you then, so to speak, gave yourself, may break out again, and that more dangerously than ever. And the greatest danger of all is lest the thoughts of sins committed, and the pleasure we had in committing them, should come back upon us in the hour of death, or appear against us in the day of judgment.

ence in 2 Sa. xxiv. 16, 17.

"To one capable of appreciating moral beauty, sin is discord, disorder, deformity; horrible is a boy growing into a villain, or a full-grown villain maturing into a devil; beautiful a youth rising up to virtuous manhood, or a man ripening into an angel of God. As a mansion forsaken of man and occupied with serpents and wild beasts, so, to a pure eye is a sinful soul." — Thomson.

David told to set up an altar

18—22. (18) threshing-floor, here (vs. 15) the plague had been stayed. It was a place, therefore of peculiar sanctity. Here David built an altar, and later here was the site of Solomon's temple. (20) Ornan, the narrative reverts to what actually occurred at the threshing-floor. This is not narrated in Samuel. hid themselves, the vision being an overwhelming one. (21) bowed himself,[a] the event that had occurred, as well as respect for David, explains the attitude and actions of Ornan. (22) full price, David would not devote to God that which cost him little or nothing.

Honesty in high life. — Some years ago it was proposed to the Duke of Wellington to purchase a farm in the neighborhood of Strathfieldsaye, which lay contiguous to his estate, and was therefore a valuable acquisition, to which he assented. When the purchase was completed, his steward congratulated him upon having had such a bargain, as the seller was in difficulties and forced to part with it. "What do you mean by a bargain?" said the duke. The other replied, "It was valued at £1,100, and we have got it for £800." "In that case," said the duke, "you will please to carry the extra £300 to the late owner, and never talk to me of cheap land again." — Raikes.

a He was possibly the last of the Jebusite kings.

"He who freely praises what he means to purchase, and he who enumerates the faults of what he means to sell, may set up a partnership with honesty." — Lavater.

David buys the threshing-floor of Ornan

23—27. (23) Take it to thee, comp. Ge. xxiii. 11-15. Ornan sympathizes with the desire of David and is willing to offer the sacrifice freely. (24) wh. is thine, it must be David's offering for himself and his people. Therefore he could not accept the gift. (25) for the place, the whole hill top.[b] The amount given in 2 Sa. xxiv. 24 is different. (26) by fire, as Ju. vi. 21, or 1 Ki. xviii. 38.[c] God thereby appropriates the offering. Comp. Lev. ix. 24. The offerings in temple and tabernacle were always lit from the fire which first came down from heaven and was not permitted to go out.

A cheap religion no religion at all (vs. 24). — True religion is — I. Spirituality in contradistinction to formalism. II. Enthusiasm in contradistinction to prudence. III. Nobility in contradistinction to meanness. IV. Progress in contradistinction to stationariness. V. Reality in contradistinction to falseness. — Homilist.

Business. — Kindness will dictate much in carrying on business which law cannot take cognizance of. It will preserve from the wretched practice of exclusive dealing, of punishing a man for his religion or politics by withholding custom; of making commerce the instrument of bigotry and exclusiveness, a practice which all condemn when they suffer from it, and all approve when they are advantaged by it. It will teach us to give a tender consideration to the cases of others, to treat inferiors with courtesy and gentleness, to pay respect to those whose circumstances make them apt to suspect unkindness not to make a vigorous exaction of mere rights, to allow for unavoidable causes, and by studious care smooth the path of honest poverty. — A. J. Morris. Uprightness. — The late Charles Grant, Esq., a leading member of the court of East India directors, was for a long time the commercial resident in Malta; where, in addition to a liberal salary, he received a considerable b "Not only the threshing-floor, for the site of the altar, but the whole homestead and its precincts, for the site of the future temple." — Wordsworth.

c See also Ge. iv. 4; 2 Ki. i. 12; 2 Chr. vii. 1

"The devil is too cunning to startle men with temptations to great crimes at first, but if he can tempt them to leave off their prayers, to take God's name in vain, to drink, to swear, and to speak of the vices commission on all the articles purchased by him for the company. On making up his accounts at the end of two or three successive years, he found the sum due to him was very great, and that he was making a large fortune very rapidly. Possessing the most scrupulous integrity, he sent all his books down to the governor-general in Calcutta, and begged that they might be very carefully examined, as he was making money so fast that he suspected he was not getting it honestly, though he could discover no error in his accounts. The governor-general, says the Bengalee newspaper from whence these facts are derived, returned the books to him unexamined, and begged him to be quite at ease on the subject, adding, that he wished all the servants of the honorable company were equally scrupulous.

B. C. cir. 990.

of others with pleasure, he will soon tempt them to crimes of a damning nature." — Bp. Wilson.

"A bargain is sometimes as unmerciful as a robbery." — Nicholls.

28—30. (28) David saw, by the fire that had come down. sacrificed there, i. e. continued to do so thereafter. (29) Gibeon,[a] 8 miles N. W. of Jerus. (30) afraid, the manifestation of God at the floor of Ornan made him fear to sacrifice elsewhere lest he should so displease God.[b]

David sacrifices on the altar

Man the organ both of the evil and the good (vs. 27, ff.). — In this chap. we have man in two aspects, I. Bringing tremendous evils on the earth. 1. Satanic influence interferes not with personal responsibility; 2. One man's sin entails misery on thousands; 3. God has agents at hand to execute His judgments. II. Through God, arresting these evils. By the spirit of prayerfulness. 1. Profound contrition for sin; 2. Trust in God; 3. Atoning, self-sacrificing benevolence. Learn: — (1) The solemnity of human life; (2) The ruinous and restorative dispositions in man. — Homilist.

a 1 Ki. iii. 4; 1 Chr. xvi. 39; 2 Chr. i. 3.

Worship. — Solemn indeed ought every religious exercise to be; it should heighten the whole level of the mind, and bring to a finer pitch of harmony the action of all the powers of the soul. If we have left the altar in any other frame of mind than this, then our service there has been a vain oblation. When men go down from the house of God, their whole spirit should be marked by reverence, tenderness, submission, and a complete desire to obey and fulfill every tittle of the word of God. By this sign shall men know that they have offered acceptable worship. — J. Parker. Answer to prayer consecrating the place of prayer. — It is noted that David felt the threshing-floor to have become a sacred place, precisely because there he had gained the answer to his prayer. A similar feeling is illustrated in the case of the patriarchs. Abraham erected his altars where the sign of the Divine favor came to him; and Jacob raised his pillow-stone as a pillar, and consecrated his place of vision; Bethel, the house of God. We may recognize instances of the same kind in our own religious experiences. Certain places are, to our feeling, peculiarly sacred, and we know that they have gained their sacredness out of prayer-times, wrestling scenes, and gracious Divine responses. It appears that David had received answer to his prayer under two symbols. (1) By the descending of heavenly fire for the consuming of his sacrifice, and (2) by the sight of the angel reverently and obediently putting the great plague-sword back into its scabbard (vss. 26, 27). These outward signs did but assure the fact of God's gracious answer, and should not be thought of as necessary to the answer, or we may find difficulty in realizing that nowadays God answers our prayers, and gives us of the answer an inward witness and not an outward sign. — Pul. Com.

b "Or, David, knowing that by sacrifice on this altar he had caused the angel to stay his hand, was afraid to transfer his offerings elsewhere, lest the angel should resume his task, and pestilence again break out."— Spk. Com.

None of this statement is found in 2 Sa. xxiv. 25.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SECOND.

This and the following chapters are peculiar to Chronicles. 1—5. (1) said this verse belongs with vss. 28–30 of preceding chapter and gives the conclusion of David from the foregoing events. (2) strangers, the Hebrews had hitherto been a race of soldiers. Masons and mechanics had come into the land from abroad to ply their trade. These, now, David assembles.[c] (3) joinings, R. V., "couplings." Sidonians, etc., see 1 Ki. v. 1, 15–25; 1 Chr. xiv. 1; 2 Chr. ii. 16. One reason why Tyre and the Phenicians were so friendly to David was that by his conquests he had gained control of the trade routes to Arabia and the East. Therefore they sent these gifts to David. But this was the beginning of Phenician influences that were harmful to Hebrew life (cf. Geikie). (5) tender,[d] ch. xxix. 1; 1 Ki. iii. 7. magnifical, magnificent.

David prepares for the future temple

c 1 Ki. v. 17, 18.

d "Sol.'s exact age at this time is uncertain, but it cannot have been more than twenty-four or twenty-five; it may have been as little as fourteen or fifteen." — Spk. Com.

B. C. cir. 990.

"How profitable it would be if every young life could say, My life is to be exceeding magnifical; it is to be a life of intelligence, purity, beneficence, holy activity in all blessed service: I will therefore now make preparations for it."—Parker.

Provision for the future (vs. 5).— From these words we gather — I. That fathers should do their utmost to make their sons' work in the service of God easy. The materials they may supply are — 1. The incentive of a good example; 2. A Christian education; 3. A knowledge of the world's need. II. That the church of the present should make provision for the work of the church in the future. III. That in making this provision we should be influenced by two things. 1. A consideration of the present weakness of the church — money and men; 2. Of the greatness of the work to be done. Learn: — If we cannot build the temple we may at least gather materials. The explorations of travelers, compiling of dictionaries, translation of Scriptures, etc., are materials collected now for the aid of future builders.

Willingness to do what we may when we are forbidden to do what we would. — For reasons sufficiently defined God did not allow David to build his temple; and David received the Divine refusal in a right spirit. It might have crushed him, and led him to feel that he could do nothing; but he nobly decided that if he might not actually build, he would gather the materials for building, and make all necessary preparations. Too, often, when a man's particular plans are hindered, he throws up Christian work altogether. We there commend the really beautiful example of the pious David. — Pul. Com.

David charges Solomon to build the temple

6—10. (6) called for, etc., 1 Ki. ii. 1-3. (7) my mind, R. V., "my heart," 2 Sa. vii. 1-17. (8) shed blood,[a] 1 Ki. v. 3: 1 Chr. xxviii. 3. (9) a man of rest, after David comes Solomon, after Elijah comes Elisha, after John the Baptist comes Jesus Christ. There is a time for each kind of service in God's kingdom. Solomon, peaceful, or peaceable; he is also called Jedidiah. beloved of Jehovah.[b] give peace, notice that God is to be the source of this peace. Not Solomon by reason of his superior wisdom. 1 Ki. iv. 20-23, v. 4. (10) my son, in an especial manner, under peculiar care and guidance; a gracious promise to David as well as to Solomon.

a 2 Sa. viii. 2, 5; x; 18; xii. 31; 1 Ki. xi. 16.

The predicted son (vs. 9). — I. Son of David, — so was Christ. II. A man of rest, — so was Christ. III. The giver of peace, — so was Christ. IV. He had a significant name, — so has Jesus Christ. V. He was a glorious king, — so is Christ. IV. His great work was the building of the temple, — so is the work of Christ.

b 2 Sa. xii. 25.

A man may will more than he can perform. — Distinguish carefully between willing or seriously purposing, and mere wishing. A man's sentimental wishes mean nothing, and cannot stand in place of right deeds; but a man's definite plans and purposes may be as true expressions of character and righteousness as actual deeds could be; and so God may say, "Thou didst well that it was in thine heart." One of the gravest troubles to the earnest man is the impossibility of carrying into effect one-half of what he can purpose and desire to do. The artist has his visions of more and better pictures than he can ever paint. The Christian resolves upon nobler works than he will ever accomplish, and a nobler life than he will ever live. From this common fact an important argument for man's immortality may be drawn. There must be the larger sphere in which man may find the room which he vainly seeks here. — Pul. Com.

"If we would amend the world we should mend ourselves, and teach our children to be not what we are, but what they should be."— W. Penn.

David exhorts Solomon to obey God.

11—16. (11) be with thee, lit. shall be with thee. (12) wisdom,[c] see Sol.'s prayer, 1 Ki. iii. 5-15. keep the law, this the one condition of prosperity for all Israelites. (13) strong, etc., De. xxxi 6, 8; Jos. i. 6, 7. (14) my trouble, so characterizing his reign, as full of anxieties and troubles. hundred . . silver, taking the usual idea of the talent, this would amount to more than four hundred million dollars. Such enormous accumulations can be paralleled from heathen records of treasure taken in wars. But it is to be remembered that nearly all the numbers given in Chronicles are larger than those of parallel accounts. (15) cunning, i. e. skilful.[d] (16) be doing, this charge was given just before David's death.

c Ps. lxxii. 1.

d Ge. xxv. 27; Ex. xxxviii. 23; 1 Sa xvi. 16, 18; 1 Chr. xxv. 7; Ps. cxxxvii. 5.

Consecration of property. — All the accumulation of David's life is here consecrated to God. Thus should it be in the life of every true Christian. His money, his talents, his time, his opportunities, are all the Lord's, and are to be consecrated to His service. "Ye are bought with a price." The Christian is in one sense the poorest man in the world, for all he has belongs to the Lord; yet he is the wealthiest, because God Himself is his. We have no right to take a walk without it is the Lord's will, nor spend a penny unless as He would have us do it. When a man becomes the Lord's, everything he possessed passes over to Him who has bought him.— F. Whitfield. Making the way plain for our successors (vss. 6–16). — Nothing is more hateful than the spirit of "apres moi le deluge." (After me the deluge.) No worthy Christian workman will be content unless, like David, as he considers who and what are to come after him, he feels a devout thankfulness that he has made a plain path for his successors, in which they may walk in peace, honor, and usefulness.— Clarkson.

"They have spent their lives in heaping up colossal piles of treasure, which stand, at the end, like the pyramids, in the desert sands, holding only the dust of kings."— Beecher.

B. C. cir. 990.

"As riches and favor forsake a man, we discover him to be a fool; but nobody could find it out in his prosperity."— Bruyere.

17—19. (17) princes, members of the court, including David's other sons. (18) God with you, His promises have been fulfilled. He has accomplished now what He began in the Exodus and foretold by Moses. Therefore build to Him this place for His worship. mine hand, as the agent God used, but the glory David wholly gives to the Lord.[a] (19) set your heart, make this your purpose and your effort. the holy vessels, those used in the service of the tabernacle.

David exhorts the princes to aid Solomon

[a] Comp. Jos. xxii. 4.

Seeking after God (vs. 19). — I. The occasion on which this injunction was given. II. The injunction itself. 1. The great object of our life; 2. In what way we are to prosecute it. And now — (1) Avail yourselves of the opportunities afforded for public usefulness; (2) Begin with a surrender of your whole souls to God.— C. Simeon.

"It is quite deplorable to see how many rational creatures, or, at least, who are thought so, mistake suffering for sanctity, and think a sad face and a gloomy habit of mind propitious offerings to that Deity whose works are all light and lustre and harmony and loveliness."— Lady Morgan.

Holy vessels. — In all heathen temples there are numerous vessels of brass, silver, and gold, which are especially holy. Those, however, of the highest castes may be allowed to touch, and even borrow them for certain purposes. Thus, a native gentleman, who is going to give a feast, borrows the large cauldron for the purpose of boiling the rice; should his daughter be about to be married, he has the loan of the silver salvers, plates, and even jewels; which, however, must all be purified by incense and other ceremonies when returned to the temple. "The ark" finds a striking illustration in the keadagam of the Hindoos — a model of which may be seen in the house of the Royal Asiatic Society. In it are placed the idols, and other sacred symbols, which are carried on men's shoulders.— Roberts.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-THIRD.

B. C. 977.

David makes Solomon king of Israel

This chapter is devoted to an account of the Levitical order, its distribution and services. 1—6. (1) full of days, comp. Ge. xxv. 8; xxxv. 29; the account of coronation of Sol. is given, 1 Ki. i. 33–39. (2) gathered,[b] comp. ch. xxviii. 1. (3) and upward, to age of fifty.[c] man by man, i. e. reckoning the men only. (4) set forward, R. V., "oversee." officers, etc., as De. xvi. 18; "subordinate officials employed partly in administration of justice, partly in maintenance of civil order and military discipline and to enforce the mandates of their superiors."— Driver. (5) porters, i. e. watchmen, or doorkeepers; really they acted as policemen or park-keepers now. (6) courses, to take regular turns. among, R. V., "according to."

[b] "All important measures relating to the public interest were submitted for consideration to a general assembly of the representatives of the tribes."— Jamieson.

[c] Nu. iv. 3, 47. 1 Chr. xxvi. 20; 2 Chr. xix. 8.

Full of days (vs. 1). — I. An instructive view of life; full of — not years — but days. Life built up of small portions of time. Men make small account of a day. II. A suggestive picture of old age. As a portrait is made up of minute touches, so old age is the result — in its character, memory, hopes — of each day's work.

The beauty of old age. — The eye of age looks meek into my heart! the voice of age echoes mournfully through it! the hoary head and palsied hand of age plead irresistibly for its sympathies! I venerate old age; and I love not the man who can look without emotion upon the sunset of life, when the dusk of evening begins to gather over the watery eye, and the shadows of twilight grow broader and deeper upon the understanding.— Longfellow.

"A great statesman has said there are only two happy days in the life of a cabinet minister, the day on which he takes office and the day on which he leaves it."— Parker.

7—11. (7) Gershonites, Ex. vi. 16. Laadan, called Libni, ch. vi. 17.[d] (9) sons of Shimei, there seem to have been two Shimeis, the first a descendant of Laadan. chief of the fathers, R. V., "heads of the fathers' houses." (10) Zina, marg. Zizah. (11) not many sons, "a certain number of heads were requisite to obtain the rank of a clan or fathers' house." Cf. note on vii. 9.— Oehler.

sons of Levi

course of Gershon

[d] Ex. vi. 17; Nu. iii. 18.

The meaning of order. — What is this wonderful enchanter called order? What, exactly, do we mean by it? If we look into it more narrowly, we shall find that it implies the separation, division, and distribution of things accord-

"God's names are not mere appellations, signs by which men are known one from another; they are characters, they are credentials, they are approbations."—Parker.

B. C. 977.

"Order is heaven's first law."—Pope.

"The order of the eternal manifests itself in the sun which rises and the heavens which fall."—Jens Baggesen.

ing to their qualities, in certain definite, well-calculated times and spaces. Number and measure are the essence of it. The sands of the desert cannot be numbered, at least not by us; relatively to our faculties they are mere chaos; but the soldiers of a well-ordered army, arranged in rank and file, can be numbered, and their thousands told with as much ease as the units of a small sum, if only the arrangements be completed. So then order consists in dividing a confused multitude of individual elements into groups that bear a natural resemblance to one another in kind, in number and in measure. A squad of full-grown soldiers, five in front and three in depth, like the band of the old Greek chorus, is perfect order; each unit being like the other, and the whole being composed of parts that bear a definite relation of equality or proportion to the whole; the many under the controlling power of order have become one, and with that unity have acquired a distinct character, and are capable of answering a definite purpose.—Blackie.

course of Kohath

12—20. (12) Kohath, Ex. vi. 16. (13) Aaron, "Aaron's two sons form two houses that are not mentioned here, as they come out very distinctly in the following chapter. that he should sanctify,[a] rather, "to sanctify him as most holy — him and his sons forever." The office of the priest is threefold — first, to make atonement (offer the fire-offering); second, to minister to God for man; third, to bless man for God. These are the functions of a mediator."—Murphy. (14) Moses, Ex. ii. 22. man of God, a title applied to Moses, David and once to Shemaiah (1 Ki. xii. 22). (15) sons of, Ex. xviii. 3, 4. (15–17) the chief, first, and only one. (18–20) Shelomith the chief, first-born, so head of tribe.

a Ex. xxx. 7; Nu. xvi. 40; De. xxi. 5; 1 Sa. ii. 28.

For times in wh. Moses is called the "Man of God," see De. xxxiii. 1; Jos. xiv. 6; 2 Chr. xxx. 16; Ezr. iii. 2.

"He who has no taste for order will be often wrong in his judgment, and seldom considerate in his actions."—Lavater.

Order in the Divine government.—When we consider how exact care is taken in well-ordered secular governments, not only that things be done which the affairs of the government require, but that they be done regularly and in the way which is prescribed and set; if there be any beauty and comeliness in order, where should we more expect to find it than in the Divine government, and in the conduct and management of the affairs of the supreme and celestial kingdom.—Howe.

course of Merari

21—23. (21) Merari, Ex. vi. 16.[b] (22) brethren, or kinsmen, as was arranged by the law.[c] (23) Mushi, vs. 21.

b Comp. Nu. iii. 20, 1 Chr. vi. 19; but see 1 Chr. xxiv. 26.

c Nu. xxxvi. 6.

Universal order.—

Order is heaven's first law—a glorious law,
Seen in those pure and beauteous isles of light,
That come and go, as circling months fulfil Their high behest. Nor less on earth discern'd
'Mid rocks snow clad, or wastes of herbless sand, Throughout all climes, beneath all varying skies,
Fixing for e'en the smallest flower that blooms,
Its place of growth.

"Order gave each thing view."—Shakespeare.

"Order, thou eye of action."—Aaron Hill.

the office of the sons of Levi

24—27. (24) polls, as vs. 3. twenty years, comp. vs. 3: it had been thirty years (Nu. iv. 3), but younger men now admitted because the labor of the office would henceforth be easier, vss. 25, 26. (25) that they may dwell, R. V., "and He dwelleth," the temple is to be His permanent abode. This a reason why younger men would be able to serve Him. (26) carry, bec. their wanderings were now over, and the ark was to find its rest. (27) by the last words, explaining the change noticed vs. 24, and declaring it a final arrangement of David's, made near the close of his life.

"One very common error misleads the opinion of mankind, that, universally, authority is pleasant, submission painful. In the general course of human affairs, the very reverse of this comes nearer to the truth. Command is anxiety, obedience, ease."—Paley.

"It is only by labor that thought can be made

The rest of the people of God (vs. 25).—I. In the mysterious polity of the people of Israel, spiritual and temporal blessings were so closely allied, that the same language might naturally be employed to signify either. II. Hence David hinted at profound truths than lie on the surface of his words. III. It becomes us to secure the great blessing — the rest that remaineth — as the chief object of existence. IV. Rest and peace must fall on a Christian spirit.—A. Butler.

Service the road to honor.—When the Spartan king advanced against the enemy, he had always with him some one that had been crowned in the public games of Greece. And they tell us, that a Lacedæmonian, when large sums were offered him on condition that he would not enter the Olympic lists, refused them. Having with much difficulty thrown his antagonists in wrestling, one put this question to him, "Spartan, what will you get by this victory?" He answered with a smile, "I shall have the honor to fight foremost in the ranks of my prince." The honor which appertains to office in the Church of God lies mainly in this — that the man who is set apart for such service has the privilege of being first in holiness of example, abundance of liberality, patience of long suffering, zeal in effort, and self-sacrifice in service. Thou gracious King of kings, if Thou hast made me a minister or deacon in Thy church, enable me to be foremost in every good word and work, shunning no sacrifice, and shrinking from no suffering. — Spurgeon.

B. C. cir. 977.

healthy, and only by thought that labor can be made happy; and the two cannot be separated with impunity."— Ruskin.

28—32. (28) their office, etc., Heb. "their station was at the hand of the sons of Aaron." While the services were of a higher nature, they were more numerous and varied than formerly. In the primitive simplicity of the wilderness, the worshiper was wont to kill the victim, flay and cut it in pieces and wash the inwards and legs. But now all the services were performed by the Levites or the Nethinim (ix. 2). Other offices were performed in the courts, and in the chambers, and in the purifying of all holy things. — Murphy. (29) shewbread, etc., Le. vi. 21, etc. measure, or measuring work: proper quantities were fixed by law.[a] (30) every morning, at the morning service. (31) offer, properly assist in offering. (32) keep the charge, see Nu. xviii. 3–5.[b]

[a] Ex. xxix. 40; xxx. 23, 24; Le. vi. 20; xxiii. 13; Nu. xv. 4–10.

[b] Nu. iii. 5–9.

Daily praise (vs. 30). — Praise is a great privilege. One began a prayer with the words, "We thank Thee that we may praise Thee." II. Praise is a universal duty. Who is there who has not something for which to praise Him who makes the sun shine on the evil and on the good? III. Daily praise should be offered for daily mercies. 1. In the morning for the blessings of the night; 2. In the evening for the mercies of the day. IV. Hereafter there will be no morning or evening praise, but praise forever. The praises of earth prepare for the praise of heaven.

"Prayer has a right to the word 'ineffable.' It is an hour of outpourings which words cannot express — of that interior speech which we do not articulate, even when we employ it."—Swetchine.

Instruments and praise.— In order to the high result intended, the music of religion must be religious. There must be a distinction of sounds. As this language is given for the heart, it becomes a first principle that it must be of the heart, else it is an unknown tongue. And so true is this, that nothing really can fulfil the idea of religious music which is not the breathing of true love and worship. Even instruments without life will not speak the true notes of power unless the touch of faith is on them, and the breadth of holy feeling is in them; how much less the voice itself, whose very qualities of sound are inevitably toned by the secret feeling of the spirit. — H. Bushnell. Praise.—One of the Moravian brethren, going very early one morning to let out their sheep heard uncommonly sweet singing in a tent, and drawing near, found it was the head of the family performing his morning devotions with his people. Beckoning to the others to come, "We stood still," say the brethren in their diary, "and listened to this sweet melody with hearts exceedingly moved and with eyes filled with tears, and thought these people were, no longer than two years ago, savage heathen, and now they sing to the Lamb that was slain, so charmingly, that it strikes the inmost soul." — Whitecross.

"The first petition that we are to make to Almighty God is for a good conscience, the next for health of mind, and then of body."—Seneca.

There is nothing greater for which God made our tongues, next to reciting His praises, than to minister comfort to a weary soul.— Jeremy Taylor.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FOURTH.

Vss. 1-19 give the 24 classes of priests. Vss. 20–31 the order of the rest of the Levites. 1—6. (1) divisions, etc. Ex. xxviii. 1; Nu. xxvi. 60. (2) Nadab, etc., Nu. iii. 4; Lev. x. (3) And David, etc., R. V., 'And David with Zadok of the sons of Eleazer, and Ahimelech of the sons of Ithamar, divided them according to their ordering in their service." Ahimelech, cf. xviii. 16; 1 Sa. xxii. 20; 2 Sa. viii. 17. Abiather, who escaped to David from the sword of Saul. (4) chief men, heads of houses. (5) by lot, for the avoidance of jealousies.[c] governors . . God, R. V., "princes of God," cf. "princes of the sanctuary," Isa. xliii. 28. (6) wrote them, the names as drawn in the lot.

the twenty-four orders of the sons of Aaron

[c] Lit. "'He divided them by lot, these with these,' i. e. those of the same family were together in the same class."—Wordsworth.

Importance of order.— What a monster in nature were that body which should have its organs and members so misplaced that the hands occupied the place of the feet, and the heart palpitated in the cavity of the brain! And who, besides, does not know that the fruitfulness, the beauty, the very

"No labor is hard, no time is long, wherein the glory of eternity is the mark we level at."—Quarles.

B. C. cir. 977.

life, of a tree, depends not only on its having both roots and branches, but on these members being placed in their natural order? Let a tree be planted upside down,—set the root in the air, and the boughs in the earth,—and I need not ask how much fruit it will yield, nor how many seasons the unhappy plant would survive such barbarous and blundering treatment.—Guthrie.

the casting of the lots

"To live is not to learn, but to apply."—E. Legouve.

"Methods are the masters of masters."—Talleyrand.

7—19. (10) Abijah, or Abia, Lu. i. 5. (19) according . . father, R. V., "according unto the ordinance given to them by the hand of Aaron their father." "The high priest and the heads of the 24 classes are supposed to be represented by the twenty-five men at the door of the temple in Ezek. viii. 16."—Murphy.

"As the Lord God of Israel had commanded him."—These words may be said to constitute the key-note of the whole Law (Exod. xxxix. 42; Lev. xxvii. 34; Numb. xxxvi. 13; Deut. xxxiv. 9). Just as Israel should pay heed to this commandment of Jehovah, so it would flourish and rejoice; in proportion as it should depart from these commandments, so it would fail and be distressed. Everything hung on a loyal obedience to the Divine will.

the rest of the sons of Levi a Not the same as in 1 Chr. xxvi. 25, 26.

"Method is essential, and enables a larger amount of work to be got through with satisfaction. 'Method,' said Cecil, afterwards Lord Burleigh, 'is like packing things in a box; a good packer will get in half as much again as a bad one.'"—Smiles.

20—26. (20) the rest, of the 2,400 Levites, who were to preside over the work in the temple. (Ch. xxiii. 7–23). The omission of the Gershonites is due to the fact that they were found only among the officers, judges and singers. Shubael, comp. ch. xxiii. 16; xxvi. 21. (21) Rehabiah, ch. xxiii. 17. (22) Shelomoth, or Shelomith, as ch. xxiii. 18.[a] (23) of Hebron . . first, not in Heb. text, supplied fr. ch. xxiii. 19. (24) Michah, comp. ch. xxiii. 20. (25) Isshiah, or Jeshiah, ch. xxiii. 20. (26) Beno, perhaps should be translated his son; R. V., however, retains it as a proper name.

Contrast of order.—In human doings and human productions we see everywhere manifestations of order. Well-ordered stones make architecture; well-ordered social regulations make a constitution and a police; well-ordered ideas make good logic; well-ordered words make good writing; well-ordered imaginations and emotions make good poetry; well-ordered facts make science. Disorder, on the other hand, makes nothing at all, but unmakes everything. Stones in disorder produce ruins; an ill-ordered social condition is decline, revolution, or anarchy; ill-ordered ideas are absurdity; ill-ordered words are neither sense nor grammar; ill-ordered imaginations and emotions are madness; ill-ordered facts are chaos.—Blackie.

b "It was known and settled beforehand what course of Levites should be in waiting, with the courses of the priests respectively."—Wordsworth.

27—31. (28) Eleazar, ch. xxiii. 21, 22. (29) Kish, also a son of Mahli. (30) Mushi, ch. xxiii. 23. (31) over against, R. V., "even as." principal . . brethren, R. V., "the father's houses of the chief, even as those of his younger brethren," i. e. the lots were drawn on equal terms: it is also intimated that the course of Levites and priests were fitted to each other.[b]

The three sons of Mushi (vss. 30, 31).—These all content with an inferior "lot," anxious to do their best, and joyfully contributing to the whole. "They were arranged by lot to match the courses of their brethren, the sons of Aaron, in the presence of the same superiors." "The principal fathers," or the chief over against his lesser brother. Each, great and small, his place and his work, and acting under "the great Taskmaster's eye." "Let every man be occupied, and occupied in the highest employment of which he is capable, and die with the consciousness that he has done his best."—Sidney.

"He praiseth God best that serveth and obeyeth Him most: the life of thankfulness consists in the thankfulness of the life."—Burkitt.

B. C. cir. 1015.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIFTH.

the order of the singers and musicians

This chapter is about the singers. 1—7. (1) captains, same as mentioned, ch. xxiii. 2; xxiv. 6. of the, omit these words. Jeduthun, or Ethan,[c] ch. vi. 42. prophesy, that is "sing" (cf. vs. 2); "there is so close a connection between sacred song and prophecy that the former is called prophecying, and the chief singers appointed by David are called prophets and seers (2 Chr. xxix. 30; xxxv. 15)."—Oehler. harps, Ge. iv. 21. psalteries, 1 Sa. x. 5. cymbals, 2 Sa. vi. 5. (2) Asaph, twelve psalms are inscribed "For Asaph," some of which probably were composed by him. under the hands, or leadership. (3) six, as there are only five names here, add Shimei, from vs. 17. (4) Uzziel, see vs. 18. Shebuel, see vs. 20. (5) lift up the horn, fig. for increase of dignity and honor in such a family. daughters, evidently women and children were included in the temple choirs. (6) cymbals, etc., vs. 1. (7) cunning,[d] skillful. two . . eight.[e] c See titles of Ps. xxxix., lxii., lxxvii., lxxix.

d 1 Chr. xxii. 15.

e "Each lot consisted of twelve persons, and there were twenty-four courses, and each course was in waiting for a week."

Number. — A number competent, skillful, orderly, and devout. What a pattern choir! All may imbibe their spirit and follow their example. "As it is commanded of God that all should sing, so all should make a conscience of learning to sing, as it is a thing that cannot be done decently without learning. Those, therefore, who neglect to learn to sing live in sin, as they neglect what is necessary to their attending one of the ordinances of God's worship." — Pres. Edwards. The word "cunning" (vs. 7). — Many words implying knowledge, art, skill, obtain in course of time a secondary meaning of crooked knowledge, art which has degenerated into artifice, skill used only to circumvent. Among other words which have gone this downward course is our English word "cunning." In Foxe's Martyrs we read, "I believe that all these three persons, i. e. the Godhead, are equal in power and in cunning." — Trench.

B. C. cir. 977.

"We should shun giving offense, and and also taking it. Happy the church where there is concord from the choir and no discord within it."—Clarkson.

8—31. (8) as well the small, comp. ch. xxiv. 31, and note. This arrangement avoided signs of partiality. (9–31) These verses indicate the order in wh. the courses were settled, Asaph took the first, Jeduthun the second, Heman the third, and so on alternately; this left all the later courses to the family of Heman.

the twenty-four orders of the singers

Variety. — The instruments of music used were various — "cymbals, psalteries, and harps." Doubtless others would have been used if they had been known and found fitting. We may do better to use one instrument of music only, but we do not well to make God's service monotonous. We should make it as attractive with variety of engagements, freshness of thought and newness of method as is consistent with reverence and propriety.— Clarkson.

"Nothing but what is just, can finally be expedient, because nothing else can secure the permanent concurrence of mankind."— Sir. A. Alison.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SIXTH.

1—12. (1) porters, keepers or watchmen.[a] Korhites, ch. ix. 19, 31 Asaph, the Ebiasaph, of ch. vi. 37; ix. 19. (2) Meshelemiah, vs. 14; comp. the Shallum of ch. ix. 19. (4) Obed-edom,[b] was a Kohathite of Gath-rimmon (xv. 18, 24; xvi. 38). God blessed him, among other reasons, because he took charge of the ark when David was terrified by the breach upon Uzza (xiii.) Hence he had a large family of eight sons. — Murphy. (6) mighty men, so able to swing the great gates, and form a guard of defense in case of popular tumult. (7) strong men, comp. vs. 6. (8) able men,[c] indicating that physical strength was required. (10) Hosah, ch. xvi. 38. (12) chief men, of these porters there were ninety-three, increased later to 212 (ch. ix. 22.) wards, R. V., "charges" or stations, comp. ch. xxv. 8. one against another, R. V., "like as their brethren."

the courses of the porters

"Honorable mention" often found in Scripture. 1. That we may discern the goodness of God. The smallest service, even a cup of cold water, not overlooked. He is gracious, accepts and crowns our service for Him. "God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love." 2. That we may imitate the example. We may not be in the same circumstances and able to do the same things, but we may cherish the same spirit and copy their example. "Nobleness of condition," says Dr. Chalmers, is "not essential as a school for nobleness of character. It is delightful to think that humble life may be just as rich in moral grace and moral grandeur as the loftiest places in society; that as true dignity of principle may be earned by him who in homeliest drudgery plies his conscientious task, as by him who stands entrusted with the fortunes of an empire."— Hom. Com.

Porters. — "A man called 'The Man of the Mountain of the House' went round every night to see that all were in their places, and that none of them slept. If he found any one asleep he struck him, and had liberty to burn his clothes. To this Lightfoot thinks there is a reference in Rev. xv. 16: 'Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments.'"—Hom. Com.

a "This word does not bear its modern significance of a carrier of burdens, but denotes in every case a gate-keeper, from the Latin portarius, the man who attended to the porta."—Smith's Bib. Dict.

b "The nature of the blessing consisted in the great increase in progeny by wh. his house was distinguished; 72 descendants are reckoned."—Jamieson.

c "The original is in the singular number, showing that each of them was thus qualified." — Wordsworth.

13—19. (13) cast lots, especially for the gates, of wh. there were four, ch. xxv. 8. It seems to have been the universal custom to decide order and rank by lot, cf. Nu. xxvi. 55; Ps. xxii. 18. Also 1 Sa. xiv. 41-42; Jon. i. 7, etc. (14) eastward, i. e. for the east gate. (15) house of Asuppim, R. V., "the store-house."[d] (16) Shallecheth, lit. gate. of the throwing out.[e] causeway, or ascent, 1 Ki. x. 5. (17) six Levites, bec. the E. gate was most frequented. toward Asuppim, R. V., "for the store-house." (18) Parbar,[f] some place on the W. side of the temple enclosure. (19) These, etc., comp. ch. xxiii. 5;

lots cast for the gate-keepers

d "The store-chambers of the gates." — Gesenius.

e "Prob. the rubbish gate, thro' wh. all the accumulated filth and sweepings of the temple and its courts were poured out." — Jamieson.

f "Comp. parvarim. A.V. suburbs,

B. C. cir. 977.

of 2 Ki. xxiii. 11. Poss. Parbar is ancient Jebusite name " — Smith's Bib. Dict.

the large number were prob. under the leadership of these chief men. Kore, R. V., " the Korahites."

Casting lots (vs. 13). — Thus the gates were assigned to the different officers by lot. On the death of a parent, the whole of his fields and gardens are often divided among his children, and great disputes generally arise as to whom shall be given this or that part of the property. One says, " I will have the field to the east." " No," says another, " I will have that ; " and it is not till they have quarreled and exhausted their store of ingenuity and abuse, that they will consent to settle the matter by lot. The plan they take is as follows: They draw on the ground the cardinal points, they then write the names of the parties on separate leaves, and mix them all together ; a little child is then called, and told to take one leaf and place it on any point of the compass he pleases. This being done, the leaf is opened, and to the person whose name is found therein will be given the field or garden which is in that direction. I think it therefore probable that the lots eastward, westward, northward, and southward, which fell to Shelemiah, Zechariah, Obed-edom, and Shuppim, were drawn something in the same way. — Roberts.

" Chance is but the pseudonym of God for those particular cases which He does not choose to subscribe openly with His own sign-manual." — Coleridge.

the keepers of the treasures

20—28. " The grand treasurers." (20) Ahijah, " As we find in the following verses the names of the treasurers, we can scarcely take the original word here as the proper name of a treasurer-general over them both. As a common noun, if it is to stand in its present form, it must mean a brotherhood or body of brothers to the other Levites. As this noun, however, occurs nowhere else, we may suppose an m dropped at the end to be restored, and then we shall have the Sept. reading, 'their brethren,' which is certainly the meaning in any case. There were two treasures,[a] one for the house of God for the maintenance of its officers and services, and one for the things consecrated for the building of the temple." — Murphy. (26) dedicated things, needful for the service. (27) spoils, a proportion was always devoted to the temple. to maintain, R. V., " to repair," i. e. used not for the regular support of the temple, but for extraordinary expenses. (28) had dedicated, this information of the acts of Samuel, Saul, Abner and Joab is not given elsewhere. under the hand, in the care of.

a Ex. xxx. 12; Nu. xviii. 16; Le. xxvii.

" Five things are requisite to a good officer, — ability, clean hands, despatch, patience, and impartiality." — W. Penn.

Spoils of war (vs. 27). — According to the law of Moses, the booty was to be divided equally between those who were in the battle, and those who were in the camp, whatever disparity there might be in the number of each party. The law further requires that out of that part of the spoils which was assigned to the fighting men the Lord's share should be separated; and for every five hundred men, oxen, sheep, etc., they were to take one for the high priest, as being the Lord's firstfruits, and out of the other moiety belonging to the children of Israel, they were to give for every fifty men, oxen, sheep, etc., one to the Levites. Among the Greeks and Romans the plunder was brought together into one common stock, and divided afterwards among the officers and soldiers, paying some respect to their rank in the distribution. Sometimes the soldiers made a reserve of the chief part of the booty, to present, by way of compliment, to their respective generals. The gods were always remembered. And the priest had sufficient influence to procure them a handsome offering, and other acceptable presents. — Bruder.

" High office is like a pyramid; only two kinds of animals reach the summit, — reptiles and eagles." — D'Alembert.

the officers and judges

29—32. (29) outward business, concerning the people's private or public affairs, not those of the temple. officers, etc., as ch. xxiii. 4. (30) were officers, etc., R. V., " had the oversight of Israel beyond Jordan westward." business of the Lord, probably does not refer to special religious work, as that of a scribe, but to the fact that all of their duties were God-given, in all they serve God and the king. (31) Jazer,[b] also Jaazer, about 10 m. W. of Ammân, and 15 fr. Heshbon. (32) chief fathers, etc., R. V., " heads of fathers' houses, whom king David made overseers" (cf. vii. 7).

b Jos. xiii. 25; xxi. 39.

" One man, perhaps, proves miserable in the study of the law, who might have flourished in that of physic or divinity; another runs his head against the pulpit, who might have been serviceable to his country at the plough; and a third proves a very dull and heavy philoso-

Jewish scribes (vs. 29). — The schoterim, or scribes, were different from the judges, for Moses had expressly ordained (De. xvi. 18) that in every city there should be appointed, not only judges, but schoterim likewise. It is very certain that Moses had not originally instituted these officers, but already found them among the people while in Egypt. For when the Israelites did not deliver the required tale of bricks, the schoterim were called to account and punished (Ex. v. 6–14). Now, as " satar," in Arabic, signifies to write, and its derivative, " mastir," a person whose duty it is to keep accounts and collect debts, I am almost persuaded that these schoterim must have been the officers who kept the genealogical tables of the Israelites, with a faithful record of births, marriages and deaths; and, as they kept the rolls of families, had, moreover, the duty of apportioning the public burdens and services on the people individually. An office exactly similar we have not in our governments, because they are not so genealogically regulated; at least, we do not institute enumerations of the people by families. But among a people whose notions were completely clannish, and among whom all hereditary succession, and even all posthumous fame, depended on genealogical registers, this must have been an office fully as important as that of a judge. In Egypt, the Levites had not yet been consecrated and set apart from the rest of the tribes; there, of course, the schoterim must have been chosen out of every family, or, perhaps, merely according to the opinion entertained of their fitness for the office. In the time of the kings, however, we find them generally taken from the tribe of Levi (1 Ch. xxiii. 4; 2 Ch. xix. 8–11; xxxiv. 13). — Michaelis. Officers. — The curious fact comes out in all the arrangements that office was hereditary. The heads of the different departments are named after the heads of the families employed in them. All that David seems to have done was to restore and regulate a system that had been organized at the first settlement of the nation. In this respect it presents a striking contrast to our modern customs. — Murphy.

B. C. cir. 977.

pher, who possibly would have made a good mechanic, and have done well enough at the useful philosophy of the spade or anvil." — South.

"Occupation was one of the pleasures of Paradise and we cannot be happy without it." — Mrs. Jameson.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SEVENTH.

1—9. (1) This verse is a kind of title for the whole chapter. courses, arrangements for the army similar to that already described for priests and Levites. Military force consisted of twelve companies of 24,000 each: a company serving a month at a time. (2) Jashobeam,[a] 2 Sa. xxiii. 8. In chap. xii. 11 he is mentioned as one of the "three mighties" of David. (3) Of the children, R. V., "He was of the children," referring to Jashobeam. Perez, or Pharez, son of Judah. (4) Dodai, R. V., "Dodai the Ahopite, and his course; and Mikloth the ruler, and in his course were," etc. The meaning of the verse is much disputed. (5) Benaiah, 2 Sa. xxiii. 20–23. chief priest, R. V., "son of Jehoiada, the priest, chief;" the word chief referring to Benaiah. Abiathar was high priest. Notice that not all Aaronites were priests, tho' the priesthood was confined to that family. (7) Asahel,[b] "as he was killed by Abner (2 Sa. xxiii. 24) this name must refer to his family." — Pul. Com. (8) Shamhuth, comp. Shammah, 2 Sa. xxiii. 11, and Shammoth, 1 Chr. xi. 27. (9) Ira, 2 Sa. xxiii. 26.

the twelve monthly captains

[a] 2 Sa. xxiii. 8; 1 Ch. xi. 11.

[b] 2 Sa. xxiii. 24; ii. 18-23.

Zeal in the service of God. — The angel (who delivered Peter), like the other angels of God — like the angel that hurried Lot — appears in a kind of solemn haste. "Arise up quickly," he says; "gird thyself." These spirits, when their purpose is effected, do not stand in wonderment at their own exploits — they take no breathing time — they want no leisure to rest from the toil and contemplate the conquest. It is a very ordinary thing to them; it excites no particular surprise or elation in their minds; they do not think of repose. So should it be with the servants of God on earth. They should not stand still wondering at their own doings, or think they deserve a year's holiday after the labor of one exploit; they also should be in solemn haste — their time is all too short. Not an hour should pass, after their greatest effort, without preparing for some new service. — J. Foster.

"Zeal for the public good is the characteristic of a man of honor and a gentleman, and must take the place of pleasures, profits, and all other private gratifications. Whoever wants this motive, is an open enemy or an inglorious neuter to mankind in proportion to the misapplied advantages with which nature and fortun have blessed him." — Steele.

10—15. (10) Helez, 2 Sa. xxiii. 26. (11) Sibbecai, 2 Sa. xxi. 18. (12) Abiezer, 2 Sa. xxiii. 27. (13) Maharai, 2 Sa. xxiii. 28 (14) Benaiah, 2 Sa. xxiii. 30. (15) Heldai, or Heleb, 2 Sa. xxiii. 29. Othniel, nephew and son-in-law of Caleb. Twelve captains have been named, of whom seven come from Judah, two each from Benjamin and Ephraim and one from Levi.

The sure reward of serving God. — When Calvin was banished from ungrateful Geneva, he said: "Most assuredly, if I had merely served man, this would have been a poor recompense; but it is my happiness that I have served Him who never fails to reward His servants to the full extent of His promise." — Spurgeon. Captains. — At the head of his army were officers of consummate experience, and what was more highly esteemed in the warfare of the time, extraordinary personal activity, strength and valor. His heroes remind us of those of Arthur or Charlemagne, excepting that the armor of "Not what I have, but what I do, is my kingdom." — Carlyle.

B. C cir. 977.

the feudal chieftains constituted their superiority; here main strength of body and dauntless fortitude of mind."— Hist. of Jews, Milman.

the princes of the twelve tribes

16—24. (18) Elihu, or Eliab, 1 Sa. xvi. 6.[a] (19–22) "Zebulun and Dan are omitted in the pedigrees of the tribes. We have here thirteen princes, and yet Gad and Asher are omitted. The number is made up by giving two for Levi, one for the Levites, and one for the priests; and three for Joseph, one for Ephraim, and one for each half tribe of Manasseh. This seems to have been the state of things at the close of David's reign."— Murphy. (23) took not, etc., intimating that the census was not of the whole population, and that its chief object was an arrangement of the army in proper proportion to the adult population. increase, etc., Ge. xv. 5.[b] (24) because there fell, etc., R. V., "and there came wrath because of this upon Israel." Ch. xxi. 7.

[a] 1 Sa. xvii. 13, 28; 1 Chr. ii. 13.

[b] Ge. xxii. 17; xxvi. 4.

"The zeal which begins with hypocrisy must conclude in treachery; at first it deceives, at last it betrays." — Bacon.

An innumerable people (cf. Gen. xv. 5; xxii. 17; xxvi. 4). 1. In actual existence. 2. In future calculations. The actual number of the people living at a given time is not the sum of the Lord's people. In the Divine estimate those gone before and those coming after are taken into account. Can we count the stars? then may we number God's children! They are perpetually increasing.— Hom. Com.

In what way this promise was, and is yet to be, fulfilled (vs. 23). — Under Solomon the nation of Israel reached its highest pitch of fame and power. But it is pleasant and encouraging to believe that the promise recorded in the text will be fulfilled in a deeper sense than that which appears on the surface. There is a true Israel, composed of all who, sharing Abraham's faith, are Abraham's spiritual children. These are destined to be numerous as the sands of the desert, as the leaves of the forest, as the dew-drops of the morning, as the stars of heaven. This is a kingdom whose subjects shall ever multiply, whose glory shall know no limit and no end.

"Whether zeal or moderation be the point at wh. we aim, let us keep fire out of the one, and frost out of the other."— Addison.

David's several officers

25—29. (25) king's treasures, his private accumulations. This refers to the treasure in Jerusalem. storehouses, these were scattered about the country, bec. taxes would be paid in kind, not in money. (26) of the field, tilling the royal farms. (27) vineyards, one officer presided over the grape-growing, another over the wine-making. (28) olive trees, grown chiefly for the oil. sycomore, the fig-mulberry, 1 Ki. x. 27. (29) herds, cattle for supply of milk and flesh to the royal table. Sharon,[c] a very fertile district. valleys, or plain, the Shefelah, or low country of Judah.

[c] Is. lxv. 10.

"If every man works at that wh. nature fitted him for, the cows will be well tended." — La Fontaine.

Cellars of oil (vs. 28). — When our translation represents Joash as over the cellars of oil, in the time of king David, 1 Chr. xxvii. 28, they have certainly, without any necessity, and perhaps improperly, substituted a particular term for a general expression. Joash was at that time, according to the sacred historian, over the treasures of oil; but whether it was kept in cellars, or in some other way, does not at all appear in the original history.— Harmer.

"Every base occupation makes one sharp in its practice, and dull in every other."— Sir Philip Sidney.

David's counsellors

30—34. (30) Obil, means "a tender of camels," work for which an Ishmaelite would be fitted. Meronothite, cannot be identified as person or place. (31) flocks, including sheep and goats. (32) Also Jonathan, etc., comp. 2 Sa. viii. 15–18. scribe, or secretary. with the king's sons, as companion and adviser. (33) Ahithophel, 2 Sa. xv., xvi., xvii. king's companion, comp. 1 Ki. iv. 5. (34) after Ahith., next valued as a counsellor. Jehoiada, etc., probably the son of Benaiah. Some of these men are elsewhere spoken of in connection with other offices. Here they probably are placed for honorable mention among the famous and intimate servants of David.

"Let a man choose what condition he will, and let him accumulate around him all the goods an all the gratifications seemingly calculated to make him happy in it; if that man is left at any time without occupation or amusement, and reflects on what he is, the meagre, languid felicity of his present lot will not bear him up. He will turn necessarily to gloomy anticipations of the future; and Optimism of Chronicles. — David pictured in his struggles, elevation, and grandeur. His wars and conquests, the extension of his kingdom, and the list of his officers. Arrangements sacred and civil, and the use of symbolic numbers illustrate the same tendency. A preference for brilliant scenes. Parts omitted chiefly dark. "Such as would disturb and in some points obscure the lustre of the picture. He collects all that is fitted to represent the hero-king in his greatness, and the activity of his reign as an uninterrupted chain of splendid theocratic events. To finish a picture that presents David in the meridian height of his glory and mighty achievements is the obvious aim of all that our author adds in the way of supplement on the ground of his resources to the life-picture of the great king as given in the Books of Samuel."— Lange.

Earth's produce. — David was a man of war, and it is not surprising that these historical books are largely occupied with an enumeration of his armies, catalogues of his mighty men of valor, and records of his military exploits, but it is interesting and instructive to observe that the chronicler does not pass unnoticed matters which give an aspect of peace and prosperity to David's reign. The king was not only a commander and a judge, but also an administrator and an economist. The chronicler, in referring as he does in this place to the accumulation of wealth and to material prosperity generally, indicates that in his judgment a nation's greatness does not consist simply in the number of its warriors or the brilliance of its feats of arms.

B. C. cir. 977.

except, therefore, his occupation calls him out of himself, he is inevitably wretched." — Pascal.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-EIGHTH.

David assembles the princes of Israel

This chapter and the next contain the last words of David. 1—4. (1) assembled, etc., all the various officials of whom previous account has been given: really the whole court.[a] (2) stood up, indicating effort made in the feebleness of old age and disease.[b] my brethren, affectionate mode of address, and putting himself on an equality with them. made ready, gathering materials.[c] (3) God said, 2 Sa. vii. 5, 13; 1 Ki. v. 5; 1 Chr. xxii. 8. (4) chosen Judah, Ge. xlix. 8.[d]

David's spirit. — "My brethren and my people." 1. A humble spirit. "My people" whom I rule, with whom I rank myself in this great work. He is their superior, but does not forget the command "that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren." 2. An affectionate spirit. "My brethren" whom I love, not servants whom I command. Affection and condescension to inferiors becoming in monarchs. Not less honored, but more beloved. "Love levels all," said Cervantes. 3. A spirit of authority. "Hear me." The king's circumstances, history, and experience gave weight to his authority. His message solemn, required attention, and must be obeyed, if the nation prospered. "Where the word of a king is there is power." Court and people are bound in faithfulness to their sovereign, and to the interests of their country. Hence, "Whoso keepeth the commandment shall feel no evil thing" (Ecc. viii. 4, 5). — Hom. Com.

The beauty of old age. — Old age is a part of the scheme of life, which was designed to be beautiful from beginning to end. It is the close of a symphony, beautiful in its inception, rolling on grandly, and terminating in a climax of sublimity. It is harmonious and admirable, according to the scheme of nature. The charms of infancy, the hopes of the spring of youth, the vigor of manhood, and the serenity and tranquillity, the wisdom and peace of old age; all these together constitute the true human life — with its beginning, middle, and end — a glorious epoch. — Beecher.

[a] 1 Chr. xxvii. 1-31.

[b] 1 Ki. i. 1.

[c] Comp. Ps. cxxxii. 3-5.

[d] 1 Chr. v. 2; Ps. lx. 7; lxxviii. 67, 68.

The best friends are those who stimulate us to that which is good. Heb. x. 24. — Nicholls.

and declares Solomon his successor

5—8. (5) throne . . of the Lord, a fine expression of the theocratic idea (comp. xxix. 23; xvii. 14). The hill of Zion as the dwelling place of Jehovah was the centre of the theocracy. (6) my son, specially to serve me in this matter. (7) constant, comp. 1 Ki. iii. 14; ix. 4. (8) Now, etc., appeal first to the congregation, then to Sol. in their presence.

Care for future. — David was most solicitous to leave nothing undone that he could do to secure the happiness and well-being of Israel after his death; therefore he convened this great assembly and gave this solemn charge. In the same spirit he adjured them to do the one right thing, in order that, in their turn, they might "leave the good land for an inheritance for their children," etc. (vs. 8). The spirit of indifference respecting the days that will succeed our own is one which the disciples of Jesus Christ should be ashamed to cherish. It is profoundly unchristian; it is as far as it can be from the spirit of Him who died that, after and through His death, there might be righteousness, joy, life, upon the earth. — Pul. Com. Inheritance. — Mark it is only those who possess the good land who shall "leave it for an inheritance." It is your half-Christians, your narrow-souled, crooked, unwise Christians, who leave no spiritual influences behind. Their children get soured by the caricature of religion they see in their parents. When parental restraint is over, there are no deep spiritual principles laid in the soul in early life, and they cast off what they feel has been a yoke. As a rule, most parents have to blame themselves for what they mourn over in their children. — Whitefield.

Happiness of old age. — As ripe fruit is sweeter than green fruit, so is age

The soul's dark cottage, battered and decayed, Lets in new light through chinks that time has made Stronger by weakness, wiser men become
As they draw near to their eternal home;
Leaving the old, both worlds at once they view,
That stand upon the threshold of the new.
—Waller.

B. C. cir. 977.

"A youthful age is desirable, but aged youth is troublesome and grievous."—Philo.

sweeter than youth, provided the youth were grafted into Christ. As harvest time is a brighter time than seed-time, so is age brighter than youth; that is, if youth were a seed-time for good. As a completion of a work is more glorious than the beginning, so is age more glorious than youth; that is, if the foundation of the work of God were laid in youth. As sailing into port is a happier thing than the voyage, so is age happier than youth; that is, when the voyage from youth is made with Christ at the helm.—J. Pulsford.

charges Solomon to build the temple

a Ps. xxxvi. 10.

b Ps. vii. 9; xvii. 3; cxxxix. 1-3.

9—10. (9) know thou, that experimental knowledge wh. is only to be gained by loving and serving.[a] "An unusual phrase in the earlier Scriptures." searcheth, so the least failure will surely be observed.[b] "The charge to Solomon is very touching and of perpetual interest. 'The God of thy father;' 'a perfect heart and a willing mind;' 'the Lord searcheth the heart,'—these are eternal principles of truth and duty, as potent now as ever. The special point of duty is then urged in the tenth verse."—Murphy.

Fathers and children (vss. 9, 10).—In this earnest and affectionate charge, we see one generation—I. Transmitting the knowledge of God to its successor. II. Enjoining the service of God upon its successor. III. Indicating God's method of dealing to his successor. IV. Bequeathing its unfulfilled intentions to its successor.—M. Braithwaite. The knowledge and service of God (vs. 9).—Impossible to obtain a complete, but easy to acquire a sufficient knowledge of God. I. In what it consists. II. Some practical observations. III. The necessity of serving God. IV. The character of this service.—F. J. Durand.

The temple.—No exclusive sanctity belonged to it. It and its lineal successors were to lie level with the ground. But its seed was to be as the stars of heaven, or as the sand upon the shore. "Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem," meant no doom, no curse, no disparagement of the temple. Those words of Jesus spoke the charter of God's church, as a growing, an ever-growing, and a prevailing reality in the world. Literally innumerable have been already the copies after that type. And they have yet to be manifold more. The building itself was emphatically not an ordinary building, nor a mere building. The thought of it in David's heart was not indigenous to that heart, nor was the execution of it to be liable to be dangerously ascribed either to his architecture, or his sons, or to that of the combined professional talent of the nation, or of all nations. No, it is unique. It has virtue in it. It, in the person of its successor, justifies Jesus' admiration, and a share of his tears. It breathes and moves ubiquitously, and has life in it. And it was because it was necessary that it should have these endownments, that though David thought and gave and prepared, and a nation now banded as one man consented and gave and wrought enthusiastically, yet the architect was God the Spirit."—Pul. Com.

"How long will the time be in coming when men shall see that an idea is of more value than gold, that knowledge is power, and that wisdom is better than strength."—J. Parker.

David gives Solomon the pattern of the temple

c "The temple was not left to man's art or invention to contrive it, but was framed by Divine institution."—Matt. Henry.

Comp. Ex. xxv. 9, 40.

"This expression (vs. 12) may, however, only mean what he had in his spirit, i. e. floating in his mind."—Jamieson.

"Don't do right unwillingly
And stop to plan and measure:
'Tis working with the heart and soul

11—15. (11) the pattern, or plan. This was given to Dav. by the Spirit, vs. 12.[c] porch, 2 Chr. iii. 4. houses, holy place, and holy of holies. 2 Chr. iii. 5, 8. treasuries, chambers built round the outer wall. 1 Ki. vi. 5. upper chambers, either those over the treasuries, or chambers forming second story over porch, or holy place. inner parlours, 2 Chr. xxii. 11. Supposed to be the porch and the holy place, (12) by the spirit, reference is undoubtedly to the Divine Spirit as appears by lit. rendering "all that was in the Spirit with him." He was taught by the Spirit in this matter as Moses had been taught of God concerning the tabernacle. courts, round the building for the assembling of worshippers. treasuries . . things, separate buildings in the courts. (13) courses, already explained, ch. xxiii.-xxv. (14) by weight, fixing what should be the proportionate weights. instruments, R. V., "vessels." (15) lamps, wh. fitted on the candlesticks.

Gold of Ophir (also 1 Ch. xxix. 4).—Nothing is said during the reign of David of voyages by sea, although Elath and Ezion-geber were under his authority; and in speaking of the offerings which he had prepared for the Lord, he refers to "three thousand talents of the gold of Ophir," which he had amassed. It is probable that his conquest was not sufficiently complete to enable Huram to undertake any commercial enterprise; and the gold of Ophir to which he alludes is, perhaps, a proof of the justness of the opinion which considers the name of Ophir as a general designation of all the countries of the south which furnished gold and precious stones, and of which little was known at that time, save by vague reports that confounded the whole under one general appellation. — Laborde. The pattern of the Spirit.— We sometimes make a great mistake in neglecting to remark the presence and operation of God in the ordinary and secular affairs of life. The Hebrews were in this respect in advance of us; they justly attributed all wise and good works to that Spirit from whom all wisdom and goodness proceed. Thus the workers in the construction of the tabernacle are expressly said to have received from the Spirit of God the knowledge and skill they needed to fulfil their undertaking, and in the passage before us David is represented as having received by inspiration from heaven the plans upon which his son was to erect the temple of Jehovah. —Pul. Com.

B. C. cir. 977.

That makes our duty pleasure." —Phebe Cary.

"How few, like David, have God and gold together." —G. Villiers.

16—21. (16) tables, etc., ten of these in the temple, all connected with the shewbread.[a] (17) fleshhooks, Ex. xxvii. 3; 1 Sa. ii. 13. bowls, Ex. xxvii. cups, Ex. xxv. 29. (18) chariot of the cherubims,[b] "as the bearers of the manifestation of God when He reveals himself to the world in His glory the cher. are here called God's 'chariot!'" (comp. Ps. xviii. 10). They are first mentioned Gen. iii. 24, and belong to a symbolism perhaps older than Mosaic. — Oehler. (19) the Lord made, etc., R. V., "All this, said David, have I been made to understand in writing from the hand of the Lord." (2 Ki. iii. 15). "This indicates an inspiration from the Lord, wh. enabled D. to put in writing the plan of all those things." — Murphy. David felt himself under special Divine guidance in forming the plan. (20) fear not, comp. Jos. i. 5–9. (21) skilful man, ch. xxii. 15.

Help of God. — When Tarik the Saracen went to vanquish Spain, he informed his followers that he had been favored by Heaven with a dream which had given him the fullest assurance of success. He had seen the prophet Mohammed surrounded by those holy saints and faithful companions who had adhered to his cause while he was an exile in Medina. They stood close by his couch with their swords unsheathed and their bows bent, and he heard the prophet say, "Take courage, O Tarik, and accomplish what thou art destined to perform." He then saw the prophet and his companions entering Spain, as if to herald the way for the faithful followers of Islam. With a truer vision and more confident assurance may we enter the lists, go on to the struggle, and engage in the warfare of those who are fighting beneath the leadership of the cross. For as surely as day conquers night, the cause of Heaven shall prevail and he shall reign whose right it is to reign. — G. McMichaels. Personal relations with God. — "The Lord God, even my God." It is possible for us to have thoughts of God that keep Him wholly external to us, and altogether unrelated to us. And it may be feared that such are the thoughts of God usually cherished by men. Though they may have a certain influence on us, the full and saving power of God cannot be known until we have appropriated Him and come into direct and personal relations with Him. A man finds God a living force upon thought, heart, life, and conduct when he calls Him my God. The work of Christ is, in great part, the bringing about of this relation, and the persuasion of the man to recognize it fully. Man lost says, "I heard Thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid, and hid myself." Man redeemed, and standing right with God, says "I flee unto thee to hide me." "For thou art my God." — Pul. Com.

gold, etc., provided for the temple

a 1 Ki. vii. 48; 2 Chr. iv. 19.

b "The expanded wings of the cherubim formed what was figuratively styled the throne of God, and as they were emblematical of rapid motion, the throne or seat was spoken of as a chariot." — Jamieson.

Ps. xcix. 1.

"There is much religion in the possessive pronouns." — Luther.

"Each man stands before God and lifts up a different humanity to the common Father; and for each God has a different response." — George Macdonald.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-NINTH.

1—5. (1) palace, Heb. birah, only found in later Heb., and prob. word of Persian origin.[c] (2) onyx, Ge. ii. 12. glistering stones, R. V., "stones for inlaid work."[d] 2 Ki. ix. 30. marble, or white stones, perhaps alabaster. LXX. and Vulg. have marble. (3) proper good, or private property. (4) overlay, as with plating. (5) consecrate, lit. fill His hand: "or come with full hands to Jehovah." It is an appeal for voluntary offerings. his service, R. V., "himself."

A call to early devotedness (vs. 5). — I. We shall explain what we regard as the consecration of service to God. 1. There must be correct views of the Divine character and claims; 2. A practical obedience to the will of God; 3. Active exertion to promote the Divine glory. II. We shall present the considerations which ought to urge to an engagement in the service of God. 1. We are placed under universal and imperative obligation to do so; 2. The c Est. i. 2, 5; ii. 3, 8; Ne. i. 1; ii. 8; vii. 2; Da. viii. 2.

David exhorts Israel to aid in building the temple

d "Here they seem to signify stones of a dark brilliant color, like the stibium prepared from it, and perhaps used for making cement." — Wordsworth.

B. C. cir. 977.

"There is a quiet repose and steadiness about the happiness of age, if the life has been well spent. Its feebleness is not painful. The nervous system has lost its acuteness. Even in mature years we feel that a burn, a scald, a cut, is more tolerable than it was in the sensitive period of youth." — Hazlitt.

"To worship rightly is to love each other, each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer."— Whittier.

influence His service has in preventing the degradation and promoting the dignity of our nature; 3. The true and solid pleasure His service communicates to the soul; 4. The glorious recompense by which the engagements of His service are consummated. III. We shall impress the question by which, to an engagement in the service of God, you are emphatically challenged. — J. Parsons.

Consecration (vs. 5). — An affecting incident was related by Rev. Dr. Nevin, to show the spirit of consecration which the church of Christ must have if she would extend her triumphs over the world. Two plain, poor people lived within the bounds of the church of which he was pastor. Their son presented himself and was received as member of the church. He attended Lafayette College, and finished his course in Princeton. He devoted himself to the missionary work in Africa. In fulfilling one of his engagements to preach, the vessel in which he sailed capsized, and he was drowned. In the meantime the father had died, and the sad intelligence came with crushing weight on the heart of that old mother. She submitted, however, cheerfully to the Lord's dealings, with the remark, "My son is nearer to me now, in heaven, than he was in Africa." She was poor, but had always managed, by the sale of her thread and other little articles of her manufacture, to lay by fifty dollars a year for the aid of her son in his good work. When the news came that he needed her aid no longer, she said with tears, "Now my dear son is gone, my fifty dollars shall go to some other servant of Jesus Christ." How long would it take to convert the world, if every Christian had the same spirit of self-consecration as that poor mother?

the people offered willingly

6—9. (6) willingly,[a] cheerfully responding to Dav.'s invitation. (7) drams, R. V., "darics,"[b] a Persian coin, mentioned elsewhere only in Ezra and Nehemiah; value about $5.40. Heb. adarconim, comp. Ezr. viii. 27. (8) they, etc., comp. Ex. xxxv. 27. by the hand, R. V., "under the hand." Jehiel, 1 Chr. xxvi. 21. (9) rejoiced, at such readiness of giving, and in anticipation of the splendid temple.

Generosity and joy.—There was true unity between king and subjects. It was a national movement in which they joined, and it was a national emotion which they shared. I. The cause to which they gave. It was their own cause, but in a higher sense it was the Lord's. It was for the glory of Jehovah and for the spread of His worship and obedience that the temple was to be reared; a cause this which justified all their enthusiasm and all their liberality. II. What they gave. They offered of their own substance, and according to their several ability; and their gifts were appropriate, costly and generous. III. How they gave. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver;" and such givers Israel furnished on this occasion in great abundance. They gave willingly, and not simply in conformity to their sovereign's example. They gave with a perfect heart; i. e. from disinterested, devout, and pious motives. IV. The consequence of their giving. "They rejoiced." A simple but very expressive account of the feelings of both monarch and subjects. They felt by anticipation the truth of our Lord's saying, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The selfish and niggardly are ever the miserable; the sympathetic, liberal, and self-denying are ever the happy and lightsome of heart.— Thomson.

Self-denial (vs. 6).— The following incident was recorded some years since in the New York Observer:—A clergyman from one of the Western States visited the town of H——, New Hampshire. On the Sabbath he represented to the congregation the wants of a feeble church, in the place where he resided, who were then struggling to build a house of worship. A son of the clergyman of H——, a lad of twelve, and a Sabbath scholar, listened to the account with deep interest. After worship, he applied to his father for a few cents which he wished to contribute to aid the feeble church. But the father, to his regret, was compelled to deny him, as he had just emptied his own purse for some benevolent object. The next day was the fourth of July. There was to be a splendid celebration near, and the boy had received promise of this as a holiday. In the evening, the father sent him a short distance on an errand. On his way he met with a farmer, to whom he offered his services for a moderate compensation. The farmer, being pressed in business, hired him; and the boy labored faithfully all day, sacrificing the pleasures of his anticipated festivity for one shilling, which he joyfully contributed to aid the above-mentioned church.

[a] Ex. xxv. 2; 2 Cor. ix. 7.

[b] "The daric was a Persian gold coin, common among the Jews while under Persian rule. It usually bore the image of an archer with a tiara, and on the reverse an irregular square. The weight was about 128 grains troy." —Ayer.

"Upon such sacrifices the gods themselves throw incense."— Shakespeare.

"It is the comfort of poverty that our affections are valued, not our presents." — Bp. Hall.

"We can offer much in the large, but to make sacrifices in little things is what we are seldom equal to."— Goethe.

B. C. cir. 977.

David publicly praises God

10—13. (10) blessed . . congregation, an example of the priestly character which kingship exhibited in the person of David. But we never find him offering sacrifices with his own hands as the degenerate kings of later days did. (11) Thine, etc., these signs of wealth around him, Dav. would not permit to take his heart from God. The glory of all was due unto Him.[a] Lockler in Lange translates "Thine is the greatness, and the power and the beauty, and the lustre, and the majesty," etc. This exaltation of the beauty and splendor and glory of God is Davidic, cf. Ps. xcvi. 6; xxix. 2. (12) make great, man does not do it, or win it, of himself, cf. Rev. iv. 11 ; v. 12 ; vii. 12, etc. (13) we thank, speaking not for himself only, but in the name of the people.

The Lord the owner of all things (vs 11). — I. The evidence we have of this in scripture. II. Inquire what is the ground of the Lord's proprietary in all things. He made all — 1. For Himself ; 2. Of nothing; 3. Without help ; and 4. Upholds all. III. The nature and quality of this proprietary. He is — 1. The primary ; 2. Absolute ; 3. Principal ; 4. Total ; 5. Perpetual ; 6. Transcendently ; 7. Sole ruler of all things. — D. Clarkson.

One example. — "Intoxicated with empire, flushed with uncounted victories, the first Napoleon cynically proclaimed to a trembling Europe : 'I have observed that God is always on the side of the strongest battalions.' Was He so ? 'Amid bursts of cheering his Grand Army crossed the Niemen ; he won the awful battle of Borodino ; he took Smolensko ; he dictated a dispatch from the Kremlin at Moscow. Then the soft snows of God — no more — began to fall ; and, annihilated by the most insignificant of the powers of heaven, his Grande Armée was tossed out of Russia.'" — Farrar.

[a] Mat. vi. 13; 1 Ti. i. 17; Rev. v. 13.

"Among all the other virtues, humility, the lowest, is pre-eminent. It is the safest, because it is always at anchor ; and that man may be truly said to live the most content in his calling that strives to live within the compass of it." — Richter.

David prays for Solomon

14—19. (14) who am I, all impressions of the goodness of God humble the receivers of it in the dust. Comp. James i. 17 ; 1 Cor. iv. 7 ; 2 Sa. vii. 18 ; Ps. cxv. 1. (15) strangers,[b] Ps. xxxix. 12. none abiding, lit. no hope : referring to the hope of abiding. Seeing how frail and how transitory our life is it seems strange that God should give us so much. (16) thine own, essentially then, and now by us willingly given to thee. (17) triest the heart, 1 Sa. xvi. 7 ; ch. xxviii. 7 ; He. iv. 12, 13. (18) keep this, this spirit of willing giving for the glory of God and God's house. prepare, lit. establish. (19) perfect, in sense of entire sincerity.

David. — What idea does Chronicles give us of the man and his character ? He is first and foremost a man of earnest piety and deep spiritual feeling. Like the great religious leaders of the chronicler's own time, his piety found its chief expression in ritual. The main business of his life was to provide for the sanctuary and its services ; that is, for the highest fellowship of God and man, according to the ideas then current. But David is no mere formalist ; the psalm of thanksgiving for the return of the ark to Jerusalem is a worthy tribute to the power and faithfulness of Jehovah. His prayer after God had promised to establish his dynasty is instinct with devout confidence and gratitude. But the most gracious and appropriate of these Davidic utterances is his last prayer and thanksgiving for the liberal gifts of the people for the temple. — Expos. Bible.

[b] He. xi. 13; 1 Pe. ii. 11.

"In this I see that we, all we that live, are but vain shadows, unsubstantial dreams." — Sophocles.

"No good man is jealous of his son, but desires to see his children more famous than himself." — Theodoret.

Solomon enthroned king of Israel

20—25. (20) blessed, this was done by bowing down their heads together. worshipped . . king, the same attitude expressed their reverence, and the king was in a sense the representative of God. (21) drink offerings, Nu. xv. 5, 7, 10. (22) second time, for first time see ch. xxiii. 1, compare with 1 Ki. i. 11–53, which records the second anointing. This was a more perfectly representative assembly. Zadok, to supersede Abiathar, who had sided with Adonijah, cf. 1 Ki. i. 7, 8, 32, 38–45 ; ii. 26, 27. (23) Then Sol., etc., i. e. during a small part of his father's lifetime. (24) all the sons, even Adonijah, 1 Ki. i. 53. (25) magnified, 1 Ki. iii. 13.[c]

Giving. — A little boy became the glad possessor of ten pennies, and proceeded to make division of the same after this manner : "One for God, one for mamma, one for papa, one for baby sister, one for me, and five for God." "Why," said one who was watching, "you have given God His before." "Oh," said the boy, "that belonged to Him ; this is a present."

[c] 2 Chr. i. 11, 12 ; Ec. ii. 9.

"What has surprised me most in history is to read of so few kings who have abdicated their thrones — not above a dozen or two at the most." — Sterne.

David dies in a good old age

26—30. (26) Thus, as previously narrated. (27) time, more precisely given, 2 Sa. v. 5. (28) old age, in his seventy-first year, and was buried in the city of David, 1 Ki. ii. 10. There are two chapters in 1. Kings which concern the later scenes in David's life omitted by Chronicles. (29) book of, R. V.,

B. C. cir. 977.

"history of Samuel," etc. A part of the work of the school of the prophets was the writing of theocratic history, and this undoubtedly began with Samuel. The work of this school seems to have been the basis of much of the record of our sacred Scriptures. book of Nathan, of this and book of Gad we have no relics that can be identified. (30) went over him, a singular expression, meaning the affairs with wh. he was concerned; the scenes through wh. he was brought.

Life's changing current (vss. 29, 30). — I. Time makes a deep mark upon the body, the least important portion of our complex nature. II. Equally marked is the effect of "the times" as they pass over us, upon our intellectual nature. III. Not less striking or important is the stamp of time upon the history of our sensibilities. IV. The most important change connected with time is the one that refers to our moral and spiritual state. V. Our social and relative condition is subject to the constant mutations of time. — S. T. Spear.

"There appears to exist a greater desire to live long than to live well! Measure by man's desires, he cannot live long enough; measure by his good deeds, and he has not lived long enough; measure by his evil deeds, and he has lived too long." — Zimmerman.

Life compared to a book. — Man is like a book; his birth is the title-page; his baptism, the epistle dedicatory; his groans and crying, the epistle to the reader; his infancy and childhood, the argument or contents of the whole ensuing treatises; his life and actions are the subject; his sins and errors, the faults escaped; his repentance, the correction. As for the volumes, some are in folio, some in quarto, some in octavo, some much smaller; some are fairer bound, some plainer; some have piety and godliness for their subjects; others (and they too many) are mere romances, pamphlets of wantonness and folly: but in the last page of every one there stands a word, which is Finis; and this is the last word in every book. Such is the life of man: some longer, some shorter; some stronger, some weaker; some fairer, some coarser; some holy, some profane. But death comes in, like finis, at the last, and closes up all; for that is the end of all. — Spencer.

"The true estimate of being is not to be taken from age, but action. A man as he manages himself, may die old at thirty, and a child at fourscore." — Collier.

Honored in death by God and man. — This was the case with King David. "He died in a good old age, full of days, riches, and honor." With the reverent love of a whole nation round him, they bore him to his royal tomb. "David died, according to Josephus, at the age of seventy. The general sentiment which forbade interment within the habitations of men, gave way in his case, as in that of Samuel. He was "buried in the city of David," in the city which he had made his own, and which could only be honored, not polluted, by containing his grave. It was, no doubt, hewn in the rocky side of the hill, and became the centre of the catacomb in which his descendants, the kings of Judah, were interred after him." "The only site which is actually consecrated by traditional sentiment as the tomb of David, is the vault underneath the Mussulman Mosque of David, on the southern side of modern Jerusalem. The vault professes to be built above the cavern, and contains only the cenotaph usual in the tombs of Mussulman saints, with the inscription in Arabic, 'O David, whom God has made vicar, rule mankind in truth.'" Observing how honored in death King David was, and how honored in memory King David is, though his life was so checkered and so seriously marred with wilfulness, indulgence, and sin, we are reminded of the lines often quoted from our greatest national poet —

"Amongst rational beings that life is longest, into which the largest amount of mind, of mental and moral activity, is condensed." — Coird.

> "The evil that men do lives after them;
> The good is oft interred with their bones;"

and we ask — Are these lines, in any large and important sense, true; and must we so invert our fixed notions as to admit that the good in our lives is temporary and fading, while the evil is permanent, and must go on, with its mischievous influences, when we have passed away? We cannot think this. — R. Tuck.

Men's lives should be like the day, more beautiful in the evening; or, like the summer, aglow with promise, and the autumn, rich with the golden sheaves where good works and deeds have ripened on the field.

THE SECOND BOOK OF CHRONICLES.

[71]

Introduction.

See general intro. at begin. of 1st bk. "The most remarkable feature in the historical books of Scripture, and especially of I. and II. Chronicles, is their religious, theocratic character. Secular hist. gives the public changes which nations have undergone, with their causes and results. Church hist. traces the progress of sentiment, and of various influences in relation to the church. But here king, church, state, are all represented as under God. The character of each king is decided by his fidelity to the religious obligations of his office. Of each it is said, He walked in the ways of David his father and so prospered; or of Jeroboam, who made Israel to sin, and so failed. These books are valuable as the history of God, and His law in the nation, and that nation a monarchy; as the books of Joshua and Judges are the history of God and His law in an aristocracy or democracy; or as the earlier books are the history of God and His law in the family. In the Prophets, and in the Acts of the Apostles, we have glimpses of what is to be the history of God and His law in the world. Mark, therefore, the prominence given to the erection of the temple; the numerous references to the ancient law, especially when the two kingdoms were drawing near to their end, as if to account for their decay and approaching fall; the frequent interposition of prophets, now rebuking the people, and now braving the sovereign; the deposition and succession of kings; and the connection everywhere traced between what seem to be mere political incidents and the fidelity or idolatry of the age. The genealogical tables, though to us comparatively uninteresting, were highly important among the Jews, who were made by prophetic promises extremely observant in these particulars. These tables give the sacred line through which the promise was transmitted for nearly 3,500 years; a fact itself unexampled in the history of the human race." — Angus.

Synopsis.

For Synopsis to Second Book see General Synopsis at beginning of first Book.

B. C. cir. 977.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1—6. (1) strengthened, better "strengthened himself." The words suggests th. S. threw all his force of moral energy into his work.[a] (2) captains, etc., 1 Chr. xxvii. 1 ; xxviii. 1. This was an assembly of all Israel by their representatives. judges, 1 Chr. xxiii. 4. The office and the person of the judge were held in high honor among the Jewish people from the first, and perhaps, also, with a noteworthy uniformity, even in the more degenerate periods of their history. Their commencement in patriarchal simplicity can be easily imagined, and receives illustration from such passages as Job xxix. 7, 8, 9 ; xxxii. 9. Their more formal development may be considered to date from the crisis related in Ex. xviii. 14-24. — Pul. Com. chief of the fathers, R. V., "heads of the fathers' houses."[b] (3) high place, "the multiplied heights of the country were so many natural altars."[c] Gibeon, the tabernacle was removed from Shiloh, in consequence of the inroads of the Philistines, to Nob (1 Sa. xxi. 1); and thence, after the destruction of Nob by Saul (1 Sa. xxii. 9) to Gibeon. This high place was consecrated to the worship of the true God. — Murphy. tabernacle, Ex. xxvi.[d] (4) the ark, 2 Sa. vi. 17. (5) brasen altar, Ex. xxvii. 1-8.[e] he put, R. V., "was there." Though the ark was at Kirjath-jearim the brazen altar was with the tabernacle at Gibeon, hence this was the right place for sacrifice. (6) burnt offerings, wh. required by law to be presented on this brazen altar. The king was also in some measure a priest (cf. 2 Sa. vi. 18) ; bu there is no evidence that he ever offered sacrifice with his own hands.

God and the king (vs. 1). — I. God is often against the kings of the earth. This is seen in the disasters which He brings on their armies, etc., and may be illustrated by the histories of many kings mentioned in the Bible. II. God is with some kings for the punishment of others. The wicked are the sword of God. III. God was with Solomon for the good of Israel : with him in answer to prayer. IV. God was not with Solomon unconditionally.

The heritage he had from his father. — It was much to him that he was "Solomon, the son of David." He was known to be the favorite son and chosen heir of his illustrious father. All the strong attachment which the people felt for the late (or the dying) sovereign went to establish his son upon the throne. Solomon succeeded to the gathering and deepening affection which his father David had been winning to himself through a long and prosperous reign. All the influence which an honored and beloved leader can convey to his successor was communicated to him. — Pul. Com.

Solomon's offering on Gibeon a For Sol.'s early difficulties, see 1 Kings i., ii.

b "The Jewish system was still so far patriarchal that the heads of families continued to have a recognized status, if they had no longer any special civil function."— Spk. Com.

c "The national worship down to the time of Hezekiah may almost be said to have been a religion of high places."— Stanley.

d Comp. 1 Chr. xvi. 39; xxi. 29; 1 Ki. iii, 4.

e Ex. xxxi. 2, 9; xxxviii. 1.

"A weak mind sinks under prosperity as well as under adversity. A strong and deep one has two highest tides — when the moon is at the full and when there is no moon." —Hare.

7—12. (7) In that night, etc., comp. 1 Ki. iii. 5–15 ; fr. this it appears that God communicated with Sol. thro' his dream. (8) me to reign, the first case of a son succeeding his father. (9) thy promise, this is not mentioned in the parallel passage, 1 Ki. iii. 6 ; cf. 1 Chr. xvii. 12–14 ; xxii. 9, 10 ; xxviii. 6, 7. like the dust, the numbers of the people brought the sense of responsibility to the young king. (10) wisdom and knowledge, comp. 1 Ki. iii. 7–9, where the humility of the prayer is more evident.[f] (11) long life, for thyself,[g] "He reigned forty years, but died at the age of sixty, and did not attain the age of his father."— Farrar. (12) give thee riches, etc., in addition, and as the natural result of such practical wisdom to rule and judge.[h]

The prayer for wisdom. — I. Come and see a youth who at a critical moment is found in prayer. II. Come and see a king's son who prays exclusively for wisdom. III. Come and see a humble one who prays not in vain. IV. Come and see here a favored one, who receives much more than he asks for. V. Come and see an unhappy one who by his own fault has forfeited the blessing of his prayer.— Van Oosterzee.

Who are the wise? —

Who are the wise?
They who have govern'd with a self-control
Each wild and baneful passion of the soul ;
Curb'd the strong impulse of all fierce desires,
But kept alive affection's purer fires ;
They who have pass'd the labyrinth of life,
Without one hour of weakness or of strife ;
Prepared each change of fortune to endure,

Solomon prays for wisdom

f "The ideal answer of such a prince, burdened with the responsibility of his position. He showed his wisdom by asking for wisdom."— Stanley.

g This was only given conditionally. 1 Ki. iii. 14.

h Eccles. ii. 9.

"God delights to hear and answer those prayers that are for His best blessings. When Solomon prayed for wisdom to rule his people, God was so pleased that He gave him wisdom in an eminent degree, and as an accession, riches and honor." — Bates.

B. C. cir. 977.

Humble though rich, and dignified though poor;
Skill'd in the latent movements of the heart,
Learn'd in the lore which nature can impart,
Teaching that sweet philosophy aloud
Which sees the "silver lining" of the cloud,
Looking for good in all beneath the skies—
These are the truly wise! — Prince.

Solomon's riches

13—17. (13) came, i. e. "from before the tabernacle on the height in Gibeon, Solomon came to Jerusalem," where, according to 1 Ki. iii. 15, he offered fresh burnt-offerings and thank-offerings in gratitude for the answer to his prayer. over Israel, the Syriac has "over all Israel," as in 1 Ki. iv. 1. (14) Solomon, etc.,[a] multiplying horses was forbidden to Israelite kings, cf. Deut. xvii. 16; note that the horse was used exclusively for war and not for agriculture. chariot cities, depots, or stables, erected at the frontiers of his kingdom, partly for the trade in chariots and horses which he carried on. (15) cedar trees, valued for their scent, and bec. their transit made them expensive. (16) linen yarn, R. V., "and the horses which Solomon had were brought out of Egypt; the king's merchants received them in droves, each drove at a price." The A. V. is certainly wrong, but the Hebrew text is probably imperfect. (17) kings . . Syria, i. e. Solomon carried on trade between Egypt on the south and Syria and Phœnicia on the north of Palestine.

a Comp. 1 Ki. x. 26-29.

"Without a rich heart wealth is an an ugly beggar." — Emerson.

Influence of commerce. — Commerce tends to wear off those prejudices which maintain distinction and animosity between nations. It softens and polishes the manners of men; it unites them by one of the strongest of all ties; the desire of supplying their mutual wants. It disposes them to peace by establishing in every state an order of citizens bound by their interest to be the guardians of public tranquillity. As soon as the commercial spirit acquires vigor, and begins to gain an ascendant in any society, we discern a new genius in its policy, its alliances, its wars, and its negotiations. — Robertson.

"Many are not able to suffer and endure prosperity; it is like the light of the sun to a weak eye — glorious indeed in itself, but not proportioned to such an instrument." — Jeremy Taylor.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

B. C. cir. 974.

preparations for building the temple

1—6. (1) determined, better commanded.[b] for the name of the Lord, cf. "hallowed be Thy name," the name stood for God himself and was a revelation of Him. house for his kingdom, prob. referring to his own palace,[c] (2) The presence of this verse here may probably mark some error of copyists, as the first two words of it are the proper first two words of vs. 17, and the remainder of it shows the proper contents of vs. 18, which are not only in other aspects apparently in the right place there, but also by analogy of the parallel (1 Ki. v. 15, 16).—Pul. Com. (3) Huram, or Hiram, seems to be a later form of the word. As . . father, 1 Chr. xiv. 1; 2 Sa. v. 11. (4) burn, etc., Ex. xxx, 7, 34-36. continual shewbread, Ex. xxv. 30; Nu. iv. 7. new moons, Nu. xxviii. 11-15. solemn feasts, the three great annual feasts. (5) for great is our God, i. e. the temple is in its grandeur and beauty to represent the Hebrew idea of their God. (6) But who, etc., "this pious strain of sentiment well became the king of Israel."

b 1 Ki. v. 5.

c 2 Chr. vii. 11; viii. 1; 1 Ki. vii. 1-12.

"Monarch, thou wishest to cover thyself with glory, be the first to submit to the laws of thy empire." — Bias.

"There is a fitness in all things. God will meet us under the plainest roof, if it is all we can supply; He will make it beautiful; but if we say, "Any place will do for God," you may make the appointment, but He will not be there."—J. Parker.

"All things being in order; so shall they end, and so shall they begin again; according to the Ordainer of order, and mystical mathematics of the city of heaven." — Sir. Thomas Browne.

Temple building. — In opening the business Solomon grounded his request for Tyrian aid on two reasons: 1. The temple he proposed to build must be a solid and permanent building, because the worship was to be continued in perpetuity, and therefore the building materials required to be of the most durable quality. 2. It must be a magnificent structure, because it was to be dedicated to the God who was greater than all gods; and, therefore, as it might seem a presumptuous idea to erect an edifice for a Being "whom the heaven and the heaven of heavens do not contain," it was explained that Solomon's object was not to build a house for Him to dwell in, but a temple in which His worshippers might offer sacrifices to His honor. No language could be more humble and appropriate than this. The pious strain of sentiment was such as became a king of Israel. — Jamieson.

The temple of Solomon was, according to our notions of size, a small building. It was less than one hundred and twenty feet long, and less than thirty-five feet broad; in other words, it was not so large as one of the ordinary parish churches of our own land; much less did it approach to the size of the colossal buildings in Babylon or Egypt. But in Jewish eyes, at the time that it was built, it may have been "great," that is to say, it may have exceeded the dimensions of any single separate building existing in Palestine up to the time of its erection. It may even have exceeded the size of the buildings which the neighboring nations had erected to their gods. Ancient worship was mainly in the open air; and temples were viewed as shrines for the Deity and his priests, not as buildings in what worshippers were to congregate. Hence their comparatively small size. — The Speaker's Com.

B. C. cir. 974.

"Doubtless the example set by rulers insinuated itself into the common herd." — Claudianus.

7—10. (7) a man cunning, etc., 1 Ki. vii. 13, 14. (8) algum, or almug, most prob. sandal-wood fr. China and the Indian Archipelago.[a] (9) wonderful great, lit. great and wonderful. (10) beaten wheat, lit. wheat of strokes, comp. 1 Ki. v. 11. "There is no discrepancy between the statement of the Chronicles of what Solomon promised to give to the people of Hiram, and the statement in Kings of what Hiram asked for the maintenance of his court. The two passages treat of different things." — Keil.

the message of Huram

Every man a king. — When the man comes from Tyre he will be as much a king as Solomon; not nominally, but in the cunning of his fingers, in the penetration of his eye, in his knowledge of brass and iron, and purple and crimson and blue, and in his skill to grave things of beauty on facets of hardness. Every man has his own kingship. Every man has something that no other man has. A recognition of this fact, and a proper use of all its suggestions, would create for us a democracy hard to distinguish from a theocracy, for each man would say to his brother, "What hast thou that thou hast not received?" and each man would say for himself, "By the grace of God I am what I am." — People's Bible.

[a] "Gesenius suggests that this timber was exported fr. Tyre, after having been brought thither from the East." — Smith's Bib. Dict.

"Wheat stripped of the husk, boiled, and saturated with butter, forms a frequent meal with the laboring people of the East." — Jamieson.

11—16. (11) in writing, Sol.'s message had prob. been conveyed by an ambassador. (12) the Lord God of Israel. Huram has no scruple about acknowledging the God of Israel as the Self-existent, that made heaven and earth. There was a community of speech between the two sovereigns, and Huram may have accepted the primitive Hebrew term as applicable to the one God. whom he worshipped simply under another title.[b] — Murphy. (14) man of Tyre,[c] poss. a second husband of the woman. (15) wheat, etc., vs. 10. (16) in flotes, from the sea-shore near Lebanon "huge rafts of the costly timber were floated to Joppa, a hundred miles, and then with infinite toil were dragged about 35 miles up the steep and rocky roads to Jerusalem." — Farrar.

Huram's reply

A God-sent king (vs. 11) — I. A good king is a great blessing for a people. II. A good king is a Divine gift. III. A good king thus sent is a proof of God's regard for the people. IV. This teaches, by inference, that kings should regard themselves as reigning for the people's good, and not for private ends.

Mutual dependence. — Wondrous is this thought, that no one land is absolutely complete in itself: we still need the sea; we cannot get rid of ships, — "we will cut wood out of Lebanon, as much as thou shalt need: and we will bring it to thee in flotes by sea to Joppa; and thou shalt carry it up to Jerusalem." We are not permitted to enjoy the narrow parochial comfort of doing everything for ourselves. — Parker.

[b] "In the Persian inscriptions Ormazd is constantly called the 'great God, who gave' (or made) 'heaven and earth.'" — Spk. Com.

[c] 1 Ki. vii. 13, 14.

"Even a heathen could trace great blessings to God's love; what heathen those are who do not speak of the Lord's goodness, but talk of 'chance' and 'good luck.'" — Spurgeon.

17—18. (17) strangers, descendants of the Canaanites who had not been expelled at the invasion. David, 1 Chr. xxii. 2. (18) bearers of burdens, cf. Ju. i. 28, 30; "thus was formed in the Hebrew state a sort of helot-class, bound to compulsory labor and employed on public works." It was slavery, but in a milder form than among any other of the neighboring nations. — cf. Oehler. set . . work, no work is done in the East without overseers, who, doing nothing themselves, see that other people are diligent. In this case there was one overseer and about forty men.

the census of the strangers

Legend of industry. — Some centuries ago, a man resident in Egypt became a convert to the Christian faith. The spirit of the times favored asceticism: and he, being of a contemplative mind, conceived the unnatural idea that if he could retire from society and spend his time in contemplation he should attain to the perfection of human happiness on earth. Filled with this thought he bade adieu to the abodes of men, wandered far into the desert, selected a cave near which flowed a spring, for his home, and, subsisting on the scanty crops of roots and herbs which sprang up spontaneously in the adjacent glens and valleys, began his life of meditation and prayer. He had not spent many seasons in his hermitage before his heart grew miserable beyond endurance. The long and weary hours of the day, and the dreary, interminable nights, oppressed and crushed his listless soul. In the extremity of his wretchedness, he fell upon his face, and cried, "Father, call home Thy child! Let me die! I am weary of life." Thus stricken with grief, he fell asleep; and in his vision an angel stood before him, and spake, saying, "Cut down the palm tree that grows by yon spring, and of its fibres construct a rope." The vision passed away; and the hermit awoke with a resolution to fulfil his mission. But he had no axe, and therefore journeyed far to procure one. On his return he felled the tree, and diligently labored till its fibres lay at his feet, formed into a coil of rope. Again the angel stood before him, and said, "Dominic, you are now no longer weary of life, but you are happy. Know, then, that man was made for labor, and that prayer also is his duty. Both are essential to his happiness. Go, therefore, into the world, with the rope girded upon thy loins. Let it be a memorial to thee of what God expects from man." — Wise.

The manufacture of silk was established in Spitalfields by emigrants from France, after the revocation of the edict of Nantes.

"The administration of government, like a guardianship, ought to be directed to the good of those who confer, and not to those who receive the trust." — Cicero.

B. C. 974.

"If you ask me which is the real hereditary sin of human nature, do you imagine I shall answer, pride, or luxury, or ambition, or egotism? No; I shall say indolence. Who conquers indolence will conquer all the rest. Indeed, all good principles must stagnate without mental activity." — Zimmerman.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

the building of the temple

1—5. (1) mount Moriah, this is probably not the place mentioned in Gen. xxii. 2. Stanley (Sinai and Palestine) translates "in the mount of the appearance of the Lord where He appeared unto David his father." had prepared, R. V., "which he made ready in the place that David had appointed." 1 Chr. xvii. 1–5. Ornan, called also Araunah.[a] (2) second, word day is not in the original, and prob. the word second should be omitted.[b] (3) instructed, R. V., "Now these are the foundations which Solomon laid for the building," etc. first measure, according the ancient Mosaic standard.[c] The proportions of the tabernacle were followed but the dimensions doubled. (4) height,[d] etc. "This is a textual error and a height of thirty cubits is now generally accepted." — Oehler. (5) greater house, the holy place.[e] set thereon, R. V., "wrought thereon." Cf. Jno. xii. 13 and Re. vii. 9. The palm was a symbol of joy and victory, and the "chains" were probably garlands of flowers to represent beauty.

a 2 Sa. xxiv. 18; 1 Chr. xxi. 18.

b It is omitted in the Sept., Syr., Arab. and Vulg versions.

c The Jews carried the Babylonian measures back with them on returning to their own land.

d Spk. Com. proposes to read 20 for 120: Wordsworth thinks the height as given here should be retained.

e Comp. 1 Ki. vi. 15-18.

The hour of beginning. — It may well be one of: 1. Joyful eagerness; for there is something very inspiring in the act of commencing a truly noble work — it exhilarates and animates the soul. It should also be one of; 2. Special prayerfulness; for then we urgently need the guiding and guarding hand of our God to be upon us. 3. Steadfast purpose; for there will be unanticipated difficulties and disheartening delays, possibly much temporary disappointment and partial failure, and a strong, resolute purpose will be needed to carry us through to the end. 4. Unselfish devotedness. We must ever keep in mind that the "house" we are erecting, of whatever kind it be, is the house "of the Lord." If we fail to realize that it is for Christ that we are working, our labor will lose its excellency, its inspiration, and its reward. — Clarkson.

"They who are not made saints in a state of grace shall never be saints in glory. The stones which are appointed for that glorious temple above are hewn and polished and prepared for it here, as the stones were wrought and prepared in the mountains for the building of the temple at Jerusalem." — Leighton.

The poetry of art. — It is a shallow criticism that would define poetry as confined to literary productions in rhyme and metre. The written poem is only poetry talking, and the statue, the picture, and the musical composition, are poetry acting. Milton and Goethe, at their desks, were not more truly poets than Phidias with his chisel, Raphael at his easel, or deaf Beethoven bending over his piano, inventing and producing strains which he himself could never hope to hear. The love of the ideal, the clinging to and striving after first principles of beauty, is ever the characteristic of the poet, and whether he speak his truth to the world through the medium of the pen, the perfect statue, or the lofty strain, he is still the sharer in the same high nature. Next to blind Milton describing Paradise, that same Beethoven composing symphonies and oratorios is one of the finest things we know. Milton saw not, and Beethoven heard not; but the sense of beauty was upon them, and they fain must speak. Arts may be learned by application — proportions and attitudes may be studied and repeated — mathematical principles may be, and have been, comprehended and adopted; but yet there has not been hewn from the marble a second Apollo, and no measuring by compasses will ever give the secret of its power. The ideal dwelt in the sculptor's mind and his hands fashioned a statue which yet teaches it to the world. — Ruskin.

"It is better to have nothing to do, than to be doing nothing." — Attilus.

the ornaments of the temple

6—10. (6) precious stones, either marbles,[f] or gems.[g] Parvaim, not certainly identified: prob. a district of Arabia. (7) posts, R. V., thresholds.

f Vulgate.

g Bertheau. See 1 Chr. xxix. 2.

with gold, i. e. gold plating. 1 Ki. vi. 29, 30. (8) most holy house, also called the oracle: a dark inner chamber.[a] Cf. dimensions with Re. xxi. 16. six hundred talents, comp. 1 Ki. x. 14. Equal perhaps to 15 million dollars, a gold talent amounting to $26,000. — Schaff-Herzog. (9) nails, wh. fastened the gold plating. upper chambers,[b] probably over the holy of holies, which was only 20 cubits high, or perhaps the holy place was only 20 cubits high and these were over it, making the 30 cubits of 1 Ki. vi. 2.— Oehler. (10) two cherubims, large figures standing on each side of the ark.[c] image work, tsaatuim, a word only found here. Prob. of Arabic origin, and meaning carved work. — Gesenius.

The surpassing beauty of the temple (vs. 6). — Observe — I. That God did not need this lavish expenditure of gold and gems and rich ornament. They were all perishable things. II. Yet Divine condescension accepted this offering of human gratitude. III. The beauty and costliness of the temple not without their uses. The temple so adorned served to impress the mind of surrounding nations with the feelings of the people of Israel toward their great God. IV. The adornment of the temple a rebuke of the utilitarian views of those who are advocates of a Judas-like economy, and who regard as waste all that is given to God beyond the bare necessities of the case.

The temple. — Of all monuments of the internal administration of Solomon none is to be compared in itself or in its effect on the future character of the people with the building of the temple. It was far more than a mere architectural display. It supplied the framework of the history of the kingdom of Judah. There is hardly any reign which is not in some way connected with its construction or its changes.—Stanley.

B. C. cir. 974.

a 1 Ki. vi. 20.

b "Three suggestions have been made: — 1. They were chambers built over the holy of holies. 2. They were built as the second story of the porch. 3. The upper range of the sets of side chambers is referred to."

c 1 Ki. vi. 23-28.

"A statesman, we are told, should follow public opinion. Doubtless, as a coachman follows his horses having hold on the reins and guiding them."—Hare.

11—17. (11) wings, etc., 1 Ki. vi. 24–27. (12) reaching to the wall, so the the wings stretched across from wall to wall, and met over the ark. (13) inward,[d] R. V., towards the house: (14) the vail, separating the holy of holies fr. holy place.[e] From 1 Ki. vi. 31 it appears that between the holy and the most holy place there was a partition wall, in which was a folding door. Over this was stretched the vail.—Murphy. (15) before the house, either standing separate, or supporting the porch: prob. the former. The heights given differ fr. those in 1 Ki. vii. 15.[f] (16) chains, R. V., "chains in the oracle," chaplets or festoons. pomegranates, 1 Ki. vii. 15–20. (17) Jachin, he who establishes. Boaz, in Him is strength. "The meaning of the pillars evidently is that God has here established His temple on a firm foundation, and it is to be no longer a traveling sanctuary."[g]

the cherubim and the pillars

d Comp. Ex. xxxvii. 9.

e Comp. vail of tabernacle, Ex. xxvi. 31.

f "Poss. a corruption of the number in the present passage in consequence of the resemblance bet. the Heb. signs for 18 and 35." — Spk. Com.

g "Poss. these are proper names, and may belong to supposed younger sons of Solomon." —Ewald.

The mission of art. — You need not go to old Rome and Athens to find the beautiful. When democratic beauty once is opened up, you will have an idea of beauty that will turn to shame aristocratic, monarchic, and monocratic beauty. A true, Christian, democratic beauty has more elements, more complexity, and more power, and when it has been developed, it will be more glorious, than any that has ever existed. Why, in the palmy days of Athens, when her magnificent temples were in their glory, when her statues were abundant — that are the admiration and despair of the world — and when her walls were painted so that Nature found itself reflected more beautiful in art than in herself, what was the condition of her streets? They were so filthy that people could not walk in them! The common people lived in huts that were no better than our pigsties! No man except the king and the priest was rich enough in those days to have a picture in his house. Art belonged to the king — that is, the government, and to the priest — that is, the church. It was the privilege of these two sections of society. The great mass of men knew nothing of it. It was to them something like the stars that they might worship, but that did not belong to them. We go back to the time when Rome was in her glory, and look with envy upon the development of art then. But what was then the condition of art? It had been widened, it had been purified, and it had grander ideas and conceptions; but, so far as mankind were concerned, it was in the hands of the rich and of the ecclesiastical orders mainly. It did a great deal of good, and its usefulness was felt in a broad sphere; but that was not its broadest sphere. Still traveling downward, art is on a mission for the great common people. It is to educate them. It is to elevate them. It is to refine them. It is to do its work now, no longer for the palace, no longer for the temple, but for that which has something of both the palace and the temple in it — for the family. Art is aiming at the household; and when it shall have done its work there, it will be with such

"One of the most important, but one of the most difficult things to a powerful mind, is to be its own master; a pond may lie quiet in a plain, but a lake wants mountains to compass and hold it." —Addison.

There is in all men a provoking love of quiet comfort; they are like dogs, who will let themselves be fondled for ever so long before they get up. Once moved, however, it is just as difficult to keep quiet.

B. C. 974-954.

resplendent and wondrous fruits as shall make all the past as nothing in the comparison. We are just on the eve of this great development. The wealth of the world is increasing, so that men are beginning to be able to make their houses richer than Grecian temples used to be. — Beecher.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

the altar, molten sea, etc.

1—8. (1) made, it is uncertain whether this was wholly new, or the brazen altar from the tabernacle enlarged or recast.[a] ten cubits the height, wh. necessitated either steps or an inclined plane. (3) oxen, (twice in this vs.) the true reading appears to be knobs, colocynths, or flower-buds, as in 1 Ki. vii. 24. The word oxen seems to have come in by mistake from the next verse. — Murphy. (5) with flowers of lilies, shaped like the flower of a lily. bath, 4½ gals. each. three thousand, should be two thousand as in Kings. — Murphy. (6) lavers, for washing utensils; the sea being for the bathing of the priests. (7) according . . form, R. V., "according to the ordinance concerning them." Ex. xxv. 31. (8) ten tables, instead of the one in the tabernacle. Prob. in temple shewbread was placed only on one.

The coming kingdom. — I do not see the cathedral as yet, when I go into the confused quarry-yard and see there the half-wrought stones, the clumsy blocks, that are by and by to be decorated capitals. But when at last they are finished in form and brought together, the mighty building rises in the air, an ever-enduring psalm in rock. I do not see the picture yet, when I look upon the palette with its blotches and stains and lumps of color. By and by, when the skilful brush of the painter has distributed those colors, I see the radiant beauty of the Madonna, the pathos of the Magdalene; I see the beauty of the landscape spread out upon the canvas, with meadow, and hill, and winding stream, and the splendors of the sunset crowning the whole. I do not see yet the perfect kingdom of God upon earth, but I see the colors which are to blend in it. I see the already half-chiseled rock out of which it shall be wrought; and I am not going to despond now, when so much already has been accomplished. — R. S. Storrs.

[a] "The thickness of the metal used for this altar is nowhere given; but supposing it to have been 3 inches, the whole weight of the metal would not be under 200 tons." — Napier.

"Which is the best government? That which teaches self-government." —Goethe.

the courts, utensils, etc.

9—18. (9) court, etc., 1 Ki. vi. 36. great court, for the congregation. (10) R. V., "He set the sea on the right side of the house eastward, toward the south." sea, the great brazen sea. (11) pots, etc.,[b] various articles necessary for the sacrifices. (12) pommels, R. V., "bowls" and "net-work," in each case where A. V. has "pommels," and "wreaths." chapiters, the upper part, or capital of a column. (13) pomegranates, "palms, lilies and pomegranates are chosen for decorations as the most beautiful of the natural productions of Palestine," — Oehler. 1 Ki. vii. 20. (14) bases, ornamental stands for the lavers. (15) sea, vs. 2. Twelve, being always in worship the mark of the covenant people. (16) instruments, R. V., "vessels." his father, i. e. his master-workman, or chief designer. (17) Succoth, Ge. xxxiii. 17. Zeredathah,[c] 1 Ki. xi. 26. (18) found out, so freely used that they ceased to take the weights of it.

Abundance (vs. 18).— It is not right that we should do our work in Christ's vineyard in a spirit of perfunctoriness, as the workman who will do no more than is imperatively demanded of him. Ours is not a slavery; nor are we hirelings. We are the children of God; we are the friends of Jesus Christ; we are co-workers with Him; His interests are ours also; we long intensely for the coming of His kingdom. We shall not do stintingly or grudgingly what we do for Him. We shall not count the hours, or the days, or the weeks we spend in His service; we shall not measure the powers we employ for His glory. We shall gladly pour forth all our faculties, shall give in "great abundance" of our resources, that His name may be extolled, and that He may be made "very high." — Pul. Com. Finished. — "Hiram finished the work that he was to make" (vs. 11). "The end crowns the work." Well is it for the Christian workman when, having endured all criticisms, having borne all rebuffs, having met and mastered all difficulties, having submitted to all disappointments, having cheerfully wrought all his labors and having struck his last stroke, he can say, "I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do." For him is a generous commendation and a large reward (Matt. xxv. 23). — Clarkson.

[b] "Cooking utensils of various sizes and depths, with their covers, are always made of whitened copper. This mineral is obtained in large quantities, and of the best quality, fr. the mines in Armenia, in the neighborhood of the Euphrates, wh. are worked exclusively by Greeks, and seem to be inexhaustible, though they have doubtless yielded their treasures to man fr. time immemorial." — Van Lennep.

[c] Comp. Jos. iii. 16; Ju. vii. 22; 1 Ki. iv. 12; vii. 46.

"The idle, who are neither wise for this world nor the next, are emphatically fools at large." — Abp. Tillotson.

19—22. (19) vessels, articles of furniture. (20) after the manner,[a] R. V., "according to the ordinance." Comp. vs. 7. (21) flowers, etc., 1 Ki. vii. 49 (22) entry, "appears to be the doorframe, while the doors are the door leaves. These were overlaid with gold." — Murphy. See 1 Ki. vii. 50.

Art and tobacco. — It is not possible for a laboring man to buy an oil painting, but it is possible for him to buy a chromo-lithograph; it is possible for him to buy a lithographic print; it is possible for him to buy engravings. The mode of multiplying copies of fine pictures is becoming so facile and admirable, that it is in the power of a man for a few dollars, to have copies of the master thoughts and works of ages. What would in my boyhood have cost a small fortune, can now be had easily, if a man will substitute pictures for tobacco. If a man, instead of tanning his mouth and smoking his head, would lay out for pictures what he expends for tobacco, it would make all the difference in his dwelling between walls handsomely decorated and pleasant, and walls without decoration, bald and cold. Not that I would infringe upon your liberty of using tobacco. That is a precious liberty which I do not touch. I give you no advice. I merely say that the annual cost of tobacco would more than furnish, every year, a room in your house for your children. If you see more pictures, evanescent, in the indulgence of tobacco, and have more pleasure in them than you would in works of art — that is your liberty. Your children, perhaps, may have a right to say something; your companion, perhaps, may; but I say nothing. — Beecher.

B. C. 974-954.

the golden vessels, etc.

a Ex. xxvii. 20, 21; Le. xxiv. 2, 3.

"Rather do what is nothing to the purpose than be idle, that the devil may find thee doing. The bird that sits is easily shot, when fliers escape the fowler. Idleness is the dead sea that swallows all the virtues, and the self-made sepulchre of a living man." — Quarles.

"To me more dear, congenial to my heart, one native charm, than all the gloss of art." — Goldsmith.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1—5. (1) finished, the building began in the fourth year of Solomon (1 Ki. vi. 1.), was finished in seven years, and fitted up and furnished in thirteen years more (1 Ki. ix. 1, 2). — Murphy. dedicated.[b] the treasures, R. V., "in the treasuries," the side store-chambers. (2) Sol. assembled, 1 Ki. viii. 1. The account in Kings has led some commentators to suppose that this was delayed till all his buildings were finished, in the 24th year of his reign. But "it is the more natural conclusion that the temple was dedicated as soon as finished." — Farrar. chief of the fathers, etc., R. V., "the princes of the father's houses of the children," etc. (3) the feast, of tabernacles, which was the closing festival of the sacred year. (4) Levites . . ark, it was the office of the Levites, and in particular of the Kohathites (Nu. iv. 15), to bear the ark. (5) tabernacle . . congregation, R. V., tent of meeting, appears to mean the tabernacle at Gibeon, which was consecrated to the Lord, and was properly called by this name. We are not informed what was done with the tent of David (2 Sa. vi. 17). — Murphy.

dedicated treasures, the ark, etc.

b 1 Chr. xviii. 11.

"Idleness is the badge of gentry, the bane of body and mind, the nurse of naughtiness, the step-mother of discipline, the chief author of all mischief, one of the seven deadly sins, the cushion upon which the devil chiefly reposes, and a great cause, not only of melancholy, but of many other diseases." — Burton.

A royal executor (vs. 1). — I. An interesting historical incident. It was considered worthy of note by the inspired penman — 1. That David before he died dedicated certain things to God; 2. That Solomon carried out the desires of his father. II. An example worthy of imitation. 1. What more commendable than such conduct in a son; 2. How frequently are the wishes of pious relatives evaded by their worldly-minded heirs; 3. The known wish of the deceased should be as binding as a duly attested will.

Finished. — There are some buildings that are never finished. We never finish our life building; the life temple goes up evermore. Let every man take heed how he buildeth. Do not suppose that you finish your education. In the higher education you only finish that you may begin; you close one book as a pledge of your qualification to open another. There is always a higher aspect of things to apprehend and apply. — Parker.

"In every rank, or great or small, 'tis industry supports us all." — Gay.

6—10. (6) not be told,[c] 1 Ki. viii. 5; these provided materials for the great national feast, as well as for sacrifices. (7) under the wings, those which met in the middle of the room. "The ark passed into the darkness of the oracle and was seen no more till it was carried away by Nebuchadnezzar four centuries afterwards."—Farrar. (8) covered, or shaded. (9) drew out, R. V., "And the staves were so long that the ends of the staves were seen from the ark before the oracle." from the ark, should be "from the holy place."[d] (10) nothing, 1 Ki. viii. 9. Hence we learn that the two tables of the law, which Moses placed in the ark (De. x. 5), were in existence in the time of Solomon. They were now nearly 490 years old. Aaron's rod and the pot of manna and the golden censer had been "lost it may be in the Philistine captivity." — Stanley.

the ark

c "According to an Arabian historian, the Caliph Moktader sacrificed during his pilgrimage to Mecca, in the year of the Hegira 350, 40,000 camels and cows and 50,000 sheep." — Spk. Com.

d 1 Ki. viii. 8.

B. C. cir. 954.

Things that remain (vs. 9). — Among the things that remain unto this day are — I. Sin, and its consequences in the physical and mental and moral world. II. Redemption, and its possible application by the energy of the Holy Ghost. III. Heaven, and all its unimagined glories, as the inheritance of the saints. IV. Hell, and all its woes, as the lot of the finally impenitent. V. The judgment, as the test of character, and final decision of a righteous God.

"It is among the evils, and perhaps not the smallest of democratical governments, that the people must feel before they will see. When this happens they are roused to action Hence it is that those kinds of government are so slow." — Washington.

"Nothing, save." — Another thing that Solomon finished was the furnishing of the ark — "there was nothing in the ark save" — and after that word comes the only thing that could really fill the ark; that is to say, there was nothing in the little chest but everything — "save the two tables which Moses put therein at Horeb, when the Lord made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of Egypt" (vs. 10). "There was nothing save" — that is to say, there was nothing except, and behold the exception is as God himself, for power, righteousness, grace, mercy; for the lid of the chest was the propitiation, the mercy seat, the symbol of the eternal pity. Why not learn this lesson in the development of life? — J. Parker.

Late comers to worship. — A gross abuse of religious decorum sometimes needs harsh medicine as a remedy. We give that adopted by Henry Clay Dean, who was at one time chaplain of Congress. The anecdote is from the Pacific Methodist: "Being worried one afternoon by this turning practice in his congregation, Mr. Dean stopped in his sermon, and said, 'Now, you listen to me, and I'll tell you who the people are as each one of them comes in.' He then went on with his discourse, until a gentleman entered, when he bawled out like an usher, 'Deacon A——, who keeps the shop over the way,' and then went on with his sermon. Presently another man passed up the aisle, and his name, residence, and occupation were given: so he continued for some time. At length some one entered the door who was unknown to Mr. Dean, when he cried out, 'A little old man, with drab coat and an old white hat; don't know him — look for yourselves.' That congregation was cured."

"Arouse thee, youth! — it is no human call—God's Church is league'r'd — haste to man the wall; haste where the red-cross banners wave on high — signal of honored death or victory!" — James Duff.

the singers and musicians

11—14. (11) by course,[a] "It is an ecclesiastical mind is speaking, one deeply impressed with holy things and wishing to impress his readers with the vital importance of maintaining in full vigor the religious ordinances inherited from their fathers." — Bp. Horsey. (12) singers, 1 Chr. xxv. 1–6. In like manner all the twenty-four choirs were combined into one grand choir. white linen, the symbol of purity. cymbals, regulating the time. psalteries and harps, accompanying the song of praise (1 Chr. xv.). The trumpets belonged to the priests (Nu. x. 8), and the sounding of them usually constituted a distinct part of the ceremony.[b] — Murphy. (13) good, Ps. cxxxvi.; this was shouted when notice came that the ark had found rest. cloud, the well-known symbol of the Div. presence: the sign of His taking up His abode in the temple.[c] (14) stand to minister, before the blaze of the glory of God they prostrated themselves.

a 1 Chr. xxiii. 6, 28.

b "The manner of blowing the trumpets was, first, by a long, plain blast, then by one with breakings and quaverings, and then by a long, plain blast again." — Jamieson.

The use of church music (vss. 13, 14). — Every duty which we owe to God is excellent in its season. The duty of praise seems to claim a just preference before all others, because in all others we receive from God; whereas in this we give to God. Consider—I. The manner in which they praised God. II. The subject matter of their praise. III. The token which God gave them of His approbation. — C. Simeon.

c 1 Ki. viii. 10, 11.

Praise to God. — "Plutarch tells us," says Flavel, "that when Titus Flaminius had freed the poor Grecians from the bondage with which they had been long ground by their oppressors, and the herald was to proclaim in their audience the articles of peace he had concluded for them, they so pressed upon him (not half of them being able to hear) that he was in great danger to have lost his life in the press; at last, reading them a second time, when they came to understand distinctly how their case stood, they shouted for joy, crying, "A Saviour! A Saviour!" so that they made the very heavens ring again with their acclamations, and the very birds fell down astonished. And all that night the poor Grecians, with instruments of music and songs of praise, danced and sung about his tent, extolling him as a god that had delivered them. But surely you have more reason to be exalting the author of your salvation, who, at a dearer rate, had freed you from a more dreadful bondage. O ye that have escaped the eternal wrath of God, by the humiliation of the Son of God, extol your great Redeemer, and forever celebrate His praises." — Whitecross. The glory. — Not until the glory fills the Christian

"Nothing promoted the Reformation more, than inviting the common people to sing psalms, and that sometimes there would be six thousand persons at St. Paul's Cross singing together, which was very grievous to the Papists." — Bp. Jewel.

"Those who love music are gentle and honest in their tempers. I always loved music, and would not, for a church, the human heart, and the plans of life, will they become fit for God. Let this be a lesson to all church builders. Your painted windows, and gilded columns, and majestic roofs are nothing until the living Spirit comes into the sanctuary, fills it with an illuminating presence. The house is built for God, and until God comes it is but a structure of calculated matter; when he comes every stone glows and every corner of the house becomes a sacred refuge, and the whole temple becomes as it were a part of heaven.—Parker.

B. C. ctr. 954.

great matter, be without the little skill which I possess in the art."—Luther.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1—6. (1) Then said Sol., 1 Ki. viii. 12-15.[a] thick darkness, this applies to the cloud, and to the darkness of the chamber called the holy of holies, to wh. the cloud symbol had come. (Le. xvi. 2; Ex. xix. 9; xxiv. 16; xxv. 22; xl. 34, 35). This thing which He said, and did, even while instructing a special people, is essentially what He ever has said and is doing in all time, in all the world, and in all nature and providence. It is a fact and it is necessary that His glory be for the present veiled in "clouds of darkness" (Ps. xcvii. 2; xviii. 11).—Pul. Com. (2) of habitation, in which God might abide. But comp. vs. 18. The presence of God is in the whole universe. This is only a special place of revelation. (3) turned his face, fr. looking towards the temple. (4) with his hands, all who had a part in this building were but "hands" of God, 2 Sa. vii. (6) have chosen, now at last.

The habit of public worship.—The question is often asked how shall we get our working classes to attend public worship. The answer may be supplied by an incident of my boyhood. On the mantelshelf of my grandmother's best parlor, among other marvels, was an apple in a phial. It quite filled up the body of the bottle, and my wondering inquiry was, "How could it have been got into its place?" By stealth I climbed a chair to see if the bottom would unscrew, or if there had been a join in the glass throughout the length of the phial. I was satisfied by careful observation that neither of these theories could be supported, and the apple remained to me an enigma and a mystery. But walking in the garden I saw a phial placed on a tree bearing within it a tiny apple, which was growing within the crystal. Now I saw it all; the apple was put into the bottle while it was little, and it grew there. Just so must we catch the little men and women who swarm our streets—we call them boys and girls—and introduce them within the influence of the church, for, alas! it is hard indeed to reach them when they have ripened in carelessness and sin.—Spurgeon.

Solomon blesses the people

[a] "It was at this moment that Sol. himself first took his part in the dedication. Up to this point he had been seated on the brazen scaffold, his eyes fixed on the temple. But now that he heard the announcement that the sign of Div. favor had been perceived, he rose from his place, and broke into a song, or psalm, of which two versions are preserved."—Stanley.

That work which is begun well is half-done;
And without prayer no work is well begun."—Fanshawe.

The law reveals sin, but it cannot subdue it.

7—11. (7) in the heart, 2 Sa. vii. 2; 1 Chr. xxviii. 2, (8) didst well, even good purposes are commended of God. (9) thou shalt not, bec. his reign had been so full of wars. (10) performed his word, Solomon gives the credit of his work to God first, tho. he had been the agent. The moment was a proud moment in Solomon's history; as well there may be proud moments in men's lives, but it was divinely shielded, as divinely inspired.—Pul. Com. (11) have I put, the priests had done it for him.

Answer to prayer.—In a biographical sketch of Miss Fletcher, an earnest Christian worker, the following incident is told. One Sabbath, at forenoon service, Miss Fletcher's eyes and heart were irresistibly drawn towards an old woman who was evidently pinched with care, and bowed under some load of anxiety. She felt that she ought to give that old woman some money and mentally resolved to do so if the opportunity presented itself at the evening service. Arrived at home, she found that her pocket-money consisted of one napoleon, and though loth to part with the whole of it, she felt she could neither break it nor leave it behind, but must take it with her to church. This she did, half hoping the old woman would not be among the worshippers. But there she was, with the mute and unconscious, but irresistible appeal as plainly written on her face as ever. On coming out of church Miss Fletcher somehow found herself beside her, and slipped the gold piece into the astonished old woman's hand, and ran off without waiting for thanks. It afterwards transpired that the poor woman at that very time was in the greatest destitution, and had been rolling her case on the Lord, and had left it with Him in confidence, and this was His answer.—Anec. Illus. of O. T. Wishing and willing.—To wish and to will are very different things. There are a thousand men who wish, where there is one man that wills. Wishing is but

Solomon rehearses his purpose

"The will without the deed is better than the deed without the will. A person who is charitably disposed, for instance, but who lacks pecuniary ability, may confer a greater benefit by means of sincere prayer and good wishes than he could possibly do by merely giving him money; and thus the means of being charitable can never be said, in the strict sense of the word, to be wanting."—Lee.

"Give thy heart's best treasure.
From fair nature learn; give thy love — and ask not, wait not, a return! And the more thou spendest from thy little store, with a double bounty God will give thee more."

B. C. cir. 954.

a faint state of desire. Willing is a state of the reason, and of the affections, and of the will, in activity, to secure what one desires. A man may wish, and yet reject all the steps and instruments by which that wish can be carried into effect. No man wills until he has made up his mind not only to have the end, but to have all the steps intermediately by which that end is to be secured. To will a thing is to will the instruments of it. Wishing and willing are so diverse, that it would seem as though they were hardly related; but they are. It is true that the will is generated sometimes from wishing; but it is as seeds become plants, by a total change. Wishing, in its commoner form, is merely a passive state. It is susceptible of impressions. It is the faint recognition of excellence, but without a purpose or a power of doing, or being, or securing that which is liked.— Beecher.

Solomon's prayer at the dedication

12—16. (12) stood . . altar, eastward of it, with his face to the temple as the spokesman of the people. (13) On a platform about five feet high, he would be visible to the people. His posture in prayer is plainly described.[a] (14) This is the longest prayer in Scripture. no god like thee, Ex. xv. 11. (15) hast kept, vs. 10.[b] (16) The first petition, that God will perpetuate the house of David, as He had promised. 2 Sa. vii. yet so that, R. V., "if only."

God and His people (vs. 14, 15).— In this address Solomon declares the — I. Unexceptional character of God. There is no God like Him. II. In what that unexceptional character of God consists: in keeping covenant and mercy. III. Who those are to whom that character is manifested: those who walk before God with all their hearts. IV. The evidence that God has graciously given of this exceptional relation; His conduct in the past to David, and the fulfilment of His word to his house.

Greatness of God.— If philosophy is to be believed, our world is but an outlying corner of creation; bearing, perhaps, as small a proportion to the great universe as a single grain bears to all the sands of the seashore, or one small quivering leaf to the foliage of a boundless forest. Yet, even within this earth's narrow limits, how vast the work of Providence! How soon is the mind lost in contemplating it! How great that Being whose hand paints every flower, and shapes every leaf; who forms every bud on every tree, and every infant in the darkness of the womb; who feeds each crawling worm with a parent's care, and watches like a mother over the insect that sleeps away the night in the bosom of a flower; who throws open the golden gates of day, and draws around a sleeping world the dusky curtains of the night; who measures out the drops of every shower, the whirling snowflakes, and the sands of man's eventful life; who determines alike the fall of a sparrow and the fate of a kingdom, and so overrules the tide of human fortunes, that, whatever befall him, come joy or sorrow, the believer says, "It is the Lord: let Him do what seemeth Him good!" — Guthrie.

17—20. The second petition. To have respect unto the house in which He had now put His name. (17) thy word (1 Chr. xvii. 9–12). The reference to the house is not explicit in this verse; but it comes out in the following verses. — Murphy. (18) will God, ch. ii. 6.[c] "Solomon had some conception of the condescension and at the same time of the majesty of God. He by no means limits Him to this house." (19) Have respect, etc., comp. 1 Ki. viii. 28–30.

Will God in very deed dwell with men? — I. Reason says, No! 1. The greatness of God forbids it. 2. The sinfulness of man opposes it. II. Revelation answers, Yes! 1. God has already dwelt with man in the past. (1) Symbolically. (2) Historically. 2. God now dwells with man in the present. 3. God will dwell with men visibly and personally in the future. — T. Whitelaw.

The greatness of God. — Will He, indeed, whom the heaven of heavens will not contain, take up His abode with men? What heart among us but glows with gratitude and love at these joyful tidings! Let us, at the head of our several families, in a transport of devout affection, welcome this kind and generous Guest into our houses. Let us give Him the entertainment He demands, even that of cordial love and obedience. Let us present Him the sacrifices He requires, even those of daily prayer and praise. And let us tremble at the thought of so demeaning ourselves in the habitations He has thus honored, as ever to provoke Him to depart thence. — S. Stennett. Solomon's prayer. — He prayed for wisdom at the outset, and he has verified the answer to prayer by the wonderful structure he put up. But the blessing did not end in architectural skill; that great proof of the blessing given to Solomon is to be found

[a] "He stretched forth his hands in the gesture of Oriental prayer, as if to receive the blessings for which he sought, and at the same time exchange the usual standing posture of prayer for the extraordinary one of kneeling, now first mentioned in the sacred history, and only used in Eastern worship at the present day in moments of deep humiliation." — Stanley.

[b] Jos. xxi. 45.

"We see that good designs and intentions are approved and commended by God, though He gives not the opportunity of putting them in execution. On the other hand, good intentions are but hypocrisy without vigorous endeavors." — Orton.

[c] Is. lxvi. 1; Ac. vii. 49; Jno. i. 14; ii. 21.

"Life is a delight, just in the degree that it is consecrated to action. Action and enjoyment are contingent upon each other; when we are unfit for work we are always incapable of pleasure; work is the wooing by which happiness is won." — L. Grindon.

No one knows what sin is fully, but the Saviour, who has borne it in our room.

in the prayer which he prayed at the dedication of the temple. No man could have prayed that prayer without help. This we should have said about it in all honesty if we had found it in Sanscrit; if we had exhumed it out of Indian libraries, it would have been due to the author to have said, "You never dreamed that dream, it was a vision of God." Read the prayer from beginning to end, and say if this be not so, How majestic in conception! how beauteously eloquent in expression! how wise, how tender, how patriotic, how philanthropic! How it grows and swells, and abounds in all elements of spiritual sympathy! Probably there is no such prayer in all literary records. If ever that prayer be excelled it will be by the Son of God alone, and His excelling of it will be by contrast rather than by comparison. — Parker.

B. C. cir. 954.

"God never made His work for man to mend." — Dryden.

21—27. (21) The third petition. To hear in heaven the supplications made in this place. The centre and core of all worship is prayer. This is the great thought of Solomon. He now proceeds to enumerate seven cases of prayer under this head. — Murphy. (22) an oath be laid, Le. v. 1. and the oath, R. V., "and he come and swear before." (23) requiting, returning an equivalent. (24) to the worse, in battle.[a] Ex. xxvi. 15–17. in this house, looking towards it. (25) bring them again, this expression seems anticipative of the times of captivity. (26) shut up, fig. for time of drought.[b] (27) hast taught them, by the affliction, all trouble brought on God's people being corrective and disciplinary.

[a] Illus. Jos. vii. 4, 5.

[b] Illus. 1 Ki. xvii. 1.

Harmony of the natural and moral. — A regular system of agency connects results with the sovereign will of God. An unbroken link between the natural and moral world, between the conduct of men and the conditions of nature. The principle of mediation seen in all departments of God's government. "I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth; and the earth shall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil, and they shall hear Jezreel." Hos. ii. 22. — Hom. Com. The patience of God. — Suppose a man should come into a curious artificer's shop, and there, with one blow, dash in pieces such a piece of art that had cost many years' study and pains in the contriving thereof, how could he bear with it, how would he take on to see the workmanship of his hands so rashly, so willfully destroyed? He could not but take it ill, and be much troubled thereat. Thus it is, that as soon as God had set up and perfected the frame of the world, sin gave a subtile shake to all; it unpinned the frame, and had like to have pulled all in pieces again; nay, had it not been for the promise of Christ, all this goodly frame had been reduced to its primitive nothing again. Man by his sin had pulled down all about his ears, but God in mercy keeps it up; man by sin provokes God, but God in mercy passeth by all affronts whatever. Oh the wonderful mercy! Oh, the omnipotent patience of God! — Spencer.

"Whoever well considers the state of the world, and human experience, cannot but conclude that God is more concerned to make men holy than happy; for many are able to rest in their sorrows, for the sake of their use and end, but no one finds rest in unholy delights. In sinful pleasure God follows man with a scourge; in sorrow, with balm." — J. Pulsford.

28—31. (28) dearth, scarcity, fr. other causes than lack of rain. pestilence, wh. frequently sweeps over Eastern lands. blasting, etc., various forms of peril for growing crops. in the cities of their land, this, to represent correctly the Hebrew, should read, in the land of their gates. Reference probably is being made to the fact that law and justice and judgment were administered in "the gate of the city" (De. xvi. 18; xxi. 19; Josh. xx. 4). — Pul. Com. sore, R. V., "plague." (29) his own sore, much more expressively put in 1 Ki. viii. 38, plague of his own heart. (30) thou only, comp. He. iv. 13, therefore God deals with us in perfect righteousness.[c] (31) fear thee, godly fear is in O. T. presented as the foundation of true piety, and the great end of forgiveness and acceptance. Ps. cxxx. 4. Love takes its place, and includes it, in the N. T.

[c] 1 Chr. xxviii. 9.

The lessons of the pestilence (vss. 28–31).—I. Our text supplies us with a rebuke of mere rationalism. There is a God of Providence behind all natural causes. Men often look after the natural cause, and forget God. II. Our text shows us the spirit and way in which the plague, pestilence, and famine are to be met. Scientific and sanitary measures are not forbidden, but prayer is encouragingly enforced. III. Our text also shows us that calamities that proceed from so-called natural causes should lead to repentance and reconsecration to God.

"Nothing surely can be better adapted to turn man's thoughts off his own self-sufficiency than the works of nature. Wherever he rests his attention, whether on matter organized or unorganized, there he Destructive insects. — The causes of famine, reckoned up here, are want of rain, blasting, mildew, locusts, and caterpillars, according to our translation; with which may be compared the following passage of Chardin, in the second tome of his Travels: "Persia is subject to have its harvest spoiled by hail, by drought, or by insects, either locusts or small insects, which they call sim, which are small white lice, which fix themselves on the foot of the stalk of corn, gnaw it, and make it die. It is rare for a year to be exempt from one or the other of these scourges, which affect the ploughed land and the gardens," etc. The enumeration by Solomon, and that of this modern writer, though not exactly alike, yet so nearly resemble each other that one would be inclined to believe these small insects are what Solomon meant by the word translated caterpillars in our English version. — Harmer.

B. C. cir. 954.

"will discover convincing evidence of his own ignorance; and at the same time the omnipotence of a first great cause will be impressed on his mind, and influence his understanding."-Maund.

32—35. (32) stranger, many such came to reside in the country, for trading purposes, during Sol.'s reign. "The spirit of the Old Testament was catholic. There was always a welcome for any one of all the nations of men who should draw nigh to God. (33) The end of this invitation is broadly stated, that all people of the earth may know Thy name, and fear Thee, as Thy people Israel. The rights and privileges of all the redeemed were to be equal."— Murphy. (34) way . . them, "this is the case of aggressive war undertaken by commission from heaven. If they from afar pray toward this place, let their cause be maintained." (35) cause, or right.

Count Godamar, a foreigner of note, often professed, in the declining part of his years, when death and the eternal world seemed near, "that he feared nothing in the world more than sin; and that whatever liberties he had formerly taken, he would rather now submit to be torn to pieces by wild beasts than knowingly or willingly commit any sin against God."

The stranger in the house of God (vss. 32, 33.) — I. Strangers often visit the house of God, impelled thereto by a variety of circumstances. II. Their visits should be expected, and provision made for their comfort. III. Their coming should be met by a hearty welcome from all the people of God. IV. Prayer should be made that the stranger may hear words whereby he may be saved. V. It is reasonably expected of the stranger that he will return to his land and kindred, and spread the praises of God.

Prayer for strangers. — We need not ask whether such a prayer is inspired. Its humanity is its divinity. Who teaches prayers like this? Who is not limited to his own house, his own nation, his own language? How thrilling when a man, by any means, lifts the prayer to a new level and speaks the universal tongue! How wondrous the miracle when one so far away in the darkness of history effected that one touch of nature which makes the whole world kin! — J. Parker. The influence of worship. — A Thug at Meirut, who had been guilty of many murders, was arrested, and cast, heavily ironed, into prison. There a missionary visited him, and preached Christ to him with such success that he professed conversion. As he was brought before the judge, and confronted by many witnesses, he said, pointing to them, "No need of these; I am ready to avow the crimes of my dreadful life." He then proceeded to declare, that, having been brought up among the Thugs, he fully believed that, by the shedding of the blood of each victim, he had not only pleased the dreadful goddess Kali, but procured her favor for himself. And he recounted murder after murder in which he had been engaged, some of them attended with such cruelty that those present who had begun to feel some pity for him again shrunk back; the judge himself lifting up his hands and exclaiming, "How could you be guilty of enormities like these?" The only reply the poor man made to the judge was to place his hand in the bosom of his linen vest to take forth a little book; then, holding it up in his hand, he said, "Had I but received this book sooner, the book of Jesus, my Saviour and my God, I should not have done it."

"Happy the man who sees a God employed in all the good and ill that chequer life." — Cowper.

"Expressions of the most expansive philanthropy echoed in the anthems of the Jewish temple"

36—42. (36) no man,[a] "the O. T. knows nothing of absolutely righteous persons, Ps. cxliii. 2; Is. xliii. 27; Pro. xx. 9. The Mosaic law attests this by excepting none from the need of atonement."—Oehler. (37) bethink themselves, Heb. bring back to their heart. (38) all their heart, God can only accept a return thus sincere and whole-hearted. (39) from the heavens, comp. vs. 18. It is evident that this thought was not of a God in the temple only, but omnipresent. forgive, that being their great request (40) Now my God, comp. the conclusion of the prayer in the Bk. of Kings. attent, or attentive, ready to listen. (41) resting place,[b] on the native rock under the wings of the cherubim, the symbol of God's presence was placed. (42) turn not away, in shame at unanswered prayers. mercies of David, shown to David.

a Ecc. vii. 20; Jas. iii. 2; 1 Jno. i. 8.

b Comp. Psalm cxxxii. 9.

Sin. — 1. A description of human nature. "No man which sinneth not." 2. A moral difficulty between God and man. "Thou be angry with them." 3. A cause of great trouble in man's experience. 4. A bitter experience in man's history. Sin in the universality of its existence, in the moral consciousness of men, in its prejudicial influence to human interests.— Hom. Com.

"The bravest commanders men of prayer. Prayer a means of divine fellowship and training, imparts strength, courage, and victory in conflict."

"Prayer should ever be upwards, direct to the pres-

Worship.—

Oh, brother man ! fold to thy heart thy brother ;
Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there ;
To worship rightly is to love each other,
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.

Follow with reverent steps the great example
Of Him whose holy work was "doing good ;"
So shall the wide earth seem our Father's temple,
Each loving life a psalm of gratitude.

Then shall all shackles fall ; the stormy clangor
Of wild war-music o'er the earth shall cease ;
Love shall tread out the baleful fire of anger,
And in its ashes plant the tree of peace." — Whittier.

B C. cir. 954.

ence of God. Not to man, not without aim, but straight as an arrow to its centre. Not at random, but with orderly words and definite purpose."— Hom. Com.

"God never leaves any till they first leave Him."

"Immediate are the acts of God, more swift than time or motion." — Milton

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

the sacrifices consumed, the glory of God fills the temple

1—7. (1) the fire, the sign of God's acceptance of Sol.'s sacrifices.[a] As in the case of the tabernacles, the first sacrifices are consumed by fire from God, which fire is never to go out (Le. vi. 13), and from it all other offerings are to be lighted. "Every sacrifice which man makes to God is made perfect only by being taken up into the purifying element of divine life."—Oehler. the glory, as ch. vs. 13, 14. (2) into the house, prob. the first house, wh. as well as the holy of holies was filled with the glory-cloud. (3) bowed themselves, attitude of extreme adoration and reverence.[b] (4) and all the people,[c] they did not offer them on the altar. These sacrifices were peace-offerings, which were dressed and eaten by the priests and the people in sacred communion before the Lord. This accounts for the vast number of them. (6) waited . . offices, "stood in their stations," to receive and kill, etc., the sacrifices. David . . made, 1 Chr. xv. 16. (7) middle of the court, the middle of the court had to be sanctified, because the blood of all the sacrifices had to be poured out and the fat burned, while the burnt-offerings were wholly consumed by fire ; for all which even the large brazen altar was not sufficient.

a Le. ix. 24; Ju. vi. 21 ; xiii. 20 ; 1 Ki. xviii. 38.

b Le. ix. 24.

c Comp. 1 Ki. viii. 62-66.

The house filled with the glory of God (vs. 1). — I. The impressive scene that the text brings before us. II. The things now present, of which those things were a shadow in the past. 1. The fire of the Holy Spirit comes down to consume sin, to apply the word, to convert the soul ; 2. The great sacrifice for sin has been offered once for all ; 3. The glory of the Lord fills the earthly courts of His house this day when sinners are converted — when saints rejoice in Him — when His people show forth the praises of Him who has called them to a new life in that new life of which He is the model and the source.

Sacrifices. — Profusion the usual feature of ancient sacrifices : 300 oxen formed a common sacrifice at Athens. But all sacrifices offered by men to God are inadequate. "Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, nor the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt-offering." "Jehovah being so much greater than man, how can any sacrificial rites be worthy of Him?" — Cheyne. "What real propitiation could be effected, though the whole region of Lebanon were made an altar, its pines and cedars piled up on it for firing, and its thousands of beasts offered as victims? Very different was the offering which was to procure man's redemption."— Kay. That offering which alone prevails before God is the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, a sacrifice of infinite value because He is God. All our offerings, our acts of worship, our self-denial, our good deeds cannot in themselves avail with God. But they are accepted when offered upon "the altar which sanctifieth the gift," the altar of Christ's merits. — Hom. Com.

"With God there is no free man but His servant, though in the galleys; no slave but the sinner, though in a palace ; none noble but the virtuous, if never so basely descended; none rich but he that possesseth God, even in rags; none wise but he that is a fool to himself and the world; none happy but he whom the world pities. Let me be free, noble, rich, wise, happy, to God."— Bp. Hall.

the solemn assemblage and banquet

8—11. (8) feast, R. V., "So Solomon held the feast at that time seven days." The first seven days was the feast of tabernacles, the second seven the feast of the dedication. entering . . Hamath, northern boundary of Palestine.[d] river of Egypt, Jos. xiii. 3, i. e. from the extreme north to the extreme south of the land. (9) solemn assembly, special closing day. (10) three and twentieth, the day following the completion of the double feast.

d Nu. xxxiv. 8 ; Jos. xiii. 5.

B. C. cir. 954.

"What throbbings of deep joy pulsate through all I see; from the full bud whose unctuous sheath is glittering in the moon, up through the system of created things, even to the flaming ranks of seraphim."—Alford.

(11) all . . effected, it is not probable that the dedication of the temple was delayed until the palace of Solomon also was finished. But the chronology of these events cannot be decided. The temple was finished in the 11th yr. of his reign and the palace in the 24th year (1 Ki. vii. 1).

Piety is sure to find its way home.—The people went back to "their tents" with this abounding exultation. They carried it home; they shared it with those with whom they dwel; they communicated it to those who could not derive it from the temple-scenes themselves. This is a simple Christian obligation. All that we have from God we should carry home with us; and particularly those inspirations and exaltations which we gain in His house and from His worship we should impart to our kindred and our friends. We are closely related to one another for the express purpose that we may communicate to one another the best and highest that is within us—our purest thoughts, our worthiest feelings, our highest aspirations, our most sacred joys. —Pul. Com.

God promises the prayer shall be answered

12—18. (12) appeared etc., as at Gibeon.[a] (13) If, etc., the response recalls the chief points of Sol.'s prayer. (14) humble themselves, God can only accept such as thus in heart return to him. (15) attent, ch. vi. 40. (16) and sanctified, by making the symbol of Div. presence rest in it. (17) walk before me, this condition Sol. failed to meet. Though David grievously sinned, he kept his integrity of heart. (18) There shall not, etc., ch. vi. 16.

a 1 Ki. iii. 5; ix. 2.

Biblical anthropomorphism.—Human organs. The eyes and ears of God (vs. 15). This language is used for two purposes. I. To express His cognizance of man. He knows us—1. Directly; 2. Thoroughly. II. To express His interest in man. 1. In the various capacities of enjoyment with which He has endowed us, and the provisions He made for them; 2. In the preservation of our existence, notwithstanding our sinfulness; 3. In our redemption by Jesus Christ. Conclusion:—Thou God seest me, we unite with the blessed fact, "Thou God lovest me."—Homilist.

"In nature, all is managed for the best with perfect frugality and just reserve. profuse to none, but bountiful to all: with exact economy retrenching the superfluous, and adding force to what is principle in everything."—Shaftesbury.

The grandeur of worship.—Which was the greater, the external magnificence or the moral sublimity of the scene? Was it the temple situated on its commanding eminence, with all its courts, the dazzling splendor of its materials, the innumerable multitudes, the priests in their gorgeous attire, the king with all the insignia of royalty on his throne of burnished brass, the music, the radiant cloud filling the temple, the sudden fire flashing upon the altar, the whole nation upon their knees? Was it not rather the religious grandeur of the hymns and of the prayer; the exalted and rational views of the Divine Nature; the union of a whole people in the adoration of the one Great, Incomprehensible, Almighty, Everlasting Creator?—Milman. The Lord appeared.—This vision presents a remarkable contrast with that recorded (1 Ki. vi. 11–13) while the temple was in building. Then all was promise and encouragement; now, not only is warning mingled with promise, but as in Solomon's own prayer, the sadder alternative seems in prophetic anticipation to overpower the brighter. In this there is (as often remarked) a striking exemplification of the austere and lofty candor of the inspired narrative, sternly contradicting that natural hopefulness in the hour of unexampled prosperity, which would have shrunk from even entertaining the idea that the blessings of God on the temple should be frustrated, and the glory of Israel pass away.—Ellicott.

"Nature is the most thrifty thing in the world; she never wastes anything; she undergoes change, but there's no annihilation—the essence remains—matter is eternal.—Binney.

God declares the consequences of apostasy

19—22. (19) serve other gods, this was the greatest sin an Israelite could commit. (20) them up, i. e. the people who follow the lead of such a king. Nations suffer for the unrighteousness of their rulers. Compare modern wars as well as ancient. (21) is high, or shall be high; high now in glory, it shall then be high in shame. astonishment, bec. of its ruin.[b] Why hath the Lord done this? (see De. xxix. 24; Je. xxii. 8, 9) To the "astonishment" prophesied here the parallel adds, "shall hiss"—in a forcible expression found first in ch. xxix. 8, and afterwards in Micah (vi. 16) and in Jeremiah (xviii. 16; xix. 8; xxv. 9, etc.; La. ii. 15, 16).—Pul. Com. (22) all this evil, comp. the wailing of Ezekiel over the desolations that actually overtook the city and temple.

b "The sense is as to this house, wh. was once lofty and admired; even the casual passers by, who once gazed at it in wonder, shall be astonished at its desolation.—Worsdworth.

The solution of a great historical problem (vs 22).—I. The problem is this:—The Jews were anciently the favored people of a God of infinite faithfulness, whose love is an unchanging love, and we find them this day a by-word and a proverb. How is this to be explained? II. The answer is to be found in the events of their history, and especially in their rejection of the Son of God. Therefore hath He brought all this evil upon them.

Retribution. — The late Rev. John Campbell relates the following occurrence, which took place when sailing to London in a Leith trader, many years ago: "I remember once," says he, "about two in the morning, an alarming occurrence taking place by a young gentleman, in his sleep, rushing from his bed to the middle of the cabin, and, pointing to the floor, calling out with a loud voice, 'There's the blood! there's the blood! yes, there's the blood!' on which some of us rose and found he was asleep, and awoke him and got him back to his bed. In the morning, we requested a sprightly young gentleman, whom we observed had got intimate with him after their meeting on board, to see if he could find out the cause of his thus dreaming. In the evening, he told us that the gentleman who had so disturbed us in the night-time was an officer in the army, and on his way to join his regiment in Sicily; that some time ago he had shot a brother officer in a duel, and that ever since he had been disturbed in his sleep in the night-time, and appeared downcast even when perfectly awake. He said it was his custom every night to fasten his leg to the bed-post, or to anything to which he could tie it, to prevent his getting out of bed; 'but I found,' said he, 'nothing of the kind in these ship beds.' What a striking resemblance was the state of this young murderer's mind to that of the first murderer, Cain, who immediately became a coward, afraid to move from his accustomed home, lest every stranger he met should endeavor to slay him!"

B. C. 954.

"When it is intended by a line of rails to conduct a train off the main trunk and turn it aside to another direction, the branch line at first runs almost parallel with the trunk, but when it has thus got fairly off, then it turns more rapidly round, and bounds away at right angles to its proper course. As engineers avoid the physical, so the tempter avoids the moral difficulty; an abrupt turn is not attempted in either case." — W. Arnot.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

Tadmor, etc., are built

1—6. (1) twenty years, date fr. fourth year of Sol.'s reign; add seven years for building temple, and thirteen for building Sol.'s own palace.[a] (2) restored, R. V., "given," comp. 1 Ki. ix. 11-13. (3) Hamath-zobah,[b] 1 Chr. xviii. 3, 9. (4) Tadmor, 1 Ki. ix. 18. Tadmor is Palmyra, the splendid ruins of which remain to this day. (5) built, i. e. repaired or fortified. Beth-horon, at entrance of dangerous and narrow passes. The house of the caves, two villages three miles apart and ten miles N. W. of Jerusalem, where Joshua before and Judas Maccabæus afterward won great victories. (6) Baalath, comp. 1 Ki. ix. 18, 19.[c]

Lessons of prudence. — Why "fenced cities with walls, gates and bars?" Silent witnesses against the honesty of the society in which we live. Every bolt upon the door is a moral accusation; every time we turn the lock we mean that there is an enemy outside who may endeavor to violate the sanctity of the house. — Parker. The danger of prosperity. — Commercial intercourse with foreign nations, the assimilation of the Israelitish monarchy to corresponding institutions of surrounding kingdoms, though indispensable to certain elements of the church and state of Judea, yet was fraught with danger to a people whose chief safeguard had hitherto been their exclusiveness, and whose highest mission was to keep their faith and manners distinct from the contagion of the world around them. The gigantic experiment of Solomon, though partially and prospectively successful, yet in a greater part and for the moment failed. As he is the representative of the splendors of the monarchy, so is he also the type and cause of its ruin. — Stanley.

a 1 Ki. vi. 37, 38; vii. 6; ix. 10.

b "Prob. a town of Zobah, otherwise unknown, wh. revolted fr. Sol., and was reduced to subjection." — Spk. Com.

c "Some of these fortified places may have been necessary to keep in check the Canaanitish population, who were likely to fret under the forced labor wh. he exacted from them." — Tuck.

Solomon marries the princess of Egypt

7—11. (7) left,[d] descendants of the people in the land at the time of the invasion. (8) pay tribute, R. V., "of them did Solomon raise a levy of bond servants," etc. (9) men of war, etc., occupying honorable offices of all kinds. (10) two hundred, cf. 1 Ki. ix. 23, where all the overseers are said to be 500. The 250 mentioned here were chiefs over Israelites only. (11) daughter of Phar., 1 Ki. iii. 1. The Pharaoh whose daughter Solomon married, was probably Psusennes, the last of the twenty-first dynasty. The city of David was the eastern hill, south of the temple site. As she still adhered to the gods of Egypt, she is transferred to a house built for herself (1 Kings vii. 8) in the upper city; because the old Zion derived a sanctity from having been the site of the tabernacle, which was on the same ridge with the temple mount.— Murphy.

A politic marriage (vs. 11). — I. No doubt this marriage was brought about by Solomon's desire to strengthen himself by foreign alliances. It would have been better for him to have looked to the bonds that bound his throne to God.

d Comp 1 Ki. ix. 20-23.

"Sol.'s own palace was erected considerably below the level of the temple mount, on the southwest, and quite apart fr. the castle of David." —Tuck.

B. C. 954.

"He that made the first marriage in paradise bestows His first miracle upon a Galilean marriage. He that was the author of matrimony and sanctifieth it, doth, by His holy presence, honor the resemblance of His eternal union with His church."—Bp. Hall.

Many marriages are made from worldly motives. II. It was the source of immediate perplexity. Solomon felt that it would be incongruous to introduce his wife to scenes that were associated with a religion that she did not recognize. Diversities of religious sentiment often a source of domestic perplexity.

Solomon's "servants."—The working class population of those days, the artisans and laborers, Solomon employed in the construction of his temple, palaces and cities, just as the Pharaohs of former times had employed the progenitors of his people in making bricks and erecting store cities in the land of Ham (Ex. i. 11). It was the custom then and long after to subject prisoners of war and the populations of conquered territories to servile work. Thothmes III. of Egypt carried laborers captive to build the temple of his father Amon (Wilkinson, "Ancient Egyptians"). The employment of foreign captives in such tasks was an ancient practice in Egypt. An inscription of Esarhaddon states that the custom prevailed in Assyria, he himself saying of his captives from foreign lands, "I caused crowds of them to work in fetters in making brick."—Pul. Com.

Solomon's gold, fleet, etc.

12—18. (12) Sol. offered, not in person, but through the priests. Reference is to the appointment of regular service in the temple.[a] altar, ch. iv. 1. (13) Even after, etc., R. V., "even as the duty of every day required, offering." commandment of Moses, Ex. xxiii. 14; xxix. 38. (14) order of David, 1 Chr. xxiv. 1–5. porters, 1 Chr. ix. 17; xxvi. 1–19. man of God, term only applied to Moses and one nameless prophet, besides David[b] in the Bks. of Chr. (15) king, i. e. David. treasures, 1 Chr. xxvi. 20–28. (16) prepared, idea is, made ready for use, so meaning completed. (17) Ezion-geber, the giant's backbone, Nu. xxxiii. 35, 36.[c] On the N. E. point of the gulf of Akaba, an eastern gulf of the Red Sea, near Elath, De. ii. 8; 2 Sa. viii. 14. (18) ships, etc., bec. the Israelites had no knowledge of ship-building or navigation. The parallel much helps us by saying that "Solomon made a navy," and Hiram assisted by manning it with competent sailors; he "sent in the navy his servants," etc. (1 Ki. ix. 26, 27).—Ophir, it is an unsettled question where Ophir was situated, though an Arabian situation is most probable.

a 1 Ki. ix. 25.

b 1 Chr. xxiii. 14; 2 Chr. xxv. 7, 9.

c De. ii. 8; 1 Ki. ix. 26.

"The increase of a great number of citizens in prosperity is a necessary element to the security, and even to the existence, of a civilized people."—Buret.

Solomon.—Solomon was great in burnt-offerings. Do not men sometimes make up in burnt-offerings what they lack in moral consistency? Is not an ostentatious religion sometimes the best proof of internal decay? It ought not to be so. The hand and the heart should be one, the outward and the inward should correspond, the action should be the incarnation of the thought. We are not always to look upon the ceremonial action of the church as indicative of its real spirituality. Sometimes men make a great noise in order to conceal a courage that is giving way.—Parker.

"Before we ask what a man worships, we have to ask whether he worships at all."—Ruskin.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

B. C. 954-937.

the queen of Sheba

1—6. (1) Sheba, "Sheba was in the S. of Arabia. The queen may have heard of Solomon through the traders to Ophir. The Arabs were famous for their riddles."—Murphy. prove, test his reputed wisdom. (4) sitting, in council of his chief officers. attendance, standing of his attendants. no more spirit, she was breathless with amazement. (5) acts, marg. sayings. (6) mine eyes, they saw the grandeur of his kingdom, but her ears heard the proofs of his wisdom.

"Do not suppose that wisdom is so much flattered at having you for a pupil that she will set you easy lessons, and yet give you the gold medal."—T. T. Lynch.

A spirit of inquiry.—She came to hear his wisdom and enlarge her own; to ask as well as answer questions. The spirit of this asking of questions and solving of dark riddles is of the very nature of true philosophy. "To ask questions rightly," says Lord Bacon, "is the half of knowledge." "Life without cross-examination is no life at all," said Socrates. When we inquire, when we restlessly question in our search after truth, when we seek it from unexpected quarters, we are but following in the steps of the wise king of Judah and the wise queen of Sheba.—Stanley, Questioners must be teachable. When Haydn was in London, a nobleman came to him for lessons in music, but found fault with all that Haydn said. At last out of patience, the musician exclaimed, "I see, my lord, that it is you who are so good as to give lessons to me, and I am obliged to confess that I do not merit the honor of having such a master."—Spurgeon.

"Justice is the first virtue of those who command and stops the complaints of these who obey."—Diderot.

B C. 954-937.

the queen pronounces Solomon happy

7—12. (7) Happy, or blessed. (8) Lord thy God, the queen does not claim Him as her God, but comp. Christ's lesson from this "queen of the south" in Mat. xii. 42. (9) talents, Josephus says 20 talents (= $60,000) which is more probable. such spice,[a] the district fr. wh. she came being famous for its spices. (10) algum trees, sandal-wood. (11) terraces, "raised walks or corridors protected by a balustrade."—Murphy. psalteries, 1 Sa. x. 5. (12) gave . . desire,[b] exchanging presents; and adding to his own chosen gifts things which the queen admired and wished for.

"These words," (vss. 5–8) says Canon Barry, "are clearly from some contemporary document. They breathe at once the spirit of Oriental compliment, and a certain seriousness of tone, as of a mind stirred by unusual wonder and admiration. It is worth notice that they touch but lightly on external magnificence and prosperity, and go on to dwell emphatically on the wisdom of Solomon as a wisdom enabling him to do judgment and justice, and as a gift from Jehovah, his God. The acknowledgment of Jehovah, of course, does not apply acceptance of the religion of Israel. It expresses the belief that He, as the tutelary God of Israel, is to be held in reverence, proportionate to the extraordinary glory which He has given to the nation" (see 1 Ki. v. 7).

a Josephus says that the genuine balsam, which grew near Jericho and at Engedi, was introduced into Palestine by the Queen of Sheba.

b Comp. expression 1 Ki. x. 13.

the wealth of Solomon

13—18. (13) weight, etc., 1 Ki. x. 14. (14) chapman, traveling peddlers. kings of Arabia, the desert districts south of Sol.'s country.[c] (15) targets, are large shields, covering the whole man. They were made of wickerwork or wood, and usually covered with leather. But these were covered with a plating of gold. The shekel weighed about 9 dwt. 3 gr. But the word shekel does not appear in the original either here or in Kings. And the beka or half shekel may be supplied.—Murphy. (16) house of the forest, 1 Ki. x. 17. (17) of ivory, not all solid ivory, some parts veneered with it. (18) footstool,[d] necessary bec. the throne was raised. This is not mentioned in Bk. of Kgs. stays, or arms. (19) lions, large carved figures; as the royal animal, the lion was properly associated with a king's throne.

The incessancy of labor.—The more we accomplish, the more we have to accomplish. All things are full of labor; and therefore, the more we acquire, the more care and the more toil to secure our acquisitions. Good men can never retire from their works of benevolence: their fortune is never made. I never heard of an apostle, prophet or public benefactor, retiring from their respective fields of labor. Moses, and Paul, and Peter, died with their harness on. So did Luther, and Calvin, and Wesley, and a thousand others as deserving, though not so well known to fame. In the war for truth and against error there is no discharge.—A. Campbell.

c 1 Ki. x. 15.

d "Xerxes is said to have witnessed the naval fight at Salamis sitting on a golden stool. Elsewhere he is described as sitting on an ivory stool, a present from Arabia."—Van Lennep.

"Prosperity is the touchstone of virtue; for it is less difficult to bear misfortunes than to remain uncorrupted by pleasure."—Tacitus.

the end of the reign of Solomon

20—24. (20) none were of silver, etc., R. V., "silver was nothing accounted of," etc. (21) Tarshish,[e] prob. Tartessus in Spain. peacocks,[f] Heb. thukyim: these, it is thought, must have come fr. India. (23) all the kings, extravagant expression, the reference is to tributary and friendly neighboring sovereigns. (24) harness, R. V., "armour." rate year by year, i. e. tribute regularly levied, and paid in kind.

A real enlargement.—Great wealth does not go far to enrich a nation when it does nothing more for it than provide targets and shields, drinking-vessels and ivory thrones overlaid with gold, with golden footstools—nothing more than multiply splendors about the royal palace. When it promotes healthful and remunerative activities among the people, when it facilitates and quickens the expenditure of profitable labor in agriculture, in seamanship, in manufacture, in art, in literature, in worship, then it is really and truly serviceable. So with individual men. Wealth that only ministers to luxury does very little good to its owner. But when it enables a man to put forth mental and physical powers that otherwise would slumber for lack of opportunity, when it stimulates to worthy and elevating enterprise, when it opens the door of usefulness and hopefulness, then it is a blessing indeed, a real and true enlargement.—Pul. Com.

e "Large trading vessels appear to have been designated ships of Tarshish."—Ayre.

f 1 Ki. x. 22.

"Greatness stands upon a precipice, and if prosperity carries a man ever so little beyond his poise, it overbears and dashes him to pieces."—Seneca.

"We like the gift when we the giver prize."—Ovid.

the death of Solomon

25—31. (25) stalls, etc., 1 Ki. iv. 26. chariot cities, 1 Ki. x. 26. (26) the river,[g] Ge. xv. 18, the Euphrates. (27) as stones, strong fig. for abundance. and comparative worthlessness. (28) all lands,[h] "we should not have expected him to close the history of a great reign by a reference to the king's trade in horses."—Exp. Bib. (29) the rest of, etc. The discreditable record contained in 1 Ki. xi. is here omitted. Nathan, 2 Sa. vii. 1–17. Ahijah, 1

g 1 Ki. iv. 21.

h Law of Moses did not permit this multiplying of horses. De. xvii. 16.

B. C. 937.

Ki. xi. 11–13, 29–39. Iddo,[a] 2 Chr. xii. 15; xiii. 22. (30) forty years, comp. reigns of Saul and David. (31) his son, fr. all that appears his only son. "Solomon's life does not close with any scene in which his people and his heir assembled to do him honor." Nor is he spoken of as was David (1 Chr. xxix. 28). "The lame and impotent conclusion" of this narrative is "as severe a condemnation" as that of kings with its record of the sins of the king.— Exp. Bib.

Death of Solomon.— Solomon did not live to a very great age, since he was not more than twenty years old when he ascended the throne. Whether Solomon turned to the Lord again with all his heart, a question widely discussed by the older commentators, cannot be ascertained from Scripture. If the preacher (Ecclesiastes) is traceable to Solomon, so far as the leading thoughts are concerned, we should find in this fact an evidence of his conversion, or at least a proof that at the close of his life he discovered the vanity of all earthly possessions and aims and declared the fear of God to be the only abiding good with which a man can stand before the judgment of God.— Keil.

a He seems to have been the prophet of Rehoboam's reign.

"Prosperity seems to be scarcely safe unless it be mixed with a little adversity."— Hosea Ballou.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

Rehoboam made king

1—5. (1) Rehoboam, "the impression left by the Scripture narrative is that up to this time he has lived a mere courtier's life without serious aims or stirring circumstances."—Robinson. Shechem,[b] Ge. xii. 6. The ancient capital and place of popular assembly in the days of Joshua (Jos. xxiv. 1), between Ebal and Gerizim, 34 miles north of Jerusalem, cf. De. xi. 29, 30. (2) Jeroboam, 1 Ki. xi. 26–28, 40. During the life of Solomon he had stirred up the people against their king, and now they send for him to return from Egypt and lead them. (3) they, i. e. all Israel, naturally regarding him as a leader, who would represent their cause to the king. spake, Jeroboam being the speaker. (4) our yoke, the style and pomp of Solomon had rendered the burden of taxation great. The vast building operations and the enormous establishment of the court were a constant and grievous drain upon the resources of the nation. The proposal to lighten the burden met with universal concurrence, and was reasonable in itself. — Murphy.

Rehoboam and Jeroboam. — Rehoboam was now called upon to decide definitely what policy he would pursue in his administration — whether that of leniency and popularity, or that of stringency and force; whether he would "rule by love or fear." Jeroboam had, at this point in his life, to decide whether he would adopt the safe policy of continuing in retreat, or the bold and venturesome one of heading a national revolt, and being either crushed beneath the feet of authority or raised to the height of a successful revolution. Singularly enough, the names of both these men signified "enlarger or multiplier of the people;" they pointed, probably, to the hopes of their parents concerning them. But though they both occupied the throne, and one of them rose to a much higher position than could have been anticipated at his birth, both men failed in the sight of God and in the estimate of the wise. The one by his folly estranged and lost the greater part of his kingdom; the other led Israel into shameful and ruinous apostasy. — Pul. Com.

b 1 Ki. xii. 1-19.

"Human depravity flows in different channels: some are prone to one sin, and some to another." — Scott.

"Every man's natural disposition is his good or evil demon." — Epicharmus.

"Who knows what he is till he is tried, and until he meets his own trial? for every one is not discovered in the same way; we may be firm in one peril and fail in another."—Jay.

Rehoboam's reply to the deputation

6—11. (6) old men, experienced counsellors, who knew well how heavy the burdens had been. (8) young men, his companions of the palace. According to xii. 13 Rehoboam was 41 years old. Even his young counsellors must have had some experience. (9) give ye, young people like to carry things with a high hand, and the advice these young counsellors were likely to give would accord with Rehob.'s own inclination. (10) My little, etc., demands would be increased rather than diminished. shall be, R. V., "is."

Two methods of treating men.— I. The conciliatory. II. The unconciliatory. Social positions are graduated. Yet no elevation of social rank gives one man the right to tyrannize over another. Pass in rapid review a few of the cases in which the two methods of treating men come into constant operation. The maintenance of conciliatory policy is quite consistent with a headship. 1. Firmness; 2. Justice. What is the cure for all false relations among men? The gospel of reconciliation.— J. Parker.

Kingly kindness.— When a king speaks "good words," they seem to be better than if spoken by other lips; when a king is kind, he seems to add to his kindness by his very kingliness; the stoop of his condescension redoubles the value of his benefaction. If when the people returned after three days Rehoboam had spoken so, the welkin would have rung with the resonant cheers of a delighted, thankful, because emancipated, people.—Parker.

"There be three sorts of government, monarchical, aristocratical, democratical; and they are apt to to fall three several ways into ruin; the first by tyranny; the second by ambition; the last by tumult."— Quarles.

B. C. 937.

12—15. (13) roughly, the spirit as well as the words were wrong. The whole situation is due more to the king than to his counsellors. (15) for the cause was of God, R. V., "for it was brought about of God." "It is the manner of Scripture to rise above the secondary causes of things and trace every event to the primary cause in the will of God, especially in the field of moral conduct."—Murphy. his word, 1 Ki. xi. 29–31.

Took counsel with young men.—So did our king Richard II. to his utter ruin. Xerxes despised the grave counsel of his uncle Artabanus, and was led wholly by young Mardonius to the loss of all. The like is reported of Dionysius, king of Sicily; Crœsus, king of Lydia; Nero, emperor of Rome; James that reigned in Scotland in Edward IV.'s time; and Lantrer, of whom it is reported that he lost the kingdom of Naples from the French king, his master, and all that he had in Italy, because he would not ask nor follow the advice of those who were wiser than himself.—Trapp.

Jeroboam

"To trample on all human feelings, all ties which bind man to man, to emulate the fiends, who will one day requite them in variety of torturing."—Byron.

16—19. (16) What portion, etc., they refuse to acknowledge Rehoboam as their king. to your tents, the cry of revolt.[a] The tribal spirit was strong among the Hebrews. The supremacy of Judah had never been heartily accepted. Reuben, Ephraim, Manasseh perpetually kicked against Judean sovereignty. There had always been a latent discontent; Rehoboam's threats postponed the explosion."—Rawlinson. (17) dwelt in the cities, and did not care to remove into the territory of the ten tribes. (18) Hadoram, 1 Ki. xii. 18, the chief director of the enforced labors against which Israel rebelled. The worst man he could have sent—showing his own lack of judgment. Josephus says he was sent to mollify the people. (19) Israel, i, e. the ten tribes.

the rebellion of Israel

[a] 2 Sa. xx. 1, 2.

Moral tyrants.—

Think'st thou there is no tyranny out that Of blood and chains? The despotism of vice—
The weakness and the wickedness of luxury,
The negligence, the apathy, the evils
Of sensual sloth—produce ten thousand tyrants, Whose delegated cruelty surpasses
The worst acts of one energetic master, However harsh and hard in his own bearing.—Byron.

"When any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse and corruption of one."—Swift.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

Rehoboam is forbidden to make war with Israel

1—4. (1) to fight, Joab gave the sum of the men of Judah fit to bear arms as 500,000 (2 Sa. xxiv. 9) in the time of David. The present levy is about a third of that number. (2) Shemaiah, 1 Ki. xii. 22; ch. xii. 5, 7, 15. How "the word" came we are not told, perhaps by a vision. (4) The Lord interferes, assigning as the reason, "This thing is done of me." The message is addressed to all Israel in Judah and Benjamin, as well as to Rehoboam. This may have contributed to the readiness with which it was obeyed. We see here that Benjamin adhered to Judah.—Murphy.

"The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government."—Washington.

God in the Bible.—The Bible is never afraid to mention the name of God. Truly it would appear as if it were the only book where He was at home. Other books apologize for Him: introduce Him with pomp that cannot be real; revere Him with worship that must be artificial: but within the sanctuary of the inspired volume God comes and goes and moves with familiarity, with condescension, and yet ever so as to make men think more than they can say.—J. Parker.

"We are often governed by people not only weaker than ourselves, but even by those whom we think so."—Lord Greville.

Rehoboam's fenced cities

5—12. (5) built, as so often in O. T. history, meaning fortified. defence, fifteen in all, of which twelve are south and west of Jerusalem, showing that he feared Egypt more than he did Israel. (6) Beth-lehem, etc., three places lying south of Jerus. (7) Beth-zur, now Beitsur. Jos. xv. 58. Shoco, 17 m. S. W. of Jerus. Adullam, Jos. xii. 15. (8) Gath, 1 Chr. xviii. 1. Mareshah, Jos. xv. 44. Ziph, Jos. xv. 24. (9) Adoraim, mod. Dura, S. W. of Hebron. Lachish, Jos. x. 3; xv. 39. Azekah, Jos. x. 10, 11. (10) Zorah,

"Zorah commanded an important valley,—the Wady Surah, leading up into the hills from the low country."— Spk Com.

B. C. cir. 937.

Jos. xix. 41.[a] Aijalon, Jos. xxi. 24. Hebron, Nu. xiii. 22; Ge. xxiii. 2; Jos. xiv. 15. (12) having Judah, etc., R. V., "And Judah and Benjamin belonged to him."

Rehoboam dwelt at Jerusalem. — Unlike kings of Israel, who shifted their capital from place to place for convenience and policy, he perceived importance of retaining hold on the city of David. This central fortress surrounded by a chain of fortresses, in part to carry out the designs of his father, in part to increase his strength. Reduced by secession, he sought to keep what he possessed. He rebuilt, garrisoned, and provided with arms and stores to stand a siege. — Hom. Com. Cities for defense. — To defend the frontiers of the kingdom against both Israel on the north and Egypt on the south, for which last special need existed, considering the friendly relations which had subsisted between Jeroboam and Shishak. Shishak's invasion, which soon followed, showed Rehoboam's apprehensions not to have been baseless. — Pul. Com.

a Ju. xiii. 2, 25; xvi. 31.

"O how portentous is prosperity! How comet-like, it threatens while it shines!" — Young.

"It is sweet and glorious to die for one's country." — Horace.

Israel casts off the worship of God

13—17. (13) priests . . coasts,[b] the priests and Levites could not bring themselves to offer sacrifice and service to the calves, or to forsake Jerusalem and the temple and the true altar. No doubt a stirring history underlay the few but suggestive words which point here the conduct of the priests and Levites. These would not be content to stand shoulder to shoulder with priests made not from the tribe of Levi, 1 Kings xii. 31. (14) suburbs, see Nu. xxxv. 1-8. cast them off, whether Jerob. took his action first, or when he found Jehovah's priests forsaking his land, does not clearly appear. (15) devils, R. V., "he-goats." Le. xvii. 7; after the example of Egypt in the revolting worship of Pan. In all W. Asia it was thought that hairy demons, like goats, haunted lonely places. — Geikie. calves, 1 Ki. xii. 28. (16) after them, the priests, etc. (17) strengthened, "Righteousness exalteth a nation." Pro. xiv. 34; Is. xxxiii. 6. three years,[c] so long they remained faithful against the idolatrous influences that had captured Israel.

b "This may account for the institution of the schismatical and idolatrous priesthood by Jeroboam." — Wordsworth.

The duty of Protestants (vss. 13, 16). — This will lead me to set before you — I. The conduct of Protestants in that day. 1. In it they bore testimony against the reigning abominations; 2. They steadfastly adhered to the service of their God; 3. They renounced all for conscience sake. II. Our duty, as Protestants, at the present day. 1. We should realize our own religious principles; 2. We should show their superior efficacy to sanctify the heart and life. — Simeon.

c 2 Chr. xii. 1, 2.

"The guarantee of a nation's progress and stability is to be found, not in its armies, not in the genius, the learning, or the wealth of its citizens, but in the sound morality and religious sentiment of the people." — Thomas.

Three years. — Is it about that time that men's strength gives way, and they begin to long for some other path? Is there about a three-years' staying power in the strongest of us? Does the strength give out then? and do apostles who watch us say, "Ye did run well; who did hinder you?" For three little years they walked in the way of David and Solomon. We do not despise the three years, but we are tempted to wonder at the men who could have three years' approximate good character, and then turn away again. We wonder at the man who can abstain three years from drinking "liquid damnation," and then can begin again his evil course. We do wonder at a man who can read and think and study three years, and then run and join the weltering society of fools. How is it with the soul in this matter of three years? — J. Parker. Seducing others to sin. — To tempt and lead another into sin is worse than to sin thyself. It shows sin to be of great growth in that man that doth it knowingly and willingly. Herbs and flowers do not shed their seed till ripe; creatures propagate not till they are of stature and age! What do those that tempt others but diffuse their wicked opinions and practices, and as it were raise up seed to the devil, thereby to keep up the name of their infernal father in the world? This shows sin to be mighty in them indeed.— Gurnall.

"Though a soldier in time of peace is like a chimney in summer, yet, what wise man would pluck down his chimney because his almanac tells him it is the middle of June."— T. Hughes.

the wives of Rehoboam

18—23. (18) Jerimoth, not elsewhere mentioned as son of David. and Abihail, R. V., "and of Abihail." Eliab, the eldest son of Jesse. (20) Maachah, granddaughter of Absalom.[d] (21) he took . . wives; R. V., forbidden by De. xvii. 17. (22) the chief, to be ruler, R. V., "to be chief, even the prince." (23) wisely,[e] "the system employed was calculated to minimize jealousies among the princes and to benefit their characters by giving them duties to perform instead of making them idle hangers-on upon a court." — Rawlinson. desired, R. V., "sought for them."

d "Her mother was Tamar." — Josephus.

Honor to a wife. —

Yes, wife, I'd be a thronèd king,
That you might share my regal seat,

e "By planting his sons in the fenced cities he kept those cities loyal." — Wordsworth.

That titled beauty I might bring,
And princes' homage to your feet.
How quickly, then, would nobles see Your courtly grace, your royal mien;
Even duchesses all blind should be
To flaw or speck in you, their queen.

Poor wish! O wife, a queen you are,
To whose feet many a subject brings
A truer homage nobler far Than bends before the thrones of kings.
You rule a realm, wife, in this heart,
Where not one rebel fancy's seen,
Where hopes and smiles, how joyous! start
To own the sway of you, their queen.

How loyal are my thoughts by day!
How faithful is each dream of night!
Not one but lives but to obey
Your rule — to serve you, its delight;
My hours — each instant — every breath
Are, wife, as all have ever been,
Your slaves, to serve you unto death;
O, wife, you are indeed a queen! — W. C. Bennett.

B. C. 937.

"Christ's first public miracle graceth a marriage. It is an ancient and laudable institution, that the rites of matrimony should not want a solemn celebration. When are feasts in season, if not at this main change of our estate, wherein the joy of obtaining meets with the hope of further comforts?" — Bp. Hall.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

B. C. 932.

invasion of Judah by Egypt

1—6. (1) forsook the law, there was general and wide-spread immorality, (1 Ki. xiv. 22–24); the simple and solemn rites of Jerusalem gave way to "the seductive rites of Phœnicia and the bloody rites of Moab and Ammon." (2) Shishak, this is the king to whom Jeroboam fled (1 Ki. xi. 40) before the death of Solomon, and not improbably this invasion was prompted by Jeroboam." — Lumby. transgressed, as fully detailed 1 Ki. xiv. 22–24. (3) Lubims, or Libyans.[a] Sukkiims, cave dwellers,[b] or tent dwellers, prob. fr. western shores of Red Sea. Ethiopians, Heb. Cushim, fr. S. of Egypt. (4) fenced cities, ch. xi. 5–10.[c] (5) Shemaiah, this message not given in Kings. Only other references are 1 Ki. xii. 22; 2 Chr. xi. 2; xii. 15. therefore, distinctly connecting the suffering with the sin.

Shishak's inscription in the Temple of Karnak.— At Karnak, near Thebes, is a great temple, adjoining which is a smaller temple finished by Shishak after his victory over Rehoboam, and its walls are covered with inscriptions. "In one of the processions thus represented there is to be found the only direct allusion to Jewish history on the Egyptian monuments" (except the Tel-el-Amarna tablets lately discovered). "On one side stands the king himself, on a colossal scale, holding in his hand a train of captives. Meeting him is the God Amon, also leading a train of lesser captives, by strings which he holds in his hand, and which are fastened round their necks."— Stanley. "Here, then," says Bishop Walsh, "we possess a contemporaneous record of the conquest of Judea by Shishak, drawn up more than nine hundred years before Christ, and agreeing minutely with the account given us in the books of Kings and Chronicles."

[a] 2 Chr. xvi. 8; Da. xi. 43; Na. iii. 9.

[b] Troglodytes, LXX.

[c] "Among the cities fortified by Rehob., and taken by Shishak, we find in the Karnak inscription 3 only viz., Shoco, Adoraim, and Aijalon. Fourteen names, however, are lost fr. the beginning of the inscription." — Spk. Com.

Jerusalem taken and spoiled

7—12. (7) some deliverance, or partial deliv.; God's mercy ever meets man's penitence.[d] (8) know, etc., by comparison of the two services. Rehob. had to become tributary to Egypt. (9) shields, ch. ix. 15, 16. (10) brass, i. e. bronze. (11) when . . them, so they were exhibited only on occasions of state visits to the temple. (12) things went well, R. V., "there were good things found." (cf. xix. 3).

The cartouche of Rehoboam in Shishak's inscription.— It occurs in the third line of sixty-three prisoners. Each figure has his arms tied behind him, a rope round his neck, and is placed on a turreted oval, indicative of a walled city, within which the name is inscribed. From the variety of their features, they are evidently intended to be portraits, or, at least, typical of the people represented. This one has a distinctly Jewish face, and the inscription within [d] 1 Ki. xxi. 27–29.

We subjoin the inscription in English letters singularly arranged:

U O I D
A M
A L
K

In this case the first line is to be read like the Hebrew, from right to left.

B. C. 920.

the death of Rehoboam a Rehoboam's sin was want of earnestness and consistency.

b 1 Chr. xxix. 29.

"He that prays to God with an angry, that is, with a troubled and discomposed spirit, is like him that retires into a battle to meditate, and sets up his closet in the out-quarters of an army, and chooses a frontier garrison to be wise in."—Bp. Taylor.

"Prayer ardent opens heaven, lets down a stream of glory on the consecrated hour of man in audience with the Deity: who worships the great God, that instant joins the first in heaven, and sets his foot on hell."—Young.

Wanted immediately:—A few more Aarons and Hurs as attendants on the weekly prayer meetings, to pray for the success of the teaching of the Gospel on the Sabbath.

Abijah succeeds Jeroboam

c Le. ii. 13; Ez. xliii. 24.

"Dr Kane finding a flower under the Humboldt glacier was more affected by it because it grew beneath the lip and cold bosom of the ice, then he would have been by the most gorgeous garden bloom. So the oval is "Judah-Melek," i. e. king of Judah. In other words it is meant for the Rehoboam of Scripture, who was defeated by Sheshonk. — Fairholt.

13—16. (13) strengthened himself, by this return in later life to God. one and forty years, see 1 Ki. xiv. 21. (14) evil,[a] such is the general estimate of his life. "Rehoboam's character was weak and irresolute. He seems to have had warm affections, and to have been capable of making good resolutions, under good advice (2 Chr. xi. 4; xii. 6), but he had no stability of purpose." — Rawlinson. (15) book, R. V., "histories." Shemaiah,[b] cf. 1 Ki. xii. 22; 2 Chr. xi. 2 and xii. 5, 7. Iddo the seer, (ch. xiii. 22; ix. 29). The seer is one who had visions from God, the prophet is one who reveals and proclaims God's truth. But the names are sometimes given to the same man. concerning, R. V., "after the manner of." (16) Abijah, ch. xi. 22.

The evil of neglected prayer (vs. 14).— From this conduct of Rehoboam I will take occasion to show — I. How alone a man can be preserved from evil by seeking after God. This implies — 1. Meditation; 2. Self-examination; 3. Fixedness of heart to follow the dictates of our conscience. We may therefore easily foresee — II. The certain consequences of neglecting the appointed means. For — 1. Our corruptions will rage; 2. Our temptations will multiply; 3. Our enemies will prevail. Get your minds then deeply imbued with — (1) A sense of your weakness; (2) A persuasion of the efficacy of prayer; (3) A conviction of the necessity of holiness in order to your happiness in the eternal world.— Simeon.

Necessity of prayer. — The wise Hillel had a pupil named Maimon, and Hillel was greatly pleased with his talents and his good understanding. But he soon discovered that Maimon was trusting too much to his own wisdom, and had entirely given up prayer. For the young man said in his heart, "What is the use of prayer? Does the omniscient God need our words before He helps us? He would then be like a man. Can a man's prayers and sighs alter His plans? Will not the gracious God give us of Himself whatever is good and useful?" These were the thoughts of the youth. But Hillel was troubled in his heart that Maimon should think himself wiser than the Word of God, and he determined to teach him better. When Maimon went to him one day, Hillel was sitting in his garden, under the shade of a palm tree meditating, with his head resting upon his hand. And Maimon said to him "Master, about what are you meditating?" Then Hillel lifted up his head and said, "I have a friend, who lives upon the produce of his estate. Till now he has carefully cultivated it, and it has well repaid his toil. But now he has thrown away the plough and hoe, and is determined to leave the field to itself; so that he is sure to come to want and misery." "Has he gone mad?" said the young man, "or fallen into despondency?" "Neither," said Hillel; "he is of a pious disposition, and well grounded in learning, both human and Divine. But he says: the Lord is omnipotent, and can easily give us nourishment without our bending our head to the ground; and as He is gracious, He will bless my table and open His hand. And who can contradict him?" "Why," said the young man, "is not that tempting God? Have not you told him so?" Then Hillel smiled, and said, "I will tell him so. You, dear Maimon, are the friend I am speaking of." "I?" said Maimon, and started back. But the old man replied, "Are you not tempting the Lord? Is prayer less than work, and are spiritual blessings inferior to the fruit of the field? And He who tells you to stoop your head to the earth for the sake of earthly fruit is He not the same as He who tells you to lift your head towards heaven to receive His heavenly blessings?" Thus spake Hillel, and looked up to heaven; and Maimon went away and prayed, and his life was a very godly one.— Haven.

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH.

1—5. (1) eighteenth year, 1 Ki. xv. 1. (2) Michaiah, mistake for Maachah, cf. xi. 20, and 1 Ki. xv. 2. The queen mother seems generally to have possessed much influence, for we find great respect shown to her, e. g. the king bows down before her (1 Ki. ii. 19), also she is called "queen," (2 Chr. xv. 16 Je. xiii. 18). Hence on the accession of a king the name of his mother is given. (4) mount Zemaraim, near Bethel; it cannot be certainly identified. mount Ephraim, R. V., "The hill country of Ephraim." (5) covenant of salt,[c] salt is the symbol of cleansing, purification and durability. Durability is the idea of salt in a covenant act, therefore a permanent covenant is called "a cov. of salt," Nu. xviii. 19.

A covenant of salt.— The Orientals were accustomed also to ratify their federal engagements by salt. This substance was, among the ancients, the emblem of friendship and fidelity, and therefore used in all their sacrifices and covenants. It is a sacred pledge of hospitality which they never venture to violate. Numerous instances occur of travelers in Arabia, after being plundered and stripped by the wandering tribes of the desert, claiming the protection of some civilized Arab, who, after receiving him into his tent, and giving him salt, instantly relieves his distress, and never forsakes him till he has placed him in safety.—Paxton.

B. C. 920.

some single, struggling grace in the heart of one far removed from Divine influences may be dearer to God than a whole catalogue of virtues in the life of one more favored of heaven."—Beecher.

Abijah's word to Jeroboam

6—12. (6) hath rebelled, 1 Ki. xi. 26, 27. (7) children of Belial, men animated by malice. young, not true. Reh. was 41 yrs. old at the time. This is said for effect. (8) sons of David, the lawful rulers. golden calves, the proof of apostasy. (9) cast out, ch. xi. 14. consecrate . . rams, comp. Ex. xxix. 1; Le. viii. 2. "This passage refers to some enactment akin to that of the Mosaic law concerning the priesthood."—Oehler. (10) not forsaken, this is only true in a degree. the priests, etc., R. V., "and we have priests ministering unto the Lord, the sons of Aaron and the Levites in their work." (11) they burn, i. e. the regular Div. service is maintained only by us. (12) God himself is with us, so Abijah makes the battle take the character of sacred war. trumpets, it was one of the official functions of the priests to blow the silver trumpets at festivals, sacrificial ceremonies and in military campaigns. (Nu. x. 8–10; xxxi. 6.)

When the Rev. Mr. Newton heard an infidel jestingly say, — "I always spend the Sunday in settling my accounts," that venerable minister turned round and said in an accent of deep solemnity, "You may find, sir, that the day of judgment is to be spent in exactly the same manner."

"Ye shall not prosper."—Many times has Christianity seemed to be doomed to defeat and even to extinction, but out of every terrible contest it has emerged successful, even triumphant. Persecution, ridicule, argumentation, corruption — these have done their worst, and they have failed. To-day the friends of Christ are more numerous, and the cause of Christ is more advanced, than ever. And he who is in arms against the Lord of all love and power, who is seeking to undermine His influence, who is contemptuous of His holy will, who is opposing his own indifference or his worldliness to the commands and the invitations of a Divine Saviour, he is in the ranks of the army that will be defeated; no voice of victory will greet his dying ear, no hope of commendation and award will then fill his heart.— Clarkson. God's people delivered by Him in extremities. — In the day of great distress and great danger to God's people in Germany, Luther cried in his closet, and came out, declaring to friends "Vicimus, vicimus," we have overcome, we have overcome. From that day Charles the Fifth issued a proclamation that none should be further molested for religion. — Hom. Com.

B. C. 920-915.

the death of Jeroboam

13—18. (13) ambushment, poss. arranged while Abijah was haranguing. (14) cried . . trumpets, cf. vs. 12, note, "the sounding of trumpets at worship took the place, as it were, of an invocation. It was to bring the people to the consciousness that God was thinking of them. The word 'selah' in the Psalms is thought to refer to this act."—Oehler. (15) God smote, an historical instance of the falsity of the statement that "God is on the side of the biggest battalions." (17) fell down slain,[a] "this number is hardly correct, even if we regard it as covering all who fell in the war. Such a loss in a war lasting but little over two years, between such petty states as Judah and Israel, would be unexampled."—Rawlinson. (18) brought under, defeated, not made tributary. because, gives the moral significance of the contest and result.

Caractacus. — Caractacus, after defending himself with invincible bravery against the Romans, who had invaded his dominions, was treacherously seized and betrayed to his enemies, by whom he was sent, with the rest of his family, in chains to Rome. The behavior of Caractacus, in that metropolis of the world, was truly great. When brought before the emperor, he appeared with a manly and undaunted countenance, and thus addressed himself to Claudius: "If in my prosperity the moderation of my conduct had been equivalent to my birth and fortune, I should have come into this city, not as a captive, but as a friend; nor would you, Cæsar, have disdained the alliance of a man born of illustrious ancestors, and ruler over several nations. My present fate is to me dishonorable; to you magnificently glorious. I once had horses; I once had men: I once had arms; I once had riches; can you wonder, then,

[a] "The merciless slaughter that ensued can be accounted for only by tracing it to the rancorous passions enkindled by a civil war."—Jamieson.

"A wise and virtuous man, when in adversity, may, like a dark lantern in the night, seem dull and dark to those who are about him; but within, he is full of light and brightness; and when he chooses to open the door he can show it."—Feltham.

"Let prosperity be as oil to the wheels of obedi-

I should part with them unwillingly? Although, as Romans, you may aim at universal empire, it does not follow that all mankind must tamely submit to be your slaves. If I had yielded without resistance, neither the perverseness of my fortune, nor the glory of your triumph, had been so remarkable. Punish me with death, and I shall soon be forgotten. Suffer me to live, and I shall remain a lasting monument of your clemency." The manner in which this noble speech was delivered affected the whole assembly, and made such an impression on the emperor, that he ordered the chains of Caractacus and his family to be taken off; and Agrippina, who was more than an equal associate in the empire, not only received the captive Britons with great marks of kindness and compassion, but confirmed to them the enjoyment of their liberty.

19—22. (19) Bethel, the frontier town which (1 Ki. xii. 32–33) was the chief seat of the idolatry of Jeroboam. with the towns, i. e. villages or suburbs. Jeshanah, not known. Ephrain, R. V., "Ephron." (20) recover strength, for war,[a] struck him, i. e. Jeroboam· this indic.. premature death, though he lived two years longer than Abijah.[b] (21) mighty, his speech was fine, but his life was bad (1 Ki. xv. 3) and he reigned a brief three years only (1 Ki. xv. 2). He was made mighty for Israel's sake (1 Ki. xv. 4). (22) story, R.V., "commentary."[c] This memoir, from which our writer drew his information, is one of the many "original documents" of which we know nothing.

Death a common lot. — 1. It is inevitable. Knocks with impartial step at the door of the cottage and the palace of the prince, says Horace. It is appointed unto all men. Cannot be bribed by prosperity ("Abijah waxed mighty"), nor postponed by adversity ("neither did Jeroboam recover strength"). 2. It is peculiar in method. Abijah's a natural death, "slept with his fathers." Jeroboam "struck." He never survived defeat; stung by accusing conscience, or afflicted with lingering, incurable disease (like Jehoram, 2 Chr. xxi. 19) which at last killed him. Death terminates all earthly glory. — Hom. Com.

B. C. 915.

ence; and affliction as wind to the sails of prayer." — Philip Henry.

"True patriots we, for, be it understood, we left our country for our country's good."— Barrington.

the prosperity of Abijah a "The battle at Zemaraim both crippled his power and broke his spirits. — Jamieson.

b 1 Ki. xiv. 20.

c 2 Chr. xii. 15.

"His honor rooted in dishonor stood, and faith unfaithful kept him falsely true."— Tennyson

CHAPTER THE FOURTEENTH.

B. C. 917.

Asa succeeds to the throne

1—5. (1) Abijah, of whom the best that can be said is that he prepared the way, in his brief reign, for one of the longest and best administrations that Judah enjoyed. Asa, physician, 1 Ki. xv. 8, 11. Prob. Asa was about 20 yrs. old at this time. Remarkable that under the influence of Abijah and Maachah he should have been a reformer. quiet ten years, in consequence of the great victory gained in Abijah's reign.[d] (2) good and right, the addition of the word "good" suggests that Asa did right in an acceptable manner, putting his heart into it. (3) R. V., "for he took away the strange altars and the high places and broke down the pillars and hewed down the Asherim."[e] high places, first mentioned Nu. xxiii. 3. "Worship on high places was universal for ages in W. Asia. It originated in adoration of the sun, such places being nearest him and most exposed to his rays." They were natural altars. — Geikie. images, Baal statues. groves,[f] wooden posts consecrated to the Phœnician Venus. (4) commanded Judah, not merely setting an example, but exerting his authority to re-establish the worship of Jehovah. (5) images,[g] R. V., "sun-images." All about Palestine were nations who worshipped the sun. The Arabians perhaps without any symbol, but the Phoenicians, the Syrians and the Egyptians with idols which were gradually introduced among the Hebrews. Baal and Moloch were sun-idols.

Sun-images. — We see these "sun-images" were connected with the altars and worship of Baal. The "sun-images" are principally if not exclusively, kept in the temples of Siva. They are made of black granite, in the shape of a man, and about his size. There are, however, many of them with only a head, having a halo or numerous coruscations to represent the orb of day. Thus in the houses of rich natives may be seen near a niche, on one side the representation of the sun, and on the other a figure of the crescent moon. The temple images are placed on the east side, and offerings are sometimes presented to them before they are taken to the idol. — Roberts. "Rest on every side." — It is significant enough that the chronicler considered it a noteworthy fact that "in his days the land was quiet ten years." It indicates very forcibly that the chronic condition of the country in those times was one of unsettlement and strife. We should think it strange, indeed, if the his-

d 2 Chr. xiii. 16–18.

e Comp. 2 Chr. xii. 1, 2, 5.

f 1 Ki. xiv. 23; xv. 13.

g Le. xxvi. 30.

"Idolatry!— you cannot find any more gross, any more cruel, on the broad earth, than within the area of a mile around this pulpit. Dar minds, from which God is obscured; deluded souls, whose fetish is the dice-box or the bottle; false gods, more hideous, more awful, than Moloch or Baal, worshipped with curses, with the hearthstone for the bloody altar, and the drunken husband for the immolating priest, and women and children for the victims." — Chapin.

torian of our country thought it worth while to record that for ten years the sovereign "had no war." But it is painful to think that for very many centuries, in many lands, if not in all, war was regarded as the normal condition; an attitude of armed hostility toward the neighboring nation was considered the necessary and natural relation. History then was not the account of discovery, of invention, of achievement, of advance; it was the story of international or civil war. This was the rule which, we may thank God, is now the exception, and which, we devoutly hope, will soon be obselete. — Pul. Com.

B. C. 917.

6–9. (6) built, with the frequent sense of restored or fortified. fenced cities, prob. those wh. Rehoboam had built, and Shishak may have dismantled.[a] (7) yet before us, i. e. open to us. Let us take the opportunity of the freedom of the land from hostile forces.[b] sought the Lord, "this is the true defense of a kingdom (Zech. ii. 5.) without which all other means are ineffectual." (8) targets,[c] the target was a larger shield (ix. 15). Benjamin was a warlike tribe (Ge. xlix. 27; Ju. xx.), among whom were archers and slingers (Ju. xx. 16; 1 Chr. viii. 40). This accounts for the large number of their troops. Benjamin continued to adhere to David. (9) Zerah the Ethiopian, or Cushite. Prob. a king of Egypt, identified with Osorken II., the third king after Shishak: second king of the twenty-second dynasty. A million of men is an enormous host; but ancient sovereigns were followed by most of their subjects capable of bearing arms, who were attracted by the hope of plunder. Xerxes assembled nearly three millions for the invasion of Greece. Darius Codomannus had 1,040,000 men at Arbela. — Murphy. Mareshah, 2 Chr. xi. 8, 26 m. S.W. of Jerus., in the line of march from Egypt.

Marksmen. — Montaigne relates that "an offer was made to an excellent archer, condemned to die, that his life should be saved, if he would show some proof of his art; but he refused to try, fearing lest his agitation should make him shoot wide, and that instead of preserving his life, he should lose the reputation he had got of being a good marksman. Of the precision with which the Americans manage the rifle, Priest, in his Travels in America, gives the following account, which it must be confessed, partakes of the marvellous. He says: — "During the late war, in 1775, a company of riflemen, formed from the backwoodsmen of Virginia, was quartered at Lancaster, in New England, for some time. Two of them alternately held a board only nine inches square, between his knees, while his comrades fired a ball through it, from a distance of one hundred paces! The board is still preserved; and I am assured, by several who were present, that it was performed without any manner of deception."— Percy Anec.

Asa's fortresses and army

a 2 Chr. xi. 5-12; 1 Ki. xiv. 25-28. Comp. 1. Ki. xv. 22.

b From this it appears that the country was free fr. its tribute to Egypt. 2 Chr. xii. 8.

c "This large number does not mean a body of professional soldiers, such as compose European armies, but all capable of bearing arms, and liable to be called into service." — Jamieson.

"No evil can surprise us if we watch, no evil can hurt us if we pray."— Bp. Hall.

"But war's a game which, were their subjects wise, kings would not play at."—Cowper.

B. C. 917–881.

10–15. (10) valley of Zephathah, a plain near the town of Mareshah, chosen by Zerah as battle-field for the convenience of his chariots.[d] (11) nothing . . power,[e] R. V., "there is none beside thee to help, between the mighty and him that hath no strength." we rest on thee, the best plea we can make before God is our trust of the whole case to him.[f] man, marg. mortal man. (12) before, i. e. by means of. (13) Gerar, Ge. x. 19, on the S. W. border of Palestine, sixty miles fr. Jerus.[g] Ethiopians, etc., R. V., "and there fell of the Ethiopians so many that" etc. (14) cities round about Gerar, these were prob. at this time in the hands of Philistines, who aided Zerah, and so were now punished. The cities belonged of old to the kingdom of Abimelech (Ge. xx). The brook Besor flows through this region: and when there is water, there follow fertility and food for man and beast. Hence the abundance of spoil. (15) The tents were for the nomads who tended the cattle.

Asa defeats Zerah

d Supposed to be the broadway coming down Beit Jibrin, towards Tell-e s-Safieh." — Robinson.

e 1 Sa. xiv. 6.

f 2 Ch. xvi. 8; Pr. xviii. 10; Ps. xxii. 5.

Prayer in emergencies.— Asa's prayer is a model of prayer in an emergency. Such prayer should include. 1. Strong faith in God's independence of human resources and methods of judgment. "Lord it is nothing with thee," etc. 2. A profound sense of the inadaquacy of all other sources of relief. "We rest in thee." 3. A profound identification with God. "In thy name we go against this multitude." 4. A hearty recognition of God's ownership of us, "Let not man prevail against thee."— Phelps.

A providential escape.— A merchant was one day returning from market. He was on horseback, and behind him was a valise filled with money. The rain fell with violence, and the good old man was wet to his skin. At this he g "The results wh. follow this victory are most striking. The southern power cannot rally fr. the blow, but rapidly declines, and for above 3 centuries makes no further effort in this direction. All fear of Egypt as an aggressive power ceases; and the Israelites learn instead to lean upon the Pharaohs for support." — Spk. Com.

B. C. 917-881.

was vexed, and murmured because God had given him such bad weather for his journey. He soon reached the borders of a thick forest. What was his terror, on beholding on one side of the road a robber, with leveled gun, aiming at him, and attempting to fire! But the powder being wet by the rain, the gun did not go off, and the merchant, giving spurs to his horse, fortunately had time to escape. As soon as he found himself safe, he said to himself :— "How wrong was I, not to endure the rain patiently as sent by Providence. If the weather had been dry and fair, I should not, probably, have been alive at this hour, and my little children would have expected my return in vain. The rain which caused me to murmur, came at a fortunate moment to save my life and preserve my property." And thus it is with a multitude of our afflictions ; by causing us slight and short sufferings, they preserve us from others far greater, and of longer duration.— Arvine.

CHAPTER THE FIFTEENTH.

Azariah exhorts Asa

1—7. (1) Spirit, etc., Nu. xxiv. 2. Azariah, should be remembered as the first great reformer in those days. He is not mentioned elsewhere. (2) meet Asa, on his return fr. the victory over Zerah. while ye be with him, intimating that the condition of prosperity was "continuance in well-doing ;" and that precisely in this they were likely to fail. seek him, as they had done in this battle.[a] (3) long season, lit. "there were many days to Israel (when it belonged) to no God of truth." The proph. recalls many historical cases of apostasy. teaching priest, instruction and guidance in the national duty to God belonged to priestly office. (4) turn, in penitence. (5) no peace,[b] the word used signifies especially commotion or trouble sent fr. God. (6) nation, etc., R. V., "and they were broken in pieces, nation against nation and city against city." (7) strong, to continue in the way thus so well begun.

God's presence with a people (vs. 2). — I. What was the happiness which they enjoyed? The presence of God in His covenant of grace with any people, is the greatest glory and happiness they can enjoy. It includes — 1. The owning them as His own people ; 2. Assisting and prospering them in all this ; 3. Protecting them from all enemies. II. The condition upon which they held it. God will be with His people, their glory, portion, prosperity and protection, just as they are with Him. Learn :— To be with God is not merely to bear His name, to be called His people, to draw near to Him in external performances ; it is, to be a consecrated people, to be true worshippers, to be engaged in His service. — S. Marshall.

"Without a teaching priest," — not an ornament, nor a ceremonialist, but a teaching priest. A man whose business it was to expound the law and make the people understand it. So they preached in olden times ; they took the law syllable by syllable, explained it word by word, and sentence by sentence; they analyzed it, took it member from member. They put it together again and hurled it upon the people like a thunderbolt from heaven. They had naught else to expound, because they thought nothing else worthy of exposition. We are lost in details. Any man may get up a lecture if he has great quoting power. It is almost impossible not to get up a lecture ; the temptations are innumerable, and in many cases irresistible. Only one speech is worth listening to, that is the speech which begins in eternity, sweeps down through time, leaves behind it immortal lessons, and ascends to the fountain of origin. — Parker.

Asa abolishes idolatry

8—13. (8) prophecy of Oded, prob. some words have dropped out, and it should read, "the prophecy of Azariah the son of Oded."[c] abominable idols, R. V., "abominations," including the abominable things connected with the worship of idols.[d] (9) strangers, R. V., "them that sojourned." in abundance, so it may well be said that among the Jews, which name now arose in the S. kingdom. All Israel was represented. "From this time the disruption was irremediable." — Oehler. (10) fifteenth year, so this great battle was in the 15th yr. of his reign, and to celebrate it and attach to himself the people who had flocked to him, he proclaims a great feast and calls on the people to consecrate themselves to the God of Israel. (11) of the spoil,[e] as thank-offering. (12) to seek, by the covenant pledging themselves to seek. (13) put to death, De. xvii. 2-6.

[a] 1 Chr. xxviii. 9; Jer. xxix. 13.

[b] Illus. by Ju. v. 6.

"Let us not conceive of all genuine religion as moving in one groove of feeling and practice, and refuse to acknowledge any man as a Christian because he does not run upon our particular groove. There are several points of view from which Christianity may be surveyed ; and although it be one and the same object from whatever point we look, yet eyes placed on different levels will see it grouped in different perspectives." — Goulburn.

"Lord! let me rather wear out in the work than consume (like a garment laid by) with moths for want of use." — Swinnock.

[c] So read the Alex., Sept., the Syriac, and the Vulgate.

[d] Re. xvii. 4, 5.

[e] 2 Chr. xiv. 13, 15.

"Walking with God is the best way to confute them that think religion to be

Covenant. — Charles Kingsley wrote on entering his 22d year: "My birth-night. I have been for the last hour on the seashore; not dreaming, but thinking deeply and strongly, and forming determinations which are to affect my destiny through time and eternity. Before the sleeping earth, and the sleepless sea and stars, I have devoted myself to God — a vow never (if He gives me the faith I pray for) to be recalled." — Hom. Com.

B. C. 917-881.

but a notion; living religion will prove that there is religion."—Venning.

14—19. (14) loud voice, etc., indicating the national earnestness and joy. (15) rest, another period after the victory, like the one that preceded it. (16) Maachah, 1 Ki. xv. 13. mother, i. e. grandmother. queen, or queen-mother.[a] See note on 2 Chr. xiii. 2. an idol in a grove, etc., R. V., "an abominable image for an Asherah; and Asa cut down her image and made dust of it, etc." Kidron, 2 Sa. xv. 23. (17) high . . not taken away, some qualification is therefore necessary of such a passage as ch. xiv. 3, 5.[b] perfect, i. e. true, sincere. (18) dedicated, after his victory over Jeroboam.[c] (19) five and thirtieth, prob. shd. be five and twentieth, to accord with the chronology given in 1 Ki. xvi. 8.

Asa deposes Maachah

The best use for an idol. — Some years ago, Mr. Ward, a Christian missionary, in going through a village near Calcutta, left at a native shop a Bengalee New Testament, that it might be read by any of the villagers. About a year afterwards, three or four of the most intelligent of the inhabitants came to inquire further respecting the contents of the book left in their village. This ended in six or eight of them making a public profession of Christianity. Among these, one deserves peculiar notice. An old man, named Juggernath, who had long been a devotee to the idol of that name in Orissa, had made many pilgrimages thither, and had acquired such a name for sanctity that a rich man in Orissa was said to have offered him a pension for life, on condition of his remaining with him. On his becoming acquainted with the New Testament, he first hung his image of Khrishnoo, or Juggernath, which he had hitherto worshipped, on a tree in his garden, and at length cut it up to boil his rice. He remained steadfast in his profession of Christianity till his death. Two others, being men of superior natural endowments, employed themselves in publishing the doctrines of Christianity to their countrymen in the most fearless manner; while their conduct was such as to secure them universal esteem. — Cheever.

[a] "When Abijah was chosen above all his brothers as successor, she filled the high office known in Jerus., as in the Turkish Empire by a peculiar name — the queen-mother — Gebirah the Leader, the Sultana Valide; and her influence continued through his reign and that of her grandson Asa."—Stanley.

[b] "Same purpose to reconcile the apparent discrepancy by distinguishing two kinds of high places, those where Jehovah was worshipped and those dedicated to other gods." — Spk. Com.

[c] 2 Chr. xiii. 16-19.

CHAPTER THE SIXTEENTH.

1—6. (1) six and thirtieth, must be 26th year, comp. 1 Ki. xvi. 8. Baasha, 1 Ki. xv. 16, 17. Ramah, Jos. xviii. 25.[d] This implies the successful invasion of Judea and conquest of other cities. Ramah was on high ground "half way between Bethel and Jerusalem," and its occupation was a serious menace to Asa. go out, alarmed by the migration of his people (ch. xv. 9), he designed to stop all communication between the countries. (2) Ben-hadad, "the most powerful monarch in the region betw. Egypt and the Euphrates." — Rawlinson. Damascus, Ge. xiv. 15. (3) There is a, better, let there be a. break, etc., a league with the northern part of the country was more useful to Ben-hadad, unless he had designs of seizing Israelitish territory. (4) Ijon, 1 Ki. xv. 20.[e] Dan, Jos. xix. 47. Abel-maim, 1 Ki. xv. 20. store cities, 2 Chr. viii. 6. (5) building, fortifying. (6) Geba, Jos. xviii. 24. Mizpah, Ge. xxxi. 45-55. Asa tore down the fortifications of Baasha and used the material to fortify two cities some five miles from Jerusalem.

Baasha invades Judah

Bribery. — A man furnished with the arguments from the mint will convince his antagonist much sooner than one who draws them from reason and philosophy. Gold is a wonderful clearer of the understanding; it dissipates every doubt and scruple in an instant; accommodates itself to the meanest capacities; silences the loud and clamorous, and brings over the most obstinate and inflexible. Philip of Macedon was a man of most invincible reason this way. He refuted by it all the wisdom of Athens — confounded their statesmen, struck their orators dumb, and at length argued them out of their liberties. — Addison.

Heavenly treasure. — Use all diligence to gain such a treasure as lies above the reach of the storms of this world — a kingdom that cannot be shaken — namely, our peace with God in Christ, the pardon of our sin, and a well-grounded hope and assurance of eternal life. These are the things that lie out

[d] "As after the division of the kingdom there was a continual flow of the more piously disposed Israelites into Judah, Baasha endeavored to prevent this by fortifying Ramah."—Ayre.

[e] "The present name of the plain is Merj. Aiyun — a mere variation of the Heb. It is about 6 miles long and two broad, with a regular descent southward fr. a great mound at the north end.

B. C. 881-878.

The top of this mound is covered with the rubbish of the ancient city. Tradition makes this the site of Ijon."—Thomson.

of gun-shot, and will render the greatest troubles that can befall this lower world, or us in it, not only tolerable, but small and inconsiderable, when in the midst of all the concussion of the world, in the midst of losses of goods or estate, in the midst of storms, and confusions and, disasters, and calamities, a man can have such deep and settled considerations as these : — Though I can see nothing but confusion, and little hopes of their amendment, yet I have that which is out of the reach of all these ; that which is infinitely more valuable to me than the best which the world can give ; that which I can please and comfort myself in, notwithstanding all these worldly distractions and fears — namely, the assurance of my peace with the great God of heaven and earth. The worst that I can suffer by these discomposures and the most I can fear from them is but death ; and that will not only put a period to the things I suffer or can fear in this life, but will let me into the actual possession of my hopes, even such a state of glory and happiness as never can be ended or shaken. Such a hope and such an assurance as this will keep the soul above water, and in a state of peace and tranquillity, in all the tempests and shipwrecks that can befall either this inferior world or any person in it. — Sir M. Hale.

Hanani reproves Asa

a Comp. 2 Chr. xiv. 11; xv. 2, 7.

b Ge. x. 13.

c 1 Sa. xiii. 13.

d So called bec. the limits of the prisoner were so set and fixed as to be twisted and distorted in it. Jer. xx. 2; xxix. 26; Ac. xvi. 24.

"As there is no babe cradled and rocked that has not its mother, in the ordinary course of life, to overhang it by night and by day, to kiss it as it sleeps, and to cover it with smiles and caresses when it wakes, so every creature that is born into life has a God whose ever watchful soul broods tenderly over it by day and by night, and who interspheres it in His own radiant thought and feeling."—Beecher.

7—10. (7) Hanani, 1 Ki. xvi. 1. relied . . God, the condition of Asa's prosperity was the maintenance of that trust wh. had already led to victory.[a] escaped, i. e. an opportunity of victory had been lost. (8) Ethiopians, etc., 2 Chr. xiv. 9. Lubims, dwellers in a scorched land ; same as Libyans.[b] (9) foolishly, what Asa thought skilful diplomacy the prophet says was foolishness, because Asa had called on man rather than God for aid. Comp. Saul.[c] wars, comp. 2 Chr. xiv. 1, 6, 7: xv. 15. (10) prison house, Heb. house of distortion.[d] Comp. this treatment of Hanani with that of Azariah in xv. 2. This is the first case of persecution of the prophets. the people, for agreeing with the prophet.

The eyes of the Lord (vs. 9). — We have here — 1. The description of Providence. "The eyes of the Lord" in Scripture signify — 1. His knowledge; 2. His providence — the immediateness of providence — its celerity and speed — its extent — its diligence — its efficacy. II. The design of Providence. To show Himself strong, etc. 1. He has strong understanding and wisdom to contrive ; 2. Strong affections to love ; 3. Strong words to cheer and fortify; 4. A strong arm to exert almighty power. Remember the persons for whom — those who are truly gracious and sincere. — J. Ryland.

Omnipresence of God. — To the Hebrews the external universe is just a black screen concealing God. All things are full of, yet all distinct from Him. The cloud on the mountain is His covering; the muttering from the chamber of the thunder is His voice ; that sound on the top of the mulberry trees is His "going ;" in that wind, which bends the forest or curls the clouds, He is walking ; that sun is His still commanding eye. Whither can they go from His spirit? whither can they flee from His presence? At every step and in every circumstance they feel themselves God-enclosed, God-filled, God-breathing men, with a spiritual presence lowering or smiling on them from the sky, sounding in wild tempest, or creeping in panic stillness across the surface of the earth; and if they turn within, lo! it is there also, — an "eye" hung in the central darkness of their own hearts. Hence the Muse of the Hebrew bard is not Dame Memory, nor any of her siren daughters, but the almighty, all-pervading Spirit Himself, who is at once the subject, the auditor, and the inspirer of the song. — Gilfillan.

the death of Asa e 2 Chr. xxi. 19; Jer. xxxiv. 5.

"The burning of spices in honor of a king at his funeral, and the only peculiarity in the instance before us was the large quantity, and perhaps the rare quality of the spice burnt."—Spk. Com.

11—14. (11) book, etc., this is not the one preserved to us under this title, cf. note on xxvii. 7. (12) diseased in his feet, prob. by the gout. exceeding great, or moved upward, indic. the violent and dangerous type of the malady. physicians, his sin again consisted in his looking to man only and not to God for aid. "Physicians who were neither priests nor prophets of Jehovah were almost certain to be ministers of idolatrous worship and magicians." — Exp. Bib. (13) one and fortieth, 1 Ki. xv. 10. His reign was exceeded in length by two only (Uzziah, 52 yrs., and Manasseh, 55 yrs.), and from military and religious points of view was unsurpassed. He was about 60 yrs. old when he died. (14) sepulchres, rock tombs contained many places for bodies. sweet odours, comp. Mk. xvi. 1; Lu. xxiii. 56; xxiv. 1. burning, also of spices.[e]

The bed of sweet spices (vs. 14.) — According to a tradition that prevailed among the Turks, "an eminent prophet, who lived in Mesopotamia many ages ago, whose name was Zechariah, was beheaded by the prince of that country, on account of his virtuous opposition to some lewd scheme of his. His head he ordered to be put in a stone urn, two feet square, upon the top of which was an inscription, importing that the urn enclosed the head of that great prophet Zechariah. This urn remained in the castle of Aleppo till about 800 years ago, when it was removed into an old Christian church in that city, afterward turned into a mosque, which decaying, another was built near it, and the place where the head was deposited choked up by a wall." Mr. Drummond wrote this account in 1748. About the year 1708, a zealous grand vizier who pretended to have been admonished in a dream to remove this stone vessel into a more conspicuous place, had it removed accordingly, with many religious ceremonies, and affixed in a conspicuous part of the mosque; and at the close of all it is said, "The urn was opened and filled with spices and perfumes to the value of £400." Here we see in late times honor was done to the supposed head of an eminent saint, by filling its repository with odoriferous substances. The bed of sweet spices, in which Asa was laid, seems to have been of the same kind, or something very much like it. Might not large quantities of precious perfumes, in like manner, be strewed, or designed to be strewed about the body of our Lord? This would require large quantities. Zechariah of Mesopotamia had been dead so long that nothing of this kind could be done with any view to preserve his head from decay; it was merely to do him honor. The spices used by the Jews in burial might be for the same purpose.—Harmer.

B. C. 876.

"Kings then at last have but the lot of all,
By their own conduct they must stand or fall."
—Couper.

"Imperious Cæsar, dead and turned to clay, might stop a hole to keep the wind away; O! that the earth, which kept the world in awe, should patch a wall, to expel the winter's flaw!"—Shakespeare.

"Ambition mad, that stems alone the boisterous surge with bladders blown."—Hamilton.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTEENTH.

Jehoshaphat becomes king

1—6. (1) Jehoshaphat, whom Jehovah judges, 35 yrs. old when he began to reign. This chapter is given only in Chronicles. strengthened,[a] etc., prepared himself to resist, for Ahab is king in Israel, with Jezebel his queen, and there were certain cities on the N. frontier liable to be claimed by Israel. (2) forces, troops of soldiers. cities of Eph., 2 Chr. xv., 8. (3) Lord was with, graciously accepting and blessing him. first ways, better to read, "walked in the ways of his father David, the ancient ways." Baalim, a plural word. Everywhere in Israel, on the other hand, the worship of Baal, with its obscene rites, its priests or temples, was supplanting Jehovah worship. (5) presents,[b] in addition to the taxes. (6) lifted up, Keil translates, "His heart was exalted by the ways of Jehovah." high places, but it would seem from xx. 33 that he was not completely successful.

Fidelity to the faith and example of a pious ancestry. — I. It is an unspeakable blessing to have been born in the line of a Christian parentage. II. The relig. of our fathers has a strong presumptive claim upon our faith. III. The imitation of a godly ancestry is peculiarly pleasing to God. IV. It is an act of signal and relentless guilt to break the line of a pious heritage by a godless life. — Austin Phelps.

Example of earnestness. — When Dr. Chalmers occupied the chair of philosophy in the college of St. Andrews, he used to gather into his own house each Sabbath evening the poorest and most ignorant of the vagrant children of the neighborhood; and his biography states, that, for that audience, he prepared himself as carefully, with his pen in his hand, as for his class in the university. So, on a winter day through frost and in the face of a driving snow-storm, you might have seen him walking five miles to fulfil an appointment of religious worship with a little company of rustic people at Kilmany; and there, amid some illiterate, shivering cottagers, too few for a church or chapel, met in a damp room — an audience that many men would have thought it expedient to dismiss at once "on account of the weather," and many more would have put off with some crude, unpremeditated talk — he preached as labored and as eloquent a sermon as would have moved to rapture and wonder the learning and fashion of Glasgow or of London.

[a] "The temper and proceedings of the kings of Israel rendered it necessary for him to prepare vigorous measures of defense on the northern frontier of his kingdom, and these consisted in filling all the fortresses with their full complement of troops, and establishing military stations in various parts of the country, as well as in the cities of Mount Ephraim, which belonged to Jehoshaphat. (Ch. xv. 8)."—Jamieson.

[b] 1 Sa. x. 27.

B. C. 873.

he orders the word of the Lord to be taught

7—11. (7) to teach, not only destroying the false, but doing all he could to promote that wh. was true. "To promote religious knowledge among the people, a commission consisting of five high officials, two priests and nine Levites was sent about the country with the book of the law to instruct the people."— Oehler. Hitherto the dissemination of religious knowledge had been mainly by family tradition. (8) Levites, these were to be the actual teachers.[a] "These men are not mentioned anywhere else." (10) all the kingdoms, not since Solomon's time had so much respect been shown for this southern kingdom. (11) Philistines,[b] times had changed so that they now sought the strength of alliance with Judah. Arabians, Arab tribes south of Judah. flocks, paying their tribute in kind.[c]

B. C. cir. 873.

Religion and the nation. — There is not a sovereign in Europe or in the world but might read this chapter with advantage. 1. It shows most forcibly that true religion is the basis of the state; and that wherever it prospers, there the state prospers. 2. It shows also that it is the wisdom of kings to encourage religion with all their power and influence; for if the hearts of the subjects be not bound and influenced by true religion, vain is the application of laws, fines, imprisonments, or corporal punishment of any kind. 3. A religious nation is ever a great nation; it is loved by its friends, it is dreaded by its enemies. 4. It is ever a peaceful and united nation; the blessings of religion, and a wholesome and paternal government, are so fully felt and prized that all find it their interest to preserve and defend them. — A. Clarke.

Arabs. — The Arabs have effected, although in a rude way, far more than the Greeks and Romans towards making the eastern and western worlds acquainted with each other, and communicating arts and knowledge. These (until inspired with the fanaticism of a new religion) housekeeping barbarians pushed their religion, arms, arts and trade, within thirty years, to the western confines of India, and in eighty-eight years to Spain. They pushed their commerce into China and the remotest islands of the Indian Ocean, which neither Greek nor Roman had ever reached. We owe to their fanaticism cotton, coffee, the sugarcane and culture of sugar, paper, arithmetical notation, race horses, the whole citron and orange tribe of fruits, and all the various products of distillation. — Crawford.

a Le. x. 11; De. xvii. 9-11; Mal. ii. 7.

b The Philistine territory lay exposed to Egyptian ravages, 1 Ki. iv. 21.

c 2 Ki. iii. 4.

"Wherever the word of the Lord has had free course superstition has been chased away, human slavery has been abolished, every instance of intolerance, injustice, unkindness has felt the influence of holy thought." — Parker.

Jehoshaphat's prosperity

12—19. (12) castles, comp. ch. xxvii. 4, places of defense, situated for the protection of roads, or valleys opening into the country. cities of store, where provisions and ammunition could be kept in preparation of seige. (13) business, with special reference to building and repairing of cities. (14–18) "The enormous number of 780,000 men able to bear arms in Judah and 380,000 in Benjamin, making 1,160,000 men in all, may be due to the following causes — 1. Every man able to bear arms is enumerated; 2. Judah at this time included Simeon, part of Dan, and the auxiliaries from the Philistines and Arabs who were tributary, and Benjamin included the cities of Ephraim that were annexed to the southern kingdom; and, 3. Many had, on religious grounds, attached themselves to the kingdom of Judah (xv. 9)." — Murphy. Some reject the figures as incorrect.[d] (19) fenced cities, garrisons.

Activity. — Dr. Adam Clarke said that "the old proverb about having too many irons in the fire was an abominable old lie. Have all in it — shovel, tongs, and poker." Wesley said, "I am always in haste, but never in a hurry: leisure and I have long taken leave of each other." He traveled about five thousand miles in a year; preached about three times a day, commencing at five o'clock in the morning; and his published works amounted to about two hundred volumes. Asbury traveled six thousand miles a year, and preached incessantly. Coke crossed the Atlantic eighteen times, preached, wrote, traveled, established missions, begged from door to door for them, and labored in all respects as if, like the Apostles, he "would turn the world upside down." At nearly seventy years of age he started to Christianize India. — Stevens. Evils of inactivity. — What a mournful sight the observer may see in some of the outskirts of our huge city; row after row of houses all untenanted and forlorn. The owners had far better let them at the lowest rent than suffer them to remain empty, for the boys make targets of the windows, enterprising purveyors for the marine store shops rend off all the lead, thieves purloin every movable fitting, damp swells the window frames and doors, and mustiness makes the whole place wretched to all the senses; into the bargain the district gets a bad name, which it probably never loses. Better a poor tenant than a house running to ruin unused. The similitude may well suggest the desirableness of an object and a service to those Christians whose time is wasted in slothful ease. All sorts of mischief happens to unoccupied professors of religion: there is no evil from which they are secure; better would it be for them to accept the lowest occupation for the Lord Jesus than remain the victims of inaction. — Spurgeon.

d "Jehoshaphat's kingdom was not a third of Dav.'s. David's muster amounted to 1,300,000 men of valor. (2 Sa. xxiv. 9.) Jehoshaphat had 1,160,000." — Wordsworth.

"It is probable that the original numbers have been lost, and the loss supplied by a scribe, who took ch. xiv. 8 as his basis."—Spk. Com.

"If you have great talents, industry will improve them; if moderate abilities, industry will supply their deficiencies. Nothing is denied to well-directed labor; nothing is ever to be attained without it." — Sir J. Reynolds.

"Troubles spring from idleness, and grievous toils from needless ease." — Franklin.

B. C. 853.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTEENTH.

Jehoshaphat's alliance with Ahab

1—5. (1) had riches and honor, explains what follows. Having power, he wishes for more power. joined affinity, by marrying his son Jehoram to Ahab's daughter Athaliah.[a] xxi. 6. This was the greatest mistake of his reign, and had most disastrous consequences in after years, yet at the time it seemed advantageous. (2) after . . years, at least eight years after the marriage.[b] killed, etc., making a right royal feast for his guest. Ramoth-gilead, De. iv. 43. Ahab wished to wrest it fr. the king of Syria, and in the enterprise asked Jehosh.'s help. (3) as thou art, i. e. our interests are identical. (4) Enquire, since he expects to find a prophet of the Lord, the apostasy could not have been complete. (5) prophets, professedly Jehovah-prophets from the schools.[c]

The voice of prophecy. — Let us suppose that at the time when Britain was peopled by half-savage tribes, before the period of the Roman sway, some gifted seer among the Druids had engraven upon a rock a minute prediction of a portion of the future history of the island. Suppose he had declared that it should ere long be conquered by a warrior people from the south; that he should name the Cæsar himself, describe his eagle standard, and all the circumstances of the conquest. Suppose he should portray the Saxon invasion centuries after, the sevenfold division of the monarchy, the Danish inroad, the arrival and victory of the Normans. Our imagined prophet pauses here, or at whatever other precise period you please to suppose; and his next prediction, overleaping a vast undescribed interval, suddenly represents the England of the present day. Now conceive the forefathers of existing England to have studied this wondrous record, and to find, to their amazement, that every one of its predictions was accurately verified; that, as their generations succeeded, they but walked in the traces assigned for them by the prophetic inscription, and all it spoke progressively became fact. Can we suppose that, however far away in futurity was the one remaining event, and however impossible to them, at their early stage, to conceive the means by which all the present wonders of this mighty empire could ever be realized, they would permit themselves to doubt its absolute certainty after such overwhelming proofs of the supernatural powers of the seer who guaranteed it? Would they not shape their course as confidently in view of the unquestionable future as in reference to the unquestionable past? It should be thus with regard to the coming judgment.—Archer Butler.

a 2 Chr. xxi. 6; xxii. 2; 2 Ki. viii. 26.

b "The visit of Jehoshaphat to Ahab fell in Jehosh.'s seventeenth year. (1 Ki. xxii. 51.)"—Spk. Com.

c Ahab seems to have imitated heathen custom in thus getting the 400 together.

True religion derives its pedigree from heaven, and constantly moves toward heaven again. It is a beam from God, as "every good gift and every perfect gift is from above."

"Ah, curst ambition! to thy lures we owe all the great ills that mortals bear below." Tickell.

he is induced to go to Ramoth-gilead

6—11. (6) besides, "Josephus says that he understood by their language that they were false prophets."—Lumby. (7) hate him, as wilful men always hate those who resist them, and tell them the truth. Micaiah, not otherwise mentioned.[d] (8) officers, marg. eunuchs. (9) on his throne, portable ones, like chairs of state. void place, R. V., "open place;" immediately within the gate.[e] (10) horns of iron,[f] according to the custom of the prophets he enforces his message by symbol. This one signifies irresistible power. Zedekiah is a false prophet. (Cf. 1 Ki. xi. 30.) (11) prophesied so, they knew what Ahab wished to hear, and also how he received unfavorable prophecies.

Flattery. — What an appalling illustration is here of the fact that men love to be flattered and encouraged even at the expense of everything holy and true. Ahab was satisfied so long as the prophet ran along the current of his own will. When men agree with us we think they are inspired; when they sanction our plans we look upon them as messengers sent from heaven to comfort us with special revelations: so we cannot get away from the self centre; we judge everything by our own feeling and relation to it; we have not denied ourselves, crucified ourselves, obliterated ourselves; our self-vanity is full of vitality, and is open to every impression that may be made upon it of a flattering and encouraging nature. It is almost impossible for a man to stand really outside of himself under great crises, and to judge of his own position as he would judge of the position of another man. It is this impossibility which invests spiritual communion with God with its highest importance, and elevates prayer to its loftiest usefulness. — J. Parker.

Human power. — Man conquers the sea and its storms. He climbs the heavens, and searches out the mysteries of the stars. He harnesses the lightning. He bids the rocks dissolve, and summons the secret atoms to give up their names and laws. He subdues the face of the world, and compels the forces of the d 1 Ki. xxii. 8-28.

e "The meidan or 'open place,' is large, and is used for military displays, for the game of the jerid, or javelin, on horseback, and as a camping ground for camels; hence it is never paved." Van Lennep.

f De. xxxiii. 17; Ps. xliv. 5; Da. viii. 4.

"O cursed ambition—thou devouring bird, how dost thou from the field of honesty pick every grain of profit or delight, and mock the reaper's toil!"—Harvard.

B.C. 853.

"The hypocrite sets his watch, not by the sun, that is, the Bible, but by the town clock; what most do, that he will do." — Gurnell (1671).

waters, and the fires, to be his servants. He makes laws, hurls empires down upon empires in the fields of war, speaks words that cannot die, sings to distant realms and peoples across vast ages of time; in a word, he executes all that is included in history, showing his tremendous energy in almost everything that stirs the silence and changes the conditions of the world. Everything is transformed by him, even up to the stars. Not all the winds and storms and earthquakes and seas and seasons of the world have done so much to revolutionize the world as he has done since the day he came forth upon it, and received, as he is most truly declared to have done, dominion over it.— Bushnell.

Micaiah's adverse prediction

12—17. (12) speak thou good; he knows what is desired by king and court. (13) my God saith, he expects to be taught of God. (14) and prosper, he does not say, "Ye shall prosper." He only says, if you prosper they shall be delivered, etc. An illus. of the equivocal character of an oracle. (15) How many times, then Ahab has often consulted Micaiah. adjure, Jos. vi. 26. but the truth, Ahab saw he was making game of him. (16) I did see,[a] He was taught, then, in a vision, cf. Nu. xxvii. 17. no master, the expedition would end in Ahab's death. (17) but evil, attributing the prophet's words to personal enmity.[b]

A faithful ministry.—1. The necessity imposed on faithful ministers to speak the truth. God requires it, needful to the welfare of the people, and consequences of neglect fearful. 2 The results of speaking truth. Hated by those in authority, ridiculed and opposed by rivals, treated with indifference, cruelty, and death.—Hom. Com.

Not afraid to be poor.—After Dr. Gill had written against a gentleman whose publications he considered erroneous, he was waited on by some of his friends, who endeavored to dissuade him from persevering; and among other things, they intimated to him that he might lose the subscriptions of some wealthy person. "Do not tell me of losing," said the doctor; "I value nothing in comparison with the Gospel. I am not afraid to be poor." A faithful minister.— "Soon after I began to preach the Gospel at Everton, the churches in the neighborhood were deserted, and mine so overcrowded that the squire, who 'did not like strangers,' he said, 'and hated to be incommoded,' joined with the offended parsons; and soon after, a complaint having been made against me, I was summoned before the bishop. 'Well, Berridge,' said his lordship, 'did I institute you to Eaton or Potten? Why do you go preaching out of your own parish?' 'My lord,' said I, 'I make no claim to the livings of those parishes. 'Tis true I was once at Eaton, and, finding a few poor people assembled, I admonished them to repent of their sins, and to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ for the salvation of their souls. At that very moment, my lord, there were five or six clergymen out of their own parishes, and enjoying themselves on the Eaton bowling green.' 'I tell you,' retorted his lordship, 'that if you continue preaching where you have no right, you will very likely be sent to Huntingdon jail.' His lordship then pathetically entreated me, as one who had been and wished to continue my friend, not to embitter the remaining portion of his days by any squabbles with my brother clergymen, but to go home to my parish: and so long as I kept within it, I should be at liberty to do what I liked there. 'As to your conscience,' said his lordship, 'you know that preaching out of your parish is contrary to the canons of the church.' 'There is one canon, my lord,' said I, 'which I dare not disobey, and that says, Go preach the Gospel to every creature!'" — Berridge.

[a] "In the vision which he describes we feel that we are gradually drawing nearer to the times of the later prophets. It is a vision which might rank with those of Isaiah or Ezekiel." Stanley.

[b] Comp. 1 Ki. xxii. 11-18.

"Go teach the eagle, when in azure heaven he upward darts to seize his madden'd prey, shiv'ring through the death circle of its fear, to pause and let 'scape, and thou may'st win man to forego the sparkling round of power when it floats airily within his grasp." — Talfourd.

Micaiah continues his reproof

18—22. (18) Therefore hear, in fuller, plainer terms the Divine will. the Lord, etc., comp. Job. i. 6, 7; Is. vi. 1-4. (19) entice, persuade, deceive.[c] (20) a spirit, Heb. the spirit;[d] spirits are the instruments of God in His guidance of human events. "The spirit" spoken of here is in keeping with that Hebrew habit of representing even evil as permitted by God and guided to His own uses. Oehler called this the point of "transition to the doctrine of Satan." (cf. 1 Chr. xxi. 1; Job. i.; Zech. iii.). Wherewith, or in what way. (21) lying spirit, so that when he consults them he may be led to rush upon his ruin.[e]

Enticement is the deadly plague of life. The lying spirit has a subtle tongue; he does not proceed with broad dogmatic propositions, he has nothing of a violent nature to suggest or propose; it is, to the end of the line, to the turning of the corner, to the ascent of the hill; it is resting a while, then walking

[c] 1 Ki. xxii. 20.

[d] "Prefer rendering, 'the spirit' corresponding to the requirements in the preceding question of Jehovah." — Spk. Com.

[e] "The details of a vision cannot a while, or returning, and reascending — the liar by our side all the while watching the pulsation of the soul that he may know how the enticement is proceeding. Life itself is a temptation; to live is to die. How often have we laid down the doctrine that to be is to be in pain. This is the mystery of life. Life without pain would be life without joy; life without winter would be life without summer; heaven would be a surprise to us of an unwelcome kind if we had not made acquaintance with temptation and sin and sorrow whilst we were upon the earth. — J. Parker.

B. C. 853.

safely be pressed any more than the details of a parable."—Spk. Com.

23–28. (23) smote, prob. with his shoe; a most insulting thing to do.[a] (24) an inner chamber, or from chamber to chamber; wh. he would do fr. the wrath of Jezebel at what resulted fr. following his counsels. (25) carry him back, would seem to imply that he had been in the care of Amon before. governor, whose duty it was to arrange for prisoners. (26) feed, etc., treat him with severity.[b] (27) Hearken, calling the whole assembly to witness to his words. (28) In spite of the prophecy which he had sought, Jehoshaphat goes to the war.

Zedekiah smites Micaiah

Lessons from Micaiah. — 1. The nobility of true courage. 2. The certainty that good men will suffer for their goodness. 3. The reality of an overruling Providence. 4. The infallibility of God's Word. — Whitelaw.

Test of faithfulness. — Bishop Hooper was condemned to be burned at Gloucester, in Queen Mary's reign. A gentleman with the view of inducing him to recant, said to him, "Life is sweet, and death is bitter." Hooper replied, "The death to come is more bitter, and the life to come more sweet. I am come hither to end this life, and suffer death, because I will not gainsay the truth I have here formerly taught you." When brought to the stake, a box, with a pardon from the queen in it, was set before him. The determined martyr cried out, "If you love my soul, away with it! if you love my soul, away with it!" Fruits of faithful service. — "After Mr. Hill had preached for the Missionary Society in Prince's Street Chapel, Davenport, two tall, venerable-looking men, upwards of seventy years of age, appeared at the vestry door. After a short pause they entered, arm in arm, and advanced towards Mr. Hill, when one of them, with some degree of trepidation, inquired, 'Sir, will you permit two old sinners to have the honor to shake you by the hand?' He replied, with some reserve, 'Yes, sir;' when one of the gentlemen took his hand, kissed it, bathed it with tears, and said, 'Sir, do you remember preaching on the spot where this chapel now stands, fifty years ago?' 'Yes, I do,' was the reply. The old man then proceeded to say, 'Oh, sir, never can the dear friend, who has hold of my arm, or myself, forget that sermon. We were then two careless young men in his Majesty's dockyard, posting to destruction as fast as time and sin could convey us thither. Having heard that a young clergyman was to preach out of doors, we determined to go and have some fun. We loaded our pockets with stones, intending to pelt you; but, sir, when you arrived, our courage failed, and as soon as you engaged in prayer, we were so deeply impressed, that we looked at each other and trembled. When you named your text, and began to speak, the Word came with power to our hearts; the tears rolled down our cheeks; we put our hands into our pockets and dropped the stones one after another, until they were all gone; for God had taken away the stone from our hearts. When the service was over, we retired; but our hearts were too full to speak, until we came near to our lodgings, when my friend at my elbow said, 'John, this will not do; we are both wrong, — good night.' This was all he could utter: he retired to his apartment, — I to mine; but neither of us dared to go to bed, lest we should awake in hell. From that time, sir, we humbly hope we were converted to God, who, of His infinite mercy, has kept us in His ways to the present moment. We thought, sir, if you would permit us, after the lapse of half a hundred years, to have the pleasure of shaking you by the hand before we go home, it would be the greatest honor that could be conferred on us."— T. Jackson.

[a] "In contrast with this one sublime prophet in the vulgar advocate of the popular view of the moment, Zedekiah. He is the first of a type that we meet frequently afterwards, — one filled with a spirit of prophecy, not fr. any false doctrine, but from narrow and interested motives, leaning on the feeblest auguries, the most accidental tokens." Stanley.

[b] Comp. Ac. xvi. 23, 24.

"The great bell of Moscow is too large to be hung; the question arises, what was the use of making it? Some preachers are so learned that they cannot make themselves understood, or else cannot bring their minds to preach plain Gospel sermons; here, too, the same question might be asked."— C. H. Spurgeon.

29–34. (29) disguise, indic. his fear of the truth of Micaiah's words. thy robes, royal robes. This Jehosh. might do in safety, as no prophecy threatened him. Undoubtedly the two kings could be distinguished, each from the other, by the robes they were accustomed to wear. The king of Israel simply does not put on his royal robes. (31) cried out, called on God to help him, and He did so by showing them that this was not the king of death of Ahab

B. C. 853.

Israel. (32) captains, etc., on whom it specially rested to secure Ahab. (33) at a venture, not "at random," nor without aim, but not knowing whom he was aiming at. joints, parts where the pieces of armor fitted together.[a] (34) stayed, etc., nobly keeping the battle up.[b] In 1 Ki. xxii. 36, we are told that the battle closed with the cry "every man to his city and every man to his own country."

[a] "The 'joints' were prob. pieces of armor wh. attached the breastplate to the helmet, or to the greaves. The arrow entered bet. the breastplate and one of these 'joints.' Breastplates made of metal scales were common both in Egypt and Assyria."—Spk. Com.

Bow at a venture.—1. We do not know what harm we do by our most casual strokes. We "draw a bow at a venture," we "send an arrow through the air;" it is only a sentence, it is a very simple deed, we think; but it hits and wounds a sensitive human heart; it may even slay a soul. It may cause such grief as we would on no account have inflicted if we could have foreseen it; it may lead to the first declension of a valuable human life, and may end in such spiritual disaster as it would grieve us indeed to originate. 2. We cannot tell what good we do by our simplest efforts. Little did the Syrian soldier suppose that by that shot of his arrow he was to serve his royal master as he did. It is a most cheering and inspiring thought that we cannot tell what kind or measure of good we are effecting by our everyday service of our Lord. A kindly smile, a gracious recognition, an encouraging word, a neighborly kindness, a warning utterance, the taking of "a class," the giving of "an address," the conduct of "a service," perhaps under the humblest roof, or to the most unpromising audience, may prove to be a most valuable contribution to the cause of Jesus Christ, to the service of mankind. — Clarkson.

[b] 1 Ki. xxii. 29–36.

Bow at a venture. — It is marvellous to note on what small contingencies depends our life. An accidental blow, an unexpected fall, a mistake in drinking out of the wrong cup, a misstep in the dark, a fly, a fishbone, the smallest things often occasion its termination. This fact is serious enough to cool ambition, make us thoughtful in merriest moods, and watchful against any surprise that death may have in reserve for us. — Hom. Com.

CHAPTER THE NINETEENTH.

Jehoshaphat is reproved by Jehu

1—4. (1) in peace, the Syrians not pressing their victory. (2) Jehu, 1 Ki. xvi. 1–4, 7, 12. went out, so taking the very moment of his return from Ahab. ungodly, i. e. Ahab. wrath, etc., good men's sins do not pass unnoticed. (3) good things, ch. xvii. 4–6. groves, R. V., "Asheroth."[c] prepared thine heart, art rightly disposed, though thou hast acted injudiciously. (4) went out again, he receives the prophet's rebuke humbly and sets at once to correct the ways of his people. Contrast with xvi. 10.

[c] 2 Chr. xvii. 6.

A merciful mitigation. — While condemning the king's sins, Jehu did not forget to make candid acknowledgment of the king's virtues. To praise another for good qualities is not so easy as to blame another for bad ones. In others, faults are more readily discerned than favorable points; in ourselves, the latter more quickly than the former. Happily, the great Heart-searcher, while noting His people's shortcomings, overlooks not their well-doings. If Jehoshaphat's conduct in contracting alliance with Ahab was denounced, his behavior in removing the groves from his land and preparing his heart to seek Jehovah was not forgotten. So of Christians, "God is not unrighteous to forget their work and labor of love" (He. vi. 10), even though obliged to correct them for doing wrong (He. xii. 10); while Christ, sending His messages to the churches in Asia, with one exception never omits to notice in each case excellences worthy of commendation (Re. iii. iv.). — Whitelaw.

"A man in the right, with God on his side, is in the majority, though he be alone; for God is multitudinous above all the nations of the earth." — Beecher.

The spirit of religion. — It must be understood that "being religious" is not a work apart by itself, but a spirit of faith and righteousness flowing out from the centre of a regenerate heart into all the enjoyments and intercourse of the world. Not merely the preacher in the pulpit, and the saint on his knees, may do the work of religion; but the mechanic who smites the hammer and drives the wheel; the artist seeking to realize his pure idea of the beautiful: the mother in the gentle offices of home; the statesman in the forlorn hope of liberty and justice; and the philosopher, whose thought treads reverently among the splendid mysteries of the universe. — Chapin.

We usually take three meals a day for the body. Would it not be as well to give the soul as many meals?

Jehoshaphat's reforms

5—11. (5) judges,[d] possibly he removed such as were negligent or unfaithful, and appointed new ones. (6) in the judgment, when you give a judgment. (7) iniquity, in its sense of inequality, or undue leaning to one side.[e] (8) judgment, a supreme court according to the injunction in De. xvii. 8, 9.

[d] De. xvi. 18; 1 Chr. xxiii. 4.

[e] De. x. 17; xvi. 19. "I like to be at my controversies, ordinary civil cases. (9) perfect heart, not perfunctorily, but in the true spirit of service. (10) blood and blood, Ex. xxi. 12–23, "in cases of life and death. law, the ruling principle. commandment, precepts in particular. statutes, written laws. judgments, precedents for like cases. warn, advise in these matters." — Murphy. (11) chief priest, or high priest. matters of the Lord, as vs. 8. king's matters, same as controversies, vs. 8; two men appointed to preside over this court, one in ecclesiatical cases, the other in civil cases.

A just magistrate. — Peter the Great frequently surprised the magistrates by his unexpected presence in the cities of the empire. Having arrived without previous notice at Olonez, he went first to the regency, and inquired of the governor how many suits were depending in the Court of Chancery. "None, sire," replied the governor. "How happens that?" "I endeavor to prevent law-suits, and conciliate the parties; I act in such a manner that no traces of difference remain on the archives; if I am wrong, your indulgence will excuse me." "I wish," replied the Czar, "that all governors would act on your principles. Go on, God and your sovereign are equally satisfied." — Whitecross.

B. C. cir. 853.

post, doing my duty; indifferent whether one set or another govern, provided they govern well." — Sir J. Moore.

CHAPTER THE TWENTIETH.

1—4. (1) other beside the Ammonites, R. V., "some of the Ammonites," prob. an error for Mehunim[a] (cf. xxvi. 7), who appear to have lived near Mount Seir, on the south of the Moabites. (2) beyond the sea, the Dead Sea. on this side Syria, R. V., "from Syria;" Heb. "Aram;" prob. should be "from Edom," the letters r and d being very like in the Hebrew character. Edom was southeast of Judah, from which these troops might readily come to En-gedi on the west shore of the Salt Sea." — Murphy. Hazazon-tamar, Ge. xiv. 7.[b] (3) to seek the Lord, the only right thing to do. a fast,[c] so that seeking the Lord might be national. (4) they came, to Jerusalem.

Jehoshaphat proclaims a fast

a Spk. Com. suggests Maonites.

b 1 Sa. xxiii. 29.

c Ju. xx. 26; 1 Sa. vii. 6.

Be just and fear not.
Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's.
— Shakespeare.

"Whosoever denies that, spite of all hindrances from individual wickedness, right shall not ultimately prevail, impugns not alone human justice, but the justice of God."

"Seek God upon the way, and He will come to thee." — Schiller.

Lessons. — 1. The hostility of the world-powers to the church of God exemplified in this combination against Judah. 2. The distinction between fear and cowardice in front of danger, illustrated by the behavior of Jehoshaphat. 3. The place and value of fasting in religion. 4. The best defense for a nation in the time of peril — prayer and piety. 5. The duty and advantage of kings and peoples standing shoulder to shoulder when their safety is threatened. — Whitelaw.

Affinity with God in prayer. — It is a great truth, that if we desire to gain anything from the Most High, our minds must be set, more or less, to the same key as His. If two harps be strung to the same key, but not otherwise, when one of them is struck, the other gives a responsive sound. There must be some secret affinity in nature between the lightning of heaven and the conductor which draws it down — between the steel and the magnet which attracts it — between the light substances and the chafed glass or sealing wax, towards which they leap up and cling. And in grace there must be a secret affinity between God and the soul (this affinity itself being the effect of grace) before the soul can lay hold of God's will, and draw out a blessing from Him, yea, draw God Himself into it. This affinity stands in love. — Goulburn.

B. C. 853–851.

5—9. (5) the new court, the outer court, which was open to the public, the inner court being that of the priests, which was anciently the only one. In this court, which was a place of public assembly, the king, in the midst of his people, sought the help of God for the nation. (6) art not thou, this questioning form naturally expresses the king's fears. (7) thy friend, El-Khalil.[d] (8) sanctuary, ref. is to Sol.'s temple. (9) If, when evil, etc., comp. Sol.'s great prayer.[e]

Jehoshaphat's prayer

d Is. xli 8; Jas. ii. 23.

e 1 Ki. viii 22-53.

Jehoshaphat's prayer. — What a prayer-meeting — a real one, a united one, with a definite object, and the king presiding! Notice the prayer (vs. 5). It is a pattern one. Jehoshaphat felt his weakness and need; but he recognized that God is all, and over all, and has all power and might. He brings forward every plea and argument. He appeals to God's power and promises, to his justice and love, and winds up with simple yet prevailing faith in God Himself. "We have no might, neither know we what to do; but our eyes are upon thee" (vs. 12). Placing all the responsibility on God, and they just looking to Him, waiting for Him: God answered at once. — Capt. Dawson, in "Thoughts in the Valleys."

Christ's righteousness, pleaded in the court of justice, is our full and final discharge.

It lightens the stroke to draw near to Him who handles the rod.

B. C. 853-851.

10–13. (10) and mount Seir, comp. vs. 1. wouldest not, etc. De. ii. 9. (11) reward us, evil for good. (12) no might, sense of helplessness to set them wholly leaning on Div. strength. our eyes, the attitude of dependence, prayer and expectancy.[a] (13) with . . children, the whole congregation, men, women, and children, join in the prayer. The little ones are the wives and children (Ex. xii. 37).

Jehoshaphat's prayer (vs. 12). — From this prayer we learn — I. That the demands made upon us by great afflictions and troubles are utterly beyond the power of self-help. II. That spiritual hostilities and temptations cannot be repelled by human sagacity and strength. III. That a consciousness of our own weakness is one of the most indispensable requisites to all spiritual success. IV. That in all straits and difficulties, temporal or spiritual, it is the path of safety and of peace to have a fixed eye on the Divine all-sufficiency. This includes — 1. A conviction of God's presence; 2. A spirit of importunate prayer; 3. A lively expectation of deliverance; 4. An acquiescence in the Divine will.

Jehoshaphat's prayer. — Meanwhile the great assemblage stood in the attitude of supplication before Jehovah, not a gathering of mighty men of valor praying for blessing upon their strength and courage, but a mixed multitude, men and women, children and infants, seeking sanctuary, as it were, at the temple, and casting themselves in their extremity upon the protecting care of Jehovah. Possibly when the king finished his prayer the assembly broke out into loud, wailing cries of dismay and agonized entreaty; but the silence of the narrative rather suggests that Jehoshaphat's strong, calm faith communicated itself to the people, and they waited quietly for Jehovah's answer, for some token or promise of deliverance. Instead of the confused cries of an excited crowd, there was a hush of expectancy, such as sometimes falls upon an assembly when a great statesman has risen to utter words which will be big with the fate of empires. — W. H. Bennett.

a Ps. xxv. 15; cxli. 8.

"There is no man's case so dangerous as his whom Satan hath persuaded that his own righteousness shall present him pure and blameless in the sight of God. The best things we do have somewhat in them to be pardoned. How then can we do anything meritorious, and worthy to be rewarded?"—Hooker.

"Prayer without watching is hypocrisy; and watching without prayer is presumption."—Jay.

the message of Jahaziel

14–19. (14) Jahaziel is traced to Mattaniah or Nethaniah, son of Asaph (1 Chr. xxv. 2). This prophet is parallel with Amariah (1 Chr. vi. 11). came the Spirit, ch. xv. 1. (15) but God's, i. e. you have put the matter into God's hands, and He will wholly undertake it for you. (16) cliff of Ziz, R. V., "ascent of Ziz," the pass wh. leads northwards, by an ascent fr. Engedi to Jerusalem, issuing a little below Tekoa. brook, R. V., "valley." wilderness of Jeruel, this means that the enemy is to come from the coast up one of the valleys to the highlands, and there to be met by the forces of Judah, near Tekoa. (17) stand, etc., do nothing; watch the Lord's doings.[b] (18) face to the ground, the extreme attitude of worship.[c] (19) Korhites, a family of the Kohathites specially distinguished for musical ability; "as the Levites sang when the foundations of the second temple were laid, and when Ezra and Nehemiah made the people enter into a new covenant with their God."—Exp. Bib.

b Ex. xiv. 13, 14; Nu. xiv. 9.

c Ex. iv. 31.

That eloquent statesman, Henry Clay, had just propounded a political scheme to an associate. "It will ruin your prospects for the presidency," suggested his friend. "Is it right?" said Mr. Clay. "Yes," was the answer. Mr. Clay continued, "I would rather be right than president."

Victory the gift of God (vs. 15). — I. Let us therefore address our tribute of praise to God for every success in war. II. Let us remember that war, however it may, in answer to a nation's prayers, be crowned with victory, must be considered as a judgment. Learn — That we are all soldiers of Christ. That we have to be diligent at our posts. That if we succeed, it is God who giveth us the victory. — J. B. Smith.

The way of success. — The men whom I have seen succeed best in life have always been cheerful and hopeful men, who went about their business with a smile on their faces, and took the changes and chances of their mortal life like men facing rough and smooth alike as it came, and so found the truth of the old proverb, that "Good times and bad times, and all times pass over." — C. Kingsley. It is a great thought on this subject, that the human race furnishes but a small part of the holy ministries of this world. The ministry of angels probably swells what we call minorities to secret majorities. "Are they not all ministering spirits?" Invisible multitudes probably fill the air with their busy pinions in service to the right. One of England's great poets says of a noted champion of liberty: —

"In extemporary prayer, what men most admire God least regardeth — namely, the volubility of the tongue. Oh! it is the heart keeping time and tone with the voice which God listeneth unto."—Thomas Fuller.

> "Thou hast left behind
> Powers that will work for thee; air, earth and skies;
> There's not a breathing of the common winds
> That will forget thee. Thou hast great allies.

. . . Winds blow and waters roll Strength to the brave."

B. C. 853-851.

But the friend of Christ has allies more imperial than skies and winds and waters. — Prof. Phelps.

20—25. (20) wilderness of Tekoa, the direction in wh. to meet the enemy. This was the act that tested their faith. Believe, literally "fasten, or stay your heart upon God, so shall ye be stayed." This and Is. vii. 9 are the best statements of O. T. faith. Comp. Ps. cxii. 7. (21) consulted, so that there might be unity in the work of praise. beauty of holiness, this is the spirit in wh. they should praise.[a] (22) ambushments, it was a miraculous overthrow. A foretaste of the final combat spoken of in Haggai ii. 21–22. "From what quarter they came is not stated. But it is not unlikely that they were men from Edom, through whose territory the foe had come. A panic ensued. Ammon and Moab attacked the Seirites, whom they regarded as traitors. And when they had made an end of them, they fell on one another." — Murphy. (24) dead bodies, by the time they arrived the conflict was over.

Jehoshaphat's exhortation

[a] Comp. 1 Chr. xvi. 29; Ps. xxix. 2.

Faith the means of national and personal prosperity. — It is our intention to show — I. What is implied in the faith here recommended. I. A renunciation of all false confidences; 2. A simple affiance in God. Let us consider — II. Its influence on our welfare. It has a favorable aspect on — 1. Our national prosperity; 2. Our personal welfare. — Simeon.

"Ps. 83 seems to have been written on the occasion of the hallelujah victory." — Perowne. Perhaps also Ps 47. Ps. 82, "If not called forth by this step, corresponds exactly with this appeal of Jehoshaphat." — Stanley.

A hallelujah victory. — If you ever go to the northern part of Wales, not very far from Chester, you may visit a place called Maes-y-garmon, or the field of Germanus, and may see an obelisk standing there to commemorate a victory said to have been won in the year 448 by Christian Britons over the heathen Picts and Scots. One of the generals on the British side was a missionary named Germanus. "Germanus," says Fuller, "chose a place surrounded by hills near the village, where he placed his men in ambush, with instructions that at a signal they should all shout 'Hallelujah' three times with all their might, which was done accordingly. The pagans were surprised with the suddenness and loudness of such a sound, which was multiplied by the echo, whereby their fear brought in a false list of the enemy's number. Without striking a stroke they confusedly ran away, and many were drowned for speed in the river Alen. That hallelujah, the song of the saints after conquest achieved, was here the forerunner and procurer of victory. So good a grace it is to be said both before and after a battle."— S. Green.

"The sense seems to be that God turned against the invaders the ambush wh. they had set against Israel. Wordsworth.

"Faith in God's presence, and God's promise, gives courage in conflict, and establishes peace and prosperity.—Hom. Com.

26—30. (26) Berachah, blessing, Wady Bereikut, 2 m. W. of Tekoa. (27) forefront, as leader. (28) psalteries, etc., as 1 Chr. xiii. 8.[b] A most picturesque event. They marched against the enemy led by the Levites singing praises. They found the foe dead on the field, and after despoiling them they returned again singing. (29) fear, wh. brought further blessing to the land, confirming its security from attack. (30) quiet, fr. other invasions.

the valley of blessing

[b] Comp. No. xii. 43.

Asking a blessing. — Learn to ask God's blessing on little things as well as well as great. There is nothing which it is right for us to do, but it is also right to ask that God would bless it; and, indeed, there is nothing so little but the frown of God can convert it into the most sad calamity, or His smile exalt it into a most memorable mercy; and there is nothing we can do, but its complexion for weal or woe depends entirely on what the Lord will make it. A late physician, of great celebrity, used to ascribe much of his success to three maxims of his father's, the last and best of which was "Always pray for your patients."— D. Hamilton.

"Prayer draws all the Christian graces into its focus. It draws Charity with her lovely train; Repentance with her holy sorrow; Faith with her elevated eye; Hope with her grasped anchor; Benevolence with her opened hand." — Hannah More.

31—37. (31) mother's name, given to show that he was a genuine born Israelite. (32) departed not, wilfully, or wholly. Slips he made, but no falls. (33) high places were not, etc., comp. ch. xvii. 6, ref. may be to high places at wh. Jehovah worship was offered. for as yet . . hearts, R. V., "Neither as yet had the people set their hearts." (34) Jehu, see ch. xix. 2. who is mentioned, R. V., "which is inserted," cf. notes on xxxii. 32; xxvii. 7; xxxv. 27. See 1 Ki. xvi. 1. (35) join himself,[c] in a commercial alliance, needful to Ahaziah, as securing the trade of the Red Sea. (36) Tarshish, prob. Tartessus in Spain. Ezion-gaber, 1 Ki. ix. 26, cf. account in 1 Ki.

end of the reign of Jehoshaphat

[c] 1 Ki. xxii. 44-49.

"I want the Lamb's fountain every day, His intercession every

B. C. cir. 851.

xxii. 48, 49. The chronicler alone explains the cause of misfortunes which befell Jehoshaphat in his latter years. (37) Mareshah, Jos. xv. 44. broken, wrecked.

Heredity.— "Lord! I find the genealogy of my Saviour strangely checkered with four remarkable changes in four immediate generations. (1) Roboam begat Abia; i. e. a bad father begat a bad son. (2) Abia begat Asa; i. e. a bad father a good son. (3) Asa begat Josaphat; i. e. a good father a good son. (4) Josaphat begat Joram; i. e. a good father, a bad son. I see, Lord, from hence that my father's piety cannot be entailed: that is bad news for me. But I see also that actual impiety is not always hereditary; that is good news for my son."— Thomas Fuller.

Associates.— Do not choose your associates amongst those who do not fear the Lord. Always safest to keep under Christian influences. A man is rarely better than the company he keeps. Jehoshaphat may hope to bring Ahaziah up to his own level; but Ahaziah is much more likely to bring Jehoshaphat down. The lesson of the text bears also, and with peculiar point, upon all business alliances. You will do well even to sacrifice a measure of financial interest and worldly prospect rather than be associated in business with a man who is out of all sympathy with you in religion.— J. Thain Davidson.

moment; and would not give a groat for the broadest fig leaves, or the brightest human rags to cover me. A robe I must have of one whole piece, broad as the law, spotless as the light, and richer than an angel ever wore— the robe of Jesus." — Berridge.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIRST.

Jehoram begins his reign

1—7. (1) Jehoram, comp. 2 Ki. viii. 16. He had been associated with his father in government for two years before his father's death. One of the worst kings of Israel. During his reign Edom (vs. 8) gained its independence (Jo. iii. 19) and about this time began the captivity of Israel, as many Jews were carried off by Philistines into bondage. Jo. iii. 3-6; Am. i. 6. (2) Azariah, 2 sons appear with the same name, in Heb.; however, one is spelt Azariahu. Israel, not the northern kingdom, but put for Judah. (3) fenced cities, of wh. they were governors:[a] so they were not dependent on, and would not trouble, the reigning king. first-born, this was the general law, though exceptions occurred as in case of Solomon and Abijah (2 Chr. xi. 22) and Jehoahaz, who was chosen by the people (2 Ki. xxiii. 30). (4) slew . . sword, an act so violent as to indic. the advice of Jezebel.[b] of the princes, suspected as belonging to the party. Israel, see note vs. 2. (5) eight years, only six sole kings. (6) Israel, here distinctly the northern kingdom. the daughter of Ahab, i. e. Athaliah, called the daughter (2 Ki. viii. 26), that is the granddaughter of Omri. (7) not destroy,[c] i. e. at once. This vs. explains God's patience with Jehoram.

Slaughter of princes.— He was following the precedent set by Solomon when he ordered the execution of Adonijah; and, indeed, the slaughter by a new sovereign of all those near relations who might possibly dispute his claim to the throne has usually been considered in the East to be a painful but necessary and perfectly justifiable act, being, in fact, regarded in much the same light as the drowning of superfluous kittens in domestic circles. Probably this episode is placed before the introductory formula for the reign because until these possible rivals were removed Jehoram's tenure of the throne was altogether unsafe. — Bennett.

a Comp. 2 Chr. xi. 23.

b "Similar tragedies have been sadly frequent in Eastern courts, where the heir of the crown looks upon his brothers as his most formidable enemies, and is therefore tempted to secure his power by their death." — Jamieson.

c 2 Sa. vii. 12-14; 1 Ki. xi. 36; 2 Ki. viii. 19; Ps. cxxxii. 11.

"There is nothing so cruel as the terror of a selfish man." — Bennett.

revolt of the Edomites

8—11. (8) Edomites, Ge. xxxvi. 9, 43.[d] Edom is especially pointed out by the prophets to be the object of judgment (Je. xlix. 7; Is. xxxiv.; lxiii. 1-6; Eze. xxxv.; Obadiah and Joel). (9) by night, compassed by Edom he fought his way out and escaped. (10) so the Edomites,[e] comp. 2 Ki. viii. 22. Libnah, Jos. x. 29. because, etc., these national losses came as a punishment for idolatry, etc. (11) made high places, for the unlawful Baal worship. fornication, a common metaphor, signifying idolatry, or spiritual unfaithfulness.

d 1 Ki. xi. 14; 2 Ki. viii. 21; 1 Chr. xviii. 12, 13; 2 Chr. xxv. 19.

e Ge. xxvii. 40

The heaviest load of guilt, if there is true and heartfelt repentance, cannot lay more weight upon the true and only "Foundation" than it will bear.

Jehoram's sin. — It went far to undo all that a long and devoted life, all that a useful and brilliant reign, had done. It pulled down a large part of that which had been so carefully, so laboriously, so wisely constructed. How easily, and in how short a time, can a bad man undo what his predecessor, with infinite effort, has accomplished! The striking and the holding of a lucifer match may bring the stateliest structure to a heap of ruin. The deflection from the way of rectitude on the part of one prominent life, the wandering from God of one strong human spirit, may have the effect of bringing to nought the labor of more than one lifetime. How true the proverb, "One sinner destroyeth much good!" There are among us the names of men who have reached that poor and most pitiful notoriety of not having attempted to do any good, but of having dragged down with themselves their family, their church, their community, to a dark depth of shame and ruin. — Clarkson.

B. C. cir. 851.

"The miserable hath no other medicine but only hope." — Shakespeare.

12–15. (12) a writing, the word used is not either of those for a letter.[a] fr. Elijah, "this prophet was distinct from the Tishbite in time, place, and circumstance. He lived in the reign of Jehoram; the Tishbite was translated in the lifetime of his father (2 Ki. iii. 11). He acted in Judah: the Tishbite had his sphere of action in the northern kingdom. He wrote a prophecy; the Tishbite was engaged in speaking and acting. His description as 'the prophet' is quite common, and his name is the same in letters as Elihu, and therefore not unusual. A writing from a prophet is nothing strange (1 Chr. xxviii. 19; Je. xxxvi.)."— Murphy. (13) of Israel, who were with extreme measures dishonoring Jehovah.[b] (14) plague, or stroke, vs. 17. (15) disease, etc., kind of consumption. "He had no bowels of compassion for his own flesh and blood," vs. 4.

Elijah's letter to Jehoram

a "The document in question is not called a letter (iggereth or sepher) but simply a writing (micetab)." —Wordsworth.

b Ex. xxxiv. 12, 15; De. xxxi. 16; 1 Ki. xvi. 33.

Retribution. — A minister in a small seaport town in Scotland, several years ago, furnished an account of a man, who for many years was master of a coasting vessel, and an inhabitant of that place. In his younger days he made a profession of religion; and, among the small but respectable body to which he belonged, he was deemed an eminent Christian. He afterwards became a professed atheist, and made the existence of the Deity and a future state the subjects of his ridicule and profane mockery. For horrid swearing and lewdness he had perhaps few equals in Scotland. One night, in a public-house, when swearing awfully, in a rage, he was summoned into eternity in a moment, by the rupture of a blood-vessel.

"An old English proverb says: 'He must have a long spoon who would sup with the devil.' The saddest feature in the career of such men is that Satan most disastrously outwits them." — Prof. Phelps.

B. C. 851–843.

end of the reign of Jehoram

16–20. (16) Arabians, tribes lying south of the Philistines. This shows how far the sway of Jehoshaphat had extended. (17) his wives, except Athaliah. sons, "the male descendants of David were at this time grievously diminished, Jehoram having slain his six brothers (2 Chr. xxi. 4), and now lost all his own sons but one." — Oehler. Jehoahaz, Ahaziah or Azariah.[c] (18) incurable disease, severe dysentery. (19) no burning, bec. of the sins he had committed, the calamities of his reign, and perhaps also bec. of the humiliating nature of his death. (20) without being desired, i. e. without being regretted.

c 2 Chr. xxii. 1, 6.

"To 'desire' is only to look forward with longing now; the word has lost the sense of regret or looking back upon the lost but still loved. This it once possessed in common with desiderium and desiderare, from which more remotely, and désirer, from which more immediately we derive it." — Trench's Glossary.

Humiliation. — No man wanted him to live one day longer; no heart said, it will be a dark day when the king dies. Is there infamy equal to such an issue? It is possible for us to live so that people will be glad when we die. They may be decent enough not to express their joy hilariously; indeed, a tear full of pensiveness may moisten the eye; but underneath all that is decent and courteous there will be a feeling of relief. We know what men feel who have been relieved of a burden which has been too heavy for them; we know what travelers feel when the darkness vanishes because the light has come. — J. Parker. Tombs of the kings. — We descend into a trench sunk into the rocky level, and divided by a wall, consisting of the rock itself, and squared into shape, from a large court similarly sunk below the level, and of course open to the sky. The passage through the wall of rock is by an arch. The great court is about ninety feet square, and on its west side is a portico about twenty-five feet wide, excavated in its rocky wall. The facade was formerly supported by two pillars. The entrance is in the left-hand corner, by a very low door. The first room is an antechamber, square and plain. The two rooms south of this entrance contain small niches or crypts for sepulture, running into the rock. The general character of these chambers is the same. The apartment west of the antechamber, which is entered by a door in the centre of the wall, is the most extensive of any. A panelled stone door was formerly inserted by its stone tenon, at the corner, into the groove which is hollowed out into the angle of the doorway. All the doors around, except the centre one, lead into similar crypts to those in the other apartment. Through the centre arch is a passage into a low vaulted room, from which there is no issue, and which was probably the resting-place of honor in these sepulchral chambers. The sarcophagi, beautifully sculptured with wreaths of fruit and flowers, thrown from their niches, lie broken and tenantless on the Death is like a postman, who knocks alike at the door of rich and poor; and brings to this man wedding-cards, and to his neighbor a funeral envelope; to one the pleasant news that his richly-laden vessel has arrived in port, and to another tidings of disaster and bankruptcy.

B. C. 843.

"Black ambition stains a public cause." — Pope.

rocky floor. From the extent of this noble sepulchre we should be disposed to accept the tradition of its being the burial-place of the kings of Judah; though the learned Robinson seems rather to consider it as that of Helena, Queen of Adiabene, who resided at Jerusalem, and built a very splendid sepulchre. — Bartlett.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SECOND.

Ahaziah is elected king

1—4. (1) Ahaziah,[a] called Jehoahaz, ch. xxi. 17. had slain, so they could not be ransomed. (2) Forty and two,[b] "an error of transcription for twenty and two (2 Ki. viii. 26), as Jehoram his father was not more than 40 at his death. (xxi. 20)." — Murphy. Athaliah, ch. xxi. 6. daughter, or granddaughter. (3) He also, as well as his father. counsellor, in her position as queen-mother. (4) they, i. e. Athaliah, and Jehoram, her brother.

A mother's influence. — Education begins sooner than parents imagine; long enough before they are responsible; even when they begin to see, feel, and observe. Hence great importance to have first teaching of a child. Early impressions are elementary principles out of which mature life is organized. "When should I begin the education of my children, now four years old!" asked a mother from a clergyman, who replied, "Madam, if you have not begun already you have lost those four years. From the first smile that gleams upon an infant's cheek your opportunity begins." — Hom. Com. Evil companions. — Evil companions are the devil's agents, whom he sends abroad into the world to debauch virtue and to advance his kingdom; and by these ambasssadors he effects more than he could do in his own person. His own shape and appearing would fright rather than allure; and, well as men like sin, did they see the father of it, they would not be very fond of being his children; but acting in the children of disobedience, which are of the same flesh and blood with us, and creatures of the same shape, and from which we have no aversion, but rather, sometimes, a great affection to, the bait is easily swallowed." — A. Horneck.

a "Jehoram apparently had not designated Ahaziah as his successor. Hence he had to receive his investiture from the people."—Spk. Com.

b 2 Chr. xxi. 5, 20. "The words of the original are 'Ahaziah was the son of 42 years,' and his years are traced from the dynasty of Omri, on account of his connection with it on his mother's side." — Lightfoot.

Home influence affects societies, churches, and nations. "They that rock the cradle rule the world," said Napoleon.

Azariah's visit to the son of Ahab

5—9. (5) went with,[c] comp. 2 Ki. viii. 28, 29. (6) Jezreel,[d] the country residence of the kings of Israel. Azariah, "a slip of the pen for Ahaziah." — Murphy. (7) of God, as Div. judgment on his sin. by coming to, R. V., "in that he went unto." against Jehu, i. e. to meet him. 1 Ki. xix. 16; 2 Ki. ix. 6–10. (8) and found, 2 Ki. x. 12–14. (9) sought, etc., 2 Ki. ix. 27–29. brought him to Jehu, this may be regarded as supplementing the account given in Kings.[e] to keep still, R. V., "to hold," there was no one left of the royal house who could assume authority."

"They buried him, because (they said) he is the son of Jehoshaphat." — He was Jehoshaphat's grandson; but though they had to go back two generations, the memory and the moral impression of the good king had not faded — at any rate, had not been effaced. "The memory of the just" abides; it is fragrant after many years have gone; and the influence of the holy lasts when the memory has disappeared. Knowledge in the memory, peace in the mind, soundness in the soul, beauty and usefulness in the life, — these are the fruits of the good man's life, though they are not traced to his hand and not referred to his working; they are influences which spread and widen as the years go on." — Pul. Com.

c Comp. rebuke of this union with idolatrous Israel. 2 Chr. xix. 2; xx. 37.

d Jos. xix. 18.

e Ahaziah fled first to the garden-house, and escaped to Samaria; but was here taken by Jehu's men who brought him to Jehu, by whose command he was slain."

Athaliah

10—12. (10) seed royal, every person who might possibly be made king. Comp. note on xxi. 17. (11) Jehoshabeath, a variation of Jehosheba (2 Ki. xi. 2). daughter of the king, Jehoram, and sister of Ahaziah. Joash was therefore her nephew. Jehoiada is supposed not to be the high priest, because his name is not in the line from Aaron to Jozadak (1 Chr. vi.). But this is not a line of high priests, but only of the ancestors of Jozadak, the high priest, some of whom were and others were not high priests. His actions and his affinity with the royal house are strongly in favor of his being high priest, and there is nothing against it." — Murphy. bedchamber, or bed-closet.[f] (12) in the house of God, Jehoiada residing in one of the apartments of buildings in the outer temple-wall. Athaliah reigned, "the reign of a woman was contrary to all precedents; the reign of a foreigner, not of the seed of David, half Phoenician, was abhorrent to all Jewish notions. The nation must have been shocked and grieved; but it was also terrified." — Rawlinson.

f "In the portion of the ordinary apartment lying nearest the door, and several inches lower than the divan, a large cupboard, or closet, is built in the wall, where the bedding of the night occupants of the chamber is stored away." — Van Lennep.

B. C. 836.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-THIRD.

Jehoiada the priest

1—5. (1) strengthened himself, expression for beginning to take action.[a] "Prepared his measures for a great stroke." captains of hundreds, centurions of the royal guards, who were loyal to the legitimate heir to the crown. The officers named are not otherwise known. covenant, for the overthrow of Athaliah's tyranny. (2) the Levites, not mentioned in the account in Kings, but here said to be the chief agents of this important revolution. This is one of a great number of passages which show that Chronicles was written in behalf of the church, by a Levite, probably. (3) all the congregation, regarded as acting thro' these leaders and representatives. Lord hath said, 2 Sa. viii. 12, 13. (4) ye, addressed to the Levites only. entering, for your weekly course.[b] porters, or watchmen. doors, Heb. thresholds. (5) king's house, or "the porch of the palace." gate of the foundation, poss. the gate Sur.[c]

[a] Ge. xlviii. 2; 2 Chr. xii. 1; xvii. 1; xxi. 4.

[b] 1 Chr ix. 25.

[c] 2 Ki. xi. 6.

"More firm and sure the hand of courage strikes, when it obeys the watchful eye of caution."—Thomson.

The constituents of success.—It was no light work that Jehoiada had in hand. He had need to "strengthen himself," as we are told that he did (vs. 1). To effect a revolution in a kingdom is either a very guilty or a very noble deed. It can only be justified by the most grave conditions and by a reasonable prospect of success. When, as on this occasion, it is imperatively demanded, and when, as now, it is boldly and effectively accomplished, a very great work of patriotism and philanthropy is wrought; and it is not only man who is served, but God also. On the other hand, to undertake such an achievement without adequate cause and without sufficient means, is to plunge a country into civil strife and to insure the spilling of much blood and the desolation of many homes. Jehoiada succeeded in his great undertaking, and his success was due to many things. These things are the constant constituents of prosperity everywhere. They are—I. A sense of sacred duty. II. Courage and command on the part of the leader (or leaders). III. The greatest possible co-operation. IV. A conscientious regard for what is right. V. The greatest possible wisdom in contrivance. VI. Boldness at the moment of execution. VII. A reverent attitude toward the great Disposer of events. —Clarkson.

"It is a good thing to learn caution by the misfortunes of others."—Publius Syrius.

"High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect."—Shakespeare.

Jehoiada proclaims Joash

6—11. (6) watch of the Lord, see that no Baal worshippers forced their way in. (7) the Levites, those not engaged as indicated in vss. 4, 5. Comparing with 2 Ki. xi. 8, we find that the Levites were to form a guard for the king in the temple, and the soldiers in the court when he passed from the temple to the palace.—Lumby. (8) all Judah, as described in vss. 2, 3. to go out, the usual attendants were doubled by retaining those who were just completing their week's course.[d] (9) spears, etc., thus arming them within the temple courts to avoid exciting any suspicion. shields, some think these may have been the shields of gold that King David took from the servants of Hadadezer (2 Sa. viii. 7, 11). (10) all the people, those joining in his enterprise; not the promiscuous worshippers. (11) testimony,[e] this was prob. the same as the Book of the Law of the Lord, 2 Chr. xxxiv. 15. Cf. custom of kissing the Bible when Pres. of the U. S. takes the oath of office. Probably has a similar significance. The testimony may have been placed on the head (Rawlinson) or in the hands. De. xvii. 18.

[d] 1 Chr. xxiv., xxv.

[e] "Some think that a roll, containing a copy of the law, was placed in the king's hands, wh. he held as a sceptre or truncheon."—Jamieson.

Lessons from Jehoiada.—1. It is not always wrong for ministers of religion to take part in politics. 2. There are times when rebellion against the powers that be is a solemn duty. 3. Neither God's house nor God's day can be put to a better use than to set a crown upon the head of God's anointed. 4. In church and state alike each man has his own place and work. 5. Kings may expect their thrones to be stable if these are erected on the good will of their subjects. 6. No sovereign can rule well who takes not the Law of God for his guide. 7. A great and good man in troubled times invaluable to church or state. What could Judah have done without Jehoiada?—Whitelaw.

Pardon is sometimes granted to the criminal at the place of execution, but so rarely that it cannot be depended upon; no more can deathbed repentance and death-bed pardon.

Joash made king.—It is the first direct example of a coronation. The diadem, probably a band studded with jewels, was placed on his head by the high priest, and upon it the sacred "testimony," which, in the reign of Jehoshaphat, had been raised into new importance. It seemed like the intimation of a limitation to the king's despotic power—an indication that he was not to be, like David, above, but beneath the law of his country.—Stanley. The crown and the testimony.—Two important symbols. The crown the sign of power,

"I know of but two beautiful things; the starry heavens above my head and the sense of duty within my heart."—Kent.

B. C. 836.

and the law the sign of theocratic wisdom. Finely are both the crown and the book presented to the king, that he might be not only mighty, but also wise, or (as we may say) know God's word and right. — Luther.

Athaliah is slain

12—15. (12) praising, etc., the shout of the people's acceptance of the new king revealed what had occurred.[a] (13) looked, prob. rushing across the valley to see what was the matter. at his pillar, on his platform being a boy of seven years. singers . . praise, R. V., "the singers also played on instruments of music, and led the singing of praise." (14) forth of the ranges, R. V., "forth between the ranks," i. e. of soldiers. followeth her, with intent to defend her. (15) P. V., "so they made way for her; and she went to the entry of the horse gate to the king's house; and they slew her there." horse gate, 2 Ki. xi. 16.

[a] Comp. 1 Ki. i. 41. "True dispatch is a rich thing. For time is the measure of business, as money is of wares, and business is bought at a dear hand where there is small dispatch."—Bacon.

Disinterestedness. —

Mark but my fall, and that which ruined me.
Cromwell, I charge thee fling away ambition.
Love thyself last. Cherish the hearts that hate thee.
Be just, and fear not;
Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's,
Thy God's and truth's; then, if thou fall'st, O Cromwell, Thou fall'st a blessed martyr. — Shakespeare.

"The slightest emotion of disinterested kindness that passes through the mind improves and refreshes that mind, producing generous thought and noble feeling. We should cherish kind wishes, for a time may come when we may be enabled to put them in practice."—Miss Mitford.

The fatal flower. — "Travelers who visit the Falls of Niagara are directed to a spot in the margin of the precipice over the boiling current below, where a gay young lady a few years since lost her life. She was delighted with the wonders of the unrivalled scene, and ambitious to pluck a flower from a cliff where no human hand had before ventured, as a memorial of the cataract and her own daring. She leaned over the verge, and caught a glimpse of the surging waters far down the battlement of rocks, while fear for a moment darkened her excited mind. But there hung the lovely blossom upon which her heart was fixed; and she leaned, in a delirum of intense desire and anticipation, over the brink. Her arm was outstretched to grasp the beautiful form which charmed her fancy; the turf yielded to the pressure of her light feet, and with a shriek she descended, like a falling star, to the rocky shore, and was borne away gasping in death." A life sacrificed for a flower! How like the case of many who, grasping at sin's fatal flower, sacrifice the soul!

Jehoiada's reforms

16—21. (16) between him, himself as representing Jehovah.[b] "Such a solemn covenant had been made first at Sinai, Ex. xxiv. 3–8. Again under Asa, 2 Chr. xv. 9–15; later by Hezekiah, xxix. 10; and Josiah, xxxiv. 41; such renewal being made necessary by the nation's backsliding." (17) house of Baal, temple prob. built by Jehoram. (18) appointed, etc., restoring the true order of worship, and effecting an ecclesiastical reformation.[c] (19) the porters, 1 Chr. xxvi. 1–19. (20) high gate, or upper gate. (21) quiet,[d] it was a bloodless revolution, save in the case of Athaliah; quiet also from her tyrannies and idolatries.

[b] 2 Ki. xi. 17.

[c] Comp. 1 Chr. xxiii. xxiv. xxv.

Destruction of the House of Baal. — Compare the destruction of the Roman Catholic edifices in Perth on May 11, 1559, after a sermon by Knox. "The congregation (in the church of St. John's) was still undispersed, when a priest came in, went up to the altar, opened the tabernacle, and prepared to say mass. A boy who was present said something insolent. The priest struck him; and the boy, snatching up a stone, flung it at the crucifix, which fell broken to the ground. The common instinct shot through the gathered crowd; altar, ornaments, images, in a few moments lay in ruins on the chancel floor. The saints were flung from their niches, the storied windows dashed in atoms. Then the cry arose, "To the Greyfriars!" and in an hour or two the poor monks, started from their noonday dinner, were adrift upon the world, and their homes going up in smoke and flame into the sky." — Froude's Hist. of England.

[d] "So ended the troubled scenes of the first Sabbath of wh. any detailed account is preserved to us in the sacred records."—Stanley.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FOURTH.

Joash begins to reign

1—5. (1) of Beersheba, Ge. xxi. 14, (2) all the days, etc., prob. Jehoiada lived to guide the king's counsels from 23 to 30 years. Notice here the dependence of Joash on some external support, which will explain his seemingly inconsistent life. (3) two wives, anxious to secure a succession to the throne of Judah. Choosing only two showed his desire to limit the license which kings then permitted themselves.[a] (4) to repair,[b] Heb. renew, 2 Ki. xii. 4–16. This was practically a renovation in which carpenters and masons, timber and stone (2 Ki. xii. 12), "iron and brass" were used, vs. 12. (5) money, free-will offerings. hastened it not, showed no earnestness in the matter; perhaps explained by the fact that this tax was ordinarily used in support of the Levitical class. The delay was certainly discreditable to the Levites or a reason would be given.

The life and character of Joash. — We propose — I. To take a brief review of his history. 1. During the life of Jehoiada; 2. After Jehoiada's decease. Let us proceed to — II. Make some reflections on his character. From his character toward the close of his life we observe how awful is the state of those who, after hopeful beginnings, turn aside from the paths of piety and virtue. From his history in a collective view we observe how necessary Divine grace is to produce any radical change of heart and life.— Simeon.

Little crowns and how to win them.— What boy has not sometimes wished that he might become a king, and live in a splendid palace, all shining with gold and gems? I am going to tell you how you may all wear crowns, if you will only take the pains to win them. One of these crowns is self-government. II. Another crown is wisdom. III. Another is obedience to God. IV. Another crown, bright and beautiful, as if it had come straight from heaven, is love. V. I must tell you of one more crown, and it is bright as all the others can make it melted into one: the crown of glory that fadeth not away.—J. A. Collier.

B. C ctr. 836.

[a] 1 Ki. xi. 3; 2 Chr. xi. 21; xiii. 21.

[b] "Its treasures had been given away piecemeal to invaders, even by the most devout of the kings, and had been plundered twice over by the Egyptians and Arabs. Its very foundations had been injured by the agents of Athaliah in removing its stones for her own temple." — Stanley.

6—10. (6) collection . . Moses, R. V., "the tax of Moses."[c] "Every one who at twenty years of age entered the army of Jehovah had to pay at the mustering the sum of half a shekel as propitiation (Ex. xxx. 11–16), the rich and the poor alike, because they are equal in God's sight. The money so raised was to be applied (Ex. xxxviii. 25) to the building of the sanctuary."— Oehler. There is no evidence of its having been paid from that time to this. Afterward (Neh. x. 33) a yearly contribution of a third of a shekel was required for the service of the sanctuary and in Christ's time the half shekel had reappeared (Mat. xvii. 24). (7) sons of Athaliah, i. e. Ahaziah and his elder brothers.[d] broken up, the stones of the temple had been used to build elsewhere, so that breaches were made in its walls (2 Ki. xii. 5). (9) proclamation, a message carrying the king's authority. (10) made an end, given all they could, and all had given who would.

Jehoiada institutes the treasury

[c] Comp. 2 Ki. xii. 4.

[d] 2 Chr. xxi 17.

Freewill giving.— 1. The duty of Christian giving, which may be inferred from this example of the Hebrew church. 2. The superiority of the voluntary over the compulsory system of raising money for religious purposes, even should the latter be deemed permissible. 3. The propriety of financial boards, especially those connected with the church, being above suspicion. 4. The wisdom of aiming at simplicity, in schemes for receiving the contributions of the faithful. 5. The advantage of adopting such measures as shall place church treasures beyond the reach of temptation.— Whitelaw.

"Poss. sons may be taken here in the sense of servants or followers." —Wordsworth.

Treasure in religion.— In the "green-room" at Dresden, where for centuries the Saxon princes have gathered their gems and treasures, ntil they have become worth millions of dollars, may be seen a silver egg, a present to one of the Saxon queens, which, when you touch a spring, opens, and reveals a golden yolk. Within this is hid a chicken, whose wing, being pressed, also flies open, disclosing a splendid gold crown studded with jewels. Another secret spring being touched, hidden in the centre is found a magnificent diamond ring. The treasures of religion are not discovered at the first view; but when laid open are found to be greater than any king ever possessed. Their value will appear greater and greater to all eternity.

"Joash seems to have been a prince of fine impulses, but he lacked independence and strength of character. He too readily took the impress of the influences around him."

11—14. (11) king's office, indic. that the king put the matter in the ordering of his civil officers, as the Levites had failed in duty. king's . . officer, acting as auditors. (12) did the work, or as we should say, contracted for it. (13) the work was perfected, the Heb. has a striking figure: "the healing went upon the work." state, proper condition and grandeur. (14) vessels to minister, refurnish the temple with utensils, etc.

collections for the service of religion

Money. — We see here a distinct indication of a practice still followed in the East where large sums of money are concerned, as in the disbursements of the government, and in the taxes and tributes paid to the crown. The money

Col. A. J. Edgerton, while commanding a brigade in Louisiana, in which sickness and death were extremely prevalent, was requested to prohibit religious meetings, as "religion tended to depress the spirits of the men," and to injure their health. He caused a careful examination to be made, and learned that, while two-fifths of the whole regiment had died, only one-eighth of the Christians in it had died.

B. C. 836.

in such cases is deposited in long narrow bags, each containing a certain sum, and carefully sealed with the official seal. — Kitto. In the East at the present time a bag of money passes (for some time at least) currently from hand to hand, under the authority of a banker's seal, without any examination of its contents. — Burder. Advantage of sincere worship. — In an early period of the ministry of the Rev. John Wesley, he visited Epworth, in Lincolnshire, where his father had formerly been minister, but found the people greatly opposed to what they considered his new notions. He tells us, in his journal, that many persons were convinced of the importance of the truths he delivered from the tombstone of his father, some of whom were conveyed in a wagon to a neighboring justice of the peace, to answer for the heresy with which they were charged. Mr. Wesley rode over also. When the magistrate asked what these persons had done, there was a deep silence; for that was a point their conductors had forgotten. At length, one of them said:— "Why, they pretend to be better than other people: and, besides, they pray from morning to night." He asked, "But have they done anything besides?" "Yes," said an old man; "an't please your worship, they have converted my wife. Till she went among them, she had such a tongue; and now she is as quiet as a lamb." "Carry them back, carry them back," replied the justice, "and let them convert all the scolds in the town."

B. C. 836 — 796.

death of Jehoiada

15—19. vss. 15–22 are wanting in 2 Kings xii. (15) full of days, his age was very unusual in those times; there is, however, no good reason for challenging the number of years given to him in the text.[a] (16) in the city, an honor permitted only to kings. "As preserver of the royal dynasty, and as restorer of the Lord's house, this great high priest was granted a distinction never allowed to any other subject; he was buried in state, in the sepulchre of the kings." — Rawlinson. (17) the princes of Judah, led by Jehoiada they had joined in revolt against Athaliah, but now, 25 years later, were desirous of the freedom from restraint that would come with idolatry. hearkened, being weak-natured, and having lost the prop on which he had leaned. (18) groves,[b] R. V., Asherim. (19) prophets, to warn them of danger, as vs. 20.

Worship. — A man's conception of worship really reaches his life. Let him lose his reverence for God, and his reverence for man, however much he may boast of it, will in that measure go down: the two commandments belong to one another, and are absolutely inseparable. Increase of true reverence towards God always means increase of real beneficence towards man, for there is a deep and mysterious sense, as well as a sense limited by the creation, that man is made in the image and likeness of God, so that when God is most feared, loved, and honored, man is blessed by the increase of religious conviction and emotion. — J. Parker.

a "His great age may explain his exhibiting a kind of passive character, enduring, for the sake prob. of quiet, evils which he might have been expected to prevent or remove. The high places were not abolished, and priests grossly misappropriated money." — Kitto.

b He. x. 3[illegible].

Zechariah succeeds Jehoiada

20—22. (20) came upon, Hebrew "clothed itself with." "The man is looked on as the covering of the Spirit, which rules, speaks, and testifies in him." For other accounts of the action of the Holy Spirit comp. Nu. ix. 25, 29; Ju. vi. 34; 1 Chron. xii. 18; Ju. xiv. 6, 19. Zechariah, who succeeded in the priesthood, possibly grandson of Jehoiada (cf. Matt. xxiii. 35, son of Barachias), his father may have died before his grandfather. stood above, prob. at the top of the steps leading to the priest's court, so in full hearing of the people. prosper, De. xxxviii. 1–14. (21) conspired, etc., raising a public tumult, as in cases of Naboth and Stephen.[c] (22) but slew,[d] the first example of the martyrdom of a prophet given in the O. T. Joash did well as long as Jehoiada lived and guided him, but afterward he was led by evil counsellors. The Lord, etc., God in O. T. is the proper avenger of blood, for man was made in God's image (Ge. ix. 5, 6). Joash was murdered by his own servants (ch. xxiv. 24–27).

"To resent the rebuke of the Lord is to inflict upon ourselves the most serious, and too often a mortal, injury." — Clarkson.

Murder of Zechariah. — 1. Horrid outrage on a prophet of the Lord. A sacred person, a Hebrew patriot. 2. An instance of base ingratitude. To a family who had preserved his life. 3. A deed of violence involving great criminality. Illegal and unjust exercise of power, bringing retribution upon king and nation. The last words, "The Lord require it," not vindictive, but a prophetic warning to Jews (Matt. xxiii. 35) in time of Jesus and to us. — Hom. Com.

c 1 Ki. xxi. 13; Ac. vii. 57, 58.

d "The prophet's denunciations appeared to Joash treasonable utterances, designed to produce the dis-

Stoning of Zechariah. — The act produced a profound impression. It was a later Jewish tradition, but one which marks the popular feeling, that this crowning crime of the House of Judah took place on the Sabbath day, on the great Day of Atonement, and that its marks were never to be effaced. The sacredness of the person and of the place, the concurrent guilt of the whole nation — king, nobles, and people — the ingratitude of the chief instigator, the culmination of long tragedy of the House of Omri, the position which the story held in the Jewish canon, as the last great murder of the last Book of the Old Testament, all conspired to give it the peculiar significance with which it is recorded in the Gospels as closing the catalogue of unrighteous deaths, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zechariah . . . . who was slain between the temple and the altar. — Stanley.

B. C. 796.

asters they announced as impending." — Spk. Com.

Matt. xxiii. 35.

23—27. (23) end of the year, or turn of the year, i. e. in the spring, when campaigns usually commenced. 2 Sa. xi. 1. host of Syria came, fr. Gath, as see 2 Ki. xii. 17. destroyed, etc.,[a] in battle. (24) small company, comp. 2 Chr. xiv. 9–15. judgment, the Div. judgment. (25) great diseases, or in a sore sickness. (26) Zabad, etc., comp. 2 Ki. xii. 21. Not probably led by patriotic or religious zeal, but by other motives. Nevertheless they were the instruments of Divine retribution. (27) laid upon, or uttered by prophets against him.[b] the story, R. V., "the commentary."

the Syrian invasion

a "As the authors of the recent apostasy, and the instigators, in all probability, of the proceedings against Zechariah, a special judgment fell on them." — Spk Com.

b 2 Ki. ix. 25; Is. xiii. 1; xv. 1, etc.

Joash's apostasy. — Possibly the brief and fragmentary records from which the chronicler had to make his selections unduly emphasize the contrast between the earlier and later years of the reign of Joash; but the picture he draws of the failure of best of tutors and governors is unfortunately only too typical. Julian the Apostate was educated by a distinguished Christian prelate, Eusebius of Nicomedia, and was trained in a strict routine of religious observances; yet he repudiated Christianity at the earliest safe opportunity. His apostasy, like that of Joash, was probably characterized by base ingratitude. At Constantine's death the troops in Constantinople massacred nearly all the princes of the imperial family, and Julian, then only six years old, is said to have been saved and concealed in a church by Mark, Bishop of Arethusa. When Julian became emperor, he repaid this obligation by subjecting his benefactor to cruel tortures because he had destroyed a heathen temple and refused to make any compensation. Imagine Joash requiring Jehoiada to make compensation for pulling down a high place! — W. H. Bennett.

"The human race resemble the withering foliage of a wide forest. While the air is calm, we perceive single leaves scattering here and there from the branches; but sometimes a tempest or a whirlwind precipitates thousands in a moment." — Foster.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIFTH.

1—4. (1) Amaziah, comp. 2 Ki. xiv. 1–3. Like his father, he began well but ended ill. He rejected the counsel of two prophets (unknown). He was defeated by the King of Samaria, who pillaged Jerusalem itself, and finally he was assassinated by his own servants. (3) established, would seem to imply that there was a faction back of the assassins of Joash, and it was some time before Amaziah gained firm control of the government. his servants, ch. xxiv. 26. (4) not their children,[c] as De. xxiv. 16. In many cases the families of traitors, etc., were destroyed with them.

Amaziah succeeds Joash

c "With a mercy shown apparently for the first time in Hebrew annals their children were spared." — Stanley.

Right, but not with perfect heart. — Many good things in A., had respect for ordinances of religion, knew Scriptures, and had desire to do right. But failed because not thoroughgoing in principle and piety. 1. Much half-heartedness, levity, and superficial goodness. 2. A perfect heart required. Earnestness, consecrated feeling and energy. — Hom. Com.

A divided heart. — In every age and country, there are some found with divided hearts on the subject of religion. Such was Hiram, king of Tyre, who, while he blessed the Lord that Solomon was king, and gladly traded with him for some of the materials for building a temple to Jehovah, also contributed one hundred and twenty talents of gold towards its erection; and yet, in his own country, he dedicated a golden pillar to Jupiter, built the temples of Hercules and Astarte and enriched the shrines of the god and goddess by valuable gifts. So there are some people now who appear very religious at times, and yet their hearts go after covetousness, and they are quite at home in the circles of the gay and in the indulgence of sinful pleasures.

"He had a good name; it imported 'one strong in the Lord and in the power of his might;' but he was far enough from that." — Trapp.

Some hearts are like stiff soils, which require deep ploughing and much harrowing before they are capable of receiving seed.

5—10. (5) according . . fathers, as Nu. ii. 34. from twenty, the military age. In military and aggressive spirit, Amaziah was a contrast to his father. He set out at once to organize an army. (6) hired, an alliance with

Amaziah's alliance with Israel

B. C. 796.

Israel was impossible, but he could hire individual soldiers. (7) man of God, prophet. (8) if, etc., apparently ironical.[a] do it, R. V., "do valiantly." "The authorized version here agrees with the original, 'But (if thou wilt take thine own way) go thou alone with thy God, do. Be brave for the war: it will be of no avail.'" — Murphy. (10) anger, etc., at this sudden and apparently unreasonable dismissal.

Amaziah's hundred talents. — Rehearse the history and character of Amaziah. This text may — I. Suggest a reply to him who objects to the service of God on the ground of the loss that it may entail. 1. Men are not willing to give more than they can help of anything; 2. Especially of gains that cannot be squared with the religious profession. But God is able to make up to a man all that he gives up for the sake of religion. II. The text is suggestive of a lesson that may be useful to Christian men. God will not allow any servant of His to lose by his devotion to His service. 1. Have we not His word for it? 2. Loss is contrary to the very nature of religion, where all is gain; 3. What seems to be lost may be only capital invested in the best bank; 4. Suppose a Christian to go through life on the principle of acquiring all he can, will he not be a poor man after all, in spite of the hundred talents he may get?

What for the hundred talents? — This little episode carries with it a great principle. Every crusade against an established abuse is met with the cry, "What shall we do for the hundred talents?" — for the capital invested in slaves or in gin-shops; for English revenues from alcohol or Indian revenues from opium? Few have faith to believe that the Lord can provide for financial deficits, or, if we may venture to indicate the method in which the Lord provides, that a nation will ever be able to pay its way by honest finance. Let us note, however, that Amaziah was asked to sacrifice his own talents, and not other people's. — Bennett.

[a] "Some able critics read 'But if thou wilt go(alone), do be strong for the battle; God shall not make thee fall before the enemy.'"—Ewald, Bertheau.

"There is little or nothing in this life worth living for, but we can all of us go straight forward and do our duty. — Wellington.

"Do your duty and leave the rest with God.— R. Cecil.

"Watch lest prosperity destroy generosity."— Beecher.

"Success at first doth many times undo men at last."—Venning.

Amaziah's idolatry

11—16 (11) strengthened himself, R. V., "took courage." valley of salt,[b] south of Dead Sea. children of Seir,[c] the Edomites. (12) top of the rock, or height of Selah,[d] the capital of Edom. 2 Ki. xiv. 7 says that he took Selah and changed its name to Joktheel, i. e. "subjugated of God." (13) soldiers, etc., vss. 6, 10. cities of Judah, they returned to Samaria, and then started out to revenge the insult they thought they had received. from Samaria, so destroying the towns and villages southward. Beth-horon, 6 m. N. of Jerusalem. Jos. x. 10, 11. (14) gods, etc., the Edomites worshipped the sun under different forms. Vss. 14–16 not given in Kings. Evidently Amaziah held to the tribal idea of God. He had not lost faith in Jehovah, but worshipped other gods also. 15) Why . . hand, the absurdity of Amaziah's conduct is evident. His victory had proved the vanity of the Edomite gods. (16) Art thou, etc.,[e] lit. "have we made thee a king's counsellor?"

The declension of Amaziah.— I. The nature of it. A subsidence into idolatry. II. The motive of it. Probably political. III. The criminality of it. IV. The folly of it. V. The danger of it. 1. It aroused against the king Jehovah's anger. 2. It drew down upon him a prophet's rebuke. 3. It excited the king's own evil disposition. 4. It foreshadowed his ultimate fall.— Whitelaw.

Death by hurling. -- The Greeks and Romans condemned some of their criminals to be cast down from the top of a rock. In the time of Pitts, the inhabitants of Constantine, a town of Turkey, built on the summit of a great rock, commonly executed their criminals who had been guilty of more atrocious crimes, by casting them headlong from the cliff.— Paxton.

[b] 2 Sa. viii. 13; 2 Ki. xiv. 7; 1 Chr. xviii. 12.

[c] 2 Chr. xx. 10.

[d] "The battle was prob. fought not far from Selah (Petra); the captives were marched to Petra itself, and precipitated from the steep cliffs in its neighborhood." — Spk. Com.

[e] "Those who were invested with the prophetic character were intitled to counsel kings." —Jamieson.

Amaziah's message to Joash

17—20. (17) took advice, or counsel, but not fr. God, through his prophet. see . . face, a challenge to battle.[f] The cause of this challenge might be the events related in vs. 13. But quite as likely Amaziah, elated by his victory over Edom, was impelled by pride and self-conceit. (Cf. Ki. xiv. 8–14.) (18) thistle, a low shrub, furze-bush: a scornful image of Amaziah. cedar, the grand tree of the forest representing the king of Israel. wild beast, the Israelite army.[g] (19) hast smitten, vss. 11, 12. (20) came of God, overruled to accomplish the Div. judgment.

Ambition. — Ambition is like the sea, which swallows all the rivers and is none the fuller; or like the grave, whose insatiable maw forever craves for the bodies of men. It is not like an amphora, which being full receives no more, but its fulness swells it till a still greater vacuum is formed. In all [f] 2 Ki. xiv. 8-14.

[g] "Without making a minute application, the parable may be explained, generally, as describing in a striking manner the effects of probability, Napoleon never longed for a sceptre till he had gained the baton, nor dreamed of being emperor of Europe till he had gained the crown of France. Caligula, with the world at his feet, was mad with a longing for the moon, and could he have gained it the imperial lunatic would have coveted the sun. It is in vain to feed a fire which grows the more voracious the more it is supplied with fuel; he who lives to satisfy his ambition has before him the labor of Sisyphus, who rolled up hill an ever-rebounding stone, and the task of the daughters of Danaus, who are condemned forever to attempt to fill a bottomless vessel with buckets full of holes. Could we know the secret heart-breaks and weariness of ambitious men, we should need no Wolsey's voice crying, "I charge thee, fling away ambition," but we should flee from it as from the most accursed blood-sucking vampire which ever uprose from the caverns of hell." — Spurgeon.

B. C. 797.

pride and ambition, towering far beyond their natural sphere, and sure to fall with a sudden and ruinous crash."—Jamieson.

"As hoodwinked falcons boldest pierce the skies, th' ambition that is blindest highest flies." — Colton.

21—24. (21) they saw, as Amaziah wished, vs. 17. Beth-shemesh, Jos. xv. 10. On the borders of Judah, Dan and the Philistines. (23) took Amaziah, prisoner. brake down, etc., comp. the fig. of wild beasts treading down the thistle, vs. 18. the corner gate, lit. "the gate of the turning," at the N. W. corner of the wall. Through this breach of 200 yds. the conqueror rode (according to Josephus) into the city. (24) with Obed-edom, i. e. originally entrusted to him.[a] Prob. his family still retained the charge. the hostages, princes, or nobles, carried away as security for the quietness of the conquered country.

Greed of conquest. — I dare say Alexander the Great was somewhat staggered in his plans of conquest by Parmenio's way of putting things. 'After you have conquered Persia, what will you do?" "Then I shall conquer India." "After you have conquered India, what will you do?" "Conquer Scythia." "And after you have conquered Scythia, what will you do?" "Sit down and rest." "Well," said Parmenio to the conqueror, "why not sit down and rest now?" — Haven.

the meeting of Joash and Amaziah a 1 Chr. xxvi. 15.

"Ambition is the dropsy of the soul, whose thirst we must not yield to, but control." —Sedley.

"There is a glare about worldly success which is very apt to dazzle men's eyes."—Hare.

25—28. (25) lived after, 2 Ki. xiv. 17. (26) first and last, before and after this defeat and humiliation. the book . . Israel, cf. xxviii. 7, note. The same book is referred to by three other titles, cf. xvi. 11; xxxv. 26; xxxiii. 18; xx. 34. (27) did turn away, as vs. 14. Lachish, Jos. x. 3. (28) upon horses, that is, they put him to death, but committed no further indignities. The body was brought back and buried with royal honors.[b]

Lachish, where he sought refuge, was an old Canaanitish royal city (Jos. x. 3–31; xii. 11), southwest of Jerusalem, in the lowlands of Judah (Jos. xv. 39). According to Micah (i. 13), it was the first Jewish town to be affected by Israelitish idolatry, which spread from it towards the capital. It would seem also to have been one of Solomon's chariot cities (1 Ki. ix. 19; x. 26–29). It had been fortified by Rehoboam (ch. xi. 9), and was subsequently captured by Sennacherib (ch. xxxii. 9) after a long siege (Je. xxxiv. 7). It should probably be identified with the modern Um-Lakis, a few miles west-southwest of the Eleutheropolis. Arrested here, the fallen monarch was dispatched by the daggers of assassins, as his father before him had been (ch. xxiv. 25). As conspiracy had set the crown on Amaziah's head, so conspiracy now took it off. — Pul. Com.

death and burial of Amaziah b Comp. 2 Ki. xiv. 20.

"It is one of the greatest praises of God's wisdom that He can turn the evil of men to His own glory."—Hall.

"Heat not a furnace for your foe, so hot that it do singe yourself." — Shakespeare.

"He who studieth revenge keepeth his own wounds green." — Bacon.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SIXTH.

B. C. 782.

1—6. (1) all the people chose, it seems probable that he was not the eldest son but the favorite of the people. Uzziah, or Azariah;[c] 2 Ki. xiv. 21, 22, xv. 1–7, was only 16 yrs. old, but destined to be one of the greatest of the kings of Judah. Dean Stanley calls his reign "the most prosperous, except that of Jehoshaphat since the time of Solomon." (2) Eloth, or Elath, was a seaport on the Gulf of Akaba and enabled Uzziah to renew the commerce established by Solomon and lost under his father's reign. This was one of his first achievements. Uzziah built in the sense of rebuilt. restored it, it had been lost to the Jews in the revolt of Edom fr. Joram.[d] (4) according . . did, in the good part of his reign. (5) he sought, R. V., "he set himself to seek," i. e. with earnestness. Zechariah, not otherwise known. (6) Gath, Jos. xi. 22. Jabneh,[e] or Jabneel, Jos. xv. 11. Ashdod, Jos. xv. 46, 47. "Three of the strongest fortresses of the Philistines, who were always unquiet neighbors and required to be chastised from time to time." — Rawlinson.

Uzziah is elected king

c "It is not too much to say that we are indebted to Chronicles for our whole conception of the character of Uzziah." — Spk. Com.

d 2 Ki. viii. 22.

e "Known as Jamnia in Mac-

B. C. 782-757.

cabæan history, and was noted as a school of learning after the fall of Jerusalem. The modern uame is Yebna, 11 miles S. of Jaffa."—Ayre.

The prosperity of piety. — "As long as he sought the Lord, God made him to prosper" (vs. 5). 1. There is no prosperity worthy of the name, or worthy of our ambition and pursuit, outside the fear and the favor of God. "Who hath hardened himself against Him and prospered?" Many have seemed to do so, and have imagined that they did. But, in the light of Divine wisdom, they have miserably failed. 2. There can be no failure in the faithful service of the Supreme. What looks like it, there may be, there often is; but not the thing itself. For he who walks with God, and is the friend of Jesus Christ, must be what is right and good; must stand where he is secure from harm; must be witnessing for the truth of God; must be moving on towards deeper wisdom, purer joy, and a glorious estate beyond. —Clarkson.

the fame of Uzziah

7—10. (7) Gur-baal . . Mehunims, or Maonites, these names refer to various wild Arab tribes that were south of Palestine. It was necessary to subdue them to give tranquillity to the southern borders. (8) gave gifts, as acknowledgment of dependence. (9) corner gate, prob. N. W. of the city.[a] valley gate, W. of the city. turning, perhaps at the E. of Zion.[b] (10) towers, etc., for the defense of his cattle and protection of his wells. plains, prob. E. of Jordan. Carmel, R. V., "the fruitful fields." husbandry, all connected with agriculture.

Shepherds and husbandmen.— William of Tyre describes a country not far from the Euphrates, as inhabited by Syrian and Armenian Christians, who fed great flocks and herds there, but were in subjection to the Turks, who, though few in number, yet living in strong places among them, kept them under, and received tribute from these poor peasants, who inhabited the villages, and employed themselves in country business. I do not know whether this may not give us a truer view of the design of those towers that Uzziah built in the wilderness (mentioned 2 Chr. xxvi. 10) than commentators have done, who have supposed they were conveniences made for sheltering the shepherds from bad weather, or to defend them from the incursions of enemies; for they might rather be designed to keep the nations that pastured there in awe; to prevent their disputing with his servants about wells, and also to induce them quietly to pay that tribute to which the seventh and eighth verses seem to refer.— Harmer.

a Ne. iii. 13.

b Ne. iii. 19, 24, 25.

"Wealth is a weak anchor, and glory cannot support a man; this is the law of God, that virtue only is firm, and cannot be shaken by a tempest." — Pythagoras.

Unblemished let me live or die unknown;
O grant an honest fame, or grant me none." — Pope.

Uzziah's army

11—15. (11) an host, a strong body of militia, wh. served in companies. their account, or muster-roll. (12) chief of the fathers, or heads of families; these occupied positions as officers. "Recalling David's institution of the Gibborim, or 'mighty men of valor,' he raised the number from the 600 of David's time, to 2,600, thus more than quadrupling this important body of picked men."— Rawlinson. (13) an army,[c] for the number comp. ch. xv. 5. the enemy, the national enemy, whoever he might be. There was at this time special reason to fear Assyria. (14) habergeons, R. V., "coats of mail." slings,[d] etc., R. V., "stones for slinging," to him may be attributed the introduction of the military engines long employed by the Assyrians and Egyptians. These he placed on the walls and towers of Jerusalem. We should say he provided ammunition as well as weapons. (15) engines, such as the Roman balista and catapulta. invented, the actual invention by Jews seems to be disputed without good reason.[e]

Uzziah's sin.— We have in this text — I. An example of extraordinary prosperity: "He was marvellously helped." 1. The character of Uzziah; 2. His position of power and prosperity; 3. The secret of success. II. His foolish presumption. Nature of his sin — pride, ingratitude, contempt of that great truth which permitted the kingly and priestly office to meet only in Christ; known disobedience. III. Solemn retribution. Improvement:— 1. Learn the true source of all real prosperity; 2. The peculiar dangers of prosperity; 3. The reason why God keeps His people in a low condition; 4. Sins of presumption are the worst sins; 5. They lead men either to forsake worship or to tamper with it; 6. Sorrow inevitably follows sin.

Engines of war.— There were various engines for casting arrows, darts, and stones of a larger size, of which the most remarkable was the balista, which hurled stones of a size not less than millstones, with so great a violence as to dash whole houses in pieces at a blow. Such were the engines which Uzziah, the king of Judah, planted on the walls and towers of Jerusalem, to defend it against the attacks of an invading force. Some of these inventions, however, had been in use long before, for in the reign of David, the battering-ram c "The army consisted of 307,500 picked men, under the command of 2,000 gallant officers, chiefs or heads of father's houses, so that each father's house formed a distinct band."—Jamieson.

d Ju. xx. 16; 2 Ki. iii. 25.

"In early times the slinger prob. found his own stones; and the supply of them to his soldiers by Uzziah is meant to mark the completeness of his equipment."—Spk. Com.

e "It is a remarkably corroborative fact that Pliny assigns a Syrian origin to these inventions; and in his view, as in ours, Palestine belonged to Syria."— Kitto was employed in the siege of Abel-Bethmaachah : (2 Sa. xx. 15.) These powerful engines, invented by Jewish artists, and worked by the skill and vigor of Jewish soldiers, were undoubtedly the prototypes of those which the celebrated nations of Greece and Rome afterward employed with so much success in their sieges. — Paxton.

B. C. 782 to 737.

16—23. (16) to his destruction, R. V., "so that he did corruptly." transgressed, cf. Nu. xviii. 7. So in Judah the effort is made, as in the northern kingdom, to give to the kingly office the function of the priesthood. to burn incense, assuming the functions of the priest. (17) fourscore priests, prepared to resist the king by force. (18) go . . sanctuary, the king had no business even within the doors of the holy place. (19) leprosy,[a] a Divine judgment on his self-willed sacrilegious act. (20) himself hasted, humbled by this sign of Divine displeasure. (21) several, or separate : lit., the house of liberation. was over, as practically the king. (22) Isaiah, describes the characteristics of the times in ch. ii. 5–8, 16, ff. v. 18-23. Idolatry, luxury, pride and oppression of the poor. (23) in the field, not in the sepulchres themselves, but in the field connected with the sepulchres.

They withstood. — When Theodosius, the emperor, was at Thessalonica, in revenge for certain of his judges slain there, he made a great slaughter among the people by his soldiers, who destroyed 7,000 citizens. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, heard to his great grief, and when the emperor, afterwards returning to Milan, would have come, as his manner had been, to the holy assembly, he stoutly withstood him, saying, "With that face canst thou look upon Him who is Lord of all? With that face canst thou enter His house, whom thou hast so deeply displeased? How canst thou receive His body with those hands so drenched in Christian blood? or drink His blood with that mouth that commanded such inhuman slaughter? Depart; therefore, and go not about to add one wickedness to another, but stand thou excommunicate, till by repentance thou hast obtained pardon of God, and given satisfaction to His offended people." The good emperor — religiously bred, knew well what was fit for a king to do and what for a bishop — returned to his palace, acknowledged the greatness of his sin, and spent eight months in weeping and lamentation ; then coming to Ambrose, begged pardon and absolution, which after many rebukes, he obtained. — Trapp.

Uzziah's sin

"Elated, according to the chronicler, by his success, but certainly in conformity with the precedents of Dav. and Solomon." — Stanley.

Comp. Nu. xvi. 1-35; xviii. 1-7.

a See 2 Ki. v. 27.

"Step out of your lawful calling, you create disorder, play the fool, and bring destruction upon yourselves and others."— Hom. Com.

This is truth the poet sings,
That a sorrow's crown of sorrow is remembering happier things.
—Tennyson.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SEVENTH.

B. C. 737.

1—4. (1) Jotham, already for some time regent. Zadok, the priest, poss. a descendant of the famous priest of that name. (2) entered not, as ch. xxvi. 16–21. corruptly, see 2 Ki. xv. 32–35. "Isaiah announced in these days of Jotham, the coming of the day of the Lord upon all who were proud and lofty (Is. ii. 12 ; vii. 9–13)." (3) high gate, on the north of the temple,[b] (xxiii. 20). This led from the palace to the outer court of the temple. It was loftier in structure than the others. Ophel ("swell," "hill"), was an elevation in the hill south of the temple mount.[c] built much, as its position was important for the defense of the temple. (4) mountains, R. V., "hill country." castles and towers, defenses to check and harass an invading army.

Jotham begins to reign

b Ezek. ix. 2; comp. Je. xx. 2.

c "The long, narrowish, rounded spar, or promontory, wh. intervenes between the central valley of Jerusalem the (Tyropœan) and the Kidron or valley of Jehoshaphat." — Grove.

The verdict of posterity. — The kings and princes of the Oriental regions are often subjected to trial after their decease by their insulted and oppressed people, and punished according to the degree of their delinquency. While the chosen people of God were accustomed to honor in a particular manner the memory of those kings who had reigned over them with justice and clemency, they took care to stamp some mark of posthumous disgrace upon those who had left the world under their disapprobation. The sepulchres of the Jewish kings were at Jerusalem, where, in some appointed receptacle, the remains of their princes were deposited, and from the circumstance of these being the cemetery for successive rulers, it was said when one died and was buried there, that he was gathered to his fathers. But several instances occur in the history of the house of David in which, on various accounts, they were denied the honor of being entombed with their ancestors, and were deposited in some other place in Jerusalem. To mark, perhaps, a greater degree of censure, they were taken to a small distance from Jerusalem and laid in a private tomb. It was, undoubtedly, with a design to make a suitable impression on the mind of the reigning monarch, to guard him against the end of the reign of Jotham abuse of his power, and teach him respect for the feelings and sentiments of that people for whose benefit chiefly he was raised to the throne, that such a stigma was fixed upon the dust of his offending predecessors. — Paxton.

Habits influence the character pretty much as undercurrents influence a vessel, and whether they speed us on the way of our wishes or retard our progress, their power is not the less important because imperceptible.

B. C. 737–735.

5—9. (5) Ammonites, comp. ch. xxvi. 8. They prob. revolted early in Jotham's reign. wheat . . barley, their tribute was paid in kind.[a] (6) became mighty, i. e. "fortified himself, strengthening his throne by other successful wars, referred to in vs. 7."—Keil. prepared,[b] R. V., "ordered." (7) his wars, as vs. 5; comp. 2 Ki. xv. 37. the book . . Judah, "that this book is not the existing book of Kings is clear from the fact that the compiler cites it for particulars respecting matters not mentioned in that book."—Driver. (Cf. 1 Chr. ix. 1; 2 Chr. xxxiii. 18; xxxvi. 8 and note on xxv. 26). (9) in the city of David, i. e. in the usual kings' sepulchres. Ahaz, possessor.

The power of Jotham. — We have in this chapter — I. A history of his reign. It may be taken with 2 Kings xv. 32–38. II. We have also a particular reference to his might. His reign was marked by the buildings which he erected, and by the successful wars. III. But the chief thing to be noted is the secret of his power: "He prepared his ways before the Lord his God." For prepared, the margin would read established, and this implies that he took care to have God's blessing upon him as he proceeded.

From within outward. — First "he built the high gate" of the temple (vs. 3); that was beginning at the very centre, at "the house of the Lord," which was morally, if not geographically, the central spot in the kingdom. Then he made some additions to the wall of Jerusalem (vs. 3). Then, moving outward, he built fortified cities in the mountains, and castles in the forests of Judah. And then, going further afield, he warred with Ammon, and compelled it to pay a tribute (vs. 5). This is the true order. Let solicitude and activity begin at the centre; let them begin at the very centre — at a man's own heart and character; let them move outward — to those in the home circle, to the kindred, to the church; and then to those still further away — to fellow-countrymen, to fellow-men everywhere. A circumscribed activity is altogether a mistake; but we must begin with ourselves, becoming right at heart, and then we may and should move outward in our sympathies and our endeavors. — Clarkson.

a "The productiveness of the Ammonite country in grain, wh. is here indicated, has been remarked upon as extraordinary by modern travelers." —Spk. Com.

b Pr. xxi. 29.

"Holiness consisteth not in a cowl or in a garment of grey. When God purifies the heart by faith, the market is sacred as well as the sanctuary. Neither remaineth there any work or place which is profane."—Luther.

Without application the finest talents are worthless; and with it the humblest are valuable.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-EIGHTH.

B. C. 735.

Ahaz ascends the throne and sins

1—5. (1) Ahaz, on the Assyrian tablets he appears as Jahukhazi = Jehoahaz, not that which was right, comp. 2 Ki. xvi. 1–4. For picture of these times see Is. i. "Under the prosperous reigns of Uzziah and Jotham, with the increase of wealth, power and luxury, false self-confidence and forgetfulness of God had prevailed."—Keil. (2) ways . . Israel,[c] adopting the symbolic worship instituted by Jeroboam. for Baalim, even admitting at last the gross idolatries of Phœnicia. (3) The valley of Ben-hinnom was south of Jerusalem. Who Hinnom was is not known. burnt his children (see on Le. xviii. 21). Though the Rabbis held passing through the fire to be merely a kind of lustration, yet we can scarcely doubt that Ahaz here practiced the more horrid rite of giving some of his children to be burned in the worship of Moloch.[d] — Murphy. cf. Ezek. xvi. 20 ff.; Jer. vii. 31, etc. the heathen, i. e. the Canaanites. (4) every green tree, intimating great extremes of superstition. (5) king of Syria, Rezin.[e] "The first great blow fell on the kingdom under the weak and idolatrous Ahaz, who became "the servant of the Assyrian (comp. Is. vii)."—Oehler. Damascus, Ge. xiv. 15. king of Israel, Pekah, see vs. 6.

In Ahaz we have — I. A son who rebelled against the maxims of his father. Instead of carrying forward the improvements that his father inaugurated, we find that he initiated an altogether new state of things. II. A father who was devoid of natural affection towards his children. "He burnt his children in the fire." III. The wicked sons of good fathers may, one of these days, be fathers themselves; and the evil they have done will be repaid to them again.

A well-ordered life. — Taking a ride one day, Frederick, king of Prussia, surnamed "Old Fritz," espied an old farmer ploughing his acres by the wayside, and cheerily singing his melody. "You are well off, old man," said the king; "does this one acre on which you so industriously labor belong to you?" "No, sir," replied the old farmer, who knew not that it was the king; "I am c 1 Ki. xvi. 31; 2 Ki. i. 2; 2 Chr. xxi. 6; xxii. 3; xxiii. 17.

d "The worship of Moloch was now established in the valley of Hinnom, in a spot known by the name of Tophet, close under the walls of Jerus. There the brazen statue of the god was erected, with the furnace within, or at its feet, into which the children were thrown. To this dreadful form of human sacrifice Ahaz gave the highest sanction by the devotion of one or more of his sons." — Stanley. Comp. 2 Ki. xvi. 3.

e Comp. 2 Ki. xvi. 5; Is. vii. 1.

not so rich as that. I plow by the day for wages." "How much do you get?" asked the king. "Eight groschen (about 18 cents) a day," said the farmer. "That is not much," returned the king; "can you get along with it?" "Yes, and have something to spare." "How is that?" The farmer smiled, and said, "Well, if I must tell you, two groschen are for myself and wife, with two I pay my old debts, two I lend away, and two I give away for the Lord's sake." "That is a mystery which I cannot solve," remarked the king. "Then I will solve it for you," said the farmer. "I have two old parents at home, who kept me when I was weak and needed help and, now that they are weak and need help, I keep them. This is my debt, toward which I pay two groschen a day. The third pair of groschen, which I lend away, I spend for my children, that they may receive Christian instruction. This will come handy to me and my wife when we get old. With the last two groschen I maintain two sick sisters, whom I would not be compelled to keep; this I give for the Lord's sake." The king, well pleased with his answer, said, "Bravely spoken, old man. Now I will also give you something to guess. Have you ever seen me before?" "Never," said the farmer. "In less than five minutes you shall see me fifty times and carry in your pocket fifty of my likenesses." "That is a riddle which I cannot unravel," said the farmer. "Then I will do it for you," rejoined the king. Thrusting his hand into his pocket, and counting him fifty brand new gold pieces into his palm, stamped with his royal likeness, he said to the astonished farmer, who knew not what was coming, "The coin is genuine, for it also comes from our Lord God, and I am His paymaster. I bid you adieu."

B. C. 735.

"There be many that deal with God's word and His religion as doth the butterfly with the sweet flowers; and that is even to dye their wings with them, that they may seem to be of a fair painted color; these think that holiness consisteth much hearing, how little soever they practice." — T. Timme.

6–10. (6) son of Remaliah, 2 Ki. xv. 25.[a] slew . . day, these vast numbers of slain indicate a complete route and panic. (7) king's son, or brother, prob. a son of Jotham. the house, or palace, cf. 1 Ki. iv. 6; 2 Ki. xviii. 18. next to the king,[b] or chief councilor. The loss of so many great officers made this defeat a national calamity. (8) of their brethren, this aggravated the distress.[c] (9) Oded, not the same man as xv. 1, etc. This was a prophet ministering in Samaria. The incident is not related in Kings. before the host, i. e. to meet the returning victors. reacheth . . heaven,[d] i. e. which is seen of God and will be punished by Him. (10) bondmen, etc., which Jewish law forbade, cf. Lev. xxv. 45, 46. with you, sins, comp. Christ's teaching, Mat. vii. 1–5.

The evil of sin. — We might illustrate the evil of sin by the following comparison:— "Suppose I were going along a street, and were to dash my hand through a large pane of glass, what harm would I receive?" "You would be punished for breaking the glass." "Would that be all the harm I should receive?" "Your hand would be cut by the glass." "Yes; and so it is with sin. If you break God's laws, you shall be punished for breaking them; and your soul is hurt by the very act of breaking them." — J. Inglis.

Pekah and Zichri; Oded, the prophet

[a] "Pekah appears to have been almost better known by his patronymic, Ben-Remaliah, than by his own proper name (Is. vii. 4, 5)." — Spk. Com.

[b] Est. x. 3.

[c] Ps. lv. 12, 13.

[d] Ob. 10-16; Re. xviii. 5. See also Le. xxv. 39, 42, 43, 46.

B. C. 735-715.

11–15. (11) deliver, etc., send them back.[e] (12) of the heads, the patriarchal chiefs who formed the king's council; nothing more is known of these men. against, etc., strongly feeling the shame of having their own brethren in bondage. (13) hither, i. e. to Samaria. whereas . . trespass, R. V., "Ye purpose that which will bring upon us a trespass against the Lord to add unto our sins and to our trespass." (14) left . . spoil, yielded it to them to deal with as they pleased. (15) with the spoil, wh. was, of course, their own national property. carried, etc., an indication of tender considerateness.[f] city of palm trees, De. xxxiv. 3.

Oded's message

[e] Ja. ii. 13.

[f] 2 Ki vi. 22; Pr. xxv. 21, 22; Lu. vi. 27.

Human pity. — Instead of slaughtering their prisoners, which in that age might have been done without pity or remorse, we have these soldiers of Israel showing all possible kindness to them. It is a common thing now for men to show a magnanimous kindness to their fallen enemy even on the battle-field. But the teaching of the Lord of love has done its work to some extent, and has mercifully modified the cruelties of war. The scene of the text was something of an anticipation of the injunction, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." — Clarkson. Misplaced clemency. — The Duke de Montausier, preceptor to the dauphin, son of Louis XIV., is said to have been the only one of that monarch's courtiers who had the courage to speak the truth to him. When Louis one day told him that he had pardoned a man who had killed nineteen persons, after having been pardoned for the first murder he committed, "No, sire," said Montausier, "he killed but one; your majesty killed the nineteen." — Percy Anec.

"The record of this act of compassion of these Israelites towards the captives of Judah is to be noted as affording a refutation of the allegation of some modern critics, that the writer of the Chron. was swayed by partiality for Judah, and by prejudice against Israel." — Wordsworth.

B. C. 735–715.

Ahaz seeks aid of Assyria

16–21. (16) kings of Assyria, plural for singular. Ref. is to Tiglath-Pileser.[a] (17) Edomites, who had been subdued by Amaziah and Uzziah, taking advantage of the war with Israel, cast off their yoke, and made a raid into the country.[b] (18) Beth-shemesh, Jos. xv. 10. Ajalon, Jos xix. 42. Gederoth, Jos. xv. 41. Shocho, 1 Sa. xvii. 1. Timna, Jos. xv. 10. Gimzo, Jimzu, "a large village in the maritime plain, about 2½ m. fr. Ludd (the ancient Lydda)." — Robinson. (19) made Judah naked,[c] R. V., "dealt wantonly in Judah." (20) king of Assyria, he seized a considerable part of Pekah's kingdom (2 Ki. xv. 29). He also took Damascus and slew Rezin (2 Ki. xvi. 9). But he merely made a tributary of Ahab. The Assyrian monuments testify to this. — Murphy. distressed, etc., by taking heavy tribute, and not rendering the help Ahaz wanted. (21) took away, etc., to make up the tribute.

The conduct of Ahaz in his distress. — I. The very evil imputed to Ahaz, of trespassing yet more in his distress, may be committed by us in our troubles. 1. By indifference; 2. By obstinacy; 3. By murmuring; 4. By despondency. That we may be afraid of following the steps of Ahaz, let us consider — II. The stigma fixed upon him. There is an extraordinary force and emphasis in the expression, "This is that king Ahaz." — Simeon.

No man suffers alone for his sin. — Sages of old contended that no sin was ever committed whose consequences rested on the head of the sinner alone; that no man could do ill and his fellows not suffer. They illustrated it thus: "A vessel, sailing from Joppa, carried a passenger, who beneath his berth, cut a hole through the ship's side. When the men of the watch expostulated with him, saying, 'What doest thou, O miserable man?' the offender calmly replied, 'What matters it to you? The hole I have made lies under my own berth.'" This ancient parable is worthy of the utmost consideration. No man perishes alone in his iniquity; no man can guess the full consequences of his transgression. — Spurgeon.

continued trespass of Ahaz

22–27. (22) is that king, R. V., "this same king." Comp. expression Nu. xxvi. 9. (23) gods of Damascus, Hadad, Rimmon, etc.[d] all Israel, here for Judah. "The judgments which the Assyrians were commissioned by God to inflict upon Judah are regarded by the historian as peculiarly the effect of the idolatry of Ahaz." — Keil. (24) shut up, so actually seeking to put an end to the worship of Jehovah. altars in every corner, as if he would secure the help of all the idol-gods. The work of demolition is more particularly described in 2 Ki. xvi. 17, in conjunction with the preceding verses narrating the construction of an altar after the model of one seen at Damascus. (25) several, or separate. (26) written, etc., 2 Ki. xvi. book . . Israel, not the present book of Kings, cf. notes on xxvii. 7 and xxv. 26. (27) not into the sepulchres, as if he were an honored king.

Ahaz. — I. The character of Ahaz. 1. He was one of those whose iniquity is enhanced by the contempt of spiritual privileges; 2. His downward career was rapidly progressive; 3. He reached the lowest point of human obduracy. II. The illustration he affords of the appalling power of sin. 1. Evil habits strengthen by indulgence; 2. The world increases its power over its votaries as they advance in life; 3. Sinners of mature years lose the perception of religious truth; 4. There is a limit to Divine endurance, and hardened transgressors are often left to perish in their sin.

Ahaz. — King Ahaz is one of the stupendous monuments of guilt in Israelitish history. He is one of the few men in any history of whom not one good thing is recorded. His career was one uniform and unmitigated stream of iniquity from beginning to end. Not one virtue or virtuous act is thought worthy of mention in his whole life. So black and disgraceful was his reign, that when he died, the indignant and revolted conscience of the nation refused him burial in the royal sepulchre. The career of this wretched prince illustrates the distinction which it is possible for a man to gain in this world as a monument of guilt. "He did trespass more against the Lord. This is that king Ahaz!" Such is the reflection of the annalist, after enumerating the monarch's crimes. "This is that king Ahaz. Look at him; mark him! let him stand in history as a monster of iniquity; let the world stand aghast at him." Such seems to be the spirit of the inspired recorder. — Prof. Phelps.

Sin, a boomerang. — There is an Australian missile called the boomerang, which is thrown so as to describe singular curves, and to return at last to the hand of the thrower. Sin is a kind of boomerang, which goes off into space curiously, but turns again upon its author, and with tenfold force strikes the guilty soul that launched it. — Spurgeon.

a "Entering Syria at the head of an army, he fell first on Damascus, where Rezin met him in battle, and was defeated and slain. Next he attacked Pekah, and the 2½ transjordanic tribes were carried away captive by the conqueror: and some cities (e.g. Megiddo and Dur) on the other side Jordan were taken." — Rawlinson.

b For the character of the Edomites see Am. i. 11; Eze. xxxv. 5; Ob. 10–14.

c Hos. ii. 3, 10–13.

d See 2 Ki. xvi. 10–16.

"This may be paralleled by the prayer of Camillus to the Veientine Juno, and the custom of the Romans, related by Macrobius, of enticing the tutelary gods from the cities with wh. they were at war, by supplications and vows." — Spk. Com.

"The way of sin is down hill; a man cannot stop where he would, and he that will be tampering with dangerous occasions in confidence of his resolution, shall often find himself carried beyond his purpose." — Abp. Leighton.

B. C. 715.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-NINTH.

Hezekiah

he begins to reign

1—6. (1) Hezekiah, Jehovah strengthens. "The authorities for the history of Hezekiah's 29 yrs. reign are 2 Ki. xviii.-xx.; Is. xxxvi.-xxxix.; 2 Chr. xxix.-xxxii.; and the book of Micah, which was composed during the first six yrs. of this reign. Hezekiah zealously pursued two objects,—one, the elevation of the moral and religious condition of the people, the other the independence of the kingdom, throwing off the Assyran yoke.—Oehler. Zechariah, poss. the person mentioned Is. viii. 2. (2) right, his father's extravagant idolatry seems to have induced in him a revulsion of feeling. (3) in the first,[a] etc., at the earliest moment possible. repaired them,[b] suggesting that Ahaz had damaged the sacred building. (4) east street,[c] R. V., "the broad place on the east." (5) sanctify . . yourselves, so only could they be fit to purify the house of God. the filthiness, chiefly the relics of idolatry introduced by Ahaz.[d] (6) turned their backs, figure for utterly neglecting and despising.

All for the best.—Bernard Gilpin, accused of heresy before Bishop Bonner, set out for London for trial. His favorite maxim was, "All things are for the best." Upon his journey, he broke his leg. "Is all for the best now?" said a scornful companion. "I still believe so," he replied. So it proved; for before he was able to resume his journey, Queen Mary died, and instead of going to London to be burned, he returned home in triumph.

a Abib or Nisan, the month of the passover.

b 2 Ki. xviii. 16.

c "The court of the priests wh. fronted the eastern gate of the temple."—Jamieson.

d Ki. xvi. 15.

he proposes to restore the worship of God

7—11. (7) shut up, ch. xxviii. 24. (8) delivered . . hissing,[e] R. V., "delivered them to be tossed to and fro, to be an astonishment, and an hissing." see Mic. vi. 16. (9) in captivity.[f] (10) make a covenant, see ch. xv. 12. This could be but the renewal of the old national covenant. (11) My sons, a hearty and affectionate appeal to the priests and Levites. The manner is characteristic. negligent, the king was anxious for immediate attention to the matter. chosen you, the family of Levi.[g]

The snares of sin.—Among the first settlers of Brunswick, Me., was Daniel Malcolm, a man of undaunted courage, and an inveterate enemy of the Indians. Early in the spring, he ventured alone into the forest for the purpose of splitting rails, not apprehensive of Indians so early in the season. While engaged in his work, and having opened a log with small wedges about half its length, he was surprised by Indians, who crept up, and secured his musket standing by his side. "Sungurnumby," said the chief, "now me got you; long me want you; you long speak Indian; long time worry him; me have got you now; look up stream to Canada." "Well," said Malcom, "you have me; but just help me open this log before I go." They all (five in number) agreed. Malcolm prepared a large wooden wedge, carefully drove it, took out his small wedges, and told the Indians to put in their fingers to the partially clefted wood, and help pull it open. They did; he then suddenly struck out his blunt wedge; and the elastic wood instantly closed fast on their fingers, and he secured them all.

e Comp. 1 Ki ix. 8; 2 Chr. xxiv. 18; Je. xviii. 16, xix. 8; xxv. 9, 18; xxix. 18;

f "War was, doubtless, both the first cause, and the ever-fertile source of slavery, for the theory of the Asiatics has always been, and continues to be, that the conqueror has a right to the life and the property of the conquered."—Van Lennep.

g Nu. iii. 6; viii. 14; xviii. 2, 6.

the Levites prepare for their duties

12—15. (12) Kohathites, Nu. iii. 27–31, iv. 2–15, 34–37. Merari, Nu. xxvi. 57.[h] Gershonites, Nu. iii. 17–26.[i] (13) Elizaphan, Ex. vi. 22.[j] Asaph, 1 Chr. vi. 39.[k] (14) Heman, 1 Chr. vi. 33. Jeduthun, or Ethan, 1 Chr. vi. 44. (15) sanctified themselves, Ex. xix. 10, 22.[l]

Hezekiah.—The experience of Hezekiah illustrates the fact that the conversion of men is often assisted by their natural recoil from extreme wickedness. Even irreligious men are shocked by wickedness which exceeds their own. A young man's first knowledge of the world, when he goes out from the innocence of his childhood's home, often produces a recoil from the world's depravity. He did not know before that sin was so vile a thing. He starts back from it, and begins to feel his need of prayer. Not long ago a young man who had just entered college wrote home to his father, saying, "I did not know how wicked young men could be till I came here. I shall not get through without a wreck unless I commit myself as a follower of Christ." From that time he consecrated his life to God. God used the very enormities of sin to save him from sin. So the child of vicious parents is often saved from vice by his early knowledge of vice. Many a drunkard's child has never tasted a drop of intoxicating drink. The Holy Spirit is ingenious in devising ways of alluring men to heaven. He draws men in backward in their recoil h Nu. iii. 33–37; iv. 29–33; vii. 8.

i Nu. iv. 22–28, 38–41; vii. 7; x. 17; xxvi. 57.

j Nu. iii. 30; 1 Chr. xv. 8.

k See titles of Psalms l., lxxiii.-lxxxiii. Comp. 1 Chr. xxv. 1-6; 2 Chr. v. 12.

l 1 Chr. xxiii. 27, 28.

B. C. 715.

from hell. He uses sin to defeat sin. When a prairie is on fire, and the traveler is in danger of being surrounded and suffocated by the roaring flame, he has a way of fighting fire with fire. So the Spirit of God sets guilt against guilt. Temptation is checkmated by the very ghastliness of the crime which it proposes. — A. Phelps.

the priests cleanse the house of God

16—19. (16) inner part, i. e. the temple building ; all within the porch ; into the temple itself the Levites might not enter.[a] uncleanness, so long shut up, dust, etc., had gathered in the holy house. Comp. vs. 5. brook Kidron, was on the east of the temple mount (2 Ki. xxiii. 12; xxx. 14). (17) sixteenth day, taking eight days for each portion of the work. There was a great deal of metal work to clean, etc. (18) altar, "the new fangled altar of Ahaz (2 Ki. xvi. 10) was no doubt removed and the old altar of Solomon restored to its place in front of the porch."[b] — Rawlinson. (19) cast away, ch. xxviii. 24.

Undisturbed by the unpleasantness of duty. — This duty laid upon the Levites and upon the priests was not inviting work. To "bring out all the uncleanness" from the temple, and to "carry it out into the brook Kidron," could not be very agreeable occupation. But they did not hesitate to do it. And, indeed, they could not possibly have been better occupied. In that act they were carrying forth a curse ; they were bearing away the wrath of their God. They were not merely cleansing an edifice ; they were clearing their conscience ; they were righting their record in the books of heaven. No fair hand was doing that week in Jerusalem any work of refinement that more graced its owner than did the hands of those Levites as they stripped the false altar of its clothing, or as they swept the accumulated dust from the courts of the sanctuary. Let us not despise any true work of any kind. Even if it is not of a kind that answers to our taste or to our training ; even if it should be uncongenial to our spirit. If it be that work which the emergency requires of us, or if it be that which Divine providence assigns us at the time ; if it be that which our Master himself asks of us in order to serve His cause or to help one of His little ones, it is honorable employment, it should be accounted holy in our esteem. — Clarkson.

a "Beginning with the outer courts, the cleansing of these occupied 8 days, after which they set themselves to purify the interior; but as the Levites were not allowed to enter within the walls of the temple, the priests brought all the sweepings out to the porch, where they were received by the Levites, and thrown into the brook Kedron." — Jamieson.

b 2 Ki. xvi. 14. 15.

Hezekiah's sin-offering

20—26. (20) early, the very next morning after receiving information that the cleansing work was done. Setting example of the earnestness in God's service wh. He demanded, vs. 11. rulers of the city, he would not wait to gather the representatives of a nation. (21) sin offering,[c] Le. iv. 14. His burnt-offering is spoken of in vss. 24, 27. (22) they killed, "the slaughtering of the beast of sacrifice is executed at private offerings by the offerer himself ; but when a sacrifice was offered for the whole nation (vs. 24) the killing was done by the priests." — Oehler. sprinkled, Le. viii. 14, 15.[d] (23) laid their hands, Le. i. 4 ; iv. 15, 24. (24) reconciliation, R. V., "a sin offering," cf. Le. iv. This is added to the burnt-offering for all Israel. all Israel, this term is frequently used for the kingdom of Judah only. Hez. may have intended spiritual service on behalf of all Jehovah's people. (25) according, etc., 1 Chr. xxv. 1 ; 2 Chr. v. 12. (26) instruments, 1 Chr. xxiii. 5.

Instruments.— Music has a most humanizing effect. The cultivation of the art has a favorable influence upon public morals. It furnishes a source of pleasure in every family. It gives home a new attraction. It makes social intercourse more cheerful. Father Mathew followed up his temperance movement by a singing movement. He promoted the establishment of musical clubs all over Ireland, for he felt that, as he had taken the people's whisky from them, he must give them some wholesome stimulus in its stead. He gave them music. Singing classes were established, to refine the taste, soften the manners, and humanize the mass of the Irish people. But we fear that the example set by Father Mathew has already been forgotten. — Smiles.

c "The sin-offering; wh. was to make the worshipper acceptable in the sight of God, always preceded the burnt-offering, wh. was a representative self-dedication of the worshipper to God's service. Hence it is best to consider that Hez. commenced with an unusually comprehensive sin-offering to atone for sins of the people, etc." — Spk. Com.

d He. ix. 21.

Hezekiah's burnt-offering

27—31. (27) the burnt offering, "As soon as the act of offering began, the choir of Levites struck up a psalm, in which they were joined by the trumpets of the priests. During the whole service the assembled congregation stood praying ; at the close they threw themselves upon their knees, and then, most likely, received the priestly blessing." — Oehler. (30) to sing praise, i. e., he probably revived at this time the use of the psalms in public worship. (31) consecrated yourselves, Heb. "filled your hand" (cf. Ex. xxxii. 29), i. e. brought something to offer to the Lord as an expression of self-surrender. thank offerings, Le. vii. 12.

"Aspirations after the holy— the only aspiration in which the human soul

Reverent joy. — "And they sang praises with gladness" (vs. 30); "And Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people" (vs. 36). What was more fitted to fill their hearts with overflowing joy than the feeling that they, as a nation, had returned unto the Lord, and had renewed their covenant with Him; that He had accepted them; that "His anger was turned away;" that they might now look forward to a time when they would dwell in the light of His countenance and walk in His loving favor? It was an hour for the exuberance of the people's heart, from the heart of the king to that of the humblest citizen of Judah. And there is no time when joy, reverent joy, is more becoming to ourselves than when we are worshipping in the sanctuary of Christ. There we are conscious of our reconciliation to our heavenly Father, in Him who is our Divine Saviour; there we feel the nearness of our glorious Redeemer, who is "present in the midst of us;" there we pour forth our gratitude and love, and there we renew our happy bonds of holy service unto "Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood;" there we realize our substantial and abiding union with all His people, our fellow-citizens in the kingdom and fellow-workers in the vineyard of Christ; and there we anticipate the purer joys and the nobler service of the heavenly land. Sacred joy is the true key-note of the strain when we meet in the sanctuary and engage in the worship of Christ. — Clarkson.

B. C. cir 715.

can be assured that it will never meet with disappointment." — Maria M'Intosh.

"Sing aloud old songs, the precious music of the heart!" — Wordsworth

"It is a quaint saying of the Jewish rabbis, that 'God could not be everywhere, and therefore he made mothers.'"

32—36. (32) burnt offerings, wh. were wholly devoted to God. In some kinds of sacrifices part of the victim belonged to, and was consumed by the worshipper. (33) consecrated things, "thank-offerings, which were eaten before the Lord." — Murphy. (34) too few, prob. many had yielded to idolatry, and these would not readily accept the new reforms of Hezekiah.[a] the other priests, R. V., "the priests." (35) The burnt-offerings and the fat of the other offerings (Lev. iii. 3–5) were burnt on the altar by the priests.[b] The libations are prescribed in Num. xv. This completed the restoration of the sacrificial worship. — Murphy. (36) all the people . . people, R. V., "all the people, because of that which God had prepared for the people." This reformation was of God. suddenly, immediately on his coming to the throne.

the order of the service completed a See 2 Ki. xvi. 10–16.

b Le. iii. 16.

Atonement for sin. — A certain man on the Malabar coast, having inquired of various devotees and priests, how he might make atonement for his sins, was directed to drive iron spikes sufficiently blunted, through his sandals; and on these spikes he was enjoined to place his naked feet, and to walk about four hundred and eighty miles. If, through loss of blood or weakness of body, he was obliged to halt, he might wait for healing and strength. He undertook the journey, and while he halted under a large shady tree, where the gospel was sometimes preached, one of the missionaries came and preached in his hearing from these words: "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." While he was preaching, the man rose up, threw off his torturing sandals, and cried out aloud, "This is what I want;" and he became a lively witness that the blood of Jesus Christ does indeed cleanse from all sin. — Whitecross.

If you wish to know Christ as your Saviour you must behold Him, by the eye of faith, hanging on the cross, an atoning sacrifice.

"Atonement is the reconciliation of God to man by the death of His Son. Satisfaction expresses the relation which the work of Christ sustains to the demands of God's law and justice." —A. A. Hodge.

CHAPTER THE THIRTIETH.

1—5. (1) all Israel, the king desires to restore the great national festivals, gathering not only the two but the 10 tribes also. It is supposed that the king of Israel may have been a prisoner in Assyria at this time. 2 Ki. xvii. 4. Ephraim and Manasseh,[c] the leading tribes of the northern kingdom. (2) second month, the proper time was the first month.[d] It was provided (Nu. ix. 9–13) that those who were prevented from celebrating the regular Passover might do so at the next full moon. (3) at that time, i. e. at the proper time. Hez.'s accession to the throne seems to have taken place in the first month of the eccles. year. sufficiently, R. V., "in sufficient number." (5) all Israel, the king of Israel, if not a captive (cf. vs. 1), may have been favorable to such a great religious festival, or wished to keep on good terms with Hezekiah.[e] He had not a strong hold on the government. of a long time, R. V., "in great numbers."

Hezekiah proclaims the Passover

c "This was before the captivity of the Ten Tribes, wh. did not take place till the ninth year of Hoshea, king of Israel, wh. was the sixth year of Hezekiah. 2 Ki. xviii. 9, 10."—Wordsworth.

d Nu. ix. 1-5.

Hezekiah's zeal for the glory of God. — Influence a talent of vast importance; often abused where it exists in the highest degree. I. The efforts he used in the service of God. II. The object he sought to accomplish — one of the e "Hoshea is described as, though evil in some respects, yet more favorably disposed to religious liberty than any of his predecessors since the separation of the kingdom. This is thought to be the meaning of the mitigating clause in his character. 2 Ki. xvii. 2."—Jamieson.

B. C. cir. 715.

highest importance. III. The way in which he endeavored to accomplish his end — peculiarly amiable and praiseworthy. IV. The success with which his efforts were attended. —Simeon.

Zeal for God. — "I know," says Mr. Fenner, "an old man that used constantly to go to the laborers in the fields, and talk to them about religion as they were reaping and working. He would go to men's shops where he was acquainted, and stir them up to the care of their souls; and, by this means, brought about forty men and women to seek for heaven, who before had no more care that way than if they had been a company of beasts. Wouldst thou not be glad to do good? Thou wilt never be able to do it, except thou be zealous. Paul had women and sundry private Christians who labored with him in the Gospel. This — this — beloved, would cause religion to thrive here amongst us!" — Whitecross.

Hezekiah sends posts through the land

6—12. (6) posts, runners, couriers,[a] 2 Ki. xi. 4. saying, in addition to the written letters, they were to say this to the people. remnant of you, several Assyrian invasions had already been made, and portions of the people had been removed.[b] kings of Assyria, Pul and Tiglath-Pileser. (7) like your brethren, the 2½ trans-Jordanic tribes; 1 Chr. v. 26. (8) stiffnecked, Ex. xxxii. 9.[c] "Hardening the neck is the gesture of disobedience (Deut. x. 16), as giving the hand (1 Chr. xxiv. 24) is that of submission."—Murphy. yield yourselves, lit. give the hand.[d] (9) gracious, etc., Ex. xxxiv. 6. (10) Zebulun, in the extreme north of the country. laughed, etc., 2 Chr. xxxvi. 16.[e] (11) divers, certain individuals. The response was not very hearty. National jealousy prevented acceptance. (12) one heart, a united national feeling.

a 2 Sa. xviii. 19-32; 2 Chr. xxx. 10; Jer. li. 31; Job. ix. 25, 26.

b 2 Ki. xv. 19, 20; 1 Chr. v. 26.

c De. x. 16.

d Ro. vi. 13; xii. 1.

e Is. xvii. 3-11; Hos. v. 1-4.

There is no danger of repulse. — "The Lord your God is gracious and merciful, and will not turn away His face from you, if ye return unto Him" (vs. 9). The people of this idolatrous realm might well ask whether they had not hopelessly separated themselves from Jehovah, whether their rebelliousness had not gone such lengths that mercy was not to be looked for. But Hezekiah charged them to dismiss all such fears from their minds; their repentance would meet with a gracious response from the forgiving God of their fathers. — Clarkson.

the feast of the Passover kept 13—17. (13) in the second month, see on vs. 2. (14) the altars, ch. xxviii. 24, 25. Before the festival they cleanse the city, as Hezekiah had the temple, cf. 2 Ki. xxiii. 6. (15) ashamed, "this word, occurring in one conjugation or another thirty-eight times, expresses in every instance a genuine shame. It now was the forerunner of a practical repenting."— Pul. Com. into the house, into the priests' court, not within the temple building. (16) manner, R. V., "order," cf. Le. i. 11-13, etc. of the hand, etc., the Levites being obliged to help in slaying the numerous victims.[f] (17) had the charge, bec. these unsanctified people could not do it for themselves.

f 2 Chr. xxix. 22; 34.

Though at present you have not the sweet assurance of acceptance in your heart it does not therefore follow that all your sins are not blotted out by the precious blood of Christ.

Real repentance. —

What better can we do, than, to the place
Repairing where He judged us, prostrate fall
Before Him reverent, and there confess Humbly our faults, and pardon beg, with tears
Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign Of sorrow unfeigned, and humiliation meek? — Milton.

Hezekiah prays for imperfect worshipers

18—22. (18) otherwise, i. e. not in strict accordance with Mosaic rules, which prescribed that the uncleansed must not eat the Passover (Nu. ix. 6). The uncleanness specially applied to those who had journeyed to the Passover from the districts of Israel. (19) prepareth his heart, so is sincere; heart-clean, though not ceremonially clean. (20) healed, "pardoned their uncleanness, and overlooked it." Poss. Isaiah brought some message to this effect.[g] (21) seven days, Ex. xii. 15; xiii. 6. loud instruments, such as suited triumphant praise. (22) spake comfortably, comp. xxix. 11, characteristic of the kindliness of this great king. taught the good knowledge, R. V., "were well skilled in the service." making confession, i. e. the confession or uttering forth of praise.[h] g Comp. 2 Ki. xix. 20; xx. 5.

h Ezra x. 11.

As in the body diseases are incapable of cure till you discover the nature of them; so

The love of God. — The Lord is larger than any law. Love infinitely transcends any regulation. Say to the most eccentric minds, there is a place for you at God's feast. Say to those who cannot find brotherhood on earth, by-and-by even your peculiarity shall be explained, and you shall constitute an element in the last eternal harmony. If any man keep himself away from the feast of God's love, let him blame himself. The invitation included him, and honors his manhood by allowing him the liberty, not the right, to decline the invitation. — J. Parker.

B. C cir. 715.

it is with regard to the soul. O Lord, show me myself!

23—27. (23) other seven days, in imitation of Solomon's feast at the dedication of the temple.[a] (24) did give,[b] R. V., "did give for offerings." (25) congregation . . Israel, Israelites who had settled in the land of Judah when idolatry was introduced into Israel. strangers, those responding to the invitation of Hez. (26) since, etc., comp. what is said of Josiah's Passover. 2 Ki. xxiii. 22, 23. The Passover was annually celebrated by a few. But such a national celebration had not occurred since the time of Solomon at the Feast of Tabernacles (vii. 9). — Murphy. (27) blessed, Nu. vi. 24–26.

Universal joy. — I am not unmindful of the assertion that the God of the Hebrews is usually thought of as a being of preternatural severity, overwhelming men by his majesty, begetting profound and soul-filling awe by his greatness, dwelling in the thick darkness, making clouds his chariot, and sweeping down on his foes like a cyclone. But this representation is one-sided and unfair to a religion which had more festivals than fasts, more psalms than prophecies, and more triumphs than despairs. By the side of intolerance of sin there is mercy that reacheth to the very heavens, and near to the righteousness that is like the great mountains there is a forgiveness that inspires hopeful petition, even out of depth of sufferings and misfortune. — J. Clifford.

the priests and Levites bless the people

[a] 1 Ki. viii. 65.

[b] 2 Chr. xxxv. 7, 8.

"He only sees well who sees the whole in the parts, and the parts in the whole. I know but three classes of men: those who see the whole, those who see but a part, and those who see both together." — Lavater.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIRST.

1—4. (1) all Israel, the entire congregation, inflamed with zeal. in Ephraim also, first the temple was cleansed, then Jerusalem, then Judah, then the rest of Israel. Hoshea was still a prisoner, probably. 2 Ki. xvii. 4; xviii. 1–7. every . . cities, this indicates that the captivity was not yet accomplished. (2) courses, as laid down by David.[c] of the tents,[d] R. V., "of the camp." "The service of the doorkeepers was organized in military fashion, the idea of the camp of Jehovah, in the wilderness, being transferred to the sanctuary." 1 Chr. ix. 19. — Oehler. (3) king's portion, "the royal contribution from the king's demesnes and revenues.[e] (4) encouraged in, R. V., "give themselves to." "Having set the example, he calls upon the people to do their part as prescribed in Ex. xxiii. 19, and Nu. xviii. 21." — Murphy.

Reform. — Men cannot strike finally if they only act as reformers. Reform is an active word, and is to be regarded with great favor, and is the only word that is permissible under some circumstances; but the greater word is regeneration. Reform that does not point to regeneration is a waxen flower that will melt when the sun is well up in the heavens. It is not in man to regenerate, therefore; this is the mystery of God's action in the soul. When the man is new the action will be new. The great process does not begin with the action, but with the soul. Make the tree good, then the fruit will be good. — Parker.

Hezekiah puts down idolatry, and professes for worship of God

[c] 1 Chr. xxiii. 6; xxiv. 1.

[d] "The square enclosure, with its gates and stations, its guards and porters, its reliefs, its orderly arrangement and its tabernacle, or tent, of the great commander in the midst, very much resembl'd a camp." — Spk. Com.

[e] For Hezekiah's riches, see 2 Chr. xxxii. 27-29.

5—10. (5) honey, or dates. the tithe, Le. xxvii. 30.[f] (6) by heaps, or as Heb. heaps, heaps. (7) seventh month, wh. would complete the harvesting.[g] "The Feast of Weeks, about the sixth of the third month, was the close of the grain harvest. After this the tithe would begin to be paid in kind. Hence the heaps. In the seventh month was the Feast of Ingathering, when the vintage was over." — Murphy. (8) they blessed, rendered thanksgiving for such grace from God, and such liberality in the people. (9) questioned, what to do with these abundant gifts. (10) Azariah, ch. xxvi. 17.

They blessed the Lord. — The source of all good. 1. For a bountiful year. 2. For disposition to consecrate its gifts. 3. For abundance which is left (vs. 10). Nothing should be wasted, only right use of everything brings blessings. — Hom. Com.

the offering of the firstfruits

[f] Ex. xxii. 29; De. xviii. 1-4; Ne. xiii. 12.

[g] "They began before Pentecost, and ended at Tabernacles."—Wordsworth.

Hezekiah.—He was reckoned one of the three perfect kings (2 Ki. xviii. 5), the other two being David and Josiah.—Todd. He was one of the noblest princes

"When once enthusiasm has been turned into ridi-

B. C. cir. 715.

who ever adorned David's throne. His reign of twenty-nine years offers an almost unmarred picture of persevering warfare against the most intricate and most difficult circumstances, and of glorious victory.— Ewald. Ready for war when necessary, and alike brave and skillful in its conduct, he gave his heart rather to the promotion of the internal welfare of his kingdom.— Geikie. He took for his counselor Isaiah, the prophet, who, the Jewish rabbis say, was his tutor.—Peloubet.

cule, everything is undone, except money and power." — Corinne.

Hezekiah provides store-chambers

11—19. (11) chambers, prop. storehouses, granaries. Some of the chambers built round the temple were used for this purpose.[a] (12) faithfully, honestly: not appropriating any of the store to common uses. (13) overseers, keeping watch over and directing the workmen employed. (14) toward the east, R. V., "at the east gate." most holy things, Le. vi. 17. (15) next him, R. V., "under him." cities of the priests, their places of residence: all received their support by careful distribution of the tithe.[b] (16) Beside, etc., R. V., "beside them that were reckoned by genealogy of males, from three years old and upward, even every one that entered into the house of the Lord, as the duty of every day required for their service," etc.; the meaning of this vs. is that the Levites while in attendance at the temple received rations there for themselves and their children. (17) Both to the genealogy, R. V., "and them that were reckoned by genealogy." Levites from twenty years, priests entered on their office at 30.[c] (18) And to, etc., R. V., "and them that were reckoned by genealogy." This is the register of "the little ones" (xx. 13), namely, the wives, sons, and daughters of the priests and Levites. Thus the distribution in vs. 15 is to those in the cities in general; excepted from it are those in attendance at the temple with their male children of three years and upward, who have a distribution in Jerusalem; and included in it are the wives and daughters and male children under three years. in their set office, in their faithfulness, as before in vs. 12. The distributors were conscientious in the discharge of their duty.— Murphy. (19) Also of, R. V., "also for." the men, R. V., "there were men," i. e. "all the priests and Levites were provided for."

a 1 Ki. vi. 5; Ne. xiii. 4, 5.

b "Officers were appointed to distribute equal rations to all in the cities of the priests who, from age or other reasons, could not repair to the temple." — Jamieson.

c Comp. Nu. iv. 3; viii. 24; 1 Chr. xxiii. 27.

Systematic collection of church finance.— While considerable room was left under the law for spontaneous liberality and for special offerings under peculiar circumstances, there were certain regulations as to tithes and firstfruits (vs. 5). These latter were not optional, but obligatory; at the same time, they do not seem to have been recoverable by legal process; but they point to systematic contribution not unattended with special and spontaneous bestowments. And this surely is the right principle in the Christian church. 1. Let every man consider what proportion of his income, considering (1) the amount of his receipts, and also (2) the measure of his liabilities, he can possibly devote to the cause of God and man, of religion and philanthropy; and let him set that apart. 2. Let every one of us be prompted to give special help whenever some specially powerful appeal is made to our spiritual convictions or our human sympathies.— Clarkson.

"Blind zeal is a sword in a mad man's hand. No persecutor like a conscientious one."—Flavel.

Hezekiah's thoroughness in the service of God

20—21. (20) truth, R. V., "faithful." (21) to seek his God, or the favor of his God. all his heart, sincerely and earnestly.[d]

The godly son of an ungodly father.— One of the most successful clergymen in the history of the New England pulpit was the son of a drunkard and a thief. His youth was spent in extreme poverty and disgrace. The family name was a byword. When he resolved to work his way to college and to the pulpit, his father overwhelmed him with parental curses. In that man's boyhood, his ruin for this world and the next seemed to human view well-nigh certain. "Like father, like son," said his neighbors. But God had other plans for the unfortunate youth. That masterly pulpit was preparing for him, and he preparing for it. The earthly father's curses and the heavenly Father's blessing were pitted against each other. God brought him safely through those fires of Moloch. He called him to stand in a place more honorable than the courts of kings. He became greatly successful in revivals of religion. Before his death, more than twelve hundred persons were known to him who attributed their conversion to his ministry.— A. Phelps.

d 2 Ki. xx. 3: Is. xxxviii. 3.

"Let us take heed we do not sometimes call that zeal for God and His Gospel which is nothing else than our own tempestuous and stormy passion. True zeal is a sweet, heavenly, and gentle flame, which maketh us active for God, but always within the sphere of love."—Cudworth.

B. C. 701.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SECOND.

Sennacherib invades Israel

1—5. (1) and the establishment thereof, R. V., "and this faithfulness." Sennacherib, in 1 Ki. xviii. 9-12 is an account, not contained here, which terminates the Biblical history of the 10 tribes, and prepares the way for this narrative of the chronicler; also 1 Ki. xviii. 13–16 should be read with vs. 1 in this chapter, and 1 Ki. xviii. 17–25 with vss. 2–10, cf. also Is. xxxvi. 1–10. fenced cities, those repaired by Jotham, ch. xxvii. 4. (2) against Jerusalem, as the capital city. (3) stop the waters, or hide them, so as to secure a supply of water to the besieged.[a] (4) the brook, "not the Kidron, but the natural watercourse of the Gihon, wh. ran down the Tyropœan valley."—Spk. Com. See vs. 31. (5) strengthened, etc., by fortifying the city, and preparing weapons, etc. Millo, 1 Chr. xi. 8, an elevated place of military importance.

The invasion of Sennacherib. — Assyria at this time was at the height of its arrogant power. It was a nation of warriors. Sennacherib, their king, about B. C. 701, marched from Nineveh with an immense army like the Huns and Saracens of later history. Their march was almost a triumphal procession for them, but desolation and death for the conquered. They took city after city by storm, till the cities of the Philistines and the south of Judah were in their power, and little was left to Hezekiah but his capital, Jerusalem. Hezekiah tried to buy off the invaders by the payment of the former tribute, and other immense and costly gifts, to obtain which he stripped the gold plating from the temple doors, and despoiled his palace. Sennacherib was not content with tribute. He was marching against Egypt, the only other great power in the world at that time; and it was not safe to leave such a fortress in his rear. He therefore divided his army into two corps, one of which was to lay siege to Jerusalem, the other went on to Lachish, the next fortress on the way to Egypt, about thirty miles southwest of Jerusalem. "At Jerusalem we are within a day's journey of any part of the territory of Judah. We feel the kingdom throb to its center at Assyria's first footfall on the border. . . . Gradually the visitant came near, over the thirty miles which lay between the capital and the border. Signs of the Assyrian advance were given in the sky, and night after night the watchers on Mount Zion, seeing the glare in the west, must have speculated which of the cities of Judah was being burned. Clouds of smoke across the heavens, from prairie and forest fires, told how war, even if it passed, would leave a trail of famine; and men thought with breaking hearts of the villages and fields, heritage of the tribes of old, that were now bare to the foot and the fire of the foreigner. Then came touch of the enemy, the appearance of armed bands, vistas down Jerusalem's favorite valleys of chariots, squadrons of horsemen emerging upon the plateaus to north and west of the city, heavy siege-towers and swarms of men innumerable."—Geo. Adam Smith.

[a] "Hez.'s plan was to cover the fountain heads, so that they might not be discovered by the enemy, and to carry the water by subterranean channels or pipes into the city."—Jamieson.

"We possess in duplicate, on the Taylor cylinder, found at Nineveh in 1830, and now in the British Museum, and on the Bull-inscription of Kouyunjik, Sennacherib's own account of the stages of his campaign."—Driver.

There are two ways by wh. the heart may be filled "with overmuch sorrow;"—the one, when it is too full to express its misery and seek relief in prayer; the other, when sin is more looked at than the Saviour.

"Christian zeal is an earnest and ardent disposition of heart for the promotion of all the interests of vital Christianity."—Bate.

Hezekiah encourages his people

6—8. (6) street of the gate, R. V., "broad place at the gate." comfortably, encouragingly. (7) more with us,[b] R. V., "a greater with us," read with this verse Is. xxii. 4–14. (8) arm of flesh, Jer. xvii. 5, cf. Is. xxxi. 3. Note that the king is not comparing gods, that of the Hebrew with the gods of Sennacherib, but God on the one hand and human strength on the other.

Sennacherib's invasion. — The annals of Sennacherib contain a full account of this campaign:— "And because Hezekiah, king of Judah, would not submit to my yoke, I came up against him, and by force of arms, and by the might of my power, I took forty-six of his strong fenced cities; and of the smaller towns which were scattered about I took and plundered a countless number. And from these places I captured and carried off as spoil 200,150 people, old and young, male and female, together with horses and mares, asses and camels, oxen and sheep, a countless multitude And Hezekiah himself I shut up in Jerusalem his capital city, like a bird in a cage, building towers round the city to hem him in, and raising banks of earth against the gates so as to prevent escape. . . . Then upon this Hezekiah there fell the fear of the power of my arms, and he sent out to me the chiefs and the elders of Jerusalem, with thirty talents of gold and eight hundred talents of silver, and divers treasures, a rich and immense booty. . . . All these things were brought to me at Nineveh, the seat of my government, Hezekiah having sent them by way of tribute, and as a token of his submission to my power."—Rawlinson.

[b] 2 Ki. vi. 16; comp. 1 Jno. iv. 4. "Rested, vs. 8. The margin has, for rested upon, 'leaned.' 'I lean on the words of that good man.' 'All people gladly lean on the words of that Just Judge.' 'Who would lean on the words of that false man?' 'Alas! We leaned upon his words, and have fallen into troubles.'"—Roberts.

B. C. 701.

Sennacherib tries to seduce the people from their loyalty

9—14. (9) this passage, ending with vs. 21, represents the much fuller parallel (2 Ki. xviii. 17 — xix. 37), where the language of defiance on the part of Sennacherib and his appointed officers is narrated at length, and the matter of his subsequent letter; also the prayer of Hezekiah; and his application to Isaiah, with the reply of the latter to it. Lachish, Jos. x. 3; xv. 39.[a] (10) abide in the siege,[b] R. V., "abide the siege," that is "endure the distress of siege." Jerusalem was not at this time actually besieged. (11) to die, etc., comp. 2 Ki. xviii. 27. (12) his high places, Sen. confuses the false gods and the true. (13) my fathers, or predecessors. "The original words are not found in Is. x. 8–11, but Is. xxxvi. 20, and more particularly Is. xxxvii. 11–13, appear to have floated before the mind of the historian." — Keil. (14) your God, assumed to be on an equality with the gods of other lands.[c]

Assaults on Christian faith. — The Rabshakeh's plausible speech and Jerusalem's faith, greatly distressed by him, are typical. Still as men hang moodily over the bulwarks of Zion, doubtful whether life is worth living within the narrow limits which religion prescribes, or righteousness worth fighting for with such privations and hope deferred, comes upon them some elegant and plausible temptation, loudly calling to give the whole thing up. Disregarding the official evidences and arguments that push forward to parley, it speaks home in practical tones to men's real selves — their appetites and selfishness. "You are foolish fellows," it says, "to confine yourselves to such narrowness of life and self-denial! The fall of your faith is only a matter of time; other creeds have gone, yours must follow, and why fight the world for the sake of an idea, or from the habits of discipline? Such things only starve the human spirit; and the world is so generous, so free to every one, so tolerant of each enjoying his own, unhampered by authority or religion." — G. A. Smith.

Sennacherib writes blasphemous letters

15—20. (15) how much less, the king of Asshur probably measured the power of the national god by the extent of the territory and resources of the nation.— Murphy. (16) yet more, 2 Ki. xviii. 19–25, 27–35. (17) letters, 2 Ki. xix. 14. (18) in the Jews' speech, so that all might understand; they did not regard their mission as merely a diplomatic one. Their object was to produce panic. (19) as against, the very classing of Jehovah with idols is an offense to the writer of this narrative. (20) prayed, comp. 2 Ki. xix. 4, 14–19. First he sought the counsel and prayers of Isaiah (2 Ki. xix. 2). For the prophet's answers cf. also Is. x. 5–34; xiv. 3–27.

The answer of the Rabshakeh was truly Assyrian in its utterly brutal and ruthless coarseness. Taking up his position directly in front of the wall, and ostentatiously addressing the multitude, he ignored the representatives of Hezekiah. Who were they? asked he. His master had not sent him to speak to them, or to their poor little puppet of a king, but to the people on the wall, the foul garbage of whose sufferings of thirst and famine they should share. And to all the multitude the great king's message was: — Do not be deceived. Hezekiah cannot save you. Jehovah will not save you. Come to terms with me, and give me hostage and pledges and a present, and then live in happy peace and plenty until I come and deport you to a land as fair and fruithful as this. How should Jehovah deliver them? Had any of the gods of the nations delivered them out of the hands of the king of Assyria? "Where are the gods of Hamath and of Arpad? Where are the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivvah? Have the gods of Samaria delivered Samaria out of my hand, that Jehovah should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?" — Farrar.

the Assyrian host destroyed

21—26. (21) all the mighty men, means the common soldiers, cf. xvii. 14. In 2 Ki. xix. 35 the slain are reported as 185,000.[d] they, etc., 2 Ki. xix. 37. (22) the Lord saved, "this event probably occurred in the neighborhood of Jerusalem, and may have been effected by a pestilence. (So Josephus,) Ps. xlvi. and lxxv. apparently refer to this deliverance. It is described by Herodotus, also from the Egyptian standpoint and represented as the result of the prayer of the priest-king of Egypt." — Oehler. (23) magnified, these were prob. recognitions of the fact that he had successfully withstood the Assyrian monarch who was threatening all the surrounding kingdoms. (24) sick, etc., with a disease likely to have a fatal termination.[e] a sign, 2 Ki. xx. 1–11. His song of thanksgiving is recorded in Is. xxxviii. 10–20. (26) humbled himself, possibly the language of the nineteenth verse in the parallel (2 Ki. xx. 19.) is the one surviving historic trace of this. The language found in Jer. xxvi. 19 may be also a note of the same. — Pul. Com

Hezekiah's sickness

a "Lachish was evidently at this time one of the strongest fortresses of Judah."— Stanley.

b Comp. 2 Ki. xviii 17–37; xix. 1–35.

c "The gasconading language of these commissioners, as recorded in the pages of Isaiah, well marks the arrogant and boastful character of the Assyrians." — Kitto.

"As I have known an infant bear such striking resemblance to his father that what the tongue could not tell, his face did; and people, struck by the likeness, remarked of the nursling, He is the very image of his father;—so the Christian life, without any occasion for his lips talking it, should proclaim him to the world a child of God." — Guthrie.

d Berosus says the agency was pestilence. Kitto favors the idea that it was the simoon. Cambyses, king of the Medes, lost fifty thousand men by one of these dreadful winds.

e Is. xxxviii. 1.

Sennacherib's fall. — The effect not confined to the times and country of Hezekiah. The Egyptian general, Tirhakah, advancing from the south, as well as Hez. in Jerusalem, heard the results with joy. Three centuries afterwards, the Psalmist's exulting language (Ps. lxxvi.) was repeated by Egyptian priests. The Maccabees were sustained by the recollection of Sen.'s fall in their struggle against Antiochus (1 Macc. vii. 41), and in the churches of Moscow the exultation over the event is still read on the anniversary of the retreat of the French from Russia. — Stanley. "One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts." — Hom. Com. He was the last of the great Assyrian conquerors. No Assyrian host again ever crossed Jordan. Within a few years from that time the Assyrian power suddenly vanished from the earth. — Stanley.

B. C. 686.

27—33. (27) exceeding much, 2 Ki. xx. 13; Is. xxxix. 2. (28) stalls, or stabling. cotes for flocks, R. V., "flocks in folds." (29) God had given, temporal rewards of his religious faithfulness. (30) Gihon, vs. 3.[a] He conveyed the water to the west of the city of David, either into the eastern hill to issue at length in Siloam, or into the pool in the fore city which he had enclosed with "another wall." This serves to show that the city of David was on the eastern ridge south of the temple mount. — Murphy. (31) business, etc., 2 Ki. xx. 12–19. left him, to form his own judgment. "God sometime permits one who habitually walks in God's ways to fall into sin, in order to reveal to the man the hidden curse that was in his heart." — Oehler. (32) vision of Isaiah,[b] Is. xxxvi.–xxxix. book . . Israel, comp. xx. 34 and notes on xxvii. 7; xxxv. 26. (33) chiefest,[c] R. V., "ascent" either on the ascent to the tombs of the kings or in a higher excavation.

Hezekiah's death and burial. — 1. His death appointed. Though life prolonged, yet its length decreed. None exempt. Death ends joys, sorrows, and probation. 2. His burial a national honor. Funeral marked with unusual respect. Royal tribe of Judah and the whole population of Jerusalem present, and a marked epoch in royal interments. — Hom. Com.

Hezekiah's reign. — "The enemies of Judah were conquered (2 Ki. xviii. 6, 7), the Philistines driven out of the country, and the yoke of Assyria thrown off. 'Peace and truth' were the watchwords of his reign." — Stanley. There was great outward prosperity. "The palace at Jerusalem was a storehouse of gold, silver, and jewels; the porch of the palace was once more hung with splendid shields (2 Chr. xxxii. 27). Towers and enclosures sprang up for the vast herds and flocks of the pastoral district. The vineyards, olive yards, and cornfields were again cultivated. The towers and fortifications of Jerusalem, the supply of water to the town, both by aqueduct from without, and by a reservoir hewn out of the solid rock, were for centuries connected with his name." — Stanley.

end of the reign of Hezekiah a "He stopped the upper outflow of the waters of Gihon, and led them down westward to the city." — Williams.

b Is. i. 1.

c "In this new phrase we have an indication that the catacomb of David was now full; and, in accordance with this, we find that the later princes have sepulchres quite distinct from the old burial places." — Spk. Com.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-THIRD.

1—6. (1) Manasseh,[d] who makes forget. Born after Hez.'s recovery fr. sickness. (2) evil, prob. thro' the influence of those who superintended his education, and ruled the kingdom during his minority. (3) built again, etc., 2 Ki. xviii. 4. groves, R. V., Asheroth, i. e. wooden images of the goddess Asherah, 2 Ki. xxi. 7. (4) in the house, i. e. within the temple precincts. (5) two courts, that of the priests and that of the people. This seems to be the first time that the worship of sun, moon and stars was introduced in Judah. There were altars not only in the temple, but on the roofs of the houses also (cf. Je. xix. 13). (6) through the fire,[e] ch. xxviii. 3, 4. also . . spirit, R. V., "and he practiced augury, and used enchantments, and practiced sorcery, and dealt with them that had familiar spirits."

Manasseh. — The fall of this young monarch illustrates the power of high station and worldly prosperity to counteract the influence of a religious education. When the sons of godly parents go astray, it is found, more frequently than otherwise, that they fall before the enticements created by their father's wealth, and the ease and luxury with which wealth surrounds them. I ask the principal of a large academy, what is the chief cause of the ruin of boys from religious homes; and he answers without a moment's hesitation, "Too much money." I ask the president of one of the largest colleges in New

Manasseh

d 2 Ki. xxi. 1.

e One son only is mentioned in 2 Ki. xxi. 6.

"Manasseh was sublimely energetic in evil. He did not serve the devil with a slack hand." — Parker

"Man without a conscience is a machine without a regulator; sometimes too fast, sometimes too slow, and seldom right."

B. C. cir. 686.

England, what is the surest protection to young men against the perils of college life; and he responds, "Poverty." — A. Phelps.

the people led into idolatrous practices

Many persons who appear to repent are like sailors who throw their goods overboard in a storm, and wish for them again in a calm.

"Manasseh is unique alike in extreme wickedness, sincere penitence, and thorough reformation."

7—10. (7) in the house of God, (Jer. vii. 30, and viii. 1–2). Even the temple was dedicated to the worship of the stars and the service of Ashera. Priests and prophets participated in the universal degeneration (cf. Zeph. iii. 4; Jer. ii. 8, 26 ff). Some prophets, however, raised their voices against the idolatry (2 Ki. xxi. 10) and were among the innocent blood with which Manasseh filled Jerusalem. No priest is said to have resisted! (9) made . . to err, his example, and his actions, leading them astray. worse, bec. of the knowledge and privileges wh. they had. (10) spake, 2 Ki. xxi. 10–16.

Reformation and reaction. — There is a remarkable similarity in some respects between the work of Savonarola and the rulers under his influence at Florence (1495), and that of Isaiah and Hezekiah. For a time the whole city was dominated in a marvelous way by the spiritual reformation. "So long as it lasted (two years) immorality and luxury were out of fashion in Florence. The vileness which calls itself pleasure was paralyzed, and immodesty and impurity scared into corners out of sight." "The millennium itself must have arrived in Florence in the end of the fifteenth century, had that great voice continued dominant, as it was for a time." In two years all this was changed. Savonarola was burned. "Florence, preternaturally tranquilized for a moment by one great influence, had returned to her old use and wont, and felt herself at ease in it, breathing flames and slaughter more easily than blessings." — Peloubet.

Manasseh's captivity and release

11—17. This section is not in Kings. (11) king of Assyria, Esar-haddon,[a] or his son Assur-bani-pal, 667–647 B. C. among the thorns, R. V., "in chains." fetters, two chains of brass. Babylon, Ge. xi. 1–9. (12) in affliction, a prisoner, and doomed. (13) prayed,[b] "the conversion, however, seems to have had no effect whatever upon the people" (cf. Zeph. i. 5). (14) built a wall, wh. may have been damaged when the king was taken prisoner. Gihon, ch. xxxii. 4. fish gate, near N. E. corner of the lower city. Ophel, the S. part of the temple hill.[c] captains of war, R. V., "valiant captains." This was not for aggression, but to make Jerusalem secure from attack, and "it may be owing to these precautions that in B. C. 640 Ashdod and not Jerusalem was assailed by the forces of Egypt." — Rawlinson. (15) strange, etc., as put by him (vss. 3–5). (16) repaired, etc., wh. he had himself desecrated. (17) high places, ch. xxxi. 1. Manasseh's reform compares unfavorably with that of his father.

The Assyrian invasion referred to here is partially confirmed by the fact that the name of Manasseh occurs amongst the tributaries of Esar-haddon and his successor, Assur-bani-pal. The mention of Babylon as his place of captivity rather than Nineveh may be accounted for by supposing that Manasseh was taken prisoner in the reign of Esar-haddon. This king of Assyria rebuilt Babylon, and spent much of his time there. He is said to have been of a kindly disposition, and to have exercised towards other royal captives the same clemency which he extended to Manasseh. — Bennett.

[a] "Esar-haddon mentions Manasseh among his tributaries; and he was the only king of Assyria who, fr. time to time, held his court at Babylon." — Spk. Com.

[b] Ac. ix. 11.

[c] 2 Chr. xxvi. 9; xxvii. 3; Ne. iii. 26. "Such a repentance gives us hope for the most abandoned."—Bennett.

B. C. cir. 641.

end of the reign of Manasseh

18—20. (18) prayer, a prayer of Manasseh is found in the Sept., but cannot be authentic. in the book, R. V., "among the acts." (19) among the sayings of the seers, R. V., "in the history of Hozai," one of the many "original documents" of which no trace remains, that were the sources of our sacred histories. (20) in his own house, bec. the king's sepulchres were full. Amon, the hidden; name of one of the eight principal deities of Egypt.[d]

God hears prayer. — Introduce by referring to the anxious question, which is awakened in many minds. Wherewithal shall I appear before God? and then proceed to discuss these points: — I. Who was entreated? God. II. Who prevailed with God? Manasseh. III. How is it that the entreaty of the sinner can prevail with God? — Sarah Martin, the Prison Preacher.

God's mercy. — A wonderful display of God's mercy. A proof "that the Divine mercy," says Stanley, "far exceeds the Divine vengeance, and that even from the darkest reprobation the free will of man and the grace of God may achieve a deliverance. If Manasseh could be restored, there was no one against whom the door of repentance and restitution was finally closed." Sepulchres in gardens (vs. 20). — It is probable that they buried him in the garden of his house. This was comformable to the practice of the Jews (2 Ki.

[d] "The only name of an Egyptian deity that we find in the Jewish annals." — Stanley.

"The grave is a common treasury to which we must all be taken." — Burke.

Prayer is a creature's strength, his very breath and being; prayer

xxi. 18). In such a place Christ was buried. The Romans had sometimes sepulchres in their gardens. Galba, the emperor, was buried in his garden: and so was Cyrus, king of Persia. The Greeks and Romans frequently buried the dead in their own houses. It was enjoined by the Thebans, before they built a house, to build a sepulchre in the place.

B. C. 641.

is the golden key that can open the wicket of mercy.

21—25. (21) two years, 2 Ki. xxi. 19. (22) sacrificed, etc., fully restoring the idolatrous worship; he was born and trained while his father was an idolater. (24) his servants, i. e. a palace conspiracy, as in case of Joash, 2 Ki. xii. 20. (25) the people of the land, that is the common people, as distinguished from the princes and higher classes. Josiah, whom Jehovah heals. The parallel passage, 2 Ki. xxi. 19–26, adds, "the rest of the acts of Amon which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles?" etc., a passage which shows that our book is not the Chronicles referred to in the Scripture, but an earlier document, one of the sources for our books of Chronicles.

the reign of Amon

"How then was Manasseh dead? In what sense was Manasseh buried? Here is an active boy who has caught his mantle, and is working with redoubled industry."—Parker.

Hezekiah and Manasseh. — A contrast. We have in the end of the one and the beginning of the other a magnificent sunset, and a sunrise of quite an opposite description. We have a good father and king closing life in Hezekiah; a bad son and successor commencing life in Manasseh. I. Consider Hezekiah, and what we learn about him. 1. We learn that genuine goodness shall not want appropriate record and remembrance; 2. God, the inspirer of goodness in the hearts of men, will not forget it; 3. The beneficiaries of goodness will not be unmindful of their benefactors; 4. Sympathetic imitators will mirror forth their goodness from whom they have derived its idea and impulse. II. Now turn to Manasseh, and what the history says about him. 1. A youthful king; 2. A long reign; 3. A life of great wickedness. Application: — What may parents learn from the son of such a father? Hezekiah hoarded up wealth for his son. Did he undervalue the moral element in him? — J. Spencer Hill.

"Those who give themselves up to the service of sin, enter the palace of pleasure by wide portals of marble, which conceal the low wicket, behind which leads into the fields, where they are in a short time sent to feed swine." — James D. Burns.

Did evil. — Manasseh might repent and reform — ay, and be accepted by God; but could he undo the consequences — the effects upon others — of his life and wickedness? May as well expect to prevent the appearance of disease after having used every effort to spread infection. The father may turn to God in true sorrow, but the son he begat shall follow in his parent's course of evil and never turn from it. Oh, how fearful a thing is sin! If we put our hands to it, we know not what we do. The thought of the irrevocable, irremediable consequences of sin should help to keep us from sinning.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FOURTH.

B. C. 639

Josiah — revival of true religion

1—7. (1) This account is superior to that in 2 Ki. xxii. ff. as a history of Josiah, who reigned 639–609 B. C. Comp. Jer. i–xii. and Josephus Ant. x., iv. 5.[a] eight years, so the kingdom must have been governed by a regency. (2) declined, R. V., "turned not aside," the only king of whom such words are spoken. (3) eighth year, when he was 16 years old, the age at which Hebrew kings attained their majority. — Geikie. twelfth year, when he was about 20. Then he was strong enough to act an independent part. (4) images, R. V., sun-images. groves, R. V., "Asherim." See references to condition of the times in Zephaniah (i. 9, iii. 1, 3). Nahum or Habakkuk and Ps. xxxvii. may have been written in this period. strowed it, 2 Ki. xxiii. 6. (5) priests, i. e. the idolatrous priests, removing them from their graves, thus defiling them and the altars which they had builded. A terrible punishment to a Hebrew. (6) cities of Manasseh, etc., Josiah claimed authority over the whole country, as there was now no Israelite king. with their mattocks,[b] R. V., "in their ruins round about." (7) he had, etc., showing that the king personally superintended the business.

a "This prince was the best and most beloved of the kings who had sat upon this throne since David, and was approached by none in his zeal against idolatry, and in his devotedness to the Lord." —Kitto.

Josiah, or early piety. — His example is worthy the imitation of all young persons. Notice — I. His early piety. 1. While young he sought God; 2. Young persons may become religious under great disadvantages; 3. His early piety gave him great stability of character; 4. His religion secured him honor and happiness. II. His eminent piety. Early piety leads to eminent piety. It gave him opportunity for improvement as he grew in age. III. Josiah's peaceful death and honorable burial (2 Chr. xxxv. 24–27). Eight years old. — There is at the top of the Queen's staircase in Windsor Castle a statue b Le. xxvi. 31, 33.

"His character had early shown a decided bias in favor of elevation, and manliness of life."—Ewald.

B. C. 621.

from the studio of Baron Triqueti, of Edward VI. marking with his sceptre a passage in the Bible, which he holds in his left hand, and upon which he earnestly looks. The passage is concerning Josiah. "J. was eight years old when he began to reign . . . and walked in all the way of David his father, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left." The statue was erected by the will of the late prince, who intended it to convey to his son the Divine principles by which the future governor of England should mold his life and reign on the throne of Great Britain.— T. Hughes.

"The sick man's sacrifice is but a lame oblation. Pious treasures, laid up in healthful days, excuse the defect of sick non-performances, without which we must needs look back with anxiety upon the lost opportunities of health." — Sir Thomas Browne.

Prophetic aid to reformation.— Jeremiah began his ministry in B. C. 627, in the thirteenth year of Josiah's reign (Je. i. 2), and just about the time the reformation commenced, and continued till after the destruction of Jerusalem in 586. Professor Kent thinks that Jeremiah "delivered the sermons in chaps. 2 to 6 soon after the prophet's call in 627 B. C., and they represent his noble contributions to the reformation."

"Zephaniah was the first to raise his voice in denunciation of the sins inherited from Manasseh's reign." Huldah, we learn, was a prophetess at this time (2 Ki. xxii. 14).— Peloubet.

Josiah orders the repair of the house of God

8–13. (8) to repair, "three stages of Josiah's reform are noted.[a] In the 8th year of his reign he began to show decision in personal religion (vs. 3). In the 12th yr., being 20 yrs. old, he began to remove the high places (vss. 3–7), and now in the 18th yr., when he was 26 yrs. old, he began to repair the house of the Lord. Jeremiah was called to the prophetic office when Josiah was 21 years old (cf. Je. i. 2)." — Murphy. (9) money, 2 Ki. xxii. 4. they returned to Jerusalem, R. V., "of the inhabitants of Jerusalem." (10) workmen, etc., 2 Ki. xxii. 5. (11) to floor, R. V., "to make beams for." the kings of Judah, Ahaz, Manasseh, and Amon. (12) faithfully, or skillfully, and diligently. (13) scribes, now first spoken of as a class, forming distinct division of the Levitical body.

a "The exact chronological order is not followed either in Kings or Chronicles." — Jamieson.

Early piety. — The most important ten years of life are from 5 to 15 years of age. The great majority of those who pass twenty, irreligious, are never converted at all. Dr. Spencer tells us that out of two hundred and thirty-five hopeful converts in his church, one hundred and thirty-eight were under twenty years, and only four had passed their fiftieth year. I have been permitted during my ministry to receive nearly one thousand persons into the church on confession of their faith and not one dozen of these had outgrown their fiftieth year. — Theodore Cuyler. Zeal for the Master (vs. 12). — The late Rev. John Campbell, of Kingsland, used to relate an anecdote illustrative of the devotedness of Mr. Townsend to the cause of Christ. Finding him, one Tuesday morning, leaning on the balustrade that led to the breakfast room of the Religious Tract Society, and unable to proceed from a difficulty of breathing, Mr. C. remarked, "Mr. Townsend, is this you? Why should you come in this state of body to our meetings? You have attended them for a long time, and you should now leave that work for younger men." Looking upon his friend with a countenance, brightened by the sentence or thought that was struggling for utterance, his words were, "O Johnny, Johnny, man, it is hard to give up working in the service of such a Master!"

Pr. xxv. 1.

"A heavenly awe overshadowed and encompassed, as it still ought, and must, all earthly business whatsoever."—Carlyle.

"We are reminded of the walls of Thebes, which rose out of the ground while Orpheus played upon his flute." — Bennett.

Hilkiah, the priest, finds a copy of the law

14–17. (15) the book,[b] Hilkiah speaks of it as a book known to him. Plainly this was the copy kept in the most holy place (De. xxxi. 26). 2. Shaphan, the scribe, was able to read the book (2 Ki. xxii. 8). He was in fact the chief of the scribes, whose duty it was to have the book of the law re-written when necessary. If this were the very autograph of Moses or his scribe, it would not be more than 830 years old. Manuscripts exist of nearly twice this age. — Murphy. "The book" may have been the Pentateuch, but more probably was the book of Deuteronomy. (16) back again, when the repairing work was completed. (17) gathered together, R. V., "emptied out."

b "It would seem that the book of the law was found by Hilkiah in the treasury, where they stowed the money for security." — Bertheau.

The Bible and the bullet. — Samuel Proctor, a class-leader in the Methodist Society, was formerly a grenadier in the First Regiment of Foot Guards, and took part in the struggle on the plains of Waterloo. He always carried a small Bible in one pocket, and a hymn-book in the other. In the evening of June 16th his regiment was ordered to dislodge the French from a wood, of which they had taken possession, and from which they annoyed the allied army. While thus engaged, he was thrown a distance of four or five yards, by a force for which he could not account at the time; but when he came to examine his Bible, he saw, with lively gratitude to the Preserver of his life, what it was that had thus driven him. A musket-ball had struck him where his Bible rested, and penetrated nearly half through the volume. All who saw the ball said that it would undoubtedly have killed him, had it not been for the Bible, which served as a shield. The Bible placed in the churches. — Formerly a large Bible was chained in some convenient place in every parish church. Cranmer, the first Protestant archbishop, and afterwards a martyr, who was appointed to the see of Canterbury during the reign of Henry VIII., was very desirous of obtaining a translation of the Scriptures into English. He often solicited this favor of the king, and, at length, secured it. When some printed copies were put into his hands, he blessed God, and sent one to his majesty, and begged that all his subjects might have liberty to read it. An injunction was forthwith issued, which required an English Bible, of the largest size to be procured for the use of every parish church, at the expense of the minister and churchwardens, and prohibited the common people from being discouraged to read or hear the Scriptures. The book was everywhere received with inexpressible joy, every one that was able perused it, and the poor eagerly flocked to hear it read. Some aged persons learned to read on purpose to peruse it, and even little children crowded to hear it.

B. C. cir. 621.

"The Bible is a rock of diamonds, a chain of pearls, the sword of the Spirit: a chart by which the Christian sails to eternity; the map by which he daily walks; the sun-dial by which he sets his life; the balance in which he weighs his actions." — T. Watson.

Theodosius, the Second, dedicated a great part of the night to the study of the Scriptures."

Shaphan, the scribe, reads the book of the law to Josiah

18—22. (18) a book, "the implication on the face of this verse as of the parallel (2 Ki. xxii. 10), is that Shaphan leaves the king to surmise (which he very quickly does), from hearing a portion of the book, what it was."— Pul. Com. (19) rent his clothes, the usual sign of grief and alarm. (20) Ahikam, appears as the friend of Jeremiah, Je. xxvi. 24; and father of Gedaliah, Je. xxxix. 14; xl. 5, etc. Abdon, or Achbor,[a] cf. Je. xxvi. 22: xxxvi. 12. (21) of the Lord, through His prophet. (22) Huldah, etc., 2 Ki. xxii. 14. wardrobe, prob. the royal garments. college, R. V., "second quarter," apparently the fore city enclosed by the second wall. The Targ., however, regarded it as the school of the prophets. In the emergency the nearest advice is sought. Jeremiah was probably at Anathoth, his native place. — Murphy.

[a] 2 Ki. xxii. 12.

"The intellect has only one failing, which, to be sure, is a very considerable one; it has no conscience. Napoleon is the readiest instance of this." — Lowell.

Effect of the printed Bible. — Green, in his Short History of the English People, chap. viii., gives a marvelous testimony to the effect of the printed Bible in Elizabeth's reign. "No greater moral change ever passed over a nation than passed over England during the years which parted the middle of the reign of Elizabeth from the meeting of the Long Parliament. England became the people of a book, and that book was the Bible." Its literary and social effects were great, "but far greater was the effect of the Bible on the character of the people at large." "One dominant influence told on human action." "The whole temper of the nation felt the change." "A new conception of life, a new moral and religious impulse spread through every class." — J. R. Green. The study of the Bible. — How utterly impossible it would be in the manhood of the world to imagine any other instructor of mankind than the Bible. And for that reason, every day makes it more and more evident that the thorough study of the Bible, the investigation of what it teaches and what it does not teach, and the determination of the limits of what we mean by its inspiration, the determination of the degrees of authority to be ascribed to the different books, if any degrees are to be admitted, must take the lead of all other studies. He is guilty of high treason against the faith who fears the result of any investigation, whether philosophical, or scientific, or historical. And therefore nothing should be more welcome than the extension of knowledge of any and of every kind — for every increase in our accumulations of knowledge throws fresh light upon the real problems of the day. If geology proves to us that we must not interpret the first chapters of Genesis literally; if historical investigation shall show us that inspiration, however it may protect the doctrine, yet was not empowered to protect the narrative of the inspired writers from occasional inaccuracy; if careful criticism shall prove that there have been occasionally interpolations and forgeries in that Book, as in many others — the results should still be welcome. Even the mistakes of careful and reverent students are more valuable now than truth held in unthinking acquiescence. The substance of the teaching which we derive from the Bible will not really be affected by anything of this sort; while it holds upon the minds of believers, and its power to stir the depths of the spirit of man, however much weakened at first, must be immeasurably strengthened in the end, by clearing away blunders which may have been fastened on it by human interpretation. — Abp. Temple.

"I use the Scriptures, not as an arsenal to be resorted to only for arms and weapons, but as a matchless temple, where I delight to contemplate the beauty, the symmetry, and the magnificence of the structure." — R. Boyle.

"I have many books that I cannot sit down to read; they are indeed good and sound; but, like halfpence, there goes a great quantity to a small amount. There are silver books, and a very few golden books; but I have one book worth them all, called the Bible."—J. Newton.

B. C. cir. 621.

message of Huldah, the prophetess

23–28. (24) I will bring, etc., "it appears from this vs. that such passages as De. xxviii.-xxxiii. had been read to the king."—Murphy. (25) poured out, Sept. and 2 Ki. xxii. 17, have "kindled" which agrees better with the words that follow. (26) king of Judah, this was the part of the message special to him. (27) rend thy clothes, vs. 19. (28) in peace, in fact he was slain in battle (xxxv. 23, 24), but the expression is used even of such violent death (cf. 1 Ki. xxii. 34–40) and means rather that he shall be laid in his grave in peace, without witnessing great national calamities. The calamities fell upon the reigns of his two sons and his two grandsons.

A tender spirit.—I. Give a general account of a tender heart. 1. It implies a quick and ready sense of feeling in spiritual things—quickness of apprehension—ready reflections of conscience—a disposition to be easily and suitably affected; 2. A pliable disposition to yield to Divine influence. II. The way in which such a temper should express itself. 1. In relation to the Word of God; 2. In relation to sin; 3. In relation to providential events; 4. In relation to the honor of God. III. What foundation is laid for such a temper in Christianity. 1. Good men in the ancient church were not strangers to it; 2 The recompenses of the life to come are more fully revealed; 3. Richer discoveries of grace are made to us; 4. Ceremonial observances have given way to substantials of religion; 5. The softening Spirit is more plentifully communicated.—Evans.

Keep your conscience tender—tender as the eye that closes its lids against an atom of dust, or as that sensitive plant which I have seen shrink and shut its leaves, not merely at the rude touch of a finger, but at the breath of the mouth.

Personal responsibility.—Wrath was to be poured out upon Judah, but Josiah was to be treated mercifully because he had acted rightly. Whatever penalties are due to our country, however we may be, as we are, suffering as the members of a guilty race, we may be quite sure that God has regard to the life we are living, to the choice we are making. If our heart is tender, and if our will is obedient and submissive, we also shall find mercy of the Lord. God has His dealings with communities and with churches; but His most constant relation is with men, with individual souls. "The Lord looketh upon me;" "Christ died for me;" "What wilt thou have me to do?" And according to our individual choice will be our destiny. "Every man must bear his own burden."—Clarkson. The slavery of sin.—At the close of the meeting, many asked me to pray for them, saying they wished to be Christians for the rest of their lives. As I left them, promising to be down on Sunday, I noticed a man following me. Stopping me, he began, "My friend, I want a discharge." Supposing he meant a discharge from the army, I said I was afraid that would be hard to obtain, as he appeared to be recovering. "Oh," said he, "that's not what I mean; I want a discharge from the devil's army. I've been fighting and serving in his ranks for twenty-five years, and I'm tired and sick of his service. I want to leave his ranks and enlist under the banner of the cross, and fight for Jesus the balance of my life." I told him he could have that discharge by deserting the devil's ranks and coming over to the Lord Jesus. I talked and prayed with him, leaving him some suitable reading. On Sunday, at the close of the evening meeting, he told me he had come over, and was a "soldier of the cross."—Christ. Work on the Battlefield.

"Millions now in heaven derived the strongest and most invaluable consolation from this book; and scarcely can we fix our eyes upon a single passage in this wonderful book which has not afforded comfort or instruction to thousands, and been wet with tears of penitential sorrow or grateful joy, drawn from eyes that will weep no more."—Payson.

"The dispute about religion and the practice of it seldom go together."—Young.

Josiah reads the book of the law to the elders

29–33. (29) all the elders, as representatives of the nation. (30) Levites' parallel passage says "prophets." Probably both were there. he read, or caused to be read.[a] De. xxxi. 9–13 says that the priests are thus to read the law, and Josiah would be particular to obey the directions. (31) in his place, i. e. upon his royal pedestal, or platform. (32) stand to it, as Asa (2 Chr. xv. 12) and perhaps Hezekiah, xxix. 10. (33) all . . fathers,[b] full account in 2 Ki. xxiii. 4–20.

The Bible the savior of the church.—Men say that the church has saved the Bible. I say that the Bible has saved the church ten thousand times over. You shall find that when great questions come up in a community churches do not go ahead. You cannot make them. Churches are like the baggage-wagons of an army. They carry the provisions and indispensable things; but, after all, baggage-wagons never go first in a march. And the church is so busy taking care of the things which it carries, that it has no time to devote to new things that present themselves. Reforms hardly ever originate in churches. I am not speaking against churches; I am merely putting them where they put themselves, and saying that tendencies to unusual conduct in the application of Gospel principles to new questions are oftentimes ridiculed by ministers, and rejected from pulpits, and refused places in conference meeta 2 Ki. xxiii. 1-3.

b "So far as to abstain fr. open idolatry, but in their hearts they still inclined to the worship of other gods, as the prophet Jeremiah testifies, Je. xiii. 10; xxv. 3; xl., xiii." Wordsworth.

ings, and stigmatized by church members as being fanatical. — H. W. Beecher.

Destruction of the Bible. — Destroy this volume, as the enemies of human happiness have vainly endeavored to do, and you render us profoundly ignorant of our Creator, of the formation of the world which we inhabit, of the origin and progenitors of our race, of our present day and future destination, and consign us through life to the dominion of fancy, doubt, and conjecture. Destroy this volume, and you deprive us of religion, with all the animating consolations, hopes, and prospects which it affords, and leave us nothing but the choosing (miserable alternative!) between the cheerless gloom of infidelity and the monstrous shadows of paganism. Destroy this volume, and you unpeople heaven; bar forever its doors against the wretched posterity of Adam; restore to the king of terrors his fatal sting; bury hope in the same grave which receives our bodies; consign all who have died before us to eternal sleep or endless misery; and allow us to expect nothing at death but a similar fate. In a word, destroy this volume, and you take from us at once everything which prevents existence becoming of all curses the greatest; you blot out the sun, dry up the ocean, and take away the atmospheres of the moral world, and degrade man to a situation from which he may look up with envy to that of the brutes that perish. — Payson.

B. C. cir. 621.

"God is light. So is the religion of the Bible. It has no fellowship with darkness. Not one of its graces springs from stupidity or ignorance, but all of them from the knowledge of God. The religion of the Bible, like its Author, dwells in light God also is love, and so is the religion of the Bible." — G. Spring.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIFTH.

Josiah keeps the passover

1—6. (1) a passover, 2 Ki. xxiii. 21-23, at the appointed date, Ex. xii. 6. (2) in their charges,[a] as ordered in 1 Chr. xxiii. 32. (3) that taught, they were the instructors of the people in all matters pertaining to the Divine worship. Put, etc.,[b] as in case of David, 1 Chr. xxiii. 26. not be a burden, i. e. not their duty to move it. Other duties of administration and instruction now devolved on them. (4) by the houses, etc., 1 Chr. ix. 10. (5) holy place, i. e. the priests' court. and after . . Levites, R. V., "and let there be for each a portion of a father's house of the Levites." "A section of the Levites was to attend to each division of the families of the people."— Murphy. (6) prepare . . according, R. V., "prepare for your brethren, to do according to the word of the Lord." The Levites were to kill the paschal lambs for the various divisions of the people. For this purpose they were to sanctify themselves and prepare their brethren, so that everything might be regular in the approaching solemnity.— Murphy.

Religion stronger than science.— Skill and science have wrought wonders. The world stands amazed at their achievements. They have tamed fierce beasts of prey, and brought even the elements of nature into subjection. They have spanned the ocean, annihilated distance, joined remote continents, given life to steam, a tongue to the wire, and a voice to the lightning. But there are passions in the human heart more fierce than beasts of prey, and disturbing forces more tumultuous than nature's stormy winds and tempests, and more difficult of control than the subtle but omnipotent element of electricity. No mere human skill can master these. The science taught in the school of Christ alone can enable you to obtain the mastery here.— Roberts.

[a] 2 Chr. xxxi. 2.

[b] "It is impossible to say whether it had been cast out by Amon, to make room for the idolatrous emblems with which he seems to have defiled the temple. (2 Ki. xxiii. 4-6), or had only been temporarily removed by Josiah while he effected necessary repairs." — Spk. Com.

Josiah gives the passover offerings

7—12. (7) Josiah gave, comp. ch. xxx. 24. It is evident here, as in other places, that the slaying of the victims must have been done by the laity. "The number of Levites would not have sufficed."— Oehler. (8) gave willingly, R. V., "gave for a freewill offering." Hilkiah, ch. xxxiv. 9. Zechariah, the second priest. Jehiel, poss. head of the line of Ithamar, and chief of the Levites. (9) passover offerings, i. e. for thank-offerings. (10) in their place, to receive the sacrifices. (11) the blood from, R. V., "the blood which they received of." flayed, removed the skins. (12) removed, better separated the portions intended for burnt-offerings,[c] and gave it to the priests to be offered for the worshipers.

Preparation for religion. — Some persons, in thinking of religion, imagine that they should bring themselves into a certain condition of moral excellence before they seek religion; which is very much like a person sick, waiting until he is well before he send for the physician; or an invalid convalescent waiting until he fully recover before he seek a change of air and place; or a hungry man waiting until his appetite is satisfied before he sit down to eat; or a person shivering with cold waiting until he is warm, before he go to the fire. You go to the physician because you are sick; to the fresh air or place

[c] Le. iii. 6-17

"Or the sense may be that fr. the lambs contributed by the king and by the priest, they separated the burnt-offering to be wholly consumed by fire, as the burnt-offering was. Le. i. 6-9." — Wordsworth.

B. C. 621.

because you need it; to the food because you are hungry; to the fire because you are cold. In the same way you should seek religion and the Saviour, as you are, because you have need. — J. Bate.

celebration of the Passover

13—19. (13) roasted, Ex. xii. 8, 9. other holy offerings, the peace-offerings. sod they, comp. 1 Sa. ii. 13–15. all the people, apparently private individuals could not find the means of cooking the bountiful provision made for them; and, to meet the necessity of the case, the temple courts were made kitchen as well as slaughterhouse for the assembled worshipers. The other offerings would not be eaten with the Passover lamb, but would serve for the remaining days of the feast. — Bennett. (14) therefore, etc., bec. the priests were too much engaged to prepare food for themselves. (15) they might not, R. V., "they needed not." Note the importance of these singers and their service, cf. 1 Chr. vi. 33–47. prepared for them, that they might not be called away fr. their official duties. (16) the same day, getting both matters into the one day made all concerned so unusually busy. (17) seven days, comp. Hez.'s. 14 days.[a] (18) no passover like to that, the Passover in Hezekiah's time was great (xxx. 26); but this was greater. For it was kept on the proper day in the first month, and was not a mere supplementary Passover; it was observed with due regularity, and not by worshipers, some of whom were unclean; and if we allow thirteen persons for each lamb or kid, there were upwards of 500,000 communicants, while, so far as we know, there were only 17,000 sheep presented by Hezekiah and his princes (xxx. 24), which would not supply more than half the number of partakers. (19) eighteenth year, 2 Ki. xxii. 3.

Singers in their place. — Song in God's house. 1. Its nature. Spiritual, appropriate and spirited. 2. Its leaders. Numbered, stationed and qualified. 3. Its design. Not a musical performance for gratification of the people; not to display ability, culture and efficiency in singers: but to please God (Phil. ii. 8–10), and praise Christ. Pliny found in worship of Bithynians a hymn, "to Christ as God." — Hom. Com.

Influence of religion. — Just as the sun gleams over the palace and into the cottage, flushing alike with its splendor the council chamber of the monarch and the kitchen of the peasant; as the all-pervasive light fills the vast dome of the sky, and the tiny cup of the flower; so religion illumines at once the heaven of our hopes, and the earth of our cares. Secularities become hallowed; toil brightens with the smile of God: business becomes crystalline; light from God comes through it to us; glances from us; goes through it to God.

[a] 2 Chr. xxx. 23.

The nearer we live to Jesus and the closer our walk is with Him, the less inclination we have for pursuits and pleasures in which He is not the object.

"The essence of true holiness consists in conformity to the nature and will of God." — Lucas.

Life is a short day, but it is a working day. Oh! my Father, help me to finish my work in Thine honor." — Livingstone's Journal, Jan. 1, 1871.

"Religion is the only metaphysic that the multitude can understand and adopt." — Joubert.

Josiah is killed at the battle of Megiddo

20—24. (20) After all this, some 13 years after. Necho, son of Psammeticus reigned B. C. 611–595. came up, "the maritime plain till he turned into the plain of Esdraelon, thence to penetrate into the passes of Lebanon." — Stanley. Nineveh had been destroyed about B. C. 615, the whole of W. Asia was disorganized, and the king of Egypt thought he saw an opportunity of conquest. Carchemish, a city on the Euphrates, commanding the passage of that river.[b] (21) against the house, or nation of Assyria. God . . haste, references to a single supreme God are found in the Egyp. inscriptions. (22) disguised himself, better equipped himself. valley of Megiddo, "at the S. W. edge of the plain of Esdraelon, the battle-ground of Palestine." — Rawlinson. (23) archers, "the light troops of the Egyptians were chiefly archers." (24) second chariot, not a war-chariot, but one more comfortable for traveling. mourned, "with him fell the last hope of the state, and the mourning for Josiah became a proverb for the heaviest affliction (comp. Zech. xii. 11)." — Oehler.

The invasion of Necho. — Strengthened by influx of northern nations, Babylon now rising into overwhelming predominence. Necho, the vigorous king of Egypt, wished to anticipate that growth by securing himself on east and north. Kingdom of Judah between these contending powers. Necho advanced through Palestine towards passes of Lebanon on his way to the great battle-field of Carchemish. In the plain of Esdrælon, the scene of so many combats in earlier history of Israel, Josiah determined, with a rashness which appeared to be against the counsels of Providence (2 Chr. xxxv. 21; 1 Esdras i. 27, 28), to stay the progress of the Egyptian army. No details given of the battle. Everything absorbed in one tragical event which closed it. — Stanley. Haste. — These are remarkable words in the mouth of a heathen;

[b] "It has generally been supposed identical with Circessium; but Rawlinson places it higher up the Euphrates, close to Hierapolis or Mabug." — Ayre.

B. C. 609.

2 Ki. xxiii. 29, 30.

"Then to side with truth is noble, when we share her wretched crust, ere her cause bring fame and profit, and 'tis prosperous to be just." — Lowell.

but they are not without a parallel in the remains of ancient Egypt that have come down to us. Piankhi, for instance, king of Egypt, about B. C. 750, says in an inscription which has been translated by the Rev. Canon Cook, "Didst thou not know that the Divine shade was over me? I have not acted without His knowledge; He commanded my acts." — Spk. Com.

B. C. 609.

25—27. (25) Jeremiah, prob. he composed a special dirge, wh. is lost to us. an ordinance, i. e. a certain day was appointed for the lamentation of Israel for Josiah. "He was perhaps the most blameless of the kings of Judah. But he was certainly not a strong nor a very wise king, and his reign did not advantage his country."— Rawlinson. in the lamentations, not the Bk. called by this name in our Bible, but a national collection of dirges. (27 book . . Judah, not the present Book of Kings. See notes on xxvii. 7 and xxv. 26.

Jeremiah's lament for Josiah

"They sorrowed for him with such an intensity of heartfelt anguish that even after the captivity 'the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon' became a proverbial expression for the deepest and truest grief (Zech. xii. 11)."

Premature death of the good. — Why did God not interpose to prevent Josiah from throwing his life away? Why did He let darkness come down at noon, and put an end to this bright and useful day? Why does He not now intervene between us and the death we speak of as premature? Why does He permit the young statesmen to overtax his strength and die in his prime; the young minister to commit himself to the treacherous tide and be drowned in the very fulness of his powers and the midst of his usefulness: the young missionary to expose his life to the savages who pierce him with the poisoned spear? We ask such questions, wondering, if not complaining, at the Divine inaction. But we might very justly and more properly ask: Would it be really wise or kind of our Heavenly Father if He were always interposing to prevent us from suffering the natural consequences of our error or our negligence, because we were right at heart with Him? Would that be the way to discipline, to purify, to perfect his children? No! when God lets death "Descend in sudden night on manhood's middle day," He is not unrighteous, nor is He really unwise or unkind.— Pul. Com.

"Either take Christ in your lives, or cast Him out of your lips; either be that thou seemest, or else be known for what thou art."— Dyer.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SIXTH.

1—4. (1) Jehoahaz, also called Shallum.[a] (2) three months, only this short time bec. Necho took advantage of his victory at Megiddo. (3) put him down, R. V., "deposed him." He wanted a creature of his own on the throne. condemned, R. V., "amerced," they were to pay this heavy war indemnity. (4) Eliakim, the elder brother. Jehoiakim, i. e. "he whom God has set up!" For his history cf. 2 Ki. xxiii.–xxiv.; Je. xxii., xxvi., xxxvi. to Egypt, where he died.[b] He was an idolater (2 Ki. xxiii. 32) and lawless (Ezek. xix. 3).

Jehoahaz

a Je. xxii. 10-12; 2 Ki. xxiii. 33-34.

b Je. xxii. 10-12.

Jehoahaz. — Something there had been in his character, or in the popular mode of his election, which endeared him to his country. A lamentation, as from his father, went up from the princes and prophets of the lands for the lion's cub (Eze. xix. 34), that was learning to catch his prey, caught in the pitfall, and led off in chains — by a destiny even sadder than death in battle. "Weep not for the dead, nor bemoan him, but weep sore for him who goeth away." He was the first king of Judah who died in exile. "He shall return no more to see his native country — his native land no more" (Je. xxii. 10-12). — Stanley.

"As the dial is of no use in telling the observer the time of the day unless it be correctly set and the sun shine upon it, so the Christian conveys no Scriptural impressions of the Saviour's religion, unless his heart be made right by grace, and his life be shone upon by the light of the Sun of Righteousness."— John Bate.

The power of sin felt in resistance. — Peradventure some synner wyll saye, I perceyve nor feyl ony weyght in myself, do I never so many synnes. To whom we answere that yf a dogge hauynge a grete stone bounde aboute his necke be caste downe from an hygh toure, he felethe no weyght of that stone as longe as he is fallynge downe, but whan he is ones fallen to the grounde he is brasten all to peces by the reason of that weyght. Soo the synner goynge downe towarde the pyt of hell feleth not the grete burden of synne, but when he shall come in to the depens of helle he shall fele more payne than he wolde. Also every creature which is aboute to put away the yoke of synne feleth the grete and grevous weyght of it. — Fischer.

Jehoiakim

5—10. (5) Jehoiakim, was two years older than his brother and of a different mother; 2 Ki. xxiii. 31–36. (6) Nebuchadnezzar,[c] this prob. was first expedition of Nebu. during the lifetime of his father, Nabopolassar, who was the conqueror of Nineveh. (7) vessels, etc., comp. Dan. i. 2, v. 2, and c "Nebuc. defeated the Egyp. at Carchemish and drove them out of Asia, and reduced all the provinces west of the Euphrates to obedience, among the rest the kingdom of Jehoiakim, who became a vassal of the Assyrian empire." — Jamieson,

B. C. 609.

Ezra i. 7. (8) abominations, in restoring idolatry,[a] also cf. 2 Ki. xxiv. 3–4. (9) Jehoiachin, or Jeconiah; comp. 2 Ki. xxiv. 8, 9. eight years, as Nebuchadnezzar carried away this king's wives (2 Ki. xxiv. 15), it is plain that eight is here a slip of the transcriber for eighteen, the number found in 2 Ki. xxiv. 8; Jehoiachin is otherwise Jechonia (1 Chr. iii. 16), and even Coniah (Je. xxii. 24). His reign of three months and ten days can scarcely be called a reign at all, as he merely claimed the crown until he was taken away by Nebuchadnezzar. — Murphy.

An unlamented death. — We learn more of Jehoiakim in the prophetic writings of Jeremiah than in these brief annals. There we learn that his foreign policy was not less condemnable than his conduct of home affairs. When his treasury was low by reason of heavy payments to the foreign powers, he must needs build for himself a splendid and costly mansion (Je. xxii. 14), and in order to do this he had to impress the labor of his subjects (Je. xxii. 13); he thus excited a strong feeling of just resentment and natural disaffection among them, and brought down upon himself the severe rebuke of the prophet of the Lord. We also learn from Jeremiah that the king acted in daring defiance of God's holy law, presuming to cut in two and to burn in the fire the sacred roll (Je. xxxvi. 23). By this wanton and impious action he still further drew down upon him the wrath of Jehovah, and by that act he terribly prejudiced and injured his country. We have in him a melancholy instance of an unlamented death (Je. xxii. 18). — Clarkson.

a Je. vii. 9, 30, 31; xix. 3-13; xxv. 8.

"The chronicler had no motive for lingering over the last sad days of the monarchy. Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah pass over the scene in rapid and melancholy succession." — Bennett.

B. C. 597.

Zedekiah

11—16. (11) Zedekiah, a son of Josiah, whose proper name was Mattaniah,[b] "the last king of Judah, a weak prince who lived in shameful dependence upon the low upstarts who had now seized upon power." — Oehler. (12) before Jeremiah, his prophecies delivered at this time are preserved to us. (13) rebelled, Eze. xvii. 13, 18. swear, i. e., take a solemn oath of allegiance. hardened, etc., this is the O. T. term for the highest degree of sin (1 Sa. vi. 6; Ps. xcv. 8; Ex. viii. 15, 28, etc.) (14) polluted, etc., comp. Eze. viii. (15) his messengers, i. e. Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, etc. cf. Je. xxv. 3–7; xxxv. 12–15, etc. (16) misused, R. V., "scoffed at," see Matt. xxiii. 37. no remedy, comp. Prov. vi. 14; xxix. 1; Je. xiv. 19; xxxiii. 6–8.

b 2 Ki. xxiv. 17, 18.

Judah's sin. — The present Scripture offers matter of most solemn reflection, in summarizing the long indictment of centuries that lay against Judah, and in a most pathetic rehearsing of the compassionate, forbearing, ever-forgiving ministration of Divine love which had for equal length of time striven to prevail over her infidelity, yet all in vain! Her day of visitation had been not one day only; it had been many a day! She "knew" them not, and "now they are hid from her eyes." Judah's long-drawn sin, of many a day, year, generation, and even century, had been, in one word, idolatry. That sin incurs the guilt of the first two commandments set at nought. There is a sense, only too obvious and too certain, in which it is the world's fundamental source of sin and snare of sin. No age, no people, exempt from the danger, and every individual exposed, at any rate, to it. — Pul. Com.

"No remedy," not on God's account, but your own; not in God's want of will to save you, but in your own incapacity to will your own salvation" — Vaughan.

the captivity of Judah

17—21. (17) the Chaldees, whose centre was Bablyon. slew, etc., Eze. ix. La. ii. (18) all the vessels, 2 Ki. xxv. 14, 15. (19) burnt, etc., this unusual severity was the consequence of the king's revolting. Described more fully 2 Ki. xxv. 1–10 and Jer. xxxix. 1–8. (20) escaped, in the great slaughter. kingdom of Persia, Da. v. 28, 31. (21) To fulfil, etc., see Je. xxv. 9, 12. sabbaths,[c] "the omission of the institutions of the Sabbatic year was contemplated in Lev. xxvi. 35 and how far they were ever carried into practice does not appear. But from this passage it is evident that it had been omitted for centuries. If the number is taken exactly it points back about 500 years, i. e. to the days of Solomon," since wh. time this Sab. year had not been observed. — Oehler.

c Le. xxvi. 34, 35, 43.

"There is no economy in keeping back what is due to God."—Bennett.

Lessons. — 1. Transgressors cannot escape from appointed judgments. 2. The bitterness of sin is seen in the overthrow which it creates. 3. Since we have not otherwise any guarantee against national humiliation, what need to have the Lord on our side. — Hom. Com.

There is no sin a man can be tempted to but he will find greater comfort in resisting than in indulging. Then a man shows himself to be a Christian when he chooses rather to suffer than sin. By suffering we avoid sinning; but by sin-

Exiles. — Those that had escaped the sword were driven off, like gangs of slaves, to become exiled in a strange land, and servants to the kings of Babylon, "until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths," viz. for three score and ten years (vss. 20, 21). Such transplantations of conquered populations were common in the ancient Orient. "Sargon transported the Samaritans to Gozan and Media; Sennacherib carried off two hundred thousand Jews from Judæa; Esarhaddon placed Elamites, Susianians, and Babylonians in Samaria. Darius Hystaspes brought the nation of the Pæonians from Europe into Asia Minor, removed the Barcæans to Bactria, and the Eretrians to Ardericca near Susa." — Rawlinson. The bondage of sin. — Just so when the morning sun is bright, and the summer breezes gently blowing from the shore, the little river boat is enticed from the harbor to start on her trip of pleasure on the clear, calm sea. All nature seems to enlist in her service. The fair wind fills her sails, the favorable tide rolls onward in her course, the parted sea makes way for her to glide swiftly and merrily on her happy voyage. But, having thus been her servants and carried her whither she would, these soon become her masters and carry her whither she would not. The breeze that swelled her sails has become a storm, and rends them; the waves that quietly rippled for pleasure, now rise in fury, and dash over her for her destruction; and the vessel which rode in the morning as a queen upon the waters, sinks before night comes on, the slave of those very winds and waves which had beguiled her to use them as her servants. — Morse.

B. C. 558.

ning we cannot avoid suffering. Get this principle into your hearts; there is nothing got by sin nor lost by holiness."— Mason.

"There is no harder work in the world than sin."— South.

22—23. This is given only in Chronicles. An interval of fifty years since events in vs. 21. (22) Cyrus, see Ezr. i. 1-3.[a] (23) All the kingdoms, the usual boastful language of the East, but nearly true. Lord God of heaven, this does not imply that Cyrus was an intelligent and thoroughgoing adherent of the true God. It carries him, however, so far that he considers himself charged with the building of a house to God in Jerusalem, and accordingly permits and invites His exiled people to return free. Such is the finale of Chronicles. It thereby shows itself to be an introduction to the history of the returning exiles of Judah and Israel, which is contained in Ezra and Nehemiah, and an exposition of the peculiar principles by which the restored people had to be governed. — Murphy.

Cyrus liberates the captive

[a] Comp. Da. vi. 28, x. 1; Is. xlv. 1.

Lessons. — 1. The ability of God to fulfil his promises no less than his threatenings. 2. The secret access which God has to the hearts of men — of kings no less than of common men. 3. The certainty that God can raise up at any moment a fitting instrument to do his will. — Whitelaw.

The Jew. — With the proclamation of Cyrus begins in fact the manhood with all its mystic, its wonderful, and its still non-progressing struggles, of the Jew. His simple childhood, wilfull youth, are indeed for ever gone. But he and his nation are with unspeakably painful travail born. Now begins the new period of Jewish life, with fiercer probation, with unbounded and various trial, and probably of world-length continuance. No life of nation that is or ever has been merits the devout observation and study that this unchallengeably does. — Pul. Com.

"We are too apt to misjudge the dispensations of Providence when we desire to have them tally with our own wishes." — Skelton.

Kings of Israel and Judah. — The dates of the beginning of each reign are according to the latest authorities and differ materially from the dates usually given in the margins of our Bible. It is to be remembered that the reigns of the kings in repeated instances overlapped each other. For this and other reasons, the figures here given do not always agree with the length of the reigns as given in Kings and Chronicles.

"Cyrus, who was probably a polytheist, was exceedingly tolerant to all religions."

KINGS OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH.

B. C.	ISRAEL.	B. C.	JUDAH.
937.....	Jeroboam.....	937.....	Rehoboam.
915.....	Nadab.....	920.....	Abijah
913.....	Baasha.....	917.....	Asa.
889.....	Elah.....	876.....	Jehoshaphat.
887.....	Zimri	851.....	Jehoram.
887.....	Omri.....	843.....	Ahaziah.
875.....	Ahab	842.....	Athaliah.
853.....	Ahaziah.....	836.....	Joash.
851.....	Jehoram	796.....	Amaziah.

"Go up." Jerusalem was on a much higher level than Babylonia

B. C. 558.

"The final editor of Chronicles has shown himself unwilling that the book should conclude with a gloomy record of sin and ruin, and has appended a few lines to remind his readers of the new life of faith and hope that lay beyond the Captivity. In so doing, he has echoed the key-note of prophecy: ever beyond man's transgression and punishment the prophets saw the vision of his forgiveness and restoration to God."—Exp. Bib.

KINGS OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH — (Continued).

B. C.	ISRAEL.	B. C.	JUDAH.
842.....	Jehu	782.....	Uzziah.
814.....	Jehoahaz.....	737.....	Jotham.
797.....	Jehoash	735.....	Ahaz.
780.....	Jeroboam II.....	715.....	Hezekiah.
740.....	Zachariah	686.....	Manasseh.
739.....	Shallum.....	641.....	Amon.
739.....	Menahem	639.....	Josiah.
736.....	Pekahiah.....	609.....	Jehoahaz.
735.....	Pekah.....	609.....	Jehoiakim.
734.....	Hoshea.....	597	Jehoiachin.
.....	....	597.....	(First captivity).
721.....	(Captivity)....	597... ..	Zedekiah.
.....	....	586.. ...	(Final captivity).

THE BOOK OF EZRA.

Introduction.

This Bk. and Nehemiah, were by the Jews united in one vol., and called the First and Second Bk. of Ezra. This combined book embraced a period from the return of Zerubbabel (B. C. 536) to the second visit of Nehemiah (B. C. 432); it was probably compiled long after this. The mention of Jaddua (afterwards high-priest in the time of Alex. the Gt.) in Neh. xii. 11, 22, seems to prove that the work was composed later than the time of Nehemiah, possibly later than 320 B. C. The book of Ezra is evidently a compilation. Although tradition ascribes it to Ezra, it rests on no trustworthy foundation. If such were the case, there would be no occasion for the sudden transition from the first to the third person in describing scenes in which the writer himself was an actor. From a consideration of its structure, the more natural inference is that a later compiler, perhaps the same one who compiled Chronicles, gathered the memoirs of Ezra, with a view of preserving particular records; not necessarily the weaving of an artistic history. Other documents were also used, among them one having an Aramaic origin. The letter to Artaxerxes and the reply are written in Aramaic. The book naturally falls into two sections (a) chap. i.–vi. treats of the return of the exiles under Zerubbabel (B. C. 536). The period is described in the contemporary records of Haggai and Zechariah. (b) The second portion (chap. vii.–x.) relates events occurring a half century later. The second expedition, of which Ezra was leader, occurred in the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus (B. C. 458–57). On this occasion the expulsion of the foreign wives took place.

Synopsis.

(According to Horne.)

PART I. — From the return under Zerubbabel to rebuilding of the Temple.

Sec. I. — Edict of Cyrus..... i., ii.
Sec. II. — Temple begun..... iii., iv.
Sec. III. — Temple finished..... v., vi.

PART II. — Arrival of Ezra at Jerusalem, and reformation under him.

Sec. I. — Ezra sets out..... vii.
Sec. II. — His retinue and arrival..... viii.
Sec. III. — The reformation..... ix., x.

(According to Rawlinson.)

PART. I. (ch i.-vi.) First return from captivity.

Sec. I. — Decree of Cyrus, with numbers of those who went, i.–ii.
Sec. II. — Altar of burnt-offering set up and feasts of Booths, iii. 1–7
Sec. III. — Rebuilding of temple and opposition to it.. iii. 8–vi. 15
Sec. IV. — Dedication and Feast of Passover ..... vi. 16–22

PART. II. — (ch. vii.-x.) Second return under Ezra.

Sec. I. — Degree of Artaxerxes, those who went, and chief men..... vii. viii.
Sec. II. — Reformation under Ezra.. ix., x.

B. C. cir. 538.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

proclamation of Cyrus

1–4. (1) Now, "and," the resumption not the commencement of a history. The fact that the same passage is used to close Chr. and open Ezra signifies that both books come fr. the hands of the same compiler. first . . Persia,[a] first year after capture of Babylon. Lord . . Persia, men are sometimes doing God's will when they think only of pleasing themselves. put . . writing, thus giving it a place among the official documents. The decree itself would have been written in Persian or Aramaic. The following vss. (2–4) contain the substance of the decree translated into Hebrew and adapted to Jewish readers. It is a popular reproduction rather than a literal translation. — Cam. B. (2) saith . . Persia, etc. Cyrus found Daniel in Babylon and fr. him prob. learned about the Jews.[b] The Lord, R. V., "the Lord, the God, etc." This expression has called forth much controversy regarding the worship of Cyrus. The explanation of Rawlinson is as follows: "The use of the term 'Jehovah,' instead of Ormuzd, is remarkable, and was probably limited to the Hebrew transcript of the proclamation." (3) Who . . you, my subjects. of . . people, proc. limited to the people of Judah and Benjamin, since Cyrus could hardly have known much of the deportation of the ten tribes; vss. 3–5 include the proclamation. (4) whosoever . . sojourneth,[c] some might have ties fr. wh. they could not be immediately released. "The following paraphrase will give the meaning. 'In any place where survivors of the Jewish captivity are to be found sojourning, there let the natives of the place, the non-Israelite neighbors, render him all assistance.'" — Cam. B. freewill offering, "individually, he was about to send 'a freewill offering,' consisting of a number of gold and silver vessels for the service of the temple. His words suggest that his subjects might follow this good example."

The decree of Cyrus. — I. With many afflictions, there go a consolation and a support II. We have a striking example of the fulfilment of prophecy. III. God, when He has a purpose to perform, can easily bring it to pass. IV. This God, who thus fulfilled His word in this wonderful manner, is our Father.

Favor of Cyrus to the Jews. — There is some reason for believing that the privilege Cyrus offered to the Jews was one in which other nations shared. On a small, broken, clay cylinder, some four inches in diameter, discovered quite recently and now deposited in the British Museum, Cyrus is represented as saying, "I assembled all those nations, and I caused them to go back to their countries." . . . Until a few years ago it was commonly supposed that Cyrus was a Zoroastrian, who was disgusted at the cruel and lustful idolatry of the Babylonians, and that when he discovered a monotheistic people oppressed by vicious heathen polytheists, he claimed religious brotherhood with them, and so came to show them singular favor. Unfortunately for his fame, this fascinating theory has been recently shattered by the discovery of the little cylinder already referred to. Here Cyrus is represented as saying that "the gods" have deserted Nabonidas — the last king of Babylon — because he has neglected their service; and that Merodach, the national divinity of Babylon, has transferred his favor to Cyrus; who now honors him with many praises. If we are driven to the conclusion that Cyrus was not solely or chiefly actuated by religious motives, or even if we take his action to be purely one of state policy, the ascription of this inferior position to Cyrus only heightens the wonderful glory of God's overruling providence. — Expos. Bib.

the people provide for the return

5, 6. (5) chief . . Benjamin,[d] in whose inheritance the temple was situated. (6) besides . . offered, they gave them due proportion, and a free-will offering beside.

Zerubbabel's return (vss. 5, 6) — Mentioned by Matt. i. 12. — Among the ancestors of the Saviour, Zerubbabel has been regarded as a type of Him. I. Like him our Saviour was born in a strange land. II. Like him, a king in disguise, our Saviour dwelt among the people He came to save. III. Like him our Saviour seeks to gather the faithful together, and lead them forth into the glorious liberty of the children of God. IV. Like him our Leader meets and overcomes many difficulties. Some questions for us concerning our Leader. (1) Have we recognized His presence? (2) Have we obeyed His voice? (3) Are we following His leadership? (4) Do we propose in all things to do His bidding?

a 2 Ch. xxxvi. 22–23.

"The Book of Chron. ends with hist. of destr. of temple, and with recital of edict for building of second temple. The Bk. of Ezra describes its restoration."— Bp. Wordsworth.

b Da. ii. 37.

c "Many of the richer Jews preferred to remain at Babylon" (Jos. Ant. xi. 1). The Book of Esther gives us a view of them and their condition.

d Some of Ephraim and Manasseh also returned and settled at Jerus. 1 Ch. ix. 3. "One of the blessings resulting fr. cap. was, that the schism between Judah and Israel was healed, and the temple at Jerus. bec. the com. centre of unity to those who had been formerly separated as rivals and enemies, and they were all joined together in the com. name of Jews."— Bp. Wordsworth.

B. C. cir. 538.

the temple vessels restored

7—11. (7) which . . Jerusalem,[a] when he pillaged the temp. put . . gods, esp. in the temple of Bel.[b] (8) Mithredath (given by Mithras) i. e. genius of the sun, wh. was object of Persian worship.[c] Sheshbazzar,[d] i. e. Zerubbabel. "He was the son of Pedaiah, brother of Salathiel, who was the legal heir of Jehoiachin, king of Judah. He appears to have been adopted by Salathiel as his son, and to have been recognized as the legitimate heir to the throne of David. Thus he did not owe his appointment to the mere favor of Cyrus, but was the natural leader of the people."—Pulp. Com. (9) chargers, basins to receive blood of victims. knives, sacrificial knives. (10) basons, with lids; R. V., "bowls," like our tankards. of . . sort, i. e. an inferior quality. (11) All . . hundred, or 2,901 of var. kinds not specified above.

[a] 2 Ki. xxiv. 13; xxv. 14; Jer xxvii. 16; xxviii. 6; lii. 18.

[b] Da. i. 2.

What are the results?—Judge the inspiration by the restoration. Do not be content with reading the proclamation of Cyrus, but see what it leads to. Do not be content with reading the Bible, but see what that reading results in. Do not be content when any priest or preacher tells you that any book is inspired; reply to him, let me read the book for myself, through and through, carefully, word by word, and when I have finished I shall know whether the book is inspired or not. If I be enlarged, inflamed, lifted up, ennobled, if I melt in charity, if I abound in love, if I would have all men come and read the same book and drink at the same fountain, then I shall know that it is God's Book, a living Book,—sweet, tender, gracious, complete, touching life at every point, and answering it with infinite replies.—Peop. Bib.

[c] The word Cyrus —sun.

[d] Ez. iii. 2, 8; v. 14, 16; Mat. i. 12; Lu iii. 27.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

the number of the people that return

1—6. (1) these . . province,[e] i. e. of Judah as distinct fr. the Jews who remained in the city of Babylon. unto his city, i. e. "wh. was their own years after the return when this catalogue was compiled." (2) Zerubbabel, putative grandson of Jeconiah. His name = born at Babel. Jeshua, or Joshua, first high priest of the new community. Nehemiah, not the Nehemiah of the next bk. Mordecai, not Esther's relative. (3, 4) Parosh . . Shephatiah, how carefully the family records were kept during the cap'y. (5) Arah . . five, Neh. gives 652. (6) Pahath-moab . . twelve, 2,818 in Neh.

Elements of a good leader.—In a great leader many elements of qualification are combined. Other men may excel him in detached points, but taken as a whole he rules not perhaps by one dominant faculty, but by a noble proportion of natural and acquired gifts. The only sound rule for promotion to influential positions in the church is, that wisdom, wheresoever found, in the rich or the poor, the old or the young, should be recognized and honored.

[e] Both Ezra and Neh. give a sum total of 42,360 men, and 7,337 men servants, and maid servants, Ezra's list was made B. C. 536. Nehemiah's list dates fr. B. C. 536.

[f] Neh. vii. 15.

7—13. (10) Bani, or Binnui.[f] (13) six . . six, note the number.

Register of names.—There is more written than we suppose. There are registers that are hidden away, but will one day be produced. When those registers are before us it will be found that the first may be last, and the last may be first. God is the scribe and nothing escapes His pen. There are in heaven books, and a Book; there is another book, which is the Book of Life. The universe is kept in regular order; it is founded on what we may term a systematic basis; every worker's name is entered, the period of service is indicated, the wages agreed upon are stated; nothing is left to disorder or to be settled without distinct and all-inclusive law. The register is kept at the Cross, the signatures are all inscribed in blood; no man can write his own name there, but God will write it for him, if the man will only cry from his heart—God be merciful to me a sinner!—Peop. Bib.

"Every Christian is born great because he is born for heaven."—Massillon.

[g] Ne. vii. 24.

14—18. (18) Jorah, or Hariah.[g]

The solemn significance of names.—A name is a key to the nature or history of the thing which bears it. In the history of the creation we read that "God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them: and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof." And so it has been well said by Carlyle that not only all common speech, but science, poetry itself, is no other than a right naming. "There was a time in the history of Europe when the controversy about what a name represents involved issues so grave that men were burnt for taking what was considered the heretical side of this controversy."—R. W. Dale.

"As in Noah's ark there were the clean and the unclean raven and dove, leopard and kid, the cruel lion with the gentle lamb, so in the church of Christ on earth you will find the same diversities and differences of human character."—Guthrie.

19—24. (20) Vss. 20–35, "names of towns and places." Gibbar, Gibeon.[a] (21) an . . three, one of the smaller companies: but the Messiah came hence.[b] (23) Anathoth, the home of Jeremiah. The modern Anata, 4 miles N. E. of Jerus. (24) Azmaveth, or Bethazmaveth,[c] prob. El. Hizmeh.

Divisions in the church. — There are divisions in the great kingdoms of creation: divisions between the lands and waters; divisions between islands and continents; divisions between continents and continents; divisions between vegetation and minerals; divisions in birds, fishes, creeping things, animals of all kinds; divisions among men; and yet there are great principles, laws, and operations which unite them together, as the one harmonious workmanship of Almighty wisdom and power. So it is in the church of Christ. There are divisions in regard to discipline, forms of worship, creeds of belief, means of grace, modes of working, names of distinction, places of abode, etc.; but beneath these, and of more importance, there run grand laws and elements which bind together the church of Christ in one glorious body, of which He is the Head.—J. Bate.

25—30. (29) Called in Nehemiah "the other Nebo,"[d] i. e. not of N. beyond Jordan in tr. of Reuben, but of that of N. called Nob bef. the cap'y.

Unity of the church. — Pliny writes of a stone in the island of Scyros, that if it be whole, though a large and heavy one, it swims above water, but being broken it sinks. So long as saints keep whole, nothing shall sink them; but if they break up, and divide, they are in danger of going down. — Hom. Com. Separate the atoms which make the hammer, and each would fall on the stone as a snow-flake: but welded into one, and wielded by the firm arm of the quarryman, it will break the massive rocks asunder. Divide the waters of Niagara into distinct and individual drops, and they would be no more than the falling rain; but their united body would quench the fires of Vesuvius, and have some to spare for other volcanoes. — Guthrie.

31—35. (31) Elam, "this title apparently refers back to the Elam mentioned in vs. 7. The fact that the 'Elam' of vs. 7 is probably the name of a person and that the Elam here mentioned is found in connection with the names of towns renders the expression 'the other' very strange. Another strange circumstance is the exact correspondence of the numbers in each case, i. e. 1254. The text is not free from suspicion." — Cam. B. (33) Lod, i. e. Lydda, Acts ix. 32. Hadid, or Harid.[e]

God has clearly ordained public worship. — He made man to be social — social in virtue of his sorrows, his joys, his wants, his affections, his relationships. Accordingly, fellowship in worship may be traced from the earliest period. It seems not improbable that, as our great poet has represented, even in paradise the primitive pair had some chosen bower whither they resorted to offer up their stated homage to their Maker. Where the patriarch pitched his tent, there he built his altar. As soon as ever God had singled out a people for Himself, He bade them raise a tabernacle of witness and of worship, giving the minutest instructions for its construction, its furniture, and its ordinances. — Hom. Com.

36—39. (36) Vss. 36–39, register of the priestly classes. The priests, exactly as in Neh.[f] Jeshua, head of ninth course.[g] "The difficulty occasioned by this verse has arisen from the desire to identify this Jeshua with the high-priest, and from the mistake of supposing that the names of the heads of families were necessarily the companions of Zerubbabel instead of being rather the distinctive names of clans." — Cam. B. (37) Immer, sixteenth course.[h] (38) Pashur,[i] (39) Harim,[j] third course.

The significance of this record of names and numbers. — The pains which the children of Israel took to keep a strict record of their families in Persia may have been (a) an act of faith: it may have been the expression of their belief that God's word of promise spoken by Jeremiah (i. 1) would be fulfilled, and that the hour would come when they or their children would lay claim to their ancestral inheritance. Or it may have been (b) a habit of obedience, which itself is suggestive enough. It was the will of their Divine Sovereign that everything, however minute, which pertained to His people should be scrupulously cared for. Nothing was unimportant that pertained to the people of God. — Pul. Com.

Sacrifice for sake of the church. — When a teacher was wanted by Dr. Mason of Burmah for the war-like Bghais, he asked his boatman, Shapon, if a Neh. vii. 25.

B. C. cir. 538.

b Mic. v. 2.

c Neh. vii. 28.

"This is the state of the church militant; she is like the ark floating upon the waters, like a lily growing among thorns, like the bush which burned with fire, and was not consumed; so the city of God is always besieged but never ruined."—Henry Smith.

d Neh. vii. 33.

"Do you ask 'Why not do away with the church, if its members make so many mistakes?" Would you take away the lighth'se because careless mariners through wrong observations run their ships high and dry upon the shore? Would you put out the lamp in your house because moths and millers burn their wings in it? What would the children do?" — H. W. Beecher.

e So it is given in some copies.

"In all societies it is advisable to associate, if possible, with the highest; not that the highest are always the best, but because, if disgusted there, we can at any time descend; but if we begin with the lowest, to ascend is impossible."—Colton.

the priests

f Ez. vii. 39-42.

"These coincidences show with what accuracy the names and nums. of the priests were reckoned." — Bp. Wordsworth.

g 1 Ch. xxiv. 11.

h 1 Ch. xxiv. 14.

i Jer. xx. 1; xxi. 1; 1 Ch. ix. 12.

j 1 Ch. xxiv. 8.

"Men say their pinnacles point to heaven; why, so does every tree that buds, and every bird that rises as it sings. Men say their aisles are good for worship; why, so is every mountain glen and rough sea shore. But this they have as distinct and indisputable glory—that their mighty walls were never raised, and never shall be, but by men who love and aid each other in their weakness."—Ruskin.

B. C. cir. 538.

he would go; and reminded him that instead of the fifteen rupees a month which he now received, he could only have four rupees a month as teacher. After praying over the matter he came back; and Dr. Mason said, "Well, Shapon, what is your decision? Can you go to the Bghais for four rupees a month?" Shapon answered, "No, teacher, I could not go for four rupees a month; but I can do it for Christ." And for Christ's sake he went. Dr. Judson labored diligently for six years in Burmah without baptizing a convert. At the end of three years, he was asked what evidence he had of ultimate success. He replied, "As much as there is a God who will fulfil all His promises." A hundred churches and thousands of converts already answer his faith. We will suppose that some opulent person makes the tour of Europe. If his money fall short he comforts himself with the reflection that he has a sufficient stock in the bank, which he can draw out at any time by writing to his cashiers. This is just the case spiritually with God's elect. They are travelers in a foreign land remote from home.—Hom. Com.

the Levites singers and porters

40—42. (40) Vss. 40–58, the Levites, Nethinim and "Solomon's servants," laborers about the temple. The small number of Levites indicates that they were very backward in returning to Jerus. Levites, "their office being more mechanical and material than that of the priests, they seem to have declined in religious zeal and earnestness." Hodaviah, or Judah,[a] "it seems best to regard the clause as belonging to Kadmiel especially, and as signifying a closer limitation of that family. Thus the Levites comprised the family of Jeshua and those members of the Kadmiel family who belonged to the Hodaviah branch," called also Hodevah.[b] (41) singers, instituted in Dav 's time. an . . eight, or 148.[c] (42) an . . nine, or 138.[d] a Ez. iii 9.

b Ne. vii. 43.

c Ne. vii. 44.

d Ne. vii. 45.

David's influence on Hebrew song. —

The harp the monarch-minstrel swept,
The king of men, the loved of Heaven,
Which music hallowed while she wept,
O'er tones her heart of hearts had given,
Redoubled be her tears, its chords are riven!

It softened men of iron mold,
It gave them virtues not their own;
No ear so dull, no soul so cold,
That felt not, fired not to the tone,
Till David's lyre grew mightier than his throne. — Byron.

the Nethinim, etc.

43—48. (43) Nethinims, R. V., "Nethinim," ending "im" being plural. Appointed by David to aid the Levites.[e] A class of servants lower than the Levites; Jewish tradition identifies them with the Gibeonites, Jos. ix. 3–27. (44) Siaha, or Sia. (46) Shalmai, or Shamlai.

e 1 Chr. ix. 2.

Variety in service. — In our own day we have pastors, preachers, evangelists, conductors of prayer-meetings, Sunday-school teachers, tract distributors, visitors of the sick and sorrowful, leaders of the psalmody of the church, and managers of its financial and other business arrangements. In the work of the Lord Jesus amongst men there is scope for every kind and degree of faculty. The feeblest power may be beneficially employed; and the greatest gifts may find spheres of service which demand their utmost exercise. This fact deprives the idlers in the church of God of any legitimate excuse for their indolence. There is work for every one, and suited to every capacity; and the obligation of service rests upon every one. Let every one, then, be up and doing. — Hom. Com.

In 1848, Lamartine, introduced De la Eure to the riotous populace, saying, "Listen, citizens! It is sixty years of a pure life that is about to address you." The multitude all became attentive to his words. It was the power of integrity and purity.

49—54. (50) Nephusim, R. V., "Nephisim." (52) Bazluth, or Bazlith.[f] f Ne. vii. 54.

Christian service. — I know of no service that can be more distinguished than the doing of good, the scattering of blessings among the sons of men. Methinks the very angels before the throne might envy us poor men who are permitted to talk of Christ, even though it be but to little children. I reckon the humblest ragged-school teacher to be more honored than even Gabriel himself, in being commissioned to tell out the story of the cross, and to win youthful hearts to the Saviour's service. You are not employed as scullions in your Master's kitchen, though you might be content with such a service; you are not made as His hired servants, to toil in meanest drudgery,

"The church was built to disturb the peace of man; but often, it does not perform its duty for fear of disturbing the peace of the church. What kind of artillery practice would that be which declined to fire for fear of kicking over the gun carriages, or you are not sent to be hewers of wood and drawers of water; but you are His friends, the friends of Jesus, to do such work as He did; and even greater works than He did are you enabled to do, because He hath gone to His Father. "This honor have all the saints," the honor of being gentlemen-at-arms under Jesus, the Captain of their salvation. — Hom. Com.

B. . 538.

waking up the sentinels asleep at their posts."— Beecher.

55–60. (55) the . . servants, prob. Canaanitish laborers, whom Sol. employed,[a] and who had bec. proselytes. In some places[b] they seem to be included in the Nethinim. Sophereth, R. V., "Hassophereth." Peruda, or Perida.[c] (57) Pochereth of Zebaim, R. V., Pochereth-hazzebaim, i. e. "the gazelle hunters." Ami, or Amon.[d] (59) Vss. 59–63, Israelites and priests without clear genealogy. They could not exercise the full rights of citizenship; they were disqualified fr. exercising the priestly office. Tel-melah, Tel-harsa, names of Chaldæan cities. Addan, or Addon.[e] they . house, hence their claim, like that of the priests, stood over till it could be settled by authority.[f] seed, pedigree.

the children of Solomon's servants

a 1 Ki. ix. 20, 21; 2 Ch. viii. 7, 8.

b Ne. iii. 26, 31; x. 29.

c Ne. vii. 57.

d Ne. vii. 59.

e Ne. vii. 61.

f vs. 63.

How to destroy a church. — To do this effectually, you must — I. Discourage the pastor. II. Discourage your fellow-members. III. Destroy the confidence of the community. I. To discourage the pastor — 1. Absent yourself from one service every Sabbath. 2. Neglect the prayer and class-meetings; 3. Criticise your minister freely; pray for him little or none; 4. If he proposes to hold extra meetings withhold your co-operation; 5. Give yourself no concern whether his salary is paid or not; 6. Never call on him socially, or allow him to think that his comfort or that of his family is a matter of any importance in your eyes. II. To discourage your fellow-members — 1. Observe the directions given above; 2. Complain about everything they do and don't do; 3. Contrive to make yourself the head of a clique, and by their assistance and your own industry keep the church in hot water generally; 4. While doing this, lose no opportunity to complain of the bad treatment you are receiving. III. To destroy the confidence of the community — 1. Observe the foregoing directions: 2. Tell the people that you are in the church by force of circumstances, but have no respect for the way in which business is conducted; 3. Publish the faults of your brethren; 4. Make no effort to induce people to attend the church; 5. Publish it on all occasions that you have no confidence in the concern — predict that it must fail — go down — blow up — never can succeed. By observing these directions faithfully, you may have the satisfaction, if the church is not unusually vigorous, of witnessing the fulfilment of your predictions.

"If you stand on the mountain of faith and look down, things will seem easy to you; but if you are in the valley of doubt they will look like giants. What the church wants and what it is looking for are men and women of faith." — D. L. Moody.

61–63. (61) Habaiah, prob. their ancestor married one of the house of Barzillai, the Gileadite.[g] Koz, R. V., "Hakkoz," the seventh priestly course, 1 Chr. xxiv. 10. (62) sought, this shows their anxiety to be found among the children of Israel. register, i. e. the register called "the enrolled." (63) Tirshatha, Persian for "governor." Here Zerubbabel is meant; a title also given to Nehemiah.[h] should . . things, the priest's portion.[i] "The distinction here made between the 'most holy' and the 'holy' is important. 'The most holy' included the shewbread, the incense, the sin and guilt offering, the drink offering. 'The holy' comprised the thank-offering, the firstlings of herd and flock, the first-fruits, the tithe." stood . . Thummim,[j] by wh. he would try them, and pronounce them of the line of Aaron or otherwise. "But Zerubbabel's expectation was disappointed. The gift of Urim and Thummim, forfeited by disobedience, was never recovered."

the children of the priests

g 2 Sa. xvii. 27; xix. 32–39; 1 Ki. ii. 7.

h Ne. viii. 9; x. 1; xii. 26.

i Le. xxii. 2, 10, 15, 16.

j Ex. xxviii. 30; Nu. xxvii. 21.

A true minister is a man whose manhood itself is a strong and influential argument with his people. He lives in such relations with God, and in such a genuine sympathy with man, that it is a pleasure to be under the influence of such a mind. Just as, lying on a couch on a summer's evening, you hear from a neighboring house the low breathing of an instrument of music, so far away that you can only hear its palpitation, but cannot discern the exact tune that is played, and are soothed by it, and drawn nearer to hear more; so the true man, the true Christian minister, is himself so inspiring, so musical, there is so much of the Divine element in him, rendered homelike by incarnation with his disposition, brought down to the level of man's understanding, that wherever he goes, little children want to see him, plain people want to be with him; everybody says when he comes, "Good;" and everybody says when he goes away, "I wish he had stayed longer;" all who come in contact with him are inclined to live a better life. Manhood is the best sermon. It is good to "The church has a good stomach; she has swallowed down whole countries, and has never known a surfeit; the Church alone can digest such ill-gotten wealth." — Goethe.

B. C. cir. 538.

fill the mind with the goodness and sweetness of the thing itself to which you would fain draw them. "Go, preach," was no more authoritative than "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." — H. W. Beecher.

total number of the people

64—67. (64) The . . threescore,[a] the total of those who came to Jerus., and prob. counted there. "Ezra's numbers, as given in detail (vss. 3–60), produce when added together a total of only 29,818; Nehemiah's items (vii. 8–62) gives a total of 31,089; those of the apocryphal Esdras a total of 33,950. The three authorities agree, however, in their summation, all alike declaring that the actual number of those who returned with Zerubbabel was 42,360. Esdras adds that children under twelve years of age are not included." — Pulp. Com. Prob. the disagreement bet. the various items and the sum total arises from copyist's errors in transcription. (65) two women, or 245.[b] Not included among the servants, but, in default of the Levites, besides their servants they used these men and women to swell the choruses. (66, 67) horses, the possession of the rich and well armed, same as in Neh.[c] Beasts of burden to carry baggage: the vessels, and offerings, etc. mules, ridden only by the richest classes. asses, used by the poorer classes.

a Ne. vii. 66.

b Ne. vii. 67.

"Now had the childr. of Israel taken down their harps fr. the willows of Babylon, and could sing unhidden the songs of Sion." — Bp. Hall.

Home after exile. —

But rest more sweet and still,
Than ever nightfall gave;
Our yearning hearts shall fill,
In the land beyond the grave.

There shall no tempests blow,
No scorching noontide beat;
There shall be no more snow,
No weary, wandering feet.

So we lift our trusting eyes
From the hills our fathers trod,
To the quiet of the skies,
To the Sabbath of our God. — Mrs. Hemans.

c Ne. vii. 68, 69.

"The way to preserve the peace of the Church is to preserve the unity of it." — M. Henry.

the offerings of the people for the work

68—70. (68) some . . fathers, R. V., "some of the heads of fathers' houses," names and gifts diff. fr. Neh.'s acc.[d] when . . Lord, i. e. to the site on wh. it was to be built. (69) drams, R. V., "darics," a Persian gold coin, = about 5 dollars. (70) all Israel,[e] those who returned, and those whom they found in the land. in . . cities, prob. allotted to them by public authority, and occupied gradually.

d Neh vii. 70-72. The differ. shows the independence of the lists

Willing gifts. — I happened to attend one of Mr. Whitefield's sermons, in the course of which I perceived he intended to finish with a collection, and I silently resolved he should get nothing from me. I had in my pocket a handful of copper money, three or four silver dollars, and five pistoles of gold. As he proceeded, I began to soften, and concluded to give the copper. Another stroke of his oratory made me ashamed of that, and determined me to give the silver; and he finished so admirably, that I emptied my pockets into the collector's dish, gold and all. — Franklin. Gifts to the church. — The gifts of poverty are the richest gifts to the churches. I refer not now to the widows' mites, richer though they be than all the gifts of wealth, but to the gifts richer even than the widow's mite. A few years ago, on a wintry morning, a boy in the habiliments of poverty entered an old school-house among our western mountains and avowed to the master his desire for an education. There was poverty, laying one of her richest gifts on the altar of religion. For that boy was Jonas King. On his humble shoemaker's bench Carey laid the foundation of British Baptist Missions. John Newton found in his congregation an unfriended Scotch boy, whose soul was then glowing with newborn love to Christ. He took him to see John Thornton, one of those noble merchants whose wealth, whose piety, and whose beneficence increase together. They educated him, and that boy became Claudius Buchanan, whose name India will bless when the names of Clive and Hastings are forgotten. John Bunyan was a gift of poverty to the church. Zwingle came forth from an Alpine shepherd's cabin; Luther from a miner's cottage; the apostles, some of them, from fishermen's huts. These are the gifts of poverty to the church. — J. Harris.

e Ne. vii. 73.

"The truth is, when we are under any affliction, we are generally troubled with a malicious kind of melancholy; we only dwell and pore upon the sad and dark occurrences of Providence, but never take notice of the more benign and bright ones. We are like froward children who, if you take one of their playthings from them throw away all the rest in spite." — Bp. Hopkins.

B. C. cir. 538.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

the altar is set up

1—3. (1) when . . come, Tisri.[a] The chief of the Heb. religious year. (2) Jeshua, the high priest.[b] son of Jozadak, he was the son of Seraiah, high priest when Jerus. was destroyed. brethren, as descended fr. Aaron. Zerubbabel, the governor.[c] and . . altar, their first act. The foundations of the temple not yet laid.[d] in the law, i. e. offerings for the Feast of Trumpets. Num. xxix. 1-6. (3) bases, R. V., "its base," on its old foundations. fear . . countries, hence they would first propitiate Jehovah, who had so often defended and delivered their ancestors. "Though the exiles had permission from Cyrus to raise up not only their altar, but their temple, it was not at all certain that his nominal subjects would passively submit. It was as if a modern Turkish Sultan should decree the erection of a Christian altar and a grand Christian cathedral at Kerbela or Bussorah, towards the verge of his empire. There would be great danger in acting on such a decree."—Pulp. Com.

The temple begun.—I. The foundation laid. The first care of the returned exiles was to re-establish the worship of God. See—1. Their zeal: no difficulties disheartened or deterred them; 2. Self-sacrifice: each gave freely of money and means to a work so sacred. II. The shout of the young, and the tears of the aged. The young looked onward; the aged recalled the past. As the aged recalled what the temple was in their young days, their cries all but drowned the shouts of the young. The young hoped that Israel might recover the former glory. Learn: (1) Make the worship and glory of God your first care; (2) Count no sacrifice too great to promote His glory; (3) Enter with joy into God's worship; whatever regrets the past may cause, the future may be blessed.—Hive.

Difficulties of worship among Puritans.—Never, not even under the tyranny of Laud, had the condition of the Puritans been so deplorable as at that time (autumn 1685). Never had spies been so actively employed in detecting congregations. Never had magistrates, grand jurors, rectors, and church wardens been so much on the alert. Many dissenters were cited before the ecclesiastical courts. Others found it necessary to purchase the connivance of the agents of the government by presents of hogsheads of wine and of gloves stuffed with guineas. It was impossible for the separatists to pray together without precautions, such as are employed by coiners and receivers of stolen goods. The places of meeting were frequently changed. Worship was performed sometimes just before break of day and sometimes at dead of night. Round the building where the little flock was gathered sentinels were posted to give the alarm if a stranger drew near. The minister in disguise was introduced through the garden and the back yard. In some houses there were trap doors through which, in case of danger, he might descend. Where Nonconformists lived next door to each other, the walls were often broken open, and secret passages were made from dwelling to dwelling. No psalm was sung; and many contrivances were used to prevent the voice of the preacher, in his moments of fervor, from being heard beyond the walls. . . Dissenting ministers, however blameless in life, however eminent for learning and abilities, could not venture to walk the streets for fear of outrages, which were not only not repressed, but encouraged, by those whose duty it was to preserve the peace. Some divines of great fame were in prison. Others, who had, during a quarter of a century, borne up against oppression, now lost heart, and quitted the kingdom.—Macaulay's Hist. England.

feasts kept, and offerings made

4—7. (4) as . . written, acc. to the prescribed rules of observance[e] fr. the fifteenth to the twenty-second of Tisri; they dwelt in tents during the whole time. custom, R. V., "ordinance." as . . required, Heb. "the matter of the day in his day." Nothing omitted one day, or put off till to-morrow. (5) afterward . . offering,[f] etc., a resumption of the sacrificial system. "The exiles re-established permanently three things:—1. The daily sacrifice; 2. The celebration of the new moons and other regular feasts; and 3. The practice of allowing the people to bring offerings whenever they pleased, to be offered on the great altar by the priest or priests in attendance."—Pulp. Com. Ex. xxix. 38. (6) From . . day, commencing, and going through the sacred month in order. But . . laid, they did not wait for the building, bef. they beg. the worship; for God dwelleth not (exclusively) in temples made with a On the first was the holy convocation — Nu. xxix. 1; on the tenth, the Feast of Atonement — Nu. xxix. 7; on the fifteenth, the Feast of Tabernacles — Nu. xxix. 12.

b Ez. ii. 2.

c Ez. ii. 2.

d vs. 6.

A man is converted, and he comes into the church. He is fit to be in the church because he is so bad, and has found it out. For a man that is lame in the leg, and half blind, and deaf, and without the power of digestion—is not he just the man that ought to be in the hospital, if he knows what his condition is, and wants to get well?

"In thy silent wishing, thy voiceless unuttered prayer, let the desire be cherished not that afflictions may not visit thee; for well has it been said, such prayers never seem to have wings. I am willing to be purified through sorrow, and to accept it meekly as a blessing. I see that all the clouds are angels' faces, and their voices speak harmoniously of the everlasting chime."—Mrs. L. M. Child.

e Ex. xxiii 16.

f Num. xxviii. 3, 11, 19, 26; xxix. 2, 8, 13.

B. C. cir. 536.

hands. "Thus, we see, the full establishment of religious services precedes the building of the temple. A weighty truth is enshrined in this apparently incongruous fact. The worship itself is felt to be more important than the house in which it is to be celebrated." (7) unto . . Tyre, thus imitating Solomon.[a] according . . Persia, as Cyrus was not master of Phœnicia, the word must be taken in a general sense, i. e. the Jews felt obligated to rebuild the temple bec. the king had given them permission and a freewill offering, see vi. 3, 4.

[a] 1 Ki. v. 9, 10; 2 Ch. ii. 10-15.

"The company in which you will improve most will be least expensive to you." — Washington.

A significant event. — A hundred churches can be in course of erection in any of the chief cities of the globe now given up to the Christian profession, and the citizens would pay but little heed to the fact that so many pinnacles were rising to the clouds. We must recall the circumstances under which the altar was set up. Heathenism prevailed even in places once holy; the whole spirit and genius of the time was against the worship of the true and living God: when the smoke curled upward from the new altar it was like a signal of defiance to those who had given themselves up to worship the hosts of heaven, or the beasts of the earth, or images of their own fashioning. — Peop. Bib.

foundations of the temple are laid

8—11. (8) This verse shows how universal was the movement to rebuild the temple. from . . upward, this was David's rule.[b] set . . Lord, R. V., "have oversight of." (9) Jeshua,[c] etc., this Jeshua must not be confounded with Jeshua, the high priest, cf. ii. 40. The vs. presents many difficulties. Rawlinson suggests that the clause "the sons of Henadad, etc.," is "an unauthorized addition to the true text." Ryle in Cam. B. says: "It seems better to suppose that there are three families referred to," viz., Jeshua, Kadmiss, Henadad. The absence of Henadad's name from the list in chap. ii. 40 is strange. But we must account for it by supposing either that the Henadad family never left Palestine, or that they came to Jerusalem between the arrival of Zerubbabel and the beginning of the second year, or that they belonged to the class more numerous than scholars have hitherto taken account of, i. e. those who returned to Jerusalem from exile in other countries." Judah, or Hodaviah. (10) apparel, dressed in their official robes.[d] after . . Israel,[e] taking David's rule for the service, as Sol.'s for the building. (11) sang . . course, an antistrophical chant. One portion of the singers rendered one part, and then the rest answered.

[b] 1 Ch. xxiii. 24.

[c] Ez. ii. 40.

[d] Ez. ii. 69.

[e] 1 Ch. vi. 31; xvi. 4; xxv. 1.

There is no wall that can contain the church of God on earth, and there is no sect-line that can reach around it. The Lord's garment is large enough to cover all sects, and to leave room for nations to camp under it besides.

The rebuilding of the temple. — I. What there was at that time to call forth such strong and widely different emotions. This work was — 1. To some, an occasion of exalted joy; 2. To others, an occasion of the deepest sorrow. That this subject is not uninteresting to us, will appear whilst I show — II. How far similar emotions become us at this day. 1. Certainly there is at this time great occasion for joy; 2. Yet there is among us abundant occasion for grief also. See, then — (1) What, above all things, should interest our souls; (2) What use we should make of our knowledge and experience.— Simeon.

"Association is the delight of the heart not less than of poetry. Alison observes that an autumn sunset, with its crimson clouds, glimmering trunks of trees, and wavering tints upon the grass, seems scarcely capable of embellishment. But if in this calm and beautiful glow the chime of a distant bell steal over the fields, the bosom heaves with the sensation that Dante so tenderly describes." — Willmott.

Brevity of life. — Human life is short; God's work is complex and prolonged, and steadily flowing on. Hence we are continually beginning, and passing away, and leaving what we begin for others to finish. Every generation is beginning, and every generation is passing away without having finished what it has begun. But that which we begin is not going to stop because we cease to go forward with it. One worker dies; the loom goes on, and another worker takes up the thread that he has laid down. We pass away, and another man, somewhere, is prepared to step into our place. We commence a work, and perform a part of it; when we are gone, others perform another part; when they are gone, still others perform another part; and so that which we undertake is by others carried along to its bright consummation. — H. W. Beecher.

the joy and mourning of the people

12—13. (12) ancient, aged. that . . house, wh. had been destroyed between 49 and 59 yrs. before. The most approved dates are, temple destroyed 587 B. C., new foundations laid 536 B. C. wept, tears caused by contrast betw. (1) prosperous circumstances in wh. foundats. of first temple were laid, and present reduced state of country; (2) inferior size and cost of stones;[f] (3) smaller extent of foundation, etc.;[g] (4) the comparative smallness of present means; (5) and esp. bec. of absence of ark, Shekinah, etc. many . . joy, these prob. the younger, comforted by Haggai.[h] (13) So . . people, the Eastern's expressions of emotion are always loud and vehement.

[f] 1 Ki. vii. 9, 10.

[g] Hag. ii. 9.

[h] Hag ii. 9.

The sad memories of the aged and the joyousness of the young. — I. Why did the aged weep? 1. In part, because of the poor preparations made for building this house as compared with those for building the first house; 2. Because of the absence of many things that were the glory of the temple at the first. II. Why do the young rejoice? 1. It was the gladness of patriotism: the temple was the centre of the nation; the manifester of the nation's growth, the fountain of law, and the instrument of progress; 2. It was the gladness of piety; to such it was a proof of the return of the Divine favor.

The second temple. — The first temple had been the work of a king; the second is to be the work of a people. The nation had been dazzled by the splendor of Solomon's court, and had basked in its rays so that the after-glow of them lingered in the memories of ages even down to the time of our Lord. But there was a healthier spirit in the humbler work of the returned exiles, when, forced to dispense with the king they would gladly have accepted, they undertook the task of building the new temple themselves. — Exp. B.

B. C. 536.

"Here is an apt emblem of everything, however joyous, which is done in the ch. militant on earth. her march of victory is through a vale of tears; her restorations are memorials of sins wh. caused the destruction of that which had been dissolved." — Bp. Wordsworth.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

the proffered help of the adversaries

1—3. (1) adversaries, Samaritans.[a] (2) as ye do, this was not true, cf. 2 Ki. xvii. 33. since . . Assur, R. V. "Assyria," i. e. his was the last colonization, 680–668 B. C. Esar-haddon was the son of Sennacherib.[b] (3) Ye . . God,[c] their offer rejected, as they did not profess the true faith, nor adhere to the pure and holy worship.[d] The real temper of the Samaritans is soon seen. our God, as if he were the Jews' exclusive property. as king Cyrus, etc., this was the technical ground upon wh. the Jews based their refusal. The "decree" did not mention the Samaritans.

Satan's disguises.— It was but a shallow device, and showed a very inadequate conception of devilish art, to represent Satan a hideous and repulsive figure, with frightful marks to be recognized by, with a beastly foot to certify his track, and all concentrated malignities on his distorted features. Why, men would run from such ugliness by instinct; and if this were the type of evil, it could never come near enough to tempt us. Our virtue would be safe against a seducer that inspired nothing but disgust. In the real Satan we must look for a shrewder cunning, a more subtle diplomacy, a more politic disguise. Whatever he may have been to the superstitious fears of ruder ages, to try the temper of the nineteenth century he takes on the address of a courtier, the self-possession of a man of the world, the royal dignity of a prince, the beauty of a seraph, and the manners of a gentleman. If you meet him now — and meet him you certainly will to-morrow and to-day — he will be transformed into an angel of light.— F. D. Huntington.

a vs. 10, see on 2 Ki. xvii. 24.

b 2 Ki. xix. 37; 2 Chr. xxiii. 11.

c Ne. ii. 20.

d 2 Ki. xvii. 3, 24–34.

"Malice scorned, puts out itself; but, argued, gives a kind of credit to a false accusation."—Massinger.

"Where a foundation has been laid, anybody can build, but only God, can build on nothing." —A. J. Gordon.

B. C. 529.

their false accusations

4—6. (4) Then . . building, this proves that Zerubbabel was right in rejecting their help. Their conduct shows that their offer of aid was a pretence; in every possible way the Samaritans hindered the Jews. troubled, R. V., margin "terrified." (5) counsellors, intriguing men to spread evil reports. Prob. bribed others at the Persian court. all . . Persia,[e] till 7 yrs. aft. return of Jews. Cyrus did not comprehend the polit. and relig. spirit of the Jews, and their refusal of the seemingly friendly offers of the Samaritans gave credence to the reports that the Jews were cherishing some polit. designs against the Persian government. even . . Persia,[f] i. e. during the time of Smerdis, succ. of Cambyses, to time of Darius Hystaspes, some seven or eight years more. (6) Ahasuerus, prob. Xerxes.

The crafty architect. — It is recorded of an architect of the name of Cnidius, that having built a watch-tower for the king of Egypt, to warn mariners from certain dangerous rocks, he caused his own name to be engraved on a certain stone in the wall, and then having covered it with plaster, he inscribed on the outside, in golden letters, the name of the king, as though the thing was done for his glory. He was cunning enough to know that the waves would ere long wash away the coat of plastering, and that then his own name would appear, and his memory be handed down to successive generations. How many there are who, while affecting to seek only the glory of God and His church, are really seeking whatever is calculated to gratify self-love. Could the outer coat, as it were, of their pretences be removed, we should see them, as they really are, desirous not of God's glory but of their own.— Illus. of Truth.

e Cyrus was engaged in war with the Lydians and Scythians at the time. He died B. C. 529. He left the gov., while at his wars, in the hands of his wicked son, Cambyses, who was hostile to the Jews. See Jos. Ant. xi. 2, 1.

f Darius, son of Hystaspes: raised to throne B. C. 522, on death of pseudo-Smerdis.

B. C. 522.

their letters to Artaxerxes

7—10. (7) Artaxerxes, here arta = great (as in Arta-banes, etc.). Herodotus[a] renders the word great warrior. Xerxes[b] seems to be an appellative = warlike. companions, societies. Bislam, etc., were prob. deputy-governors. Syrian, Aramæan, called Chaldee sometimes in our version. (8) chancellor, lit. master of judgment. scribe, secretary, appointed by the king to act as a check upon the provincial governor. (9) Then wrote, etc., to vi. 18 this bk. is now in Chaldee.[c] Dinaites,[d] prob. fr. city of Media. Apharsathchites, a tribe of Medo-Persia. Tarpelites, per. fr. E. of Elymais. Apharsites, Persian origin. Archevites,[e] fr. Babylouia. Susanchites, fr. Susa. Dehavites, Dâi.[f] Elamites, fr. Elymais. (10) Asnapper, R. V., "Osnapper." "Scholars now begin to accept the ingenious and most probable suggestion that 'Osnapper' is the Aramaic attempt to reproduce the name of Assur-bani-pal, the great Assyrian king. He was the only Assyrian king who captured Susa and could carry off 'Susanchites;' no king so fully deserved the titles of 'great and noble.'"—Cam. B. Prob. one of the officers of Esarhaddon,[g] kg. of Assyria. rest . . river, R. V. "nd in the rest of the country beyond the river." "As Romans in North Italy, writing to Rome, would have spoken of themselves as '*Trans*padani,' so Persian subjects, writing to Susa from the west of the Jordan, speak of their country as 'across the Jordan.'" and at such a time, R. V., "and so forth," i. e. et caetera.

World's antagonism to the church. — The ship of the church may be tossed, but it cannot sink, for Christ is in it, and will awake time enough to prevent its wreck. There is, therefore, no cause for us, when the storm beateth hardest upon it, to disturb Him, as once the disciples, did with the shrieks and outcries of our unbelief. as if all were lost. Our faith is more in danger of sinking at such a time than the cause and church of Christ are. They are both by the promise set out of the reach of men and devils. The gospel is an "everlasting gospel." "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but not one iota of this shall perish." "The Word of the Lord endureth for ever," and shall be alive to walk over all its enemies' graves, yea to see the funeral of the whole world. — W. Gurnall.

the purport of the letter

11—13. (11) Thy . . river, i. e. W. of the Euphrates. (12) building . . city, which was not true. They were building the temple simply. set up, R. V., "finished." joined, R. V., "repaired." (13) then . . custom, they turn prophets as well as false witnesses. "The three terms used by the Samaritans really represent, respectively, 'tribute,' or the money payment required from each province; 'provision,' or the payment in kind equally required (Herod., i. 192; iii. 91), and 'toll,' or contributions from those who made use of the Persian highways." — Pul. Com. thou . . kings,[h] R. V., "and in the end it will endamage the kings."

Unscrupulous slander. — This is very manifest in the gross exaggerations of this letter. Notice two or three of them. "Jerusalem . . . the rebellious and the bad city." A most unjust description of its character. "If this city be builded and the walls set up, they will not pay toll," etc. (vs. 13). An unwarranted and slanderous assertion, for these Jews had never given any cause why their loyalty to the Persian monarchs should be suspected. "If this city be builded, and the walls thereof set up, by this means thou shalt have no portion on this side the river." An extremely absurd exaggeration. One would suppose that the authors of it must have known it to be a gross misrepresentation. The chief assertions of the letter were unscrupulous and base calumnies. The enemies of the church of God have never been particular as to the weapons they should use against it. Falsehood and cruelty, fines and imprisonment, bonds and banishment, fire and sword, have all been employed against it. — Hom. Com.

they request the search of the records

14—16. (14) we . . palace, R. V., "we eat the salt of the palace." dishonour, i. e. nakedness or damage. They could not hold their peace and see the king stript of his rightful due. (15) so . . find, etc., not a word do they say of the more recent decree of Cyrus that might also be found there. A part of the truth is sometimes the worst lie. destroyed, R. V., "laid waste." (16) we certify, etc., this certainly shows that the position of Jerusalem was regarded as strong and influential. this side the river, R. V., "Beyond the river." i. e. Persia would lose its hold upon the country W. of the Euphrates: "Jordan" is suggested by Rawlinson.

---

[a] Ez. vi. 98.

[b] "The Ahasuerus of Book of Esther is Xerxes, son of Darius."—Bp. Wordsworth.

[c] Prob, Ezra copied it from some collection of Chaldee records.

[d] 2 Ki. xvii. 30, 31.

[e] Ge. x. 10.

[f] See Herodotus i. 125.

[g] 2 Ki. xix. 37.

"In consequence of the difficulties and obstacles thus interposed, for a period of 20 yrs., the progress of the work was very slow."—Port. Com.

[h] So the Jews pretended zeal for the imperial power of Rome, when they would destroy the Lord of the temple. — Lu. xxiii. 2; Jo. xix. 12.

"Not alone to know, but to act according to thy knowledge, is thy destination, proclaims the voice of my inmost soul. Fichte.

[i] 2 Ch. xiii. 5. They regarded themselves bound to him, as solemn-

Christian watchfulness. —

Christian! seek not yet repose,
Cast thy dreams of ease away;
Thou art in the midst of foes;
Watch and pray.

Principalities and powers,
Mustering their unseen array,
Wait for thy unguarded hours;
Watch and pray.

Hear the victors who o'ercame;
Still they mark each warrior's way;
All with one sweet voice exclaim,
Watch and pray.

Hear, above all, hear thy Lord,
Him thou lovest to obey;
Hide within thy heart His word;
Watch and pray.

B. C. 522.

ly as by rite of hospitality. "Eating a prince's salt" is an Oriental phrase, equivalent to "receiving maintenance fr. him."

"Malice sucks up the greatest part of her own venom, and poisons herself.—Montaigne.

17—22. (17) and at such a time, R. V., "and so forth." (18) hath . . me, its sense has been explained. (19) commanded, R. V., "decreed" a more authoritative word. search . . found, etc., their charge being so far confirmed, it is admitted in other respects. "The pseudo-Smerdis, who was a fanatical adherent of Magism, which disallowed temples altogether (Herod., i. 130), and who had already destroyed the temples of Ormuzd in Persia ('Behistun Ins.'), was naturally willing enough to do as the Samaritans desired, and stop the restoration of the Jewish temple."—Pul. Com. (20) mighty kings,[a] etc., as Solomon, Uzziah, Josiah, over all countries, R. V., "all the country." (21) give . . until, etc., the building to be stayed until a special permission were granted. (22) Take . . this, etc., they are called on, in the king's name, to see to this.

the decree of Artaxerxes

[a] 1 Ki. iv. 21; Ps. lxxii. 8; Gen. xv. 18; Jos. i. 4.

"Falsehood, is never so successful as when she baits her hook with truth; no watches so effectually deceive the wearers as those that are sometimes right."—Colton.

Force of heredity. — The child generally inherits the natural constitution, the mental peculiarities, and sometimes even the moral character of his parent. His secular condition, too, rich or poor, is frequently determined by his parents. Some inherit a princely fortune, and some a crushing penury, from their ancestors. And their social status, too, is often ruled by the position and conduct of those of whom they were born. Children participate in the shame or the glory connected with the memory of their parents. The brilliant reflection of an illustrious sire seems to lead his offspring to social honor, and to shed a radiance on his name. On the other hand, the infamy which parents by theft, treason, or murder, have gained for themselves, transmits its odious influence down to their children, depreciating their own personal worth, and degrading them in the estimation of their contemporaries. — David Thomas.

23, 24. (23) cease . . power, most, prob. a display of armed force. There is so much confusion regarding the names of the Persian kings used in this chapter that this whole section vss. 6–23 may refer to the time of Nehemiah, nearly a century later. Scholars are so divided that each student must choose for himself. (24) Then . . Jerusalem, no doubt they continued to pray and worship. ceased . . Persia, i. e. for ab. 8 years after the death of Cyrus, see vs. 5.[b]

the work of building ceases

[b] Darius asc. throne of Persia B. C. 522.

Hindrances to religious enterprises. — I. We are here reminded of some of the hindrances that arise from sectarian jealousies, and also from sectarian rivalries. II. We are also reminded of the undue timidity of some orders in holy causes. Learn — (1) To take heed how we hinder the work of religion; (2) How we suffer ourselves to be intimidated.

Victory not defeat. — If ever failure seemed to rest on a noble life, it was when the Son of Man, deserted by His friends, heard the cry which proclaimed that the Pharisees had successfully drawn the net round their Divine Victim. Yet from that very hour of defeat and death there went forth the world's life — from that very moment of apparent failure there proceeded forth into the ages the spirit of the conquering Cross. Surely if the Cross says anything, it says that apparent defeat is real victory, and that there is a heaven for those who have nobly and truly failed on earth. — F. W. Robertson.

The Rev. James Owen of Shrewsbury, being asked, when on his deathbed, whether he would have some of his friends sent for to keep him company, replied, "My fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ; and he that is not satisfied with that company doth not deserve it."

B. C. 520.

Haggai and Zechariah incite the people to renew their work

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1, 2. (1) Haggai[a] . . Zechariah,[b] Haggai boldly reproves the Jews for the neglect and delay, and encourages them to renew zealously the work of the temple. He prophesied only from Sept. 520 B. C. to Dec. of the same year, but his words produced wonderful results. Zechariah was the grandson of Iddo. He was a very young man whose soul was fired by the earnestness of Haggai. See intros. to their bks. even . . them, R. V., margin, "which was upon them," i. e. God's spirit was upon the prophets or upon the people. (2) prophets . . them, and their words were a great help.

The revival of the work. — It was conducted under the guidance of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah. I. Consider the arguments they employed. 1. They drew attention to the contrast between their own dwellings and the house of God; 2. They were reminded of the mind of God as marked by the dearth that had been sent; 3. They gave the promise of the greater glory of the second temple. II. Consider the effects of the arguments they used. 1. The revived religious faith of the nation; 2. The progress and completion of the work.

Influence of worldliness. — Nearly all can recall that favorite fiction of their childhood — the voyage of Sinbad the Sailor into the Indian Sea. They will remember that magnetic rock that rose from the surface of the placid waters. Silently Sinbad's vessel was attracted towards it; silently the bolts were drawn out of the ship's side, one by one, through the subtle attraction of that magnetic rock. And when the fated vessel drew so near that every bolt and clamp were unloosed, the whole structure of bulwark, masts, and spars tumbled into ruin on the sea, and the sleeping sailors awoke to their drowning agonies. So stands the magnetic rock of worldliness athwart the Christian's path. Its attraction is subtle, silent, slow; but fearfully powerful on every soul that floats within its range. Under its enchanting spell, bolt after bolt of good resolution, clamp after clamp of Christian obligation, are steadily drawn out. What matters it how long, or how fair has been the man's profession of religion, or how flauntingly the flag of his orthodoxy floats from the mast head? Let sudden temptation smite the unbolted professor, and in an hour he is a wreck. He cannot hold together in a tempest of trial, he cannot go out on any cruise of Christian service, because he is no longer held together by a Divine principle within. It has been silently drawn out of him by that mighty lodestone of attraction — a sinful, godless, self-pampering, Christ-rejecting world. — T. L. Cuyler.

a Hag. i. 1.

b Zech. i. 1.

You never can tell, by looking at birds' tail feathers, which is going to fly highest; and you cannot tell by looking at churches, and their ordinance and their outside apparatus which is going to take the lead. I tell you, that Church which has, first the most power with God, and then, next, the most sympathetic power with men, is the truest Church.

Tatnai, etc., cannot hinder the Jews

3—5. (3) Tatnai,[c] gov. of Syria. R. V., "Tattenai." The superior officer to whom Zerubbabel would have to render account for any treachery. Shethar-boznai, prob. secretary to Tattenai. commanded you, R. V., "gave you a decree." (4) said we, R. V., margin, "spake they," i. e. Tattenai and his friends. (5) eye . . Jews,[d] He guided them by His eye. Looked favorably. could not . . cease, R. V., "and they did not make them cease." till . . matter, they not only continued the work, but also provided for future interruptions and prepared their defence.

Duty of the church. — If the church will go forth to win new victories, she needs only to take fearlessly up the supremacy with which her God has dowered her, namely, the reconciling life of her indwelling Lord. Shutting up all internal questions that make her militant against herself, she is to move on in her own absolute, sublime majesty, militant only against every form of sin, to enthrone the kingdom of God. She must cease to beg favors of worldly policy. She must stop her infamous coquetry with Mammon. She must not be bowing on Sunday to sectarian prejudice, nor on week-days to social respectability, nor ever whisper guilty flatteries to popular sins, nor wait till great public vices are manifestly dying out of themselves, and feeble with approaching dissolution, before she dares strike at them. The staunch, uncompromising sincerity of old Puritans and confessors must be in her muscles. An awful zeal must gird up her loins. Purity, freedom, equity, are to be more to her than costly churches; the prayers of saintly men, and women and children too, her patronage; and her daily speech the benediction of charity." — F. D. Huntington.

c Ez. vi. 6.

d Ez. vii. 6, 28; Ps. xxxiii. 18.

"It is the pruned church, like the pruned vine, that bears the most precious clusters: it is the crushed soul, like the crushed aromatic plant, that is most fragrant." — James.

their letter to Darius against the Jews

6—8. (6) Shethar-boznai, shining star. Apharsachites, perhaps a Chaldæan word equiv. to Persians, the body-guard of the governor. (8) house

"Bad company is like a nail driven into a post, which, after the first and second blows, may be drawn out with little difficulty; but being once driven up to the head the pincers cannot take hold to draw it out, but which can only be done by the destruction of the wood." — St. Augustine.

. . God, "his acknowledgment of the God of the Jews as 'the great God' must be held to indicate the general belief of the Persians on the subject." great stones, lit. "stones of rolling."[a] So large that they had to be transported on rollers. timber . . walls, "the inlaying of the walls with woodwork artistically finished."

Prosperity. — Art, science, commerce, civilization, religion, are aided by prosperity. The refinements of life are foes of the lower passions. The devil should not have the best music, nor the best pictures, nor the highest knowledge. Christians! Claim the world for God. It is His; He made it, He upholds it, He sustains it, He redeemed it, He is restoring it. And because it is His it is yours. "Ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." "All things are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." — Hom. Com.

B. C. 520.

a An allu. prob. to the method of removing stones of very large size.

"Ceremonies are different in every country; but true politeness is everywhere the same."— Goldsmith.

9—12. (9) asked, etc., they enter into the minutest details. (11) God . . earth, Jehovah no local deity. The one God over all. build, rebuild. great . . builded,[b] Solomon. (12) after . . wrath,[c] R. V., margin, "because that," etc., a causal conjunction. Their sin and not the power of the enemy had brought about their ruin. Nebuchadnezzar, was God's instrument of vengeance. In working out his own ends he fulfilled the designs and purposes of God, 2 Ki. xxiv. 2; xxv. 8, 9, 11.

Prudence. — As the hermits were communing together, there arose a question as to which of all the virtues was most necessary to perfection. One said chastity; another, humility; a third, justice. St. Anthony remained silent till all had given their opinion, and then he spoke, "Ye have all said well, but none of you have said aright. The virtue most necessary to perfection is prudence; for the most virtuous actions of men, unless governed and directed by prudence, are neither pleasing to God, nor serviceable to others, nor profitable to ourselves." — Dict. of Illus.

b 1 Ki. vi. 1.

c 2 Chr. xxxvi. 16, 17.

The world has been deluged with books on the evidences of Christianity; what the world needs is not books on these evidences but men who are proofs of them. — T. W. Jenkyn.

13—17. (13) Cyrus . . Babylon, C. dwelt in B. in that year.[d] (14, 15) and the vessels, etc., see i. 7, 8. (16) Sheshbazzar,[e] the Chaldæan name of "the prince of Judah," or Zerubbabel. and . . finished, might have been, perh., but for the hindrances. The time described covered about 16 yrs., 536 to 520 B. C. (17) search . . treasure house, in place of the treasures there would be the decree of Cyrus explaining the absence of the golden vessels. decree . . Cyrus, they refer the king to an older decree than the one their enemy had quoted, viz., "to the edict of Cyrus, and describe their subsequent conduct as a direct act of obedience to that edict. Thus they plead their cause as loyal subjects of the Persian empire."

d Xenophon Cyrop. vii. 7. Artaxerxes also is called king of B., Neh. xiii. 6, and king of Assyria, Ezra vi. 22.

e Ez. i. 8.

The house of the rolls. — An idea of the form of this Babylonian register-house, as well as the manner of preserving public records within its repositories, can be obtained from the recent discoveries at Nineveh. Two small chambers were discovered in the palace of Konyunjik, which, from the fragments found in them, Mr. Layard considers as "a house of rolls." After reminding his readers that the historical records and public documents of the Assyrians were kept on tablets and cylinders of baked clay, many specimens of which have been brought to this country, he goes on to say, "The chambers I am describing appear to have been a depository in the palace of Nineveh for such documents. To the height of a foot or more from the floor they were entirely filled with them; some entire, but the greater part broken into many fragments, probably by the falling in of the upper part of the building. They were of different sizes; the largest tablets were flat, and measured about 9 in. by 6½ in.; the smaller were slightly convex, and some were not more than an inch long, with but one or two lines of writing. The cuneiform characters on most of them were singularly sharp and well defined, but so minute in some instances as to be almost illegible without a magnifying glass. These documents appear to be of various kinds. The documents that have thus been discovered 'in the house of the rolls' at Nineveh probably exceed all that have yet been afforded by the monuments of Egypt, and when the innumerable fragments are put together and transcribed, the publication of these records will be of the greatest importance to the history of the ancient world."

"It is a joy to me to know that the Christians within the communion of this church are not all the Christians to be found in the congregation. We are richer than we appear to be. Here are growing pear trees, apple trees, cherry trees and shrubs, and blossoming vines, and flowers of every hue and odor; but I am glad that some seeds have been blown over the wall, and that fruit trees and flowers most pleasant to the eye are springing up there also."— Beecher.

B. C. 519.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

Darius finds and enforces the decree of Cyrus

1—5. (1) Darius, i. e. D. Hystaspes.[a] house . . rolls, or books. R. V., "house of the archives." laid up, lit. "made to descend."[b] (2) Achmetha, Ecbatana. Summer residence of the Persian kings. (4) row . . timber, better "one row of timber." An obscure passage — "(1) Some explain by three storeys of stones surmounted by one of wood, the elevation of the temple. (2) Others by 'three layers of stone followed by one of wood,' the material of the walls. (3) Others by 'three courses of stone backed by a wainscot of wood,' the thickness of the walls. (4) But in all probability the verse should be explained by reference to 1 Kings vi. 36, where 'three rows of hewn stone and a row of cedar beams' are the construction of the walls of the inner court." — Cam. B. let . . house, and the charges were to be defrayed out of the royal exchequer. (5) let . . vessels, as already stated (i. 7, 8; v. 14). Thus ends the decree of Cyrus.

The value of books. — In books lies the soul of the whole past time; the articulate audible voice of the past, when the body and material substance of it has altogether vanished like a dream. Mighty fleets and armies, harbors and arsenals, vast cities, high domed, many engined, — they are precious, great: but what do they become? Agamemnon, the many Agamemnons, Pericleses, and their Greece; all is gone now to some ruined fragments, dumb, mournful wrecks and blocks: but the books of Greece! There Greece, to every thinker, still very literally lives; can be called up again into life. No magic Rune is stranger than a book. All that mankind has done, thought, gained, or been: it is lying as in magic preservation in the pages of books. They are the chosen possession of men. — Thomas Carlyle.

[a] Great and interesting light has been thrown on the history of this monarch and the transactions of his reign, by the decipherment of the Cuneatic Inscriptions on the rocks of Behistûn.

[b] These treasure chambers were underground. Hence many of the anc. cylinders have been found under the ruins by Layard, etc.

Tattenai is exhorted by the king to aid the work

6—10. (6) Now, here begins the order of Darius to Tattenai. be . . thence, from your suspicions and hindrances. (7) Let . . alone, save in the way of helping. let . . Jews, Zerubbabel. (8) Moreover, in addition to this decree of Cyrus, or in enforcement of its spirit. forthwith . . given, R. V., "expenses be given with all diligence." that . . hindered, better, "which is not to be neglected." (9) let . . fail, without the omission of a day, without abatement of a single jot. (10) sacrifices of sweet savours, R. V., "sacrifices of sweet savour," one word in the Heb. recalling the "burnt offering . . . . of a sweet savour unto the Lord," Ex. xix. 18. pray . . life,[c] these heathen men had some belief in Jehovah, and in the power of prayer.[d]

Sermon on the king's accession. — We propose to consider the words before us — I. As the desire of a heathen prince. 1. It was a just and reasonable; 2. It was a wise and political desire. II. As the duty of a Christian people — 1. It is your duty, the discharge of which is to your interest; 2. To the performance of which we have an especial call; 3. To obey which we are under a special obligation. — Simeon.

Efficacy of faithful prayer. — A man who lives habitually near to God is like a great cloud forever dropping with fertilizing showers. This is the man who can say, "The earth is dissolved; I bear up the pillars thereof." France had never seen so bloody a revolution had there been men of prayer to preserve her. England, amidst the commotions which make her rock to and fro, is held fast because prayer is put up incessantly by the faithful. The flag of old England is nailed to her mast, not by the hands of her sailors, but by the prayers of the people of God. These, as they intercede day and night, and as they go about their spiritual ministry, these are they for whom God spareth nations, for whom He permitteth the earth still to exist; and when their time is over, and they are taken away, the salt being taken from the earth, then shall the elements dissolve with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burnt up; but not until He hath caught away the saints with Christ into the air, shall this world pass away. — Spurgeon.

[c] 1 Ti. ii. 1, 2.

[d] "Here was a foreshadowing of the time when all nations would be admitted to worship the one true God." Is. ii. 2; Mal. i. 11.

"As a countenance is made beautiful by the soul's shining through it, so the world is beautified by the shining through it of God." — Jacobi.

the penalty of disobedience to this decree

11—15. (11) that . . word, etc., a warning to the meddling Samaritans. timber . . house, R. V., "let a beam be pulled out." hanged,[e] lifted up, i. e. crucified. (12) God . . there,[f] Darius regarded Jehovah as a local deity. to alter . . destroy, R. V., "to alter the same (i. e. this decree), to destroy." (13) so . . speedily, suggestive of the power of the despotic monarchs of the time. (14) through the prophesying, etc., i. e. the encouragement and inspiration aroused by the prophets helped along the [e] A com. punishment among the Persians. Est. ii. 23; vii. 9; ix. 13; Herodotus iii. 125; iv, 43; vii. 194.

[f] "Darius, the K., saith, if thou success of the work. finished, etc., decree of Darius, received in 4th yr. of his reign, B. C. 518.[a] Artaxerxes, i. e. Longimanus, who came to the throne in B. C. 464. An anticipation by the compiler, of later history. (15) finished, etc., "from Zerubbabel's laying of the foundation (Ezra iii. 10), the time that had elapsed was twenty-one years. From the recommencement under the inspiriting influence of the two prophets, the time was only four years, five months, and ten days."

Our share in the spiritual temple. — When Cyrus took one of his guests around his garden, the guest admired it greatly, and said he had much pleasure in it. "Ah," said Cyrus, "but you have not so much pleasure in this garden as I have, for I have planted every tree in it myself." One reason why Christ has so much pleasure in His church is because He did so much for it; and one reason why some saints will have a greater fulness of heaven than others to rejoice in will be because they did more for heaven than others. By God's grace they were enabled to bring more souls there; and as they look upon the church they may, without self-reliance, and ascribing it all to grace, remember what they were enabled to do in its building up. — Spurgeon.

B. C. 516.

hidest this decree, and dost not publish it to the people, may Auramazda destroy thee, and thy house perish." — From a cuneiform inscrip. set up by Darius at Behistûn a Zech. vii. 5. See Prideaux, i. 257.

b

the joyful dedication of the temple

16—18. (16) rest . . captivity, sons of the transportation. kept . . joy, "the Lord himself, the Messenger of the covenant, so long sought by His people, suddenly came to this temple (Mal. iii. 1) — came to it, and frequented it, and taught in it, and gave it a dignity and a majesty far beyond the first temple." (17) twelve he-goats, etc., "the sin offering 'of twelve he-goats according to the number of the tribes of Israel,' was an incident full of deep religious pathos. The remnant who had returned make solemn confession of sin in the name of the whole scattered and dispersed race. They acknowledge the essential unity of Israel's tribes alike in the consequences of sin, in the possibilities of restoration, and in the renewed consecration to God's service." — Cam. B. according . . Israel, Israel and Judah united in the intention of this second temple. (18) divisions, 1 Chr. xxiv. 1. courses, 1 Chr. xxiii. 3. service of God, here refers to the worship, i. e. the liturgy. as . . Moses,[c] Num. iii. 6, viii. 9, 10.

Religious rejoicing. — The priests of old were not to sully themselves with sorrow when they performed their functions, and saints who are of a higher priesthood should show forth delight in their approaches to their God. Angels sing, and why not God's other servants, who are a little lower, and yet far higher? David danced before the ark, which was but a symbol of Divinity; what ails us that our heart so seldom dances before the Lord Himself? The old creation has its sunshine and flowers; its lowing herds and bleating flocks; its heaven-mounting larks and warbling nightingales; its rivers laughing, and its seas clapping hands; is the new creation of grace to render less happy worship to God, our exceeding joy? Nay, rather let us come into His presence with thanksgiving, and show ourselves glad in Him with psalms. Most of the English versions alter the old hundredth Psalm into, "Him serve with fear;" but for my part, by God's grace I mean to sing it as it used to be and still is sung in Scotland —

> "All people that on earth do dwell, > Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice;
> Him serve with MIRTH, His praise forth tell, > Come ye before Him and rejoice."—C. H. Spurgeon.

b Prob. they sang Pss. cxlvi., cxlvii., cxlviii., called in the LXX. Ps. of Hag. and Zech.

c Although David arranged the priests and Levites in courses acc. to their fams., it was Moses who assigned to them their rights, privileges, stations, and duties.

"Nations and men are only the best when they are the gladdest, and deserve heaven when they enjoy it." — Richter.

the Passover is observed

19—22. And . . month,[d] i. e. the month after the temp. was finished. (20) purified, 2 Chr. xxx. 15. Cf. also 2 Chr. xxix. 34. (21) all . . themselves,[e] by undergoing the indispensable rite of circumcision. Prob. those who separated themselves fr. the moral and ceremonial pollution of idolatry at this time, were not the heathen, but the descendants of those Jews who had remained in Palestine during the exile. (22) for . . joyful, the cause of their prosperity rightly traced. turned . . them,[f] "after all the hard sufferings of the exile, and after all the severe trials which had come upon them since the time of Cyrus, the Lord had now, by the re-estab. of the temple, exactly seventy years after its destruction, caused a real and great change of affairs to take place." Darius is called the king of Assyria, bec. the Persian kings "took the same relative position over against the children of God as the Assyrian and Chaldean kings" by reason of this succession to the great Assyrian empire.

d Ex. xii. 6.

e Ez. ix. 11.

f Pr. xxi. 1.

There is the same difference between the church and religion that there is between the hand and the soul. The hand is important, and I do not propose to cut it off; but if it is a choice between the hand and the soul, I know which I should choose. Now, churches are instruments which God employs in carrying religion forward. But when a comparison is made between institutions and the things which they serve, there is no question which is superior.

B. C. 457.

A true church. — What magnificent churches we have for the wealthy. They occupy extensive corner plots; they are built of granite or fine stone, painted with costly and exquisite taste; they are upholstered with the softest and sleepiest of cushions, and when they are finished, these words are cut on the portal; "The poor have the Gospel preached to them." I often think of the wag who saw such an inscription over such a door, and who with a piece of chalk wrote underneath, "Yes, but not here." Now, I do not believe that this is exactly the form of Christianity which the Master would approve of if He were to come into this city. Not that I doubt that rich men need preaching. I think that Christ, instead of occupying this splendid pulpit, would stand out yonder on the steps, and get the crowd about Him — the rich and the poor in the same audience. Now I am told that rich men like to be exclusive. They have elegant houses, and they want to worship God elegantly. I don't believe it. Wealth is sometimes purse-proud and conceited; but the great majority of rich men in this city would be glad to see sitting by his side the clerk on a small salary, and the carpenter and the mason. Given good behavior and cleanliness, it is a good thing to have a silk gown in one pew and a calico one in another. — Hepworth.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

Ezra goes up to Jerusalem

Betw. this chap. and the last is a period of 58 yrs., during wh. reigned Xerxes (who suc. Darius), fr. B.C. 486–465., X was suc by Artaxerxes Longimanus.

In this interval the Bk. of Esther falls.

1—6. (1–5) Ezra (helper), see intro. son of Seraiah,[a] "son" is here used freely. Ezra was prob. the great-grandson of Seraiah. (6) went . . Babylon, authorized by the king.[b] He was the civil ruler of the province. and . . scribe, quick in understanding, and bold in expressing, the meaning of the law. which . . given, the law was of Divine origin and authority. and . . request, his zeal in wishing to go, and the kindness of the king, to be both noted. according . . him, i. e. by reason of God's special favor to him.

The setting out of Ezra. — We are once more reminded — I. Of the unchangeableness of God's purposes of mercy. II. Of the ease with which great obstacles are overcome, when God arises in the greatness of His strength. III. That God proceeds on the principle of vindicating His own name, and is not affected alone by the characters of men. IV. Of our journey home to the heavenly Jerusalem, and our safety on the march.

The power of individuals. — The greatest works that have been done, have been done by the ones. The hundreds do not often do much, the companies never do; it is the units, just the single individuals that, after all, are the power and the might. Take any church — there are multitudes in it; but it is some two or three that do the work. Look on the Reformation! — there might be many reformers, but there was but one Luther: there might be many teachers, but there was but one Calvin. Look ye upon the preachers of the last age, the mighty preachers who stirred up the churches — there were many coadjutors with them; but, after all, it was not Whitefield's friends, nor Wesley's friends, but the men themselves, that did it. Individual effort is, after all, the grand thing. A man alone can do more than a man with fifty men at his heels to fetter him. Separate men — Davids with their slings and stones — have done more than armies could accomplish. — Spurgeon.

[a] Killed at Biblah, 130 yrs. bef. 2 Ki. xxv. 18–21.

[b] vss. 21–26.

"My boast is not that I deduce my birth
From loins enthroned, and rulers of the earth;
But higher far my proud pretensions rise —
The son of parents passed into the skies." —Cowper.

his arrival at Jerusalem

7—10. (7) went up, etc., see ch. viii. Nethinims, R, V., "Nethinim." seventh year . . king, i. e. the first day of the year 458 B. C. (8) fifth month, the month Ab.[c] It was the end of July. (9) began . . up, etc., hence a journey of 4 mos. Caravans travel slowly, esp. such as this, with poor people, women, and children, etc. to seek the law, i. e. to know it thoroughly. (10) For Ezra, etc., this shows us the reason of his request. statutes and judgments, "'statutes' are the appointed rules or regulations of conduct or ceremony, 'judgments' are the duties and rights determined by equity, authority, or custom. The phrase is however used very generally without any close distinction in the shades of meaning."

The Christian ministry. — The text points out some indispensable qualifications for an able minister of the New Testament. I. Devotedness to God's Word. II. Personal religion. III. Public instruction.

Holy courage. — Bernard de Palissy, a native of Agen, in France, was a maker of earthenware, at Saintes, and distinguished himself by his knowledge and talents. He composed a number of scientific and practical [c] 1st and 2d temps. destroyed on the month Ap. Some say on the same day. see Zech. viii. 19; Allen's Judaism 401.

"Ezra's reigning desire had been to study the Divine law — its principles, institutions, privileges, and requirements; and now fr. love and zeal, he devoted works, which have been repeatedly republished; and the last edition, in 1777, is enriched with notes by the celebrated Faujas de St. Fonds. This able and worthy man was a Calvinist, and the French king, Henry III., said to him one day, that "he should be compelled to give him up to his enemies, unless he changed his religion." "You have often said to me, sir," was the undaunted reply of de Palissy, "that you pitied me; but as for me, I pity you, who have given utterance to such words as, I shall be compelled. These are unkingly words; and I say to you in royal phrase, that neither the Guises, nor all your people, nor yourself, are able to compel a humble manufacturer of earthenware to bend his knee before statues." Bernard was a man of humor, as well as of courage; he would sometimes say, alluding to his trade, and his trust in Providence, "My only property is heaven and earth."

B. C. 457.

himself, as the business of his life, to the work of instructing, reforming, and edifying others." — Port. Com.

11—13. (11) Now . . letter, written in Chaldee. A private "firman" presented to Ezra by the king, wh. constituted the basis for his civil and ecclesiastical authority. even a scribe, R. V., "the scribe," he was an expounder of the law rather than a compiler. (12) king of kings, prob. an Orientalism = great and powerful prince,[a] but many of his tributary princes still retained the title of kings. perfect . . time, R. V., "perfect and so forth." Prob. a condensation. (13) I decree, etc., this was a royal permit, a free conduct. None were to be compelled to go, and none to be hindered who desired to go. "The decree of Artaxerxes is as wide in its terms as the proclamation of Cyrus (ch. i. 3), and gives permission not to the Jews only, but to all Israelites of whatever tribe, to accompany Ezra to Jerusalem. That Israelites of all the tribes actually went up to Jerusalem on the occasion seems indicated by the 'twelve bullocks for all Israel,' which those who returned with Ezra offered on their arrival to the 'God of Israel.'" — Pulp. Com.

the king's commission to Ezra a As heaven of heavens = great and highest heaven; and vanity of vanities = greatest vanity.

Explanation of vs. 13. — It may be objected that after the decree of Cyrus any such fresh sanction should not have been needed. But two generations had passed away since the pilgrimage of the first body of returning captives, and during this long time many things had happened to check the free action of the Jews and to cast reproach upon their movements. For a great expedition to start now without any orders from the reigning monarch might excite his displeasure and a subject people who were dependent for their very existence on the good-will of an absolute sovereign would naturally hesitate before they ventured to rouse his suspicions by undertaking any considerable migration on their own account." — Exp. Bib.

A cuneiform inscrip., discov. at Susa, begins: — "Thus speaks Artaxerxes, the great king, the king of kings, the king of the countries, the king of the earth, the son of King Darius."

14—17. (14) sent . . king, lit. fr. bef. the king, i. e. with royal authority. and .. counsellors, who "saw the king's face."[b] Note the confidence reposed in Ezra. according . . hand, not a book in his possession, but the Mosaic law, in wh. Ezra was reputed to be fully instructed. (15) whose . . Jerusalem, heathen notion of localized deity. Habitation refers to the temple. (16) And . . find,[c] as free contributions of the people. Three classes of givers, the crown, the Babylonians so disposed, and the Jews. (17) speedily, diligently, and sufficiently. meat offerings, R. V., "meal offerings," i. e. a bloodless offering.

the king sets forth Ezra's work

b Est. i. 14.

c "Granting him a free collection, and what he can get and gather by it." — Bp. Richardson.

Giving a part of worship. — In collecting money for the repairs of the temple, which Athaliah and her sons had dilapidated, the good priest did a thing worth noticing. He had a chest placed right alongside the brazen altar in front of the temple, and in the lid of the chest was a hole bored, and into the hole the priests, selected for the purpose, dropped the coins which the people brought, either as their half-shekel tax, or as the offering for vows, or as a freewill offering to the temple of Jehovah. When I read the story and then read from Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, "Upon the first day of the week" (the Lord's day, mind you!) "let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him," I cannot help thinking that giving is a part of worship! Close alongside of the altar, where the type of the Lamb of God was offered up, was the money chest. How exalted giving to the Lord's cause is in this light! And Paul calls it Sunday work, puts it with prayer, and praise, and Bible instruction, and all that is improving to the soul. — Crosby.

"I should say sincerity, a deep, great, genuine sincerity, is the first characteristic of all men in any way heroic." — Carlyle.

18—20. (18) whatsoever, etc., happy the king who sees that what his people do "after the will of" their God, will be for general good. will . . God, i. e. as declared in the law. (19) vessels,[d] these were dif. from those previously taken.[e] Prob. gifts from the king and others who wished to adorn and grants him means for executing it d Ez. viii. 25-27.

e Ez. i. 7-11.

B. C. 457.

"A crust of God's carving is better than a banquet of our own providing." — Beadle.

"How just is Providence in all its works! How swift to overtake us in our crimes!" — Lansdowne.

Birds cannot converse with men unless they had a rational nature put into them, nor can men converse with God unless, being made new creatures, they partake of the Divine nature.

the temple. before . . Jerusalem, perhaps a condensed form for "before the God of Israel, whose temple is in Jerusalem." (20) more . . needful, after making the collection. Here was confidence in the integrity of Ezra.

George Buchanan. — This illustrious scholar, compelled to fly from his own country by the blood-seeking animosity of a priestly cabal, whose vices he had made the theme of his satire, sought refuge and protection under Henry VIII. of England. His appeal to that monarch was couched in terms of great pathos and elegance. "Look not," said the poet, "with an unrelenting countenance upon the humble advances of a man whose soul is devoted to your service; one who, a beggar, a vagrant, and an exile, has endured every species of misfortune which a perfidious world can inflict. A savage host of inveterate enemies pursues him, and the palace of his sovereign resounds with their menaces. Over mountains covered in snow, and valleys flooded with rain, I come a fugitive to the Athenian altar of mercy, and, exhausted by calamities, cast myself at your feet." Alas! London was not the Athens the fugitive sought, nor Henry the Pericles whose generosity was to succor him. But who can wonder that, after sacrificing to the axe that beauty on which he once reposed with delight, neither the misfortunes of greatness, nor the eloquence of genius, should have been able to make the least impression on the heart of the savage Henry. — Percy Anec.

the king's decree to the treasures

21–23. (21) decree . . speedily, the king fulfilled his word royally. (22) hundred . . silver, a "kikkar," or talent of silver was worth about $1,800; hence amount was about $180,000. (23) let it, etc., R. V., "let it be done exactly." why . . wrath, the disasters[a] of the nation were attributed to the anger of the gods.

Unlimited grace. — I. As salt was used for its preserving and purifying properties it may be regarded as an emblem of grace in the soul. II. As the king gave salt to Ezra without limiting the quantity, so the King of kings gives unlimited grace to His people. III. We can have large measures of many things without being necessarily benefited. IV. As salt kills reptiles, so grace kills sins. — Spurgeon.

Hindrances to work. — Sometimes the storms of persecution howl around the church, and men have to die instead of work, and it hinders building. Sometimes the frost of unbelief sets in, and men's hands get so cold that they cannot give, and their tongues so stiff that they cannot speak, and their knees so cramped that they cannot pray, and that hinders building. Sometimes the fog of error steals around, and everything gets disproportionate, and men imagine that because they don't see what their fellow-workmen are doing, they are doing nothing, and those who are at work can't see what they are doing, and this hinders building. Sometimes there is a strike — Judah vexes Ephraim, and Ephraim envies Judah — and the workmen quarrel with each other, and this hinders building. The great Master sees all this, and though for a while He may hide Himself, it will be but for a moment. Does the storm howl? He says, "Peace, be still," and there is a great calm, and the church has rest, and is multiplied. Does the fog blind? At the breath of His mouth it is scattered, and men see clearly. Does the frost set in? He, the Sun of Righteousness, pours His warm rays upon them, and the winter is soon past and gone. Is there a strike? He takes the two sticks into His hand, and they become one. — Hom. Com.

[a] "Such as Marathon and Salamis, and in Egypt." — Wordsworth.

"Nothing this world unriddles but the next."—E. Young.

"God has His plan for every man." — Swiss Proverb.

"Do not give me ready money now; give a cheque-book and let me draw what I like. This is what God does with the believer. He does not immediately transfer His inheritance to him, but lets him draw what he needs out of the riches of His fulness in Christ Jesus." — Spurgeon.

Ezra's followers exempt from taxes

24–26. (24) Nethinims, R. V., "Nethinim," fr. nathan, to give. Those who had given themselves up to serve in the temp. ministers, R. V., "servants," i. e. Solomon's servants, ch. ii. 55–58. "Now that he reaches the most important point in the whole of his decree — the permanent exemption of a large part of the people from liability to taxation of any kind, his style changes, and he says, "We certify you." Perhaps he speaks in the name of himself and his successors; or possibly he means to say that in this matter he has asked and obtained the assent and consent of his council." — Pulp. Com. (25) And thou Ezra, etc., he was to exercise jurisdiction over the Israelites and proselytes throughout Syria, Phœnicia and Palestine. and teach . . not, "The primary intention of this sentence is to insure instruction in the law for those Jews, who by living among the heathen had grown to neglect or to forget the obligations of their religion. It does not amount to a command 'to proselytize,' but would, no doubt, include the instruction of proselytes, and grant general permission to teach the Jewish religion." — Cam. B. (26) banishment, called rooting out, i. e. outlawry.

"As Satan selects his disciples when they are idle, so our Saviour chose His while they were busy at their trade, — either mending their nets, or casting them into the sea. Nay, He Himself stooped to a trade, and was a carpenter." — Farrindon.

B. C. cir. 457.

A godly judge. — "In the year 1772," says one, "I spent the summer in London, and being upon a visit to a family at Ware, in Hertfordshire, we one day went to Hertford, it being the summer assizes. Lord Chief Baron Smith presided on the bench, whom I had heard much of, as being a godly and spiritual man, as well as an upright and judicious judge. The first morning he sat at Nisi Prius, and I thought him very sensible and knowing, or what the lawyers called learned, in his profession: but the next morning he had to try three criminals; I forget the offenses, but they were all capital, and the prisoners were tried separately, and found guilty. The venerable judge, in passing the sentence of the law upon them, was very solemn. He stated to them separately the aggravation of the particular crime of each, and the necessity that the laws of the country, and the security of the people, should be maintained by the punishment of the offenders, 'which punishment,' he added, 'I am now to denounce upon you; this it is painful for me to do, but it is a duty imposed on me by my office to pronounce, That you be taken from hence to the place from whence you came,' etc. His subsequent address affected the audience, however it might the criminals: — 'Prisoners, so we see that the law worketh wrath against transgressors, and the Divine law on us and all mankind as sinners, who have come short of the glory of God. But God, who is rich in mercy, hath provided a glorious salvation, in which you and I may find abundant relief. He sent His own Son to seek and save the lost, and to give Himself a sacrifice for sin, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. The blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, cleanseth from all sin. I am a sinner like you; but pleading that blood I found mercy; and therefore recommend that blood to you, Go ye and do likewise.'" — Whitecross.

"When Cyrus gave one of his friends a kiss, and another a wedge of gold, he that had the gold envied him that had the kiss, as a greater expression of favor. So the true Christian prefers the privilege of acceptance with God to the possession of any earthly comfort; for the light of His countenance is life, and His favor as the cloud of the latter rain." — Buck.

27, 28. Blessed, etc. "this devout thanksgiving is in unison with the whole character of Ezra, who discerns the hand of God in every event, and is always ready to express a pious acknowledgment for the Divine goodness."

Ezra praises God

Gratitude to God (vs. 27).— The late Lady Glenorchy, being in a delicate state of health, frequently employed Mrs. Graham as her almoner to the poor. On one of these visits Mrs. G. called on a poor woman with the present of a new gown. "I am obliged to you and her ladyship for your kindness," said the poor woman rich in faith; "but I maun gang to the right airt first; ye wad nae hae come gin ye had nae been sent: the Lord hath lately left me wi' but ae goon for week-day and Sabbath, but now He hath sent you wi' a Sabbath-day's goon." Thus intimating that her gratitude was first due to the God of providence, who had put it into the hearts of His people to supply her wants. Humility.— Two men went up into the temple to pray, the one a very righteous man, as he seemed to himself and to others; but God, who seeth not as man seeth, accounted the unrighteous man the more righteous of the two. So have I seen two flowers, side by side, the one erect, and without a misgiving, looking up to heaven; the other, with its head all adown upon its breast, looking only to the earth. But the flower that looked earthward, as though not worthy to look heavenward, was the more heavenly of the two. Then said I, pride and self-sufficiency are a miserable insufficiency; but meekness and self-distrust are allied to all-sufficiency. Question: Does God always give least to those who think themselves greatest, and most to those who think less of themselves? Answer: Humility hath the palm.— John Pulsford.

"What I have done is worthy of nothing but silence and forgetfulness; but what God has done for me is worthy of everlasting and thankfulremembrance." — Bishop Hall.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

1—7. (1) them . . Babylon, these are males only (1,754); as there were also women and children there must have been fr. 6,000 to 8,000[a] in the whole caravan. (2) Daniel, not the prophet. Hattush, the punctuation in the A. V. is wrong. It should read "Hattush, of the etc." "Among the chief men there is no name that is remarkable, excepting that of Hattush. 'Hattush, of the sons of Shechaniah,' is, beyond all reasonable doubt, the descendant of David mentioned in 1 Chron. iii. 22, who was a son of Shemaiah, and Zerubbabel's great-great-grandson." (3) This verse should begin as follows: "Of the sons of Parosh, Zechariah." (4–7) males, note that males only are included in this list.

the companions of Ezra who went from Babylon

[a] Kitto thinks the whole could not be less than 7,000.

The mission of each person. — There is not a spider hanging on the king's wall but hath its errand; there is not a nettle that groweth in the corner of

"There are greater things to be done in the future than in the past." — Adams.

B. C. cir. 457.

"There is to God no future, nor a past." — Henry Kirke White the churchyard but hath its purpose; there is not a single insect fluttering in the breeze but accomplisheth some Divine decree; and I will never have it that God created any man, especially any Christian man, to be a blank, and to be a nothing. He made you for an end. Find out what that end is; find out your niche and fill it. If it be ever so little, if it is only to be a hewer of wood and drawer of water, do something in this great battle for God and truth. — Spurgeon.

a Ez. ii. 13.

8—14. (13) last . . Adonikam, R. V., "of the sons of Adon., that were the last; and these are their names," i. e. either the younger branches returned with Ezra or these were the last to join themselves to the caravan; 666 had already returned.[a] It is suggested that no more were left behind after these.[b] (14) Bigvai, ii. 14. Zabbud, or Zaccur.

b M. Henry. Or, "who went up this last time."—Patrick.

The journey. — "Upon the first day of the first month" (chap. vii. 9) they set out from Babylon, and continued their journey for several days without any lengthened encampment. They entered upon their journey, we conceive, with mingled feelings of hope and fear. They were encouraged by hopes of reaching their famous fatherland, and of there enjoying the precious privileges of their religion; but the pleasure of these anticipations was moderated by the thought of the difficulties and dangers of the long journey that lay before them. Moreover, it is almost certain that, in leaving Babylon, most of them were sacrificing temporal advantages, and breaking up treasured associations, and severing themselves from dear friends, and these things could not have been done without much mental suffering; but at the summons of duty and the invitations of sacred privileges, they deliberately encountered these trials, and went up from Babylon. Their departure may be looked at as an illustration of the exodus of the soul from the captivity of a life of sin and its setting out on its upward pilgrimage. — Hom. Com.

"God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb."—Sheridan.

the halt at Ahava

Levites, etc., are sent for 15—20. (15) river . . Ahava,[c] so the river itself is called. "The conjecture therefore that the Ahava was one of the many canals or artifical rivers in the vicinity of Babylon, appears to be the most probable. Perhaps there was a specially influential settlement of Jews on the banks of the Ahava." abode . . days, this to rest, order the march, afford time for all to join the party who intended to go. viewed, reviewed, examined into tribes, fam., etc. found . .Levi, whose slackness is bef. noted, ii. 40. (16) chief men, men of influence and authority. men of understanding, R. V., "which were teachers," with powers of persuading. (17) Iddo . . Casiphia,[d] "prob. Iddo was head of theological seminary, or college of Levites." told . . say, gave the substance of the message. ministers, servants. (18) by . . God, he attributes the success of their mission to the right source. (20) all . . name, no promiscuous herd of men, each had his name distinctly recorded.

c Acc. to Ewald, the Pall-a-c a p a s, a river south of Babylon; acc. to Rawlinson the is. wh. flows into the Euphrates, 120 m. N. of Babylon. See 2 Ki. xviii. 34.

Need of rest. — It will be confessed by all men, even by the veriest slaves to their ever-driving ambition, that physicial rest is sometimes needed. The aching limb asks for it; the hand that is so weary that it cannot any longer hold pen, or tool, or weapon of war, says, in its trembling weakness, "Let me rest awhile;" and the fevered brain, over driven, excited almost to madness, says, in its sleeplessness and throbbing and heat, "Let me rest awhile." Well, then, here is so much gained. We shall be able to make our way from this low point to a much higher phase of rest, and find our way upward, from the cry of the feeble and exhausted flesh, to the greater, more solemn, and urgent wants of our over-excited spiritual nature; we shall understand, in some degree, that our highest, divinest faculties must occasionally pause, rest, and recover themselves.

d Fr. casaph, to be white, whence casaph, silver. Perh. the Snow or White Mt., in South of Media. Strabo, i. 506; Herodotus, vii. 67.

the fast proclaimed

21—23. (21) Then . . there, without a military escort, carrying much valuable property. This is a fine illustration of faith. Ahava, vs. 15. afflict,[e] humble, a moral discipline. right, safe in every sense, direct and level, i. e. a prosperous journey. for . . ones, thoughtful care of the children. (22) ashamed, having avowed faith in God, he would not betray any want of confidence. to require, R. V., "to ask." (23) and . . us, God honored their faith.

e Le. xvi. 29, xxiii. 29; Is. lviii. 3-5.

"The work savors of the workman. If the poet sickens, his verse sickens; if black, venous blood flows Confidence. — Suppose I were to set out on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and before I started were to go to Brown Brothers & Co., and obtain letters of credit for the cities of London, Jericho, &c. Then, with these papers, which a child might destroy, which would be but ashes in the teeth of flame, which a thousand chances might take from me, I should go on with confidence and cheer, saying to myself, "As soon as I come to London I shall be in funds. I have a letter in my pocket from Brown Brothers & Co. which will give me five hundred dollars there; and in the other cities to which I am bound I shall find similar supplies, all at my command, through the agency of these magic papers and pen strokes of these enterprising men." But suppose that, instead of this confidence, I were to sit down on ship-board, and go to tormenting myself in this fashion — "Now, what am I to do when I get to London? — I have no money, and how do I know that these bits of paper which I have with me mean anything, or will amount to anything? What shall I do? I am afraid I shall starve in the strange city to which I am going." I should be a fool, you say; but should I be half the fool that man is who, bearing the letters of credit of the Eternal God, yet goes fearing all his way, cast down and doubting whether he shall ever get safe through his journey? No fire, no violence, nor any chance can destroy the cheques of the Lord. When he says, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee," and "My grace shall be sufficient for thee," believe it; and no longer dishonor your God by withholding from Him the confidence which you freely accord to Brown Brothers & Co. — Beecher.

24—27. (24) separated, appointed to this special duty of being custodians of the sacred vessels. "Our translators, following the Vulgate, have omitted to render the preposition which occurs in the Hebrew text before the name of Sherebiah and have thus represented Sherebiah and Hashabiah, as priests, whereas they were not priests, but Levites, as appears from vss. 18, 19. The true sense is given by the LXX. — "Then I assigned twelve of the chief priests to Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren;" i. e., "then I appointed twelve chief priests to act with twelve chief Levites, of whom Sherebiah and Hashabiah were two, in the matter of the royal offering." — Pulp. Com. (25) weighed, that there might be no error at the end of the journey. of the house, R. V., "for the house," a dedicatory offering, Ex. xxxv. 24. (26, 27) weighed, etc., worth acc. to value of Babylonian talent from $500,000 to $600,000. two . . copper,[a] some precious alloy. R. V., "fine bright brass."

A minister's sacred trust. — Brethren, have we at all understood what was done to us when we were ordained — that it was an act of exchange and of interchange — we giving ourselves to Jesus Christ; He giving to us a trust of ministry, on the definite basis of a Divine communication of truth. How little have they realized the good deposit, who have regarded it as nothing more than the reading of services or the preaching of sermons, out of the resources of natural or acquired knowledge, and as only a part of the life, of which all other parts might be just as earthly, just as self-indulgent, just as frivolous, as if no transaction at all had passed between us and Jesus Christ! The good deposit. Let us first of all feel it to be something. Let us try to touch and to handle just one substantial ingredient of it. Let us resolve, let us struggle, let us pray, that this revelation, this self-manifestation of God, which is enshrined in this volume called holy, shall shine out of it upon us. It shall not be a name, it shall not be a formula, it shall not be a mere buzzing sound — it shall be a voice. How serious should we then be — how evidently taken knowledge of as men that had a trust, and were set and bent upon faithfulness to it! Men would come then to listen to us, as to men who were in communication with the world out of sight — as men who were charged each separate time of ministering, with something special to say, and with the true way of saying it. — C. J. Vaughan.

28—30. (28) Ye . . Lord,[b] etc., the strongest reason he could urge for conscientious care-taking, the exile had not lessened their sanctity. (29) Watch . . weigh, etc., as they have hitherto been watched, and are now weighed to you. (30) So, etc., as holy men having a holy duty to perform.

Watchfulness. — A soldier was once posted in a forest to watch for the approach of Indians. It was a position of peculiar danger, three different men having been surprised and killed at this post without having had time to fire a shot. The soldier was left with strict orders to observe the utmost vigilance. In a short time, an object moving among the trees at some distance, caught his eye. He watched it attentively, the gun ready, until, as it came a little nearer, he saw it to be a wild hog. Another came in sight. He satisfied himself it was a wild hog, rooting under the leaves. Presently in to an author's brain it beclouds his pages, and the devotions of a consumptive man scent of his disease as Lord Byron's obscenities smell of gin. Not only 'lying lips,' but a dyspeptic stomach, is an abomination to the Lord."—H. Mann.

B. C. 457.

the vessels committed to the care of the priests

[a] "Copper shining like gold," — Gesenius. "Rare as the metal called auri-chalcum was."—Patrick. As copper was in com. use amongst the Babylonians, this could not be mere copper, wh. would not be as precious as gold.

"Faith without works is like a bird without wings; though she may hop with her companions on earth, yet she will never fly with them to heaven; but when both are joined together, then doth the soul mount up to her eternal rest. — J. Beaumont.

"Faith builds in the dungeon and the lazar-house its sublimest shrines; and up, through roofs of stone, that shut out the eye of heaven, ascends the ladder where the angels glide to and fro — Prayer." — Lytton.

Ezra's charge to the priests

[b] Le. xxi. 6–8; De. xxxiii. 8; Le. xxii. 2, 3; Nu. iv. 4, 15, 19, 20.

"As the bristle on the shoemaker's thread goes through the hole

B. C. cir. 457.

first, and draws the thread after it; so the fear of God's vengeance first goes before, breaking man's heart, and then follows the thread of God's mercies in Christ." — Cowdray.

the Ahava camp broken up, and arrival in Jerusalem a Ez. vii. 6, 9, 28.

b Ne. ii. 11.

You may do much without faith, but nothing which God will accept. "Without faith it is impossible to please Him."

"The steps of faith fall on the seeming void, and find the rock beneath." — Whittier.

the vessels redelivered and the burnt-offering

c Ez. vi. 17.

"There are but three ways of living, as some one has said, by working, by begging, or by stealing. Those who do not work, disguise it in whatever pretty language we please, are doing one of the other two." — Froude.

"There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats; for I am arm'd so strong in honesty, that they pass by me as the idle wind, which I respect not," — Shakespeare.

"Honesty is the best policy; but he who acts upon this principle is not an honest man." — Whately.

another direction, the leaves were rustled, and a third wild hog appeared. The movements of the last animal, however, soon engaged the man's thoughts. He observed a slight awkwardness in the movements of this one and thought that possibly an Indian might be approaching him covered with a hog-skin. If it was an Indian, the safest thing was to shoot. If it was not an Indian, and he should shoot, he would run no risk. He raised his rifle and fired. With a bound and a yell, an Indian leaped to his feet and fell back dead. The man had saved his life and prevented the surprise of the garrison by his watchfulness. — D. W. Whittle.

31, 32. (31) Then . . Jerusalem, the whole time of the march was about 4 mo. hand . . enemy,[a] etc., ref. to prowling bands of Bedouins. (32) And . . days,[b] days of rest and council, bef. proceeding to business.

"Is father on deck?" — A number of years ago, Captain D. commanded a vessel sailing from Liverpool to New York, and on one voyage he had all his family with him on board the ship. One night, when all were quietly asleep, there arose a sudden squall of wind which came sweeping over the waters until it struck the vessel and threw her on her side, tumbling and crashing everything that was movable, and awakening the passengers to a consciousness that they were in imminent peril. Every one on board was alarmed and uneasy; and some sprang from their berths and began to dress, that they might be ready for the worst. Captain D. had a little girl on board, just eight years old, who of course awoke with the rest. "What's the matter?" said the frightened child. They told her that a squall had struck the ship. "Is father on deck?" said she. "Yes; father's on deck." The little thing dropped herself on her pillow again without a fear, and in a few moments was sleeping sweetly in spite of winds or waves. Blessed child! How her confidence shames our doubts and fears, and restless, vague surmisings. She had faith in father, and she had no room for fear.

33—36. (33) weighed, vss. 26–30. by the hand, R. V., "into the hand," i. e. not those who weighed the treasure, but those deemed worthy to receive and care for it. Two were priests, two were Levites. (34) By . . one, the least as well as the greatest individually registered. (35) children . . captivity, R. V., "The children of the captivity which were come out of exile." offerings,[c] expressive of humility and gratitude. twelve bullocks . . twelve he goats, i. e. they felt that they represented the 12 tribes. All these sacrifices were completely consumed. (36) commissions, see vii. 21. lieutenants, lit. satraps. furthered . . God, officials now rendered help; foreign countries ceased their neutrality.

Reward of conscientiousness. — A gentleman jumping from an omnibus in the city of New York, dropped his pocket-book, and had gone some distance before he discovered his loss; then, hastily returning, he asked every passenger whom he met, if a pocket-book had been seen: finally, meeting a little girl of ten years old, to whom he made the same inquiry, she asked, "What kind of a pocket-book?" He described it. Then unfolding her apron, "Is this it?" "Yes, that is mine; come into this store with me." They entered: he opened the book, counted the notes, and examined the papers. "They are all right," he said: "fifteen notes of a thousand dollars each; had they fallen into other hands, I might never have seen them again. Take, then, my little girl, this note of a thousand dollars as a reward for your honesty, and a lesson to me to be more careful in the future." "No," said the girl, "I cannot take it. I have been taught at Sunday school not to keep what is not mine; and my parents would not be pleased if I took the note home, they might suppose I had stolen it." "Well, then, my child, show me where your parents live." The girl took him to a humble tenement in an obscure street, rude but cleanly. He informed the parents of the case: they told him their child had acted correctly; they were "poor," it was true, but their pastor had always told them not to set their hearts on rich gifts. The gentleman told them they must take it; and he was convinced they would make a good use of it, from the principles they had professed. The pious parents then blessed their benefactor, for such he proved: they paid debts which had disturbed their peace, and the benevolent giver gave the father employment in his occupation as a carpenter, enabling him to rear an industrious family in comparative happiness. This little girl became the wife of a respectable tradesman of New York, and had reason to rejoice that she was born of pious parents who had secured their daughter's happiness by sending her to Sunday school.

B. C. 475.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

Ezra mourns the sin of the people

1–4. (1) when . . done, the report of the princes was about four months after E.'s arrival. princes, i. e. some of them, not all, see vs. 2. "It is remarkable that complaint on a matter of religious transgression should have come from the secular and not from the ecclesiastical authorities of the city. But there clearly appears about this time some remissness and connivance at evil, if not even participation in it, on the part of the chief ecclesiastics. On this particular occasion, actual sons and nephews of Jeshua, the high priest, were among those who had married idolatrous wives (ch. x. 18)."— Pulp. Com. abominations, the ancient idolatrous practices condemned by Moses and the proph. (2) For . . sons, and they were seduced to evil by these unequal marriages. "The danger to purity of religion was great. Those who married idolatrous wives were tempted, like Solomon, to connive at their introducing unhallowed rites into the holy city; while the issue of such marriages, influenced by their mothers, were apt to prefer heathenism to Judaism, and to fall away from the faith altogether."— Pulp. Com. hand . . trespass, some of those who should have withstood these practices were leaders in evil. (3) rent . . garment . . mantle,[a] rent my inner and outer robe: this, with plucking, etc., a sign of overwhelming grief. plucked off, etc., the only instance of such exaggerated manifestation of grief in the O. T. astonied, i. e. astounded. In Babylon there had been no tendency thus to break God's law and destroy the national characteristics. Then . . Israel, the sincerely devout came to condole, advise, help, those . . away, R. V., "of them of the captivity," i. e. those who had shared the captivity rallied around Ezra.

The events of this chap., and esp. the prayer of Ezra, important as evidence of E.'s acquaintance with Pentateuch and Bks. of Isa. and Dan.

Rending garments. — The Jews mingled a great deal of ceremony with the tearing of garments, when any misfortune befell them. Sometimes they made the rent from the top downwards, sometimes from the skirt upwards. The requisite length was a hand's breadth. When made on the occasion of the death of parents it was not sewed up again; when for the death of other persons it was sewed up at the end of thirty days. It is in reference to this practice that Solomon has said there is "a time to rend and a time to sew," that is to say, a time to be afflicted and a time to admit of consolation. — Constable's Miscellany. Duty of holy living. — It is recorded of Alexander the Great, that a soldier was reported to him as having betrayed great cowardice on a particular occasion, on which Alexander called him to him and asked his name. On hearing that his name was Alexander, he upbraided him with the dishonor that he brought on such a name, and entreated him either to change his manners or to change his name, asking him how he could dare, while known as Alexander, to act unworthily? And shall not the Christian remember the high and the holy name by which he is called, and dread encountering the guilt and meanness of dishonoring his Head, who was "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners?" That name, in its very signification, tells him that he is related to the anointed One, and that (as the name implies) all His members, in their measure and degree, are anointed ones. How shall they who take this sacred unction upon them dare to dishonor this name, and so sin against Christ! —H. G. Salter.

[a] Jos. vii. 6; 2 Sa. iv. 12; 2 Sa. i. 2; xiii. 31; 2 Ki. xviii. 37; Job. i. 20; Ma. xxvi, 65. See also Homer, Odyss. x. 567.

"There is a kind of mournful eloquence in thy dumb grief, which shames all-clamorous sorrow." — Lee.

Ezra prays and makes confession

5–7. (5) I . . heaviness, perh. comforted by the suggestions of the hour. and having next, etc.; R. V., "even with my garments and my mantle rent;" no necessity for a second rending of his garments. fell . . God,[b] making public confession and prayer. (6) ashamed,[c] etc., not of repentance, but of the sins of the people. "As in the confession of Daniel, the personality of the speaker is merged in that of the nation. The sin of the race no less than its shame and its punishment is acknowledged in the 'we,' 'our,' and 'us.' The self-abnegation and love of Ezra as of Moses (Ex. xxxii. 32), and of Paul (Rom. ix. 3), accept the obligations of nationality as the source of guilt as well as of privilege to the individual." — Cam. B. iniquities are increased, i. e. go on rising like a flood. (7) Since . . days,[d] the very sins of wh. they had so soon become guilty were the cause of their national disasters.

[b] Ex. ix. 29–33.

[c] Dan. ix. 7, 8.

Ezra's humiliation for the sins of his people. — We propose to consider — I. the reason of his sorrow. He justly regarded the conduct of the people as a most heinous evil. 1. As being a violation of an express command; 2. As having an evident tendency to bring the people back to idolatry. How great his sorrow on this occasion was, we may judge from — II. The expression of [d] Ps. cvi. 6; Da. ix. 5, 6, 8.

B. C. 457.

"Repentance hath a purifying power, and every tear is of a cleansing virtue; but these penitential clouds must be still kept dropping; one shower will not suffice; for repentance is not one single action, but a course." — South.

it. Note the expression of his grief the instant he was informed of their misconduct. But his humiliation before God is that which more particularly demands our intention. — Simeon.

Ezra's prayer. — Welling up, hot and passionate, his prayer is a revelation of the very heart of the scribe. Ezra shows us what true prayer is — that it is laying bare the heart and soul in the presence of God. The striking characteristic of this outburst of Ezra's is that it does not contain a single petition. There is no greater mistake in regard to prayer than the notion that it is nothing more than the begging of specific favors from the bounty of the Almighty. That is but a shallow kind of prayer at best. In the deepest and most real prayer the soul is too near to God to ask for any definite thing; it is just unbosoming itself to the Great Confidant, just telling out its agony to the Father who can understand everything and receive the whole burden of the anguished spirit. — Exp. Bib.

8, 9. (8) little space, lit. moment. Since the decree of Cyrus about 80 years previously. remnant, ref. to Isa. i. 9; x. 20–22; fr. the destruction of Jerus., and the degeneration of the captivity. nail, pin of wood for fixing a tent, meaning a constant and sure abode.[a] lighten our eyes, i. e. remove the night of trouble. reviving, etc., i. e. by bestowing salvation and strength. (9) bondmen, etc., see refs.[b] give . . wall, a fence,[c] protection. Wall of Jerus. not yet built.

Faith leads to humble prayer. — Our faith can never afford to approach God in robes of royalty. Sackcloth and ashes are always its proper clothing. Faith can never grow too strong to pray, "God be merciful to me a sinner." We are all Pharisees by nature, publicans only by grace, and let us shun as we would a viper all claim to sinless perfection. Paul never reached it or if he did, he was far from being conscious of his high attainment. When a comparatively young Christian he wrote, "I am the least of the apostles." After he had grown in grace a few years he could say, "I am less than the least of all saints." When he had grown old in God's service he could subscribe himself "the chief of sinners." A certain Methodist bishop said, "Aim at perfection, but I charge you in God's name, never to profess it." The place for true faith, is on its knees before a holy God, weeping tears of penitence for its sins, and rejoicing only in His righteousness. — A. C. Dixon.

10—12. (10) what . . this, what, after this fresh transgression of the law, can be said in excuse; or by way of promise. (11) by . . prophets, i. e. "by the hand of," etc. Their hand of power indicating the authority with wh. they wrote. saying, etc., a testy. to the Pentateuch.[d] A general statement of prophetical teaching concerning foreign intermarriage. (12) nor . . peace, etc.,[e] not protect them, nor enrich yourself by their wealth, with special ref. to the Moabites and Ammonites.

Confession is a necessary basis of forgiveness. Confession is not a simple act. Confession is in reality a multitudinous act; it is many acts in one; it is a convergence of right judgment, right feeling, and right action. There are kinds of confession which are wholly unavailing. . . . This is not the confession in which David poured out his soul; his words are full of heart. His language seems to be baptized with tears. Every word is a groan from the soul; and consequently his confession comes within the assurance of that world-enclosing and most blessed promise, that if we confess our sins, God will erase them from His book, and remember them no more for ever. Think of God forgetting. Think of the Infinite casting aught behind His back! Back of the Infinite! Where is that? He will put our sins away from Him, as far as the east is from the west. What geometrician can set forth in lines that distance, or tell in words the vastness of that immensity? — J. Parker.

13—15. (13) after . . deeds, by which the people should have been warned. hast . . deserve,[f] lit. hast withheld beneath our iniquities. deliverance, R. V., "a remnant." (14) should we, R. V., "shall we." affinity,[g] by marriage, etc. angry . . us,[h] the heaviest punishment dealt out may be exceeded in the future. (15) righteous,[i] making a dif. betw. the evil and the good. "This must not be softened down as if it were 'thou art gracious.' The words are an acknowledgment of the perfect justice of God's dealings with Israel in the past. The next sentence 'for we are left a remnant' is not uttered in gratitude for the mercy which spared 'a remnant,' but is added to a Isa. xxii. 23.

b Ne. ix. 36; Ps. cxxxi. 23; Ez. vii. 28.

c Isa. v. 2, 5.

"O ye powers! that search the heart of man and weigh his inmost thoughts! If I've done amiss, impute it not; the best may err, but ye are good." — Addison.

vs. 8. According to the marginal reading, "a constant and sure abode." The idea seems to be derived from the nails, or pins, with which the tabernacle was fastened to the ground. A similar allusion is containe in Isaiah xxii. 23.

d De. vii. 1-3.

e De. xxiii. 6; cf. Jos. xvi. 10.

"He that repents every day for the sins of every day, when he comes to die will have the sin but of one day to repent of. Short reckonings make long friends." — P. Henry.

The more you yield to any known sin, the greater will be its power over you. Men may give way to the power of sin till at last they are "led captives of the devil at his will."

f Ps. ciii. 10.

g Ne. xiii. 23-27.

h De. ix. 8.

i Ne. ix. 33; Da. ix. 14.

express the greatness of the catastrophe which had carried off the whole nation except 'a remnant.' And yet the visitation had been just." — Cam. B. escaped, the sin as well as the punishment. because of this, i. e. wicked transgression of God's law. Israel as a nation, the innocent and the guilty, are responsible before God.

B. C. 457.

The voice of the soul in view of sin, and of salvation from it. — Under the influence of a great grief we have in our text the soul uttering two voices. I. The voice of conscience in view of sin. Conscience says — 1. The man himself is responsible for his sins; 2. That the evil of sin is great; 3. That punishment is connected with sin; 4. That sin is not punished in this world according to its desert, and this for two reasons: because it is a world in which good and evil exist, because there is more mercy than justice in this world. II. The voice of wild wonder in view of God's salvation from sin. This wonder is caused by two things. 1. By the greatness of the deliverance; 2. By looking at the awful consequence of rejecting this salvation. — E. Jones.

"We live in the consequences of past actions."—A. A. Hodge.

An old sailor's story. — Once upon a time I made a voyage in a merchant barque. We were becalmed in the South Seas, and weary work it were, a doing of nothing from day to day. But when the water began to come up thick from the bottom of the water casks, it was a wearier a deal. Then a thick fog came on, as white as snow a'most, and we couldn't see more than a few yards ahead or on any side of us. But the fog didn't keep the heat off; it only made it worse, and the water was fast goin' down. The short allowance grew shorter and shorter, and the men, some of them, were half mad with thirst, and began to look bad at one another. I kept up my heart by looking ahead inside me. For days and days the fog hung about us as if the air had been made o' flocks o' wool. The captain took to his berth, and several of the crew to their hammocks, for it was just as hot on deck as anywhere else. The mate lay on the spare sail on the quarter deck, groaning. I had a strong suspicion that the schooner was drifting, and hove the lead again and again, but could find no bottom. Some of the men got hold of the spirits, and that didn't quench their thirst, it drove them clean mad. I had to knock one of them down myself with a capstan-bar, for he ran at the mate with his knife. At last I began to lose all hope, and still I was sure the schooner was slowly drifting. My head was like to burst, and my tongue was like a lump of holystone in my mouth. Well, one morning I had just, as I thought, lain down on the decks to breathe my last, hoping I should die before I went quite mad with thirst, when all at once the fog lifted, like the foot of a sail. I sprung to my feet. There was the blue sky overhead, but the terrible burning sun was there. A moment more and a light air blew on my cheek; and, turning my face to it as if it had been the very breath of God, there was an island within half a mile, and I saw the shine on the water, on the face of a rock, on the shore. I cried out, "Land on the weather quarter! water in sight!" In a moment more a boat was lowered, and in a few minutes the boat's crew, of which I was one, were lying, clothes and all, in a little stream that came down from the hills above.

"This is ever God's manner, when men change their deeds, to change His doom; when they renounce their sins, to recall His sentence; when they repent of the evil they have done against Him, to repent of the evil He had said He would do against them. . . . Never was a man truly and inwardly humbled but God, in the riches of His special mercy (in Christ), truly pardoned him." — B. Sanderson.

Whatsoever curse there is in sin, or punishment due to it, is taken from you, if you are in Christ; for He has made satisfaction for the one, and borne the other.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

Ezra encouraged

1, 2. (1) prayed, etc.,[a] R. V., "while Ezra prayed," ix. 5–15. for . . sore, lit. wept with a great weeping. The sight of Ezra's sorrow may have suggested to them the greatness of the sin. (2) one . . Elam, vs. 26, one of the leading men, but not one of the delinquents. "He was no priest, nor prince, but one of the congregation, so that in and with him the congregation itself promptly arose to vindicate the law." yet . . thing, must have been a morally brave man to oppose in this way his nearest relatives. Yet the people's penitence was the assurance of an amendment of their ways.

[a] Da. ix. 20.

"Friendship peculiar boon of heaven."—Johnson.

"Friendship is a sheltering tree."—S. T. Coleridge.

Reason for hope. — The case is sad, but it is not desperate; the disease is threatening, but not incurable. There is hope that the people may be reformed, the guilty reclaimed, a stop put to the spreading of the contagion; and so the judgments which the sin deserves may be prevented, and all will be well. "Now there is hope;" now that the disease is discovered, it is half cured. Now that the alarm is taken, the people begin to be sensible of the mischief, and to lament it; a spirit of repentance seems to be poured out upon them, and they are all thus humbling themselves before God for it: "now there is hope" that God will forgive and have mercy. "The valley of "Sorrow for past ills doth restore frail man to his first innocence."—Nabb.

B. C. 457.

Achor" (that is of trouble) is the "door of hope" (Hos. ii. 15); for the sin that truly troubles us shall not ruin us. There is hope now that Israel has such a prudent, pious, zealous governor as Ezra to manage this affair. — M. Henry.

Ezra exhorted to begin the work of reformation

3—5. (3) make . . wives,[a] either by legal divorce or a public decree annulling these mixed marriages. The great idea of Ezra was to preserve a separate people. He held that this was essential to the maintenance of pure religion and morals in the midst of the pagan abominations which surrounded the little colony. Church separation seemed to be bound up with race separation. This Ezra believed to be after the minds of the prophets, and therefore a truth of Divine inspiration. Under all these circumstances it is not easy to say that his main contention was wrong. — Exp. B. counsel . . lord, Shechaniah surmises Ezra's wish and purpose in this crisis. according . . law, i. e. either the new decree to be proclaimed, or in conformity with the regulations for divorce found in Mosaic law. Deut. xxiv. 1-4. (4) Arise . . thee, etc., it was a work that needed much tact and delicacy, as well as authority. be . . it,[b] though the work be difficult and painful. (5) arose, not only fr. his knees, but to attend to this work. swear . . word,[c] he would have more than their mere word to carry out Shech. proposal.

a 2 Ch. xxxiv. 31.

b 2 Ch. xxviii. 10.

c Ne. v. 12.

Reformation a test of repentance. — "Reformation is just as essential as repentance. That is, it is just as essential that you should, up to your power, do the deeds of a good man or woman, as that you should take the resolution to be a good man or woman. If you are heartily sorry for misspent years, you will make it your business to spend your future years wisely. Thus, in fact, reformation becomes the test of repentance, proving its sincerity and its worth. We infer that a miser is penitent, when we see him giving liberally to the poor, or to spreading the Gospel. A sensualist may profess to have repented; but we are not sure till we see him forsaking dissipation, and living temperately and chastely. A vain, frivolous girl deserves small confidence as repenting till her whole appearance reveals a constant life hidden with Christ in God, and the dignity of a sober devotion to the welfare of others. It is not to be believed that a sullen or angry temper has been actually repented of, till the countenance loses its unhallowed fire, and the voice its asperity, and the words come gently, like His, who, when He was reviled, reviled not again."

"Time passes on, and the fashions of the mind, as well as of the body, change; but the mind and the body remain the same in all ages, and are subject to the same accidents of disease and error."—Southey.

Ezra calls an assembly at Jerusalem

6—8. (6) Johanan,[d] son of Eliashib, the high priest who succeeded Joiakim, the successor of Jeshua. and . . thither, where he per. abode. He showed the intensity of his feelings by the severity of his fast. (7) proclamation, issuing fr. a council of princes and elders held in such a place under the presidency of Ezra, would have great weight. (8) whosoever . . days, a longer time would have allowed space for counteraction. Note the promptitude of Ezra. forfeited, lit. devoted. separated,[e] excommunicated. those . . away, R. V., "the captivity," a pet phrase of Ezra's.

d Ne. xii. 10-12.

e Ez. vii. 64; Ne. xiii. 28.

Confession of sin. — He that cries to have sin taken away acknowledgeth that it lies upon him. A full confession, not of many, but of all sins, either actually committed, or habitually comprised in our body of sin. As he in the comedy said, that he had invited two guests to dinner, Philocrates and Philocrates, a single man, but a double eater; so, in examination of ourselves, we shall every one find sins enough in himself to denominate him a double and treble sinner. A free confession, not as Pharaoh's, extorted upon the rack; nor as that of Judas, squeezed out with anguish and horror, but ingenuous and penitent, arising from the purpose of a pious heart, that cometh like water out of a spring, with voluntary freeness; not like water out of a still, which is forced with fire. — Bp. Reynolds.

"Confession of sin should be free, particular, full, penitential, earnest, accompanied with heartfelt hatred to sin, supplication for mercy, forsaking sin, and an implicit faith in Christ for the forgiveness of the same."—John Bate.

Ezra addresses the assembly

9—11. (9) men . . Benjamin, to wh. tribes the returned captives chiefly belonged. ninth . . month, betw. end of Dec. and begin. of Jan., coldest and most rainy time in Palestine. street, court. (10) stood . . said, etc., simply told them of their sin, did not discuss it. transgressed, better with R. V., "trespassed." trespass, i. e. R. V., "guilt." This last "offense had added to the black account against Israel." (11) Now . . confession,[f] etc., the honesty of the confession was to be shown in abandoning the sin. separate, etc., not only divorce is commanded, but also an entire rupture with all the citizens who had not adopted Judaism.

f Jos. vii. 19; Pr. xviii. 13.

Confession. — As the frank and dutiful child, when he has committed a fault does not wait till another goes and tells his father, or till the father dis-

"Many persons who appear to recovers by his frowning countenance that it has come to his ear; but freely, and of his own accord, goes pleasantly to his father, and eases his aching heart by a free and full confession; and this with such plain-heartedness, giving his offence the weight of every aggravating circumstance, so that if the devil himself should come after him, to glean up what he hath left, he should hardly find wherewithal to make the case appear blacker; thus does the sincere soul to God; adding to his simplicity in the confession of his sin such a flow of sorrow, that God, seeing His dear child in danger of being carried down towards despair, if good news from Him do not speedily stay him, cannot but tune His voice rather into a strain of comforting him in his mourning, than chiding him for his sin. — W. Gurnall.

B. C. 457.

pent are like sailors who throw their goods overboard in a storm, and wish for them again in a calm." — Mead.

12—14. (12) As . . do, must, bec. it is right; not simply bec. it can be compelled. (13) But . . many, etc., the matter was of serious import and considerable magnitude, hence time was necessary. The people could not remain in Jerus. during the trials. (14) rulers . . elders . . judges, they propose a commission to inquire, take evidence, and correct abuses, consisting of a permanent body, and the officials of each town in order. for this matter, R. V., "until this matter be dispatched."

the people propose a commission of inquiry

The value of a wise decision. — Two years ago a man was called to decide between preserving his life, and parting with the gains of his lifetime. A gold-digger, he stood on the deck of a ship that, coming from Australian shores, had — as some all but reach heaven — all but reached her harbor in safety. The exiles had been coasting along their native shores; and to-morrow husbands would embrace their wives, children their parents, and not a few realize the bright dream of returning to pass the evening of their days in happiness amid the loved scenes of their youth. But as the proverb runs, there is much betwen the cup and the lip. Night came lowering down; and with the night a storm that wrecked ship, and hopes, and fortunes all together. The dawning light revealed a scene of horror — death staring them in the face. The sea, lashed into fury, ran mountains high; no boat could live in her. One chance still remained. Pale women, weeping children, feeble and timid men must die; but a stout, brave swimmer, with trust in God, and disencumbered of all impediments, might reach the shore, where hundreds stood ready to dash into the boiling surf, and, seizing, save him. One man was observed to go below. He bound round his waist a heavy belt, filled with gold, the hard gains of his life; and returned to the deck. One after another, he saw his fellow-passengers leap overboard. After a brief but terrible struggle, head after head went down — sunk by the gold they had fought hard to gain, and were loth to lose. Slowly he was seen to unbuckle his belt. His hopes had been bound up in it. It was to buy him land, and ease, and respect — the reward of long years of hard and weary exile. What hardships he had endured for it! The sweat of his brow, the hopes of day and the dreams of night were there. If he parts with it, he is a beggar; but then if he keeps it, he dies. He poised it in his hand; balanced it for a while; took a long, sad look at it; and then with one strong, desperate effort, flung it far out into the roaring sea. Wise man! It sinks with a sullen plunge; and now he follows it — not to sink, but, disencumbered of its weight, to swim; to beat the billows manfully; and, riding on the foaming surge, to reach the shore. Well done, brave gold-digger! Ay, well done, and well chosen; but if "a man," as the devil said, who for once spoke God's truth, "will give all that he hath for his life," how much more should he give all he hath for his soul? Better to part with gold than with God; to bear the heaviest cross than miss a heavenly crown! — Thomas Guthrie.

If I do what I may in earnest, I need not mourn if I work no great work on this earth. To help the growth of a thought that struggles toward the light; to brush with gentle hand the earth stain from the white of one snowdrop, such is my ambition! — George Macdonald.

"Man should do nothing that he should repent; but if he have, and say that he is sorry, it is a worse fault, if he be not truly." — Beaumont and Fletcher.

15—17. (15) Only, or but,[a] not in the sense of "alone." employed, lit. stood or withstood. These four were the leaders of the opposition to Ezra's proposals. (16) separated, gave themselves up for this special work. (17) by . . month, so as to be ready for the Passover.

an end made of strange marriages

Wisdom to direct. — The property of cords contracting their length by moisture became generally known, it is said, on the raising of the Egyptian obelisk in the square facing St. Peter's, at Rome, by order of Pope Sixtus V. The great work was undertaken in the year 1586; and the day for raising the obelisk was marked with great solemnity. High mass was celebrated at St. Peter's; and the architect and workmen received the benediction of the Pope. The blast of a trumpet was the given signal, when engines were set in motion

[a] LXX.

There are many sins which must either be dealt with suddenly, or not at all. — Henry Drummond.

B. C. 457.

One sin cherished dearly will cost a man his character. —L. M. Clarke.

by an incredible number of horses; but not until after fifty two unsuccessful attempts had been made, was the huge block lifted from the earth. As the ropes which held it had somewhat stretched, the base of the obelisk could not reach the summit of the pedestal; when a man in the crowd cried out, "Wet the ropes!" This advice was followed; and the column, as of itself, gradually rose to the required height, and was placed upright on the pedestal prepared for it. —Biblical Treasury.

the names of the sons of the priests who had sinned

18—24. (18) sons, i. e. descendants. Jeshua,[a] who came to Jerus. with Zerubbabel some 80 yrs. bef. (19) gave . . hands,[b] R. V., hand, i. e. word of honor, 2 Ki. x. 15. being . . trespass,[c] sin needs to be atoned for, as well as discontinued. (23) Jozabad,[d] ii. 40.

Thoroughness in battling with sin. — It is a remarkable, but awful, fact that liberty and religion both have arisen to prosperity in the world on successive stages of blood. Blood nutured the tree of Grecian and of Roman freedom. With bloody swords our fathers in the puritanic and covenanting days gained our civil and religious victories. Through a shower of blood came down, in 1789 and the after years, the genius of liberty to the continental shores. The blood of John Brown of Virginia dropped into the dust, to rear a glorious and a terrible harvest of freedom to his black countrymen. And the religion of Jesus, need we say, arises from the root of a blood-sprinkled cross. This springs, doubtless, in part from the Divine plan and purpose, but it augurs also something dreadfully wrong in the present system of things. Through the dominion of the evil power men's minds, in every age, have been steeped in selfishness, besotted with lies; and when truth and good try to stir them, they succeed, but the stir they produce is that of rage and resistance. The darkness comprehends them not, but apprehends and destroys their votaries, and many of the followers of the prince of evil perish in the strife, too, and thus, "blood toucheth blood." — G. Gilfillan.

a There were 973 priests of that house, ii. 36.

b Pr. vi. 1; Ez. xvii. 18.

c Le. v. 14.-19.

d Ne. viii. 7.

vs. 19 Ram. "This shows that they sinned ag. knowledge; for a sin of ignorance the oblation was not a ram, but a goat." —Trapp.

25—33. (25) Moreover . . Parosh,[e] ii. 3-29. (26) Jehiel, vs. 2.

Pride of ancestry. — M. Alexandre Dumas, born on the 24th of January, 1803, at Villiers Cotterets, in the department of the Aisne, was but one remove from negro blood. A story is told of his readiness to meet curious examinations into his ancestry. "Who was your father, M. Dumas?" some blindly fatuous fop, tempting annihilation, is said to have asked him. "A half-caste, sir," was the reply. "And your grandfather?" "A black." "And your great-grandfather?" "A baboon, monsieur; my pedigree begins where yours terminates." In point of fact, M. Alexandre-Davy Dumas was the son of M. Alexandre-Davy Dumas, who was the son, over the bar sinister, of M. le Marquis de la Pailleterie, a wealthy planter of San Domingo, by a negress. On the death of his father, who distinguished himself during the wars arising out of the Revolution, our Alexandre Dumas migrated to Paris, with the hope of obtaining some post, through the influence of his family connections, but, as he has declared, was coldly received. A letter of introduction to General Foy gained him a start for which he was always ready to express his gratitude. — London Paper.

e "All that are named for Parosh, in vs. 25, to Shimeon (vs. 31), were of Judah." —Wordsworth.

"When Adam dolve, and Eve span, who was then a gentleman? Then came the churle, and gathered good; and thence arose the gentle blood."

"I am no herald to enquire of men's pedigrees; it sufficeth me if I know their virtues" —Sir. P. Sidney.

True nobility consists not in the natural, but in the spiritual pedigree: every child of God is of royal descent.

34—44. (43) Jadau, R. V., "Iddo." (44) and some . . children, lit. "and there were of them wives, and they had children." Showing the difficulties wh. the commission faced in carrying out Ezra's stern and wholesale decree.

The names of those who had married the strange wives (vss. 18-44). — Aware of the danger that the nation might relapse into the sin which he was seeking to root out, Ezra punishes the wrong-doers by placing their names on record, that others might fear to do the like. He assigns the first place in his catalogue of offenders to the priests, doubtless because in them the sin was greatest; they, as the special custodians of the law, were most bound to have observed the law. Next to the priests he put the Levites, on the same principle, because of their semi-sacerdotal character. He then concludes with the laymen, arranged under their several families. By the list of laymen it appears that ten only out of some thirty-six lay families were implicated in the sin. Three of the four priestly families, on the other hand, and even the near kindred of the high priest, were among the guilty. It is remarkable that it is Ezra, a priest, and one by many accused of over-sacerdotalism, who gives this testimony against his own order. — Pulpit Com.

"This is true greatness, to be patient in conscious strength. The only possibility of it is to put things into God's hand. Only in still waters of the soul can the Divine image be reflected. All gracious processes are wrought in restful souls." —H. Allon.

THE BOOK OF NEHEMIAH.

Introduction.

I. Title. "Bk. of Nehemiah," so called from the name of its chief character, is in some versions (as the Latin and Greek) termed the Second Bk. of Ezra. II. Author. The book of Nehemiah had probably the same origin as Ezra, the compiler using the memoirs of Nehemiah as he had used the memoirs of Ezra, "Had Nehemiah himself been the compiler, he would never have interrupted his own narrative by the section vii. 73 b–x. 39, leaving the substance of vii. 1–5 incomplete; nor should we have been left in ignorance as to the length of his governorship, nor, as has before been pointed out, would the reference in Neh. xii. 26, 47 to 'the days of Nehemiah' have been found on either side of a passage (vss. 27–43) containing the autobiographical words of Nehemiah himself."— Ryle. III. Time. See Introduction to Ezra. IV. Uses. "So far as their religious significance is concerned, the teaching of these books is of especial value in reference to (1) The Faithfulness of the Divine Promise, (2) The Discipline of Disappointment, (3) The Hallowing of Common Life, (4) The Preparation for the Messianic Age."— Ryle.

Character of Nehemiah.— The memoirs of Nehemiah show him to have been a man of strong feeling, resolute perseverance and great energy. He was a man whose character would easily have excited the respect and the sympathy of the court at Susa. He had evidently won the affection of Artaxerxes. In reply to his favorite cupbearer's request the king granted him permission to proceed to Jerusalem as Governor and to rebuild the walls of the city. He further provided him with a body-guard of Persian troops, and with letters of introduction to the Satraps and other officials on the W. of the Euphrates. All the energy and resolution of Nehemiah were needed to carry the proposed task to a satisfactory completion. He was vehemently opposed by the Samaritans, who doubtless felt that a last effort must be made to prevent a fortified Jerusalem from overshadowing every rival town in Palestine. Threats of force, hints of royal displeasure, and treacherous overtures, alike failed to divert Nehemiah from his purpose. They only succeeded in revealing to him how seriously disaffection prevailed within the city, and how few shared to the full that stricter view of the Jewish religion, which he, in common with Ezra, deemed to be required of every sincere worshipper of Jehovah.— Ryle.

Synopsis.

(According to Horne.)

Part I. The departure of Nehemiah from Shushan with a royal commission to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem .....i., ii.

Part II. Account of the building of the walls.....ii. 12–20, iii.–v

Part III. Nehemiah's first reformation.

Sect. 1. Those who returned and their offerings..... vii. 5–72

Sect. 2. Reading of the Law, and the Feast of Tabernacles.....viii.

Sect. 3. The Fast and the Covenant, ix., x.

Sect. 4. Sundry Lists, etc., Completion of the Wall ....xi. xii.

Part IV. Second reformation of Nehemiah on his second return to Jerusalem, and his correction of abuses which had crept in during his absence .....xiii.

(According to Wright.)

Part. I. The Commission and the Journey of Nehemiah .....i.–ii. 10

Part. II. The Rebuilding of the Walls, ii. 11–vii. 73

Part. III. The Restoration of Religion.

(a) Solemn Reading of the Law..viii. 1–12

(b) Feast of Tabernacles..... viii. 13–18

(c) The Great Confession.....ix.

(d) Sealing of the Covenant... .....x.

(e) List of Returned Exiles. ..xi. xii. 1–26

(f) Dedication of the Walls...xii. 27–xiii. 3

(g) Correction of Divers Abuses ..xiii. 4–31

B. C. 445.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

Nehemiah hears of the state of Jerusalem

1—3. (1) The words, R. V., margin, "the history." "No other historical book commences in this manner, and we may best account for the introduction of the clause by the consideration that 'Nehemiah' having been originally appended to 'Ezra,' it marked the point at which a new narrative began by a new author." — Pulp. Com. Chisleu,[a] the winter month. in . . year,[b] of Artaxerxes Longimanus. Shushan, or Susa. the palace, R. V., margin "the castle." On the Choapes, ab. 200 ms. S. E. of Babylon; the principal winter residence of ks. of Persia.[c] (2) Hanani, brother or near relative, ch. vii. 2; not the priest mentioned, ch. xii. 36. of Judah, R. V., "out of J.," ref. to the place rather than the nationality. I asked, etc., Neh. high in office, had not lost his patriotism. (3) province,[d] Judæa. affliction . . reproach, "this 'affliction and reproach' is something quite distinct from the humiliation of being subject to foreign rulers, as in ix. 37. The 'affliction' denotes 'the evil plight' within the walls; the 'reproach,' the scornful attitude of enemies without," and this in spite of Ezra's 13 yrs. of effort. This news was unexpected to Neh. wall,[e] etc., in the same state as left by Nebuchadnezzar 142 years before.

God in storms. — Peace is the centre of the universe. The God of peace is undisturbed by tempest; albeit He is in all storms as their master and guide. I. He is in all material storms. 1. He commands them; 2. He uses them. II. He is in all moral storms. 1. He is in the conflict of man with man; 2. He is in all conflicts of man with himself.

God's Providence. — The trees are adapted to the demands of their position. The fir of the northern hills defies the wintry blast by reason of its strong roots which penetrate the crevices of the soil. The tall palms send their roots down three feet into the earth, and then spread out, securing a firm anchorage, and are able to stand the sweep of the desert winds. The roots of the pine are spread over the surface, but it grows in less exposed situation. The mangrove which fringes the estuaries and lagoons of the tropics, exposed to the tides, on a shifting soil, supports itself by sending roots from its trunk and lower branches down into the muddy ground, so that the whole has the appearance of a tree propped up by artificial stakes. We may infer that a like adjustment of strength to situation pervades the moral world. — Hom. Com.

a Ezra x. 9.

b B.C. 445, 91 years aft. decree of Cyrus (Ezra i. 1), 71 yrs. aft. ded. of temp. (vi. 15), 13 yrs. aft. commis. of Ezra. By Bede, Usher, Hengstenberg, Ld. A. Hervey, this 20th of A. long regarded as the begin. of Daniel's weeks.

c Ecbatana, Ezra vi. 2, the summer residence.

d Ezra v. 8.

e Ne. ii. 17; 2 Ki. xxv. 10.

Nehemiah's prayer

4—6. (4) sat . . wept . . fasted, vivid picture of true patriot mourning over the fall of his country. prayed, turns in his sorrow to the God of all consolation. (5) O . . heaven,[f] the Omnipresent and Almighty One. that . . mercy,[g] "Neh., like Ezr., adopts words of Pentateuch." "On the Divine side, the keeping of the covenant consisted in showing 'mercy.'" On the human side covenant relations are sustained by the obedience born of love. (6) Let . . attentive, ref. to anc. promise,[h] and Sol.'s prayer.[i] I . . house, he identified himself with his sinning people. Lange suggests that these words imply that Neh. was of the house of Dav. Vs. 11 strengthens the supposition, for Eastern despots loved to have men of royal blood wait upon them.

Prayer — It is related of an ancient king that he never granted a petition that was offered with a trembling hand because it marked a want of confidence in his clemency. "Have faith in God" (Mark xi. 22). One of the holiest and most devoted of modern missionaries, who after surmounting almost insuperable obstacles, at length completed his translations of the Scriptures into a language of surpassing difficulty, inscribed upon the last page of his manuscript these words: — "I give it, as the result of long experience, that prayer and pains, with faith in Christ Jesus, will enable a man to do anything."

f Ne. ii. 4; Ezr. i. 2; Da. ii. 37.

g De. vii. 9.

h Le. xxvi. 40-45.

i 1 Ki. viii. 46–52.

"Wandering thoughts in prayer are like vagrants; the best way to rid the country of the one, and the heart of the other, is to give them the law —the lash I mean." — A divine of the 17th century.

7—9. (7) We . . thee, Neh. associated national disaster with sin. (8) Remember . . Moses, etc., "another ref. to Pentateuch."[j] (9) turn, R. V., "return," i. e. turn the back upon the former wrong direction. place . . there, R. V., "to cause my name to dwell there," i. e. Jerusalem and the temple.

Repentance. — Like Janus Bifrons, the Roman god looking two ways, a true repentance not only bemoans the past, but takes heed to the future. Repentance, like the lights of a ship at her bow and her stern, not only looks to the track she has made, but to the path before her. A godly sorrow moves the j Le. xxvi. 33, 39–45; De. iv. 25–31; xxviii. 64; xxx. 1–4.

"Prayer to have power and prevail must ask for the glory of God; and one can only do this as he is living for God's glory."—Andrew Murray.

B. C. 445.

Christian to weep over the failure of the past, but his eyes are not so blurred with tears, but that he can look watchfully into the future, and, profiting by the experience of former failures, make straight paths for his feet. — Pilkington.

10, 11. (10) Now . . people, "the ground on which the privilege of the promise is claimed." whom . . hand, Neh. looks back beyond the restoration fr. Babylon to the original Exodus fr. Egypt. (11) who desire, more correctly with R. V., "who delight." thy name, i. e., God's character and attributes. day, at this crisis. this man, the king, Artaxerxes Longimanus. For . . cup bearer,[a] lit. one who gave him to drink. A position of great importance, similar to the prominence now enjoyed by the great ministers of state. Neh. was one, but not the only one of such.

The king's cup-bearer. — I. The secular calling of Nehemiah did not lessen his piety. II. The secular position of Nehemiah did not affect his sympathy with his countrymen. III. The secular position of Nehemiah gave him an opportunity for displaying his piety and assisting his countrymen. Remember — 1. God specially honors those who serve Him; 2. We shall be the better able to resist the temptation of our secular position by serving God.

Nehemiah's prayer. — When we glance back over the prayer as a whole, we are struck with its order and progress. As in our Lord's model prayer, the first part is absorbed with thoughts of God; it is after uplifting His thoughts to heaven that the worshiper comes down to human need. Then a large place is given to sin. This comes first in the consideration of man after the worshiper has turned his eyes from the contemplation of God and felt the contrast of darkness after light. Lastly, the human subjects of the prayer begin in the wider circle of the whole nation; only at the very last, in little more than a sentence, Nehemiah brings forward his own personal petition. — Exp. Bib.

The power of prayer. — One of the first ships in which prayer meetings were held on the River Thames was bound from Shields to London, with a cargo of coals. On her passage she was overtaken by a dreadful gale of wind. There were two boys on board, one of whom, named Jack, cried very much, and said, "Oh, I shall be drowned; I shall never see my mother any more!" The other boy, whose name was Dick, went to him, and seemingly unmoved at the awful situation they were in, said, "Don't cry, Jack, I am not afraid; don't you know that they always pray for our ship in the river? It is now Tuesday evening, eight o'clock; there is a prayer meeting on board some ship, and I know they will not forget us." The remark of this lad fell upon the captain's ear, as he was standing by, almost in despair: it roused him to fresh exertions, and he was enabled to cast his ship and crew on the mercy of that God who holds the winds in His fist, and the waves in the hollow of His hand. In a short time the wind veered a point or two in their favor; they got the ship under management, and in forty-eight hours she was safely moored in the Thames.

[a] "This was providential; for it is noted of the Persian kings that they were always inclined to grant requests wh. were preferred to them at banquets; of which we have evidence in the case of Esther."—Wordsworth.

"God has three sorts of servants in the world; some are slaves, and serve him from a principle of fear; others are hirelings, and serve Him for the sake of wages; and the last are sons, and serve Him under the influence of love."—Secker.

"I fear John Knox's prayers more than an army of ten thousand men."—Mary, Qn. of Scotland.

"Want felt, help desired, with faith to obtain it, is prayer."—Adam.

"Prayer is our speech to God: when we read, God speaks to us; when we pray, we speak to God."—Augustine.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

Nehemiah's sadness is noticed by the king

1—3. (1) Nisan, or Abib,[b] the 1st mo. wine . . him, some think on a festal day. Now . . presence, it was unbecoming to appear in the royal presence with any signs of sorrow.[c] "It seems necessary to assume that Nehemiah chose his opportunity and deliberately gave occasion for the king's inquiry. After his prayer to God (ch. i. 5–11), he had been able to resolve upon his course of action." (2) sad, lit. evil, ill-favored. afraid, "he has looked sad in the king's presence. He is about to ask permission to quit the court. These are both sins against the fundamental doctrine of Persian court life, that to bask in the light of the royal countenance is the height of felicity. Will the king be displeased, refuse his request, dismiss him from his post, cast him into prison, or will he pardon his rudeness and allow his request?"—Pulp. Com. (3) Let . . ever,[d] customary salutation. the . . sepulchres,[e] lit. the house of the graves of my fathers. Another touch indicating that Neh. was of the tribe of Judah.

Unselfish sorrow.— We have been told about a man who in the time of the Punic wars had put a chaplet on his empty head and put his head out of the window to look at the difficulties, the struggles, the hazards of the people, and we know how the Romans treated that man: they took his chaplet off his head, and would have put his head itself in great danger if the head had

[b] Est. iii. 7.

[c] Est. iv. 2.

[d] Da. ii. 4; iii. 9.

[e] "This ref. to their graves implies a belief in their resurrection. cf. Gen. xlix. 29; l. 24, 25."—Wordsworth.

B. C. 445.

been worth taking off. Ay, poor fool! could he put on his little green chaplet and say, "I am happy, what do I care for what is occurring in the commonwealth? I have bread enough: why should I think about those who are hungering? my thinking about them cannot help them."—Peop. Bib.

Nehemiah's request of the king

4—6. (4) For . . request, the king in a gracious humor. Nehemiah might have sought his own advantage. (5) said . . king,[a] etc., having prayed to be guided what to request, and that he might not be denied. (6) queen,[b] queen consort; supposed to be Q. Damaspia.[c] sitting, they usually reclined in the East. I . . time,[c] Neh. did not leave Jerus. till 12 yrs. aft. Prob. his time was frequently extended.

Prayer before choosing.— Two things strike us here. 1. A rare opportunity for worldly advancement; 2. A rare treatment of such an opportunity. Now the principle involved in such an obligation—that prayer should precede choosing—is of universal obligation. Three things show the wisdom of this. I. God alone knows what is best for us. II. God always desires what is best for us, and that He desires our happiness is clear—1. From the capacity of enjoyment with which He has endowed us; 2. From the elements of happiness with which the world abounds; 3. From the mission of His only begotten Son. III. God, in answer to prayer, is ever ready to bestow what is best for us. Conclusion:—Let us ever act on the principle that prayer should precede choice.

Secret prayer.— As the tender dew that falls during the silent night makes the grass, and herbs, and flowers to flourish and grow more abundantly than great showers of rain that fall in the day, so secret prayer will more abundantly cause the sweet herbs of grace and holiness to flourish and grow in the soul, than all those more public and open duties of religion, which too often are mingled with the sun and wind of pride and hypocrisy.—Brooks.

[a] "This form of speech, so frequent in mouth of Neh., was no affected strain of courtship, but a just expression of duty; otherwise that religious man would never have used it."—Bp. Sanderson.

[b] Heb. shegal. Ps. xlv. 10; Da. v. 2, 3, 23; only occurs in these places.

[c] Ne. v. 14; xiii. 6.

he asks letters to the governors

7—8. (7) governors, or satraps. river, Euphrates. (8) forest, prob. near Jerus.; perhaps Ætam, 7 ms. S. of Jerus.[d] Heb. word signifies "Paradise," i. e. a place fenced in and guarded as a forest and game preserve for the royal use. Such a well-wooded spot was of great value in Palestine. Neh. desires lumber for the building of the castle, the wall, the governor's residence. palace, R. V., "castle." prob. the Roman Turris Antonia. to the house, i. e. to the temple. according . . me,[e] the king appears to have tried in this to reward Neh. for his administration of affairs. But his success was accord. to the favor of God.

Gratitude.— Prayer and praise are twin services. They should always go hand in hand. Praise is the fragrance breathed from the flower of joy. He is happiest who is thankfullest. This lesson taught by the brute creation. Morose and unkindly animals express as little of enjoyment as they do of gratefulness by their snarling and growling sounds. The beasts and birds of night are rarely gladsome. But the lambs which sport and gambol in their green pastures, and the birds which in the early morning wake the echoes of the woodland with their songs, all tell most unmistakably that they are happy. How much more then must it be the blessedness of man "to look through nature, up to nature's God," and glorify the Giver in all his varied gifts.—Stowell.

[d] Jos. Ant. viii. 7, 3.

[e] Ezr. v. 5. vii. 6, 9, 28.

It has been noted that after this grant of the king Persian affairs—which had not gone well in Egypt, etc.,—prospered.—Wordsworth·see also Abp. Usher. Annales, 110.

Nehemiah arrives at Jerusalem, and delivers his credentials

9—11. (9) letters, vs. 8. sent . . me, Neh. went as an officer of the king. (10) Sanballat, (sin giveth life) sin was the moon god of the Assyrians Horonite,[f] a dweller in the military stronghold of Beth-horon, 12 ms. N. W of Jerus. Tobiah,[g] (pleasing to Jehovah). servant, Lange remarks: "Tob. was prob. a renegade Jew, who had become a slave among the Ammonites, and, by his talents and cunning, had risen into prominence, and was now chief adviser of Sanballat." Ammonite, hence no friend of the Jews. grieved, or enraged. (11) So . . days, resting, and observing; and prob. hearing conflicting accs. of matters. The enemy beg. to intrigue.

Envy.— The infatuated Caligula slew his brother, because he was a beautiful young man. Mutius a citizen of Rome, was reputed to be of such an envious and malevolent disposition, that Publius, one day observing him to be very sad, said, "Either some great evil hath happened to Mutius, or some great good to another." "Dionysius the Tyrant," says Plutarch, "out of envy punished Philoxenius the musician, because he could sing: and Plato, the philosopher, because he could dispute better than himself." Cambyses killed [f] Jos. x. 10.

[g] He was allied to some of the chief Jews, hence many favored him. There was also some connection betw. him and Eliashib, the H. priest (xiii. 4-9).

B. C. 445

his brother Smerdis, because he could draw a stronger bow than himself or any of his party. — Hom. Com.

Nehemiah's night inspection of the walls

12—16. (12) arose,[a] Neh. would see for himself; a time when the foe was not present with plausible tales. (13) gate . . valley,[b] per. nr. present Jaffa Gate, on the W.; it led to Valley of Hinnom. King Azziah had fortified this gate. dragon well, prob. W. of Jerus., nr. Gihon. "The name is doubtless connected with some sanctuary at this fountain in prehistoric times, when 'living water' was associated with the worship of a deity often represented by a 'dragon.'" dung port, rubbish gate, prob. not far fr. Jaffa Gate. (14) gate . . fountain, fronting upon the pool of Siloam. king's pool, i. e. of Solomon; S. of Moriah. So-called bec. it watered the king's garden. no . . pass, the mass of ruins was so great that progress was impossible. (15) brook, Kidron. (16) rulers . . did, the information thus obtained in the dusky night more reliable than their daylight communications. They must have wondered at his information. told it, i. e. the plans for rebuilding the walls. rest . . work, speaking by way of anticipation of those who were to rebuild the walls.

Nehemiah, the model worker. — I. He works thoughtfully. II. He works independently. 1. The opinions of others cannot determine our duty; 2. The opinions of others may embarrass us in duty. III. He worked influentially. 1. The people saw that he understood the matter. 2. The people saw that he was thoroughly in earnest. IV. He worked heroically. 1. Look at the sacrifices he made; 2. Look at the enemies he encountered: 3. Look at the labor he effected. V. He worked religiously. 1. His impulses to act he ascribed to God; 2. His rule of action he derived from Him. — Thomas.

The power of example. — See what one man can do! One man can set fire to a thousand: Cæsar was more than all Cæsar's legions. When the Philistines saw that their champion was dead, they fled. We cannot all be Goliaths; we cannot all be Cæsars and Hannibals; we cannot all be inspirers; but we can all follow the great inspiration of Biblical testimony, and the great lead of the patriotic philanthropic class of noble and godly men. Though we be but a cipher, yet with a unit at our head that unit shall strike individual value into that which of itself is of minor — of almost infinitesimal consequence. Who will arise and build? The people did; Nehemiah did. — Peop. Bib.

Prudent silence. — When Homer makes his heroes to march, he gives them silence for their guide; on the contrary, he makes cowards to babble and chatter like cranes. The one pass along like great rivers, letting their streams glide softly with silent majesty; the others only murmur like bubbling brooks. A sign of not being valiant is to strive to seem valiant. — Hom. Com.

Nehemiah tells the rulers of his intention

17, 18. (17) Then . . them, etc.,[c] it is implied that Neh. called an assembly of the people and unfolded his plan. "In rebuilding the city walls Nehemiah was accomplishing two good objects; he was fortifying the place, and he was restoring its organic unity. The two advantages would be mutually helpful, because the weakness of Jerusalem was destroying the peculiar character of her life." — Exp. B. Their wonder must have been great. They had a man among them who would not trust to mere report. (18) they said, etc., encouraged by this display of energy, and his royal commission. So . . work,[d] by preparation, and prayer, and mutual congratulations.

The ruins of Jerusalem. — I. Show in what way our position reminds us of Nehemiah's times. II. What his example should teach us. 1. Sorrow; 2. The spirit of sacrifice; 3. The greatness of his faith. — Bersier.

Strength in unity. — Standing one day before a beehive, Gotthold observed with delight how the little honey-birds departed and arrived, and from time to time returned home laden with the spoils of the flowers. Meanwhile a great yellow hornet, the wolf among bees, came buzzing up in eager quest of prey. As it was evening-tide, and the bees after the heat of the day had settled about the mouth of the hive to breathe the cool air, it was amusing to observe that their fierce adversary lacked courage to attack their combined host and serried ranks. True, he often advanced for the purpose, but seeing how densely and compactly they were sitting, was forced to retreat empty-handed. At last, a bee, somewhat belated, arrived by itself; and on this straggler he instantly seized, fell with it to the earth, and instantly devoured it. — Hom. Com.

[a] Perh. Ps. cii. was written at this time.

[b] 2 Ch. xxvi. 9; Ne. iii. 13.

"Earnestness is all heartedness. The difference between an earnest man and others is just this, that while they do things coldly, perfunctorily, without interest, because they have to be done, and for no other reason, he puts his whole soul into his labor, does it with hearty good will, with a vigorous, healthy zeal and because he loves to do it." — C. M. Merry.

A poor woman was offered half a sovereign if she would not pray all day. She rejected it, saying, "No, sir, not for all the worlds this side heaven; but I'll just go ask the Lord to help you to believe on Him; and then you'll love prayer as much as I do."

[c] Ne. i. 3; Ps. xliv. 13; lxxix. 4; Jer. xxiv. 9; Ez. v. 14, 15; xxii. 4.

[d] 2 Sa. ii. 7.

The missionary John Williams once said that two little words make the greatest mountains of difficulty melt—"try and trust."

19, 20. (19) Geshem, called also Gashmu;[a] the 3d important enemy of Neh. "may have been an independent sheikh possessing authority in Idumea, or in the desert country adjoining upon Ammon; but it seems quite as likely that he was merely the head of a body of Arab troops maintained by Sanballat at Samaria (ch. iv. 7)."[b] — Pulp. Com. laughed,[c] tried effect of ridicule. The work so great, the builders so few, and their means so small. will . . king, they turn from scorn to charge of rebellion. (20) answered, etc., a reply marked by faith in God, by lofty courage, and a bold counter-charge.[d] "Nehemiah renouncing connection with the Samaritans, affirms that they have no share in the present community, no ground for claiming it in the future, no memorial or justification of such claim in the past." — Cam. B.

The zeal of Nehemiah. — Whoever engages diligently in the work of God must expect trials. But Nehemiah encouraged himself in the Lord. It is my intention — I. To set before you the graces he exercised. 1. His confidence; 2. His zeal. Admiring the virtues of this eminent saint, I proceed — II. To commend them to your imitation. Be ye, my brethren, followers of him — 1. In reference to God's work in the world at large; 2. In reference to God's work in your own souls. — Simeon.

Ridicule. — The Moravian missionaries in Greenland endured much mockery and opposition from the rude inhabitants, when communicating to them the knowledge of Divine truth. When the missionaries told them they meant to instruct them about the will of God, they were met by the taunt, "Fine fellows, indeed, to be our teachers! We know very well you yourselves are ignorant, and must be taught by others!" If they tarried more than one night with them, they used all their endeavors to entice them to participate in their wanton and dissolute sports; and when they failed in this, they mocked and mimicked their reading, singing, and praying, practising every kind of droll antic; or they accompanied their devotions by drumming or howling hideously. Nor did the poverty of the brethren escape their keenest ridicule, or most cutting sarcasms. They even pelted them with stones, climbed upon their shoulders, destroyed their goods, and maliciously tried to spoil their boat, or drive it out to sea. — Whitecross. Ridicule. — A poor man who had heard the preaching of the gospel, and to whom it had been greatly blessed, was the subject of much profane ridicule and jesting amongst his neighbors. On being asked if these persecutions did not sometimes make him ready to give up his profession of religion, he replied, "No, I recollect that our good minister once said in his sermon, that if we were so foolish as to permit such people to laugh us out of our religion, till at last we dropped into hell, they could not laugh us out again." Admiral Colpoys relates that when he first left his lodgings to join his ship as a midshipman, his landlady presented him with a Bible and a guinea, saying, "God bless you, and prosper you, my lad; and as long as you live never suffer yourself to be laughed out of your money or your prayers." The young sailor carefully followed this advice through life, and had reason to rejoice that he had done so. — Hom. Com.

B. C. 415.

Sanballat and others scorn the undertaking

[a] Neh. vi. 6.

[b] Neh. iv. 7.

[c] Ps. xliv. 13; lxxix. 4; lxxx. 6.

[d] Ezr. iv. 3

Faith never reasons; she acts from her own point of view, and leaves results with God.

"A great many professed Christians have no other idea of religion than that it is the means of getting to heaven when they die. As to doing anything for God while they live, it does not enter into their plans. I tell you, my brethren, I do not believe there is one in five hundred of such professors that will reach heaven; for there is magnanimity in true religion that is above all such contemptible meanness."—L. Beecher.

"The few that pray at all pray oft amiss; and seeking grace to improve the prize they hold would urge a wiser suit than asking more."—Cowper.

"Heav'n's never deaf but when man's heart is dumb."—Quarles.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1—3. (1) Eliashib[e] (God restores), son of Joiakim, son of Jeshua. Driven by force of public opinion to act, although completely out of harmony with the spirit of Ezra and Neh. see xiii. 4. sheep gate,[f] E. side of Jerus., nr. present St. Stephen's Gate. Prob. opened into some part of the Temple, through wh. the sheep and goats for sacrifice entered the city. sanctified it, the only gate sanctified. The completion of the portion of the priests was marked by a special sacred function. Meah (hundred), betw. S. gate and tower of Hananeel[g] (graciously vouchsafed by God), at N. E. corner of city. A well-known building about midway bet. the sheep gate and the fish gate. (2) next, lit. at his hand. the . . Jericho, repairing the part that looked toward their own country. Zaccur (mindful), a good name for a builder. Imri[h] (promise of the Lord). (3) fish gate,[i] on N. side, nr. the tower. Hassenaah (thorny), prob. the name of a town — Senaah,[j] some of whose men built this gate. locks, R. V., "the bolts." "The city gates of ancient times turned upon pivots in sockets instead of upon hinges; and we may conjecture that the word rendered 'locks' denoted that which held a gate in its place, while 'the bars' fastened it to the side-posts."

Hebrew names. — The Hebrew names were nearly all significant. Some-names and order of the builders

[e] Ne. xii. 10.

[f] Jo. v. 2.

[g] Jer. xxxi. 38; Zec. xiv. 10.

[h] 1 Ch. ix. 4.

[i] Nr. fish market (xiii. 16), frequented by fishmongers fr the north, i. e. Tyre, 2 Ch. xxxiii. 14.

[j] Ezr. ii. 35; Ne. vii. 38.

B. C. 415.

"At the workingman's house hunger looks in, but dares not enter; nor will the bailiff or the constable enter; for industry pays debts, but despair increaseth them."—Franklin.

"Absence of occupation is not rest, a mind quite vacant is a mind distress'd."—Cowper.

times commemoration was in a name. Sometimes it uttered a testimony. Sometimes a prophecy stirred in it. The very name of a man sometimes shone like a burning lamp in the darkness of an evil time. When need was, a new name was taken or given, in addition to, or in place of, the original one, and borne as men bear a banner or speak a watchword. — Alexander Raleigh. Preservation of names. — The Early Church preserved the names of her confessors and martyrs in the diptychs which were expressly provided for use in public worship, that God might be praised for their noble lives, and that the living might be stimulated to follow their example. — Exp. Bib. Handicraft. — It is not a mean thing to labor with the hand. There is a dignity in every duty, and especially in this. Since the Carpenter of Nazareth toiled at his bench and made tools for Galilean peasants, labor has had a dignity, and artisans an elevation, and workshops a consecration. After this, the lantern-making of King Æsopus, the ship-building of the Czar Peter, or the watch-making of the Emperor Charles V., could do little to exalt it.— Steel.

a Ezr. viii. 33.

b Perh. it was he who stood by Ezr. when he read the law, Ne. viii. 4.

c Head of one of the courses, 1 Ch. xxiv. 10.

d 1 Ch. iv. 12, 13; Ezr. vii. 2.

e Exit for Anathoth, Gibeah, Samaria, etc.

4–7. (4) Meremoth (heights), a priest.[a] Urijah[b] (flame of Jehovah). Koz[c] (thorn). Meshullam (friend), i. e. of God; also called Shallum[d] (retribution). Berechiah (whom Jehovah hath blessed). Meshezabee (delivered of God). Zadok (just). Baana (son of affliction); perh. the same as in x. 27. (5) Tekoites (tent-dwellers, or trumpet-blowers); about 9 miles due south of Jerus. their Lord R. V., "their lord," i. e. Nehemiah. "The fashionable part of Jerus. was in virtual league with the enemies of God. These Tekoite nobles resolutely held aloof." (6) old gate,[e] perh. a remnant of anc. Jebusite fortifications. R. V., margin, "the gate of the old city." "When the fortifications coincided with an earlier and thicker wall, it was called the broad wall (vs. 8)" On the N. betw. fish g. and g. of Ephraim. (7) men . . Mizpah, fr. 4 to 5½ m. to the N. W., this part faced that point. throne. . river, R. V., "wh. appertained to the throne of the governor beyond the river." To designate a particular Gibeon and Mizpah. As we would say Philadelphia, N. Y., to distinguish from Phil., Pa.

Idle people. — (See Neh. ii. 16, v. 17, whence it seems that Nehemiah got as little real sympathy as help from them; and that they employed their "hours of idleness" in laying taxes upon others.) — I. A solitary exception. Some who did work. Who? "Nobles," men probably of larger influence and information, might have done much. II. An implied censure. Note was taken of the idle ones; they were not passed over because they were nobles; their example injurious, their time misspent. Learn: — Let us seek to be one of those to whom the Master will say, "Well done."

Where there is light it will show itself; where there is leaven it will work; and where there is life it will act.

Pride. — Beautiful is the way in which modern society is returning in many respects to humility in regard to practical things. A Prince of Wales sends his boys to the routine of a sailor apprenticeship; a Duke of Argyle sends his son to a house of business; a gentleman's son doffs his neat coat and stoops down, hammer in hand, in the engineer's yard. In this there is a more hopeful sight than when the proud nobles of Jerusalem disdained the rough work which the God-inspired Nehemiah designed. — Hom. Com. Personal effort. — According to Christ's law, every Christian is to be active in spreading the faith, which was delivered not to the ministers but to the saints, to every one of them, that they might maintain it and spread it according to the gift which the Spirit has given them. Shall I venture a parable? A certain band of warlike knights had been exceedingly victorious in all their conflicts. They were men of valor and of indomitable courage; they had carried everything before them, and subdued province after province for their king. But on a sudden they said in the council-chamber, "We have at our head a most valiant warrior, one whose arm is stout enough to smite down fifty of his adversaries; would it not be better if, leaving a few such as he to go out to the fight, the mere men-at-arms, who make up the ordinary ranks, were to rest at home? We should be much more at our ease; our horses would not so often be covered with foam, nor our armor be bruised; the many would enjoy abundant leisure, and great things would be done by the valiant few." Now, the foremost champions, with fear and trembling, undertook the task and went to the conflict, and they fought well, as the rolls of fame can testify: to the best of their ability they unhorsed their foes and performed great exploits. But still, from the very hour in which that scheme was planned and carried out no city was taken, no province was conquered. Then the knights met "Condemn the fault, but not the actor of it."—Shakespeare.

In the museum at Rotterdam is the first piece painted by the renowned Rembrandt. It is rough, without marks of genius or skill, and uninteresting, except to show that he began as low down as the lowest. In the same gallery is the masterpiece of the same artist, counted of immense value. What years of patient study and practice intervene between the two pieces! If all have not genius, all have the power to work; and this is greater than genius.

together, and said, "How is this? Our former prestige is departed, our ranks are broken, our pennons are trailed in the dust; what is the cause of it?" When out spoke the champion, and said, "Doubtless it is so, for a reason clear and plain. How did you think that a slender band could do the work of all the thousand? When you all went to the fight, and every man took his share, we dashed upon the foe like an avalanche, and crushed him beneath our tramp; but now that you stay at home, and put us, who are but a handful, to fight every battle, how can you expect that great things should be done?" So each man resolved to put on his helmet, and his armor once again, and hasten to the battle, and lo! the angel of victory returned. If we are to subdue the earth, every one of us must join in the fight. We must not exempt a single soldier of the cross, neither man nor woman, rich nor poor; but each must fight for the Lord Jesus according to his ability, that His kingdom may come, and that His will may be done in earth even as it is in heaven. We shall see great things when all agree to this and put it in practice. — Spurgeon.

B. C. 445.

"A favorite illustration among the Arabs of extreme idleness is the man that would not turn his head over on his pillow though the muddy water leaking through the roof fell plump into his eye."— Thompson.

8—12. (8) goldsmiths, of whom there must have been some kind of guild. The large portion undertaken indicates their great wealth. apothecaries,[a] compounders of spices and perfumes. fortified,[b] should prob. be "left out," i. e. they omitted a pt. of the anc. city, and restricted the circuit within a narrower range.[c] broad wall, "it is possible that this was the portion of 400 cubits which Amaziah pulled down (see 2 Ki. xiv. 13; 2 Ch. xxv. 23) with the view of rendering Jerusalem defenseless on the N., and that this was the portion which Hezekiah took pains to strengthen and renew (2 Chr. xxxii. 5)." (9) ruler . . Jerusalem, or half of the district round Jerus. (10) over . . house, the part wh. faced his own house,[d] vs. 23. (11) other piece, i. e. "another portion." (12) his daughters, of doubtful meaning; some consider it used in a technical sense of "village" or "country towns" other interpret it naturally, and find in it another evidence of personal effort on the part of all.

Examples of earnestness. — When Dr. Chalmers occupied the chair of philosophy in the College of St. Andrews, he used to gather into his own house, each Sabbath evening, the poorest and most ignorant of the vagrant children of the neighborhood; and his biography states that, for that audience, he prepared himself as carefully, with his pen in his hand, as for his class in the university. So, on a winter day, through frost, and in the face of a driving snowstorm, you might have seen him walking five miles to fulfil an appointment of religious worship with a little company of rustic people at Kilmany; and there, amid some illiterate, shivering cottagers, too few for a church or chapel, met in a damp room — an audience that many men would have thought it expedient to dismiss at once, "on account of the weather," and many more would have put off with some crude, unpremeditated talk — he preached as labored and as eloquent a sermon as would have moved to rapture and wonder the learning and fashion of Glasgow or of London. It is only of such earnest stuff as this that the truly commanding persons in any of the elevated ranges of action or of learning are made. Woman's opportunity. — The world is open to Christian woman as it never has been before. She must write, for a literature must be created for the women of the East. She must teach, for the convert must be trained and the heathen won. She must evangelize, for her feet alone can carry the good tidings of peace to her sisters in their seclusion.— F. M. Thorburn.

a Ex. xxx. 33; 1 Sa. viii. 13; Song iii. 6.

b The word, wh. occurs more than 200 times in O. T. is only here and in vi. 2 rendered fortify.

c So Wordsworth and Ryle.

d "In the ch. of God, every man ought to endeavor to build up a wall of Christian virtues over against his own house, and to fortify his own heart ag. the assaults of his spiritual enemy."— Bede.

The total loss of time in pure contented idleness, needless sleep, and painful, listlessness, is to be condemned without mercy as the most unqualified guilt.

Idleness is a great social crime which carries about with it not only its own punishment, but all suffer who come within the pale of its association.

13—15. (15) valley gate, nr. Ch. of Holy Sepulchre; the main entrance in the W. wall. Zanoah,[e] (marsh) 11 m. S. W. of Jerus., now Zânû'a. a thousand cubits, prob. this section of the wall needed but little restoration, so that a small party could easily undertake it. dung gate, ii. 13. (14) Beth-haccerem,[f] (house of the vineyard). (15) gate . . fountain, W. of city and S. of Valley Gate; nr. Jaffa Gate. part = district. of . . Siloah,[g] S. E. of the city. and . . David, R. V., "even unto." etc. "Remains of these stairs have been discovered by Schick and Guthe a little to the east of the Pool of Siloam, as well as a little to the south of the Virgin's Spring (but within the line of the old wall), so that they must have run up the eastern slope of Zion, and ended not very far from the square in front of the water gate." — Sayce.

The king's garden. — I. This brings to mind the garden of Paradise which the Great King prepared for man. II. The garden of Gethsemane is another e Jos. xv. 34.

f Part of = district of.

g A subterranean water course, 1,750 ft. long, fr. Fount of the Virgin, supplies it, see Robinson, i. 507.

B. C. 445.

"A man should inure himself to voluntary labor, and not give up to indulgence and pleasure; as they beget no good constitution of body, nor knowledge of the mind." — Socrates.

garden which reminds us how the sin that spoiled the first garden was atoned. III. Our heart should be a garden in which the fruits of holiness, the results of that atonement, should be found. IV. The church is as a well-watered garden. — Spurgeon.

Energy. — There is a famous speech recorded of an old Norseman, thoroughly characteristic of the Teuton. "I believe neither in idols nor demons," said he; "I put my sole trust in my own strength of body and soul." The ancient crest of a pick-axe, with the motto of "Either I will find a way or make one," was an expression of the same sturdy independence and practical materialism which to this day distinguishes the descendants of the Northmen. Indeed, nothing could be more characteristic of the Scandinavian mythology than that it had a god with a hammer. A man's character is seen in small matters; and from even so slight a test as the mode in which a man wields a hammer his energy may in some measure be inferred.— Smiles.

Laziness grows on people; it begins in cobwebs, and ends in iron chains. The more business a man has, the more he is able to do, for he learns to save his time.

Work for Heaven. —

If thou have thrown a glorious thought Upon life's common ways,
Should other men the gain have caught,
Fret not to lose the praise.

Great thinker! often shalt thou find,
While folly plunders fame,
To thy rich store the crowd is blind,
Nor knows thy very name.

In a workhouse at Hamburg, idlers are punished by being suspended in a basket above the tables, so that they can see and smell the things provided for the industrious, but are not allowed to taste them.

What matter that? if thou uncoil
The soul that God has given —
Not in the world's mean eye to toil,
But in the sight of Heaven?

If thou art true, yet in thee lurks
For fame a human sigh,
To Nature go and see how works
That handmaid of the sky.

Her own deep bounty she forgets,
Is full of germs and seeds;
Nor glorifies herself, nor sets
Her flowers above her weeds.

"A man is relieved and gay when he has put his heart into his work and done his best, but what he has said or done otherwise shall give him no peace." — Emerson.

She hides the modest leaves between;
She loves untrodden roads;
Her richest treasures are not seen
By any eye but God's.

Accept the lesson — look not for Reward — from out thee chase
All selfish ends; — and ask no more Than to fulfil thy place. — Household Words.

a Jos. xv. 58; 1 Ch. ii. 45; 2 Ch. xi. 7.

b 1 Ch. ix. 26.

c Jos. xv. 44; 1 Sa. xxiii. 1-13; 1 Ch iv. 19.

16—20. (16) half part, see vs. 9. Beth-zur,[a] (house of the rock), now Beit Sûr, ab. 15 ms. S. of Jerus. unto . . David, in Zion, but exact site is not certain. pool . . made, perhaps constructed by Hezekiah. Is. xxii. 9–11. unto . . mighty,[b] quarters of king's bodyguard. or guard of temp. (17) Keilah,[c] fortress, prob. ab. 8 ms. E. of Eleutheropolis; nr. Hebron. (18) his brethren, i. e. fr. the other half of Keilah. (19) another piece, i. e. the second piece, the first being, perh., that of vs. 17, or vs. 15, better "opposite the ascent of the armory on the corner," 2 Chr. xxvi. 9. (20) earnestly repaired, Baruch, "provoked to godly jealousy by Ezra," singled out for special praise.

Willingness to work in order to give. — A man in W——, who depended for support entirely on his own exertions, subscribed five dollars annually in support of the Bombay schools. His friends inquired, "Why he gave so much, and how he could afford it?" He replied, "I have for some time been wishing to do something for Christ's cause ; but I cannot preach, neither can I pray in public, to any one's edification, nor can I talk to people ; but I have hands, and I can work." Sepulchres. — Next to the wells of Syria, the most authentic memorials of past times are the sepulchres, and partly for the same reason. The tombs of ancient Greece and Rome lined the public roads with pillars and towers. Grassy graves and marble monuments fill the churchyards and churches of Christian Europe. But the sepulchres of Palestine were like the habitations of its earliest inhabitants, hewn out of the living limestone rock, and therefore indestructible as the rock itself. In this respect they resembled, though on a smaller scale, the tombs of Upper Egypt ; and as there the traveler of the nineteenth century is confronted with the names and records of men who lived thousands of years ago, so also in the excavations of the valleys which surround or approach Shiloh, Shechem, Bethel and Jerusalem he knows that he sees what were the last resting-places of the generations contemporary with Joshua, Samuel, and David. And the example of Egypt shows that the identification of these sepulchres even with their individual occupants is not so improbable as might be otherwise supposed. If the graves of Rameses and Osiris can still be ascertained, there is nothing improbable in the thought that the tombs of the patriarchs may have survived the lapse of twenty or thirty centuries. The rocky cave on Mount Hor must be at least the spot believed by Josephus to mark the grave of Aaron. The tomb of Joseph must be near one of the two monuments pointed out as such in the opening of the vale of Shechem. The sepulchre which is called the tomb of Rachel exactly agrees with the spot described as "a little way" from Bethlehem. The tomb of David, which was known with certainty at the time of the Christian era, may perhaps still be found under the mosque which bears his name in the modern Zion. Above all, the cave of Machpelah is concealed, beyond all reasonable doubt, by the mosque at Hebron. But, with these exceptions, we must rest satisfied rather with the general than the particular interest of the tombs of Palestine. — Stanley's Sinai and Palestine.

B. C. 445

"Nature knows no pause in progress and development, and attaches her curse on all in action." — Goethe.

"Works without faith is like a salamander without fire, or a fish without water; for though there seem to be some symptoms of life, yet they are but the presages of death." — J. Beaumont.

21—25. (21) Eliashib, the high priest, vs. 1 ; house evidently upon the wall. (22) men . . plain, of the Jordan, or plain nr. Jerus. (23) over . . house, vs. 10. (24) another piece, vs. 19. (25) tower . . house, R. V., "the tower that standeth out from the upper house of the king, which is by the court of the guard," watch-tower by the royal palace, in the fortification of the wall of the palace. by . . prison, scene of Jeremiah's confinement.[a]

[a] Jer. xxxii. 2; xxxiii. 1.

Work with God. — Too many men say: My God, I am going to work to-day in such and such a part of the vineyard; please come and help me. Our true prayer should be, Lord, where are you working to-day? Let me come and work along with you. We would be much happier if, instead of trying to fit God into our scheme, we would fit ourselves into His and be workers together with God. That is the secret of George M ller's work, he took for his motto, "Our Fellowship is with the Father." — F. B. Meyer. Work and pray. — Asa and Ira were two brothers whose farms lay side by side in a fertile intervale. When the young corn, the oats, and the barley were springing up, the weeds took advantage of the rich soil and came up with them. "Do you see," said Asa, "what a hold the weeds are taking? There is danger of their choking out the crops entirely." "Well, well, we must be resigned," said Ira. "Weeds as well as grain were a part of the Creator's plan." And he lay down for his usual afternoon doze. "I can only be resigned to what I cannot help," said Asa. So he went to work, and ploughed and hoed until the fields were clear of weeds. "Do you see, Ira?" said Asa, another morning, "the river is rising, and there is but small chance of preventing our farms from being overflowed." "Alas ! it is a judgment upon us for our sins ; and what can we do?" said Ira, throwing himself in despair upon the ground. "There are no judgments so severe as those which our own sloth brings upon us," said Asa. And he went quickly and hired workmen, with whose help he raised an embankment that withstood the flood ; while Ira witnessed with blank looks the destruction of his wealth. "There is one consolation," said he : "my children, at least, are left me." But, while Asa's sons grew up strong and virtuous men, among Ira's there was a drunkard, a gambler, and a suicide. "The ways of the Lord are not equal," said Ira to his brother. "Why are you always prospered, while I am afflicted, and my old age is disgraced?" "I only know this," replied Asa, "that heaven always helped me to meet my children's faults as I met the weeds, the caterpillars, and the flood ; and that "I shall pass through this world but once. Any good thing, therefore, that I can do, or any kindness that I can show to any human being, let me do it now. Let me not defer it or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

"Ydelnes, that is the gate of all harmes. An ydil man is like an hous that hath noone walles ; the develes may entre on every syde."—Chaucer.

B. C. 445.

I never presumed to send a petition upward without making toil my right-hand servant, the messenger of my prayer."

26—32. (26) Nethinims,[a] the meanest persons, as well as priests, etc., aided in the work. Ophel,[b] hill S. of temp. This whole verse a parenthesis. "This is intro. in order to connect the dwelling of the Nethinims with the tower just spoken of." water gate, i. e. "wh. carried off the superfluous water fr. the temple reservoirs." (27) after them, R. V., "after him," i. e. Pedaiah, vs. 25. Tekoites, vs. 5. (28) horse gate,[c] nr. S. E. of temp.[d] (29) east gate, E. of the temp. a temple gate, not a city gate. (30) over . . chamber, prob. a store cham. in the temp. (31) goldsmith's son, vs. 8. gate Miphkad, perh. N. E. of temp.[e] (32) sheep gate, vs. 1.

Relative greatness.— Jerusalem is the religious metropolis of the world. To be first in religious honor it was not necessary that she should be spacious or populous. Size and numbers count for very little in religion. Its valuation is qualitative, not quantitative. Even the extent of its influence, even the size and mass of this, depends mainly on its character. Moreover, in Jerusalem, as a rule, the really effective religious life was confined to a small group of the "pious;" sometimes it was gathered up in a single individual — a Jeremiah, an Ezra, a Nehemiah. This is a fact replete with encouragement for faith. It is an instance of the way in which God chooses the weak things — weak as to this world — to confound the strong. If a small city could once take the unique position held by Jerusalem, then why should not a small church now? And if a little knot of earnest men within the city could be the nucleus of her character and the source of her influence, why should not quite a small group of earnest people give a character to their church, and, through the church, work wonders in the world, as the grain of mustard seed could move a mountain? The secret of the miracle is, like the secret of nature, that God is in the city and the church, as God is in the seed. When once we have discovered this truth as a certain fact of life and history, our estimate of the relative greatness of things is revolutionized. The map and the census then cease to answer our most pressing questions. The excellence we look for must be spiritual — vigor of faith, self-abnegation of love, passion of zeal.— Exp. Bib.

[a] 1 Ch. ix. 2.

[b] 1 Ch. xxvii. 3. Identified by Robinson (i. 267), with continuation of Moriah, S. towards Siloam, betw. Jehosophat to the E., and Tyropœan to the W. It is ab. 1,550 ft. long, 290 bd. and ends in rocky bluff, 40 or 50 ft. above pool of Siloam.

[c] Jer. xxxi. 40.

[d] Josephus, ix. 7, 3, says it led to Kedron.

[e] Ex. xliii. 21.

"As every thread of gold is valuable, so is every minute of time." — J. Mason.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

rage of Sanballat, etc.

1—3. (1) Sanballat, ii. 10, 19. that . . wall, this occurred on a previous occasion bef. the events narrated in chap. iii. (2) will . . fortify, prob. an error in the text; some syllables being omitted. The sense should prob. be "will they commit themselves to their God?" spoken contemptously. brethren, i. e. chief counsellors. army of Samaria, "it was resolved to stop the building by main force. Sanballat and Tobiah, his Ammonite hanger-on, entered into a league with the neighboring peoples, the Philistines of Ashdod, the Ammonites, and some Arab tribe or tribes, and agreed with them that a conjoint attack should be made upon Jerusalem by a confederate army." — Pulp. Com. revive . . burned, he regarded the stones as calcined and unfit for the purpose. (3) Tobiah, ii. 10, 19. fox . . wall, the wall would not bear the light step of a fox, much less would it resist a siege.

Foxes were known to infest, in great numbers, the ruined and desolate places in the mount and city of Zion, Lam. v. 18.

God overruling evil for good.— Voltaire boasted, that with one hand he would overturn the edifice of Christianity, which required the hands of twelve Apostles to build; but at the present time, the very press which he employed at Ferney for printing his blasphemous works, is actually used at Genoa for printing the Holy Scriptures; so that the very engine he set to work to destroy the Bible is now engaged in circulating its sacred truths. — Whitecross.

Nehemiah's prayer

4—6. (4) Hear, etc., some of the Pss.[f] may have been composed at this time The mockery addressed to the Jews was really directed against God. (5) cover not, etc., forgive it not, make no atonement for it. Ps. lxxxv., cix. 14. provoked, "the verb here is used absolutely for provoking God, as De. xxxi. 29. (6) was . . thereof, of the intended height. for . . work, the great secret of success.

[f] Ps cxxiii. 3, 4; cxxiv., cxxv., cxx., cxxi., cxxvii., cxxix.

"The imprecations invoked here may seem harsh, cruel, and vindictive. But it must be remembered that Nehemiah and his friends regarded those Samaritan leaders as enemies to the cause of God and His people,

The efficacy of zeal and diligence. — Let us consider — I. The reason assigned for their success. 1. The work which the people had to perform was attended with many difficulties; 2. But by zeal and intelligence they were enabled to accomplish it with incredible despatch. Notice — II. The instruction we may gather from it. There are two truths that may justly be deduced from this history. 1. In everything we have to do for God, zeal and diligence are necessary; 2. In everything we have to do for God zeal and diligence will ensure success. — Simeon.

Christian building. — How is it in the building of the great Christian wall? There is the Independent, or Congregationalist, building his little bit, and yonder is the Episcopalian, and yonder is the Baptist, and yonder is somebody else, and they will not lend one another a spoonful of lime. Do let us remember that it is one wall, it is one Zion, it is one Jerusalem — why not work together magnanimously in the spirit of brothers, realizing the true ideal of patriotic and Christian fellowship and brotherhood, and let the wall rise from all points simultaneously, all compact, solid, indestructible masonry. Wherever there is a good man, whatever his particular denomination or badge may be, we should work heart and soul with him; or otherwise, God forgive us! for we sin against the spirit of the cross of his Son. — Peop. Bib.

B. C. 445.

and therefore as deserving to be visited with heavy judgments. The prayer, therefore is to be considered as emanating fr. hearts in wh. neither hatred, nor revenge, but a pious and patriotic zeal for the glory of God, and the success of His cause, held the ascendant sway." — Port. Com.

conspiring of the enemy and precautions of Nehemiah

7—9. (7) Ashdodites, with the old time hatred of Philistia. were made up, R. V., "went forward." wroth, they first ridiculed the undertaking as impossible of execution. The walls, now half the intended height, gave promise of completion. (8) conspired[a] . . hinder,[b] they thought to demolish the work, and in some way to intimidate the builders. (9) we . . God,[c] they did not depend on their own prowess or sagacity. set . . watch, they used means as well as prayed.

Ora et labora (pray and labor) was the monkish watchword with which men went into the wilderness, and built up their lonely cells, and toiled at their simple gardens, and knelt in solemn thought of the world behind them, through long fastings and wakeful nights. But on their lips it was a profound mistake. They had cut themselves off from brotherly sympathies and social duties, from the entire sphere of Christian work. They had thrown themselves upon the selfishness of lonely hours and solitary thoughts. Their ora, earnest and well meant at first, became mechanical and unreal; their labora was a fiction. They had no right to their motto. And remembering the hollowness and hypocrisy to which their system brought them, its utter worthlessness, its world-wide scandal, men have shrunk with fear from the truth they misused. Nor are they alone guilty. Those who by practice or speech arrogate to prayer the time and place of ordinary duties are in the same error. — Hom. Com.

a Ps. lxxxiii. 3-5.

b Heb. to make an error in it.

c Ps. l. 15.

"The fire of discord turns a house into a little hell, full of the tormenting passions, sorrow and anguish, distain and despite, malice and envy, that blast the most flourishing families." — W. Bates.

rumors and threats of the enemy

10—12. (10) Judah, "through their rulers or representatives to Neh." strength . . decayed, exhausted by excessive toil and watching. The higher the wall the more difficult became the labor. (11) they . . them, and caused these rumors of some sudden attack or night assault to be circulated, so as to cause a constant and disheartening fear. (12) ten . . times,[d] again and again travelers to Zion brought rumors of impending dangers, and reports of intended mischief; and builders living at a distance N. fr. the city spoke of molestations. from all places . . you, R. V., "from all places, ye must return unto us." The Jews of the neighboring villages, fearing an attack from Sanballat, urge their fellow citizens who are helping at Jerusalem to return home.

Burdens and rubbish. — 1. Who are spiritually the burden-bearers in the text? and what are the burdens? 1. Penitents, who are burdened with a guilty conscience — with a fear of death — with a dread that they shall not attain mercy; 2. Believers, who are burdened with a wicked heart — persecutions — afflictions — violent temptations. II. When may it be said their strength decays? 1. Of penitents when they give up hope of obtaining mercy — when they grow sick of duty — when they give way to sin; 2. Of believers when they do not bear persecution with patience, or afflictions with resignation — when they do not watch against temptation — when they do not seek for complete holiness. — W. Stevens.

Duration of works. — A party of surveyors in Arizona, engaged in exploring the country for railroad routes, came upon some very extensive ruins on the banks of the Little Colorado River. They extend along the river for many miles. Some of the walls of buildings are yet in place, and stand six or eight feet high. The streets may be traced for miles. The old irrigating canals and ditches are yet in a fair state of preservation, and may be traced d Ge. xxxi. 7.

"The Jews who dwelt near the enemy, and were harassed by them, and appealed to Neh. for help, sent to him ten times, and said that foes would be upon them everywhere, wherever their brethren had left them to return and build the city." — Wordsworth.

"I look upon indolence as a sort of suicide; for the man is effectually destroyed, though the appetite of the brute may survive." — Chesterfield.

B. C. 445.

"Earnestness alone makes life eternity." — Carlyle.

for miles also. The ground is strewed with broken crockery. The party found some nearly whole vessels of curious form. Many of the walls of the buildings were built of hewn stone, and put up in a workmanlike manner. To all appearance, here once stood a city of many thousand inhabitants. Who they were, or to what tribe they belonged, there is no record left to show. On the east bank are the ruins of a large structure or castle, covering several acres of land; some of the walls are yet standing to the height of twenty or thirty feet.

the people guard and watch and work

13—15. (13) lower . . wall, (see vs. 6). The difficulties wh. confronted him compelled him to suspend part of the building and watch the enemy. He set men where the city was most open to attack. higher places, R. V., "in the open places." The Heb. word means "exposed" rather than "elevated." set . . families,[a] one part to fight while another worked; one family to stimulate another. (14) looked . . up, when he "looked, and rose up," and spoke, it was probably as the enemy was coming up to the attack; he then made this short but stirring appeal. That no conflict followed would seem to show, that "when the enemy approached, and saw from a distance the whole people awaiting them in perfect equipment, order, and spirit," they lost heart and "turned back." — Pulp. Com. remember the Lord,[b] the best of all arguments for patriotic courage. fight . . houses, the true patriot should be disinterested. (15) that . . us, what their evil designs were. God . . nought,[c] by discovering their plans, by giving wisdom to Neh., and patriotism to the people. Evidently the threatened attack had put an end to the work; now it is resumed.

a Note the advice of Nestor to Agamemnon; and also disposition of Athenian troops at Marathon.

b Nu. xiv. 9; De. 1. 29; x. 17.

c Job v. 12.

Examples of patriotism. — Augustus Cæsar possessed such an attachment to his country that he called it his own daughter, and refused to be called its master, because he would rule it not by fear, but by love. After his decease, his disconsolate people lamented over him, saying, "O would to God that he had never lived, or that he had never died." A Lacædemonian mother had five sons in a battle that was fought near Sparta, and seeing a soldier that had left the scene of action, eagerly inquired of him how affairs went on. "All your five sons are slain," said he. "Unhappy wretch!" replied the woman: "I ask thee not of what concerns my children, but of what concerns my country." "As to that all is well," said the soldier. "Then," said she, "let them mourn that are miserable. My country is prosperous, and I am happy." — Hom. Com.

"This is a maxim which I have received by hereditary traditions not only from my father, but also from my grandfather and his ancestors, that after what I owe to God, nothing should be more dear or more sacred than the love and respect I owe to my country." — De Thou.

half to build and half to guard

16—18. (16) half . . work, etc., his own private attendants; "the rest of the Jews were exempted. Neh.'s servants were kept prepared for any emergency." — Ryle. other half . . spears, the other kept guard, fully armed, and held the spears, bows and arrows, shields, and corselets of their fellows." — Pulp. Com. habergeons, R. V., "the coats of mail," see Ex. xxviii. 32. rulers . . Judah, "the rulers" or princes took up their position to the rear of those engaged in working at the wall, so that at any moment, when the alarm should sound, they could issue their commands and take the necessary measures to repel the attack." (18) builders . . builded, ready both to work or fight. he . . me, to give the appointed signals, vs. 20.

Division of duty. — I. If all men performed the same kind of duty, many duties would be left undone. II. If men always selected their own duties, the distribution of workers would be often disproportionate to the work to be done. III. Men in the discharge of one duty should not think lightly of the duty performed by others, or imagine the calling of others more honorable than their own. IV. In the distribution of work the fitness of the worker should be considered. V. All real work, whatever its nature, is honorable.

There is, for every one of us, a world to be overcome; flesh to be subdued to the spirit; Satan to be resisted; Christ to be glorified. There is a work which is great, difficult, and continuous. Every day brings its proper work; every relation of life brings its duties; every opportunity brings its own responsibility. But the forgetful hearer never sets about the great work of the Christian life in real earnest; he seems to have no idea that what he hears is meant to influence his practice.

Bravery. — It is said that a little boy in Holland was returning one night from a village to which he had been sent by his father on an errand, when he noticed the water trickling through a narrow opening in the dyke. He stopped and thought what the consequences would be if the hole was not closed. He knew, for he had often heard his father tell, the sad disasters which happened from such small beginnings. Should he run home and alarm the villagers, it would be dark before they could arrive, and the hole might even then be so large as to defy all attempts to close it. Prompted by these thoughts, he seated himself on the bank of the canal, stopped the opening with his hand, and patiently waited the approach of some villager. But no one came. Hour after hour rolled slowly by, yet there sat the heroic boy, in cold and darkness, shivering, wet, and tired, but stoutly pressing his hand against the dangerous breach. All night he stayed at his post. At last the morning broke. A clergyman walking up the canal heard a groan, and looked around to see where it came from. "Why are you here, my child?" he asked, seeing the boy and surprised at his strange position. "I am keeping back the water, sir, and saving the village from being drowned," answered the child, with lips so benumbed with cold that he could scarcely speak. The astonished minister relieved the boy. The dyke was closed, and the danger which threatened hundreds of lives was prevented. —Anon.

B. C. 445.

19—23. (19) we . . another, a thin line of defenders, much spread out. (20) place . . us, the trumpet was to be blown where the attack was imminent. (21) half . . appeared, there were no short-timers among Neh.'s bodyguard. (22) the people, as distinguished from the bodyguard. Let . . Jerusalem, see vs. 12, danger to builders by going far from city. that . . us, and safer for them also. and . . day, workmen should not live too far fr. their work. By this means all were placed under surveillance. (23) none . . clothes, disregard of personal comfort. "At night the working parties retired to rest within the city, but Nehemiah himself, his brothers, his servants, his bodyguard, remained outside, keeping watch by turns, and sleeping in their clothes, until the wall was finished." — Pulp. Com. saving . . washing,[a] personal ablutions and religious purifications attended to. A very difficult passage, prob. the text is corrupt. The R. V. renders "Every one went with his weapon to the water." "We expect some statement of the length of time during which Nehemiah and his followers continued without retiring to rest. Perhaps the clause may have run 'each one with his weapon in his hand for a full month of days.' The Syriac version 'we will not put off our clothes during a month of days' agrees with this suggestion, and the Arabic gives a similar rendering, 'till the end of a month and days.'" — Cam. B.

the preconcerted signal

a Or, "Every one went with his weapon for water" (Jud. v. 11).

"In the Christian's panoply there is no mention of armor for the back, though there is for the breast, because a Christian soldier should never fly." Hom. Com.

The appointed signal. — I. While at work, God's servants are often separated widely from each other. Thus missionaries in their fields of labor. Men of the same town, and who studied side by side at college, are often in toil far asunder. II. When the trumpet of the last day is blown, the army of workers will be gathered together. III. Let us try to do our work well, and toil patiently, and listen earnestly for the signal that shall tell us that our warfare is accomplished and our toils are over.

"Make the most of time, it flies away so fast; yet method will teach you to save time." — Goethe.

Working men. — It is not given to all to be masters of song, like Burns; of art like Palissy or Gibson; of engineering skill, like Stephenson; of critical acumen, like Gifford; or of abstract science, like Ferguson or the elder Herschel; yet these, at first, were all poor or working men, who gained their education by their own efforts — who did battle with pinching poverty, lack of educational means, prejudice of class, and all those lions which stand in the way of men of weaker mold, who let "I dare not" wait upon "I would." All cannot be field-marshals in the army of life; but somewhat lower, yet very honorable grades, have been obtained by men once in the ranks, who while never for a moment despising the labor by which they gained honest bread, were not disposed to consider that working, eating, and sleeping are all that is worth living for. Their daily labor honestly and intelligently performed, they felt themselves to be free citizens of the empire of thought, in which true men rank according to what they essentially are, quite independently of the conditions of their life.

"Oh! what a thing, ye gods, is scorn or pity; heap on me, heaven, the heat of all mankind, load me with envy, malice, detestation; let me be horrid to all apprehension; let the world shun me, so I 'scape but scorn." — Lee.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1—5. (1) cry . . Jews, internal strife now increased the toil of the great reformer.[b] "The causes of poverty were three: 1. Over-population; 2. A recent famine; and, 3. The weight of taxation, arising from the large amount annually demanded from the province by the Persians in the way of tribute." (2) take up, or buy, as vs. 3; having no means of living they asked for rations. The rebuilding of the walls and the fear of war had deranged industry and threatened the poor with ruin. The rich nobles had made merchandise of this condition to enslave the children of the poor. (3) We . . lands, etc., to such extremities were they reduced. (4) We . . tribute, etc., borrowed upon usury, vs. 7, contrary to law.[c] (5) Yet . . brethren,[d] we, the poor, are of the same ancestry as the rich and love our children and patrimony as dearly.

complaints of debt, mortgage and bondage

b 2 Cor. vii. 5.

c Ex. xxii. 25.

d Is. lviii. 7.

B. C. 445.

"The rank is but the guinea's stamp, the man's the gold for a' that." — Burns.

a Ex. xxi. 7; Le. xxv. 39.

"Some have estates and no children to inherit them; others have children and no estates to leave them; those that have both have reason to be thankful; those that have neither may the better be content." —M. Henry.

"Covetousness by a greediness of getting more deprives itself of the true end of getting; it loses the enjoyment of what is got." — Sprat.

"To save his only care; so things seem right, no matter what they are." — Churchill.

an assembly is called b Ex. xxii. 25; Le. xxv. 36; Ma. xxv. 27. Usury, from Lat. usura, Fr. usure, formerly denoted interest, or a sum paid for the use of money; now applied to excessive exactions of that kind.

c De xxiii. 4; Ma. xviii. 17; 1 Cor. vi. 1-4.

"It is the usual plea of poverty to blame misfortune, when the ill-finished cause of complaint is a work of their own forging. I will either make my fortunes good, or be content they are no worse. If they are not so good as I would they should have been, they are not so bad as I know they might have been. What though I am not so happy as I desire? 'tis well I am not so wretched as I deserve." — Warwick.

the usurers are rebuked

d Le. xxv. 36; 1 Sa. xii. 14; Ro. ii. 24; 1 Pet. ii. 12.

"The rich should share and not make a profit out of the common trouble." bring into bondage, i. e. are on the point of enslaving. neither . . them,[a] R. V., "neither is it in our power to help it."

Unbrotherly oppression. — I. The text teaches us that men of the same church who are giving up much for the Lord should be dealt with with consideration. II. That even good men are apt to be forgetful of the claims of others, in their greed and worldly carefulness. III. That love of money is apt to blind us to social claims.

Hopelessness. — Here is a picture from one of Thomas Carlyle's graphic books. "Passing by the workhouse of St. Ives in Huntingdonshire, on a bright day last autumn" (about 1840), "I saw sitting on wooden benches, in front of their Bastile, and within their ring-wall and its railings, some half hundred or more of these men. Tall, robust figures; young mostly, or of middle age; of honest countenance; many of them thoughtful and even intelligent-looking men. They sat there, near by one another; but in a kind of torpor, especially in a silence, which was very striking. In silence; for, alas, what word was to be said? An earth all lying round, crying, Come and till me, come and reap me; — yet we here sit enchanted! In the eyes and brows of these men hung the gloomiest expression, not of anger, but of grief, and shame, and manifold, inarticulate distress, and weariness. They returned my glance with a glance that seemed to say, 'Do not look at us. We sit enchanted here; we know not why.' There was something that reminded me of Dante's hell in the look of all this, and I rode swiftly away." What a dark outlook utter want has! What a dreary nightmare to lie on a human spirit! In the poor wretches whose condition stirred Nehemiah's anger with their want and their hopeless debt and their heart-breaking family separations, as son and daughter went in pawn for bread, there is a scene to smite the buried conscience of the grinding oppressor, and to call forth some natural tears from the eyes of onlooking philanthrophists. "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn."

6—8. (6) angry, righteous indignation at such a want of patriotism and brotherhood. (7) Then . . myself, Heb. my heart consulted in me. usury,[b] the Mosaic law was very careful to prohibit the taking of interest; but it permitted the giving of a pledge regulated by the prin. of charity. This plea of Neh. had no effect upon the hard-hearted money-lenders, see vs. 11. brother, fellow-citizen. set . . them,[c] refer the matter to large and influential gathering. (8) have redeemed, i. e. Neh. purchased the release of many Jews when put up for sale before his return to Jerus. Now in the holy city he finds the Jews not only ready to sell their brethren, but also to buy them, rather than redeem them. will . . brethren, etc., are we to hold in bondage those who by birthright are free?

The passion for power. — Christianity has joined with all history in inspiring me with a peculiar dread and abhorrence of the passion for power, for dominion over men. There is nothing in the view of our Divine Teacher so hostile to His Divine spirit as the lust of domination. This we are accustomed to regard as eminently the sin of the arch-fiend. "By this sin fell the angels." It is the most Satanic of all human passions, and it has inflicted more terrible evils on the human family than all others. It has made the names of kings and priests the most appalling in history. There is no crime which has not been perpetrated for the strange pleasure of treading men under foot, of fastening chains on the body or mind. The strongest ties of nature have been rent asunder, her holiest feelings smothered, parents, children, brothers murdered to secure dominion over man. The people have now been robbed of the necessaries of life, and now driven to the field of slaughter like flocks of sheep to make one man the master of millions. Through this passion government, ordained by God to defend the weak against the strong, to exalt right above might, has up to this time been the great wrong-doer. Its crimes throw those of private men into the shade. Its murders reduce to insignificance those of the bandits, pirates, highwaymen, assassins against whom it undertakes to protect society. Power trampling on right, whether in the person of king or priest, or in the shape of democracies or majorities, is the saddest sight to him who honors human nature and desires its enlargement and happiness. — W. E. Channing.

9—11. (9) ought . . enemies,[d] the people of God were, in their individual character, and political affairs to be a pattern to other nations. (10) might exact, etc., R. V., "do lend them money and corn on usury." "Nehemiah himself lent 'on usury' to his countrymen. The words are not, as A. V., 'I . . . and my brethren, etc.,' but 'I, my brethren, etc.' Nehemiah takes the reply out of the mouth of his opponents. He confesses he is himself not free from blame. For 'his own kinsfolk and dependents' lent 'on usury,' and he, their head and representative, was responsible for them. They may have been generous and forbearing, but they had violated the principle which he was upholding: and in so far Nehemiah accepted the blame of his house. — Cam. B. let . . off, Neh. invites the nobles to follow him in abandoning this evil and dangerous custom. (11) hundredth, = to 12 per cent. per an. bec. paid monthly.[a]

The cost of a good example. — I. To set a good example should be the aim of a servant of God. II. For the sake of doing this it will be necessary to sometimes forego one's personal advantage. III. One should be willing to surrender profit and gain in order that the mind of the worldly man may be impressed with the spirit of the gospel. IV. Thus the world may learn that a Christian regards brotherly love, and the property of the poor, as of greater importance than his own personal gain.

The power of example. — Lord Langdale, looking back upon the admirable example set him by his mother, declared, "If the whole world were put into one scale and my mother into the other, the world would kick the beam." Mrs. Schimmel-Penninck, in her old age, was accustomed to call to mind the personal influence exercised by her mother upon the society amidst which she moved. When she entered a room it had the effect of immediately raising the tone of conversation, and as if purifying the moral atmosphere, all seeming to breathe more freely and stand more erectly. "In her presence," says her daughter, "I became for the time transformed into another person."—Smiles.

The alchemy of influence. — There lived once a young girl whose perfect grace of character was the wonder of those who knew her. She wore on her neck a gold locket which no one was ever allowed to open. One day in a moment of unusual confidence, one of her companions was allowed to touch its spring and learn its secret. She saw within these words, — "Whom having not seen, I love." That was the secret of her beautiful life. She had been changed into the same image. — Drummond.

B. C. 445.

a "Volney tells us that the usual rate of interest in Syria, in his time, was 20 per cent." — Trav. ii. 410.

"To live with Socrates — with unveiled face — must have made one wise; with Aristides, just; Francis of Assisi must have made one gentle; Savonarola, strong. But to have lived with Christ must have made one like Christ, that is to say, a Christian."-Drummond.

"The pulpit only 'teaches' to be honest; the market-place 'trains' to overreaching and fraud; and teaching has not a tithe of the efficiency of training. Christ never wrote a tract, but He went about doing good." — Horace Mann.

12, 13. (12) will . . them, in way of interest. priests . . promise,[b] oath to confirm their words; and priests as witnesses, that the oath might be regarded as more solemn and binding. (13) lap, bosom,[c] i. e. of the garment.[d] A malediction to prevent the breaking of this covenant. "This was virtually a threat of confiscation and excommunication."

The promise kept. — I. Observe that the promise was extorted from the people by the arguments of a good man. II. It was made with the knowledge of the loss that would be entailed. III. Although so extorted, and made with this knowledge, it was kept. IV. It was made and kept for example's sake.

Clenching a good resolution. — "In a time of danger we understand a general interest. Every one is called in to take a part in the struggle that we make for liberty. And yet when the toil was a little over some of them acted as if they thought that Providence was not a public friend, but only a sort of a factor to a few private families. It is a misrepresentation of Him who gives us the mercy if we do not make it extensive. He accepts not the persons of princes nor regards the rich more than the poor, for they are all the work of His hands. You must not think He is so lavish of His bounty to the great men of the earth merely that they may glitter upon a throne, but be His ministers for good; and this they cannot be if they resolve to confine their influence. Princes love to be called God's representatives, but they usually understand it in no other attribute than His power; whereas, that is uncommunicable; it is a glory that He never gives to another. The chief titles in which He would be represented by them are those of justice and mercy." These strong, brave, and true words were written by Thomas Bradbury more than a century and a half ago, and applied to his own times. The human heart is the same in all ages. It is treacherous Nehemiah knew this. The words of the oppressors were fairseeming. "We will restore." "We will require nothing of them." "We will do as thou sayest." But the very greatness of the promise constitutes its danger. It is too good to be true; needs binding force. The priest's presence will give the oath "legal validity for judicial decisions." It they promise amendment

b Ezr. x. 5; Jer. xxxiv. 8, 9.

c Lat. sinum; for example of the effusio sinûs as a symbolic act, see Livy xxi. 18. See Ps. cxxix. 7; Isa. xlix. 22; Ru. iii. 15. Comp. also metaphor of a sling, 1 Sa. xxv. 29; girdle. Jer. xiii. 9-11; pitcher, Jer. xix. 10, 11.

d Mat. x. 14, Ac. xiii. 51; xviii. 6.

"Lives of great men all remind us,
We may make our lives sublime,
And departing leave behind us Footprints on the sands of time."
—Longfellow.

B. C. 445.

will also impart solemnity. If tempted to oppress again the awful oath will rise to recollection.— Hom. Com.

Nehemiah took no income of the people

14, 15. from . . king,[a] the date of Neh.'s return to Persia ; i. e. fr. B. C. 445 to 432. have . . governor,[b] did not exact the salary due to his office as governor. (15) taken . . silver, the word rendered "beside" may mean "at the rate of." So prob. we are to understand th. the former governors received (daily?) "bread and wine to the value of 40 shekels,"= about 25 dollars. servants . . rule, "the oppression exercised by the domestics and other hangers-on of rulers is often worse than their own. This is especially the case in the East, where eunuchs and other domestics have been the most fearful tyrants."— Pulp. Com. so . . God, bec. he feared a just and merciful God, and neither oppressed himself nor suffered his servants to oppress.[c] a See xiii. 6.

b 1 Co. ix. 4, 15.

The fear of God a principle of action.— Now it will be no unedifying subject if we consider — I. The principle by which he was actuated. By the fear of the Lord we are to understand — 1. A respect to His word as the rule of our conduct ; 2. His authority as the reason of our conduct ; 3. His glory as the end of our conduct. Such being the principle by which Nehemiah was actuated, let us notice — II. The effect it produced on his life and conversation, which should teach us the following lessons. 1. Not to conform ourselves to any other custom till we have examined it with care ; 2. Not to suffer ourselves to be biased by any personal interests in forming our judgment of doubtful matters ; 3. Not to fear condemning what our consciences do not approve.

c "When the servants of governors oppress the people, it is their master's doing, or at least, their suffering."—Bp. Sanderson.

Singularity. — We must learn to say "No." We must dare, if need be, to be singular. Like the young Joseph, when you are tempted astray by seducing voices, let your answer be, "How can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?" Like the young Daniel, when forbidden pleasures and questionable delights are urged upon your appetites, "be purposed in" your "heart that" you "will not defile" yourself with them, and choose pulse and water with the relish of a good conscience rather than such dainties. Like the same Daniel, when the crowd are flocking at the sound of the sackbut and psaltery to worship some golden image, keep your knees unbent amidst the madness, learn to stand erect though you alone are upright in the midst of a groveling multitude, and protest, "We will not serve thy gods nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up." Like Nehemiah, dare to lose money rather than adopt sources of profit which others may use without a thought, but which your conscience shrinks from ; and to all the various enticements of pleasure, and gain, and ease, and popular loose maxims for the conduct oppose immovable resistance, founded on a higher law and a mightier motive. "So did not I, because of the fear of God."— A. Maclaren.

"Be more prudent for your children than perhaps you have been for yourself. When they, too, are parents they will imitate you, and each of you will have prepared happy generations, who will transmit, together with your memory, the worship of your wisdom."—La Beaume.

but supported himself and his house

16—19. (16) I . . wall, nor thought of personal gain. Attended exclusively to public work, without thought of private speculations. neither . . land,[d] esp. of those who, through poverty, were forced to sell. all . . work, they, too, were similarly employed. (17) at . . rulers,[e] he abstained fr. all emolument, and observed the rights of hospitality. beside . . us, "by this seems to be intended the somewhat numerous class of Jews, who, having resided among the neighboring nations detached themselves from time to time, and came to join their brethren in or near Jerusalem. These were Jews, whose forefathers had never been carried captive to Babylon, but had settled in foreign lands either for purposes of trade or from fear of the invaders."— Cam. B. (18) which . . daily, etc., Neh. must have been a rich man to have continued this for so many years. yet for all this, etc., i. e. in spite of all this outlay to support the rulers and the immigrants, I did not demand what rightfully belonged to me. because . . people, the tribute was heavy, and the people were employed in great labors. (19) Think, etc., Neh. thought of the recompense of the reward.

d See Juvenal, viii. 107, on the conduct of Roman governors e 2 Sa ix. 7; 1 K. xviii. 19.

"There are bad examples which are worse than crimes; and more states have perished from the violation of morality than from the violation of the law."— Montesquieu.

"The turnpike-road to people's hearts, I find, lies through their mouths : or I mistake mankind."— Warton.

Nehemiah's consideration for the poor. — Besides the relief which he afforded to the poorer sort of people by these measures, Nehemiah goes on to show that he spared them also in other ways: (1) In requiring no taxation for the support of himself and court ; (2) In declining to buy the lands of the necessitous (vs. 16) : and (3) In taking his full share of the burden of building the wall (ibid.). Thus a single idea pervades the whole chapter. — Peop. Bib.

The governor's table. — Nehemiah calculated the expense of his table not by the money he paid, but by the provisions consumed by his guests. Such is still the practice in the East. So De la Motraye informs us of the seraglio at Constantinople : "One may judge of the numbers who live in this palace by the prodigious quantity of provisions consumed in it yearly, which some of the hattchis, or cooks, assured me amounted to more than 30,000 oxen, 20,000 calves, 60,000 sheep, 16,000 lambs, 10,000 kids, 100,000 turkeys, geese, and goslings, 200,000 fowls and chickens, 100,000 pigeons, without reckoning wild-fowl or fish, of the last of which he only named 130,000 calcam-bats, or turbots." — Burder. Perseverance. — The story of Timour the Tartar, learning a lesson of perseverance under adversity from the spider, is well known and need not be repeated ; but not less interesting is the following anecdote of Audubon, the American ornithologist, related by himself. "An accident," he says, "which happened to 200 of my original drawings, nearly put a stop to my researches in ornithology. I shall relate it, merely to show how far enthusiasm — for by no other name can I call my perseverance — may enable the preserver of Nature to surmount the most disheartening difficulties. I left the village of Henderson, in Kentucky, where I resided for several years, to proceed to Philadelphia on business. I looked to my drawings before my departure, placed them carefully in a wooden box, and gave them in charge of a relative, with injunctions to see that no injury should happen to them. My absence was of several months ; and when I returned, after having enjoyed the pleasures of home for a few days, I inquired after my box. It was produced and opened ; but, reader, feel for me ; a pair of Norway rats had taken possession of the whole, and reared a young family among the gnawed bits of paper, which but a few months previous represented nearly 1,000 inhabitants of air ! The burning heat which instantly rushed through my brain was too great to be endured without affecting my whole nervous system. I slept for several nights, and the days passed like days of oblivion, until the animal powers, being recalled into action thro' the strength of my constitution, I took up my gun, note-book and pencils, and went forth to the woods as gaily as if nothing had happened. I felt pleased that I might now make better drawings than before ; and, ere a period not exceeding three years had elapsed, my portfolio was again filled." — Smiles.

B. C. 445.

"He was a kind and thankful toad, whose heart dilated in proportion as his skin was filled with good cheer ; and whose spirits rose with eating, as some men's do with drink. He could not help, too, rolling his large eyes round him as he ate, and chuckling with the possibility that he might one day be lord of all this scene of unimaginable luxury." — Washington Irving.

"Gluttony is the source of all our infirmities, and the fountain of all our diseases. As a lamp is choked by a superabundance of oil, a fire extinguished by excess of fuel, so is the natural heat of the body destroyed by intemperate diet." — Burton.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1—4. (1) Sanballat, etc., see ii. 19; iv. 7. no breach, no part left unbuilded. though . . gates, the gate-houses were built, but the gates themselves were not hung. (2) Ono, nr. Lydda.[a] Perh. at Kefr-Auna, ab. 8 ms. E. of Jaffa, and 6 ms. N. of Lydda. They tried to accomplish by deceit what they failed to effect by threats and opposition. Neh. was to select the particular village. But . . mischief,[b] Neh. is astute enough to see through the proposition. (3) sent, instead of going as they desired. I . . work, they could not propose a greater or better. so . . down, to leave a great religious duty is a moral coming down. why . . cease, he courteously assumes that the only evil that would result fr. his accepting the invitation would be the retarding of the work. (4) sent . . sort, to show their earnestness.

the craft of the enemy

[a] 1 Ch. viii. 12.

[b] Ps. xxxvii. 12, 22; Pr. xxvi. 24, 25.

"Of all the evil spirits abroad at this hour in the world, insincerity is the most dangerous."—Froude.

Nehemiah's firmness.— I. What efforts men will make to divert us from the service of God. 1. By artifice ; 2. By intimidation ; 3. By ridicule. II. In what manner we should withstand them. Two things in particular I would notice. 1. His wisdom; 2. His firmness. Let us learn from hence — (1) What are we to expect if we will serve God ; (2) How we must act if we would approve ourselves to Him.

Persistency.— John Bunyan saw in his dream a gate leading to a beautiful palace. At the gate sat a man with a book to record the names of such as would enter. Around the gate stood armed foes to drive back all who came. At length a man with "a stout countenance" came, and said to the recorder, "Set down my name, sir !" and then, girding on his sword, he set to and fought his way in, "but not before he had given and received many wounds." It is thus that most of enter into life. Persistent opposition beaten back by persistent determination.— Hom. Com. The will and the way.— Savonarola broke down in his first sermon, and was humiliated beyond expression. Resolved, however, to succeed, he kept on, preaching to peasants and children, and in the solitude of his own chamber, till at last he acquired a facility of utterance and a command of striking language which made him the prophet "Cunning is none of the best nor worst qualities; it floats between virtue and vice; there is scarce any exigence where it may not, and perhaps ought not to be supplied by prudence."—Bruyère.

"George III. was a man of firm mind. His speech on the Roman Catholic question shows his character 'I can give up my crown, and retire from power; I of his age and the first orator in Italy. Bulwer's whole life was a series of temporary failures, crowned with ultimate triumphs. His first novel was a failure, his first poems were failures; and so were his first speeches. But he fought his way to eminence — fought it thro' defeat and ridicule, till now he has his own enchanted circle, where "none durst walk but he," and stands on one of the three-peaked summits, the compeer of Dickens and Thackeray. — Matthews.

B C. 445.

5—7. (5) fifth . . letter, the previous had been private communications. This is of the nature of a threat. open, "an open letter on a delicate subject is in the East an insult, and this step of Sanballat's could only have been taken in order to excite the mind of Nehemiah's subjects, and to bring pressure to bear on him from them. Nehemiah, however, was not to be intimidated, or diverted from his purpose." — Pulp. Com. (6) reported . . heathen, and the more likely to be false, bec. reported fr. such a quarter. Gashmu, or Geshem, i. e. it is asserted by persons of standing and reputation. that . . rebel, and yet Sanballat, who insinuates the charge, wishes, so he averred, to be friendly with the rebel. There were two rumors: (a) The Jews were about to rebel; (b) Neh. was on the point of proclaiming himself king. according . . words, perhaps equivalent to "and so forth." See Ezr. iv. 10, 11, 17. (7) it . . words, though it be only a report, the truth of wh. was not proven.

Slander. — In St. James' day, as now, it would appear that there were idle men and idle women, who went about from house to house, dropping slander as they went, and yet you could not take up that slander and detect the falsehood there. You could not evaporate the truth in the slow process of the crucible, and then show the residuum of falsehood glittering and visible. You could not fasten upon any word or sentence and say that it was calumny; for in order to constitute slander it is not necessary that the word spoken should be false — half truths are often more calumnious than whole falsehoods. It is not even necessary that a word should be distinctly uttered; a dropped lip, an arched eyebrow, a shrugged shoulder, a significant look, an incredulous expression of countenance, nay, even an emphatic silence, may do the work; and when the light and trifling thing which has done the mischief has fluttered off, the venom is left behind, to work and rankle, to inflame hearts, to fever human existence, and to poison human society at the fountain springs of life. Very emphatically was it said by one whose whole being had smarted under such affliction, "Adders' poison is under their lips." — F. W. Robertson. Zeal in religious enterprises. — A baronet was one day examining some works of the celebrated sculptor, Mr. Bacon, and observed a bust of Mr. Whitefield among them, which led him to remark, "After all that has been said, this was truly a great man: he was the founder of a new religion." "A new religion, sir!" replied Mr. B. "Yes," said the baronet: "what do you call it?" "Nothing," was the reply, "but the old religion revived with new energy, and treated as if the preacher meant what he said."

8, 9. (8) There . . heart, a bold, honest, straightforward answer: there is no such rumor; there is no foundation for Sanballat's statements. Neh. perceived that the prime object was to frighten the people. (9) they . . afraid, tried to do so; Neh. was not frightened. Now . . hands, prayer was his common resource, and God his constant helper.

The toiler's prayer. — "Strengthen my hands." I. Consider how many things tend to weaken them — as the increasing claims of home, as the growing infirmities of age, as the fluctuations in trade and labor reward. II. The source of the workman's strength. Not strikes; but God. III. How God strengthens the workman's hands. By providentially introducing inventions; by increasing skill: by raising up helpers; by restoring health; by infusing cheerfulness into the mind; by granting success.

Men of courage — men of convictions. — This Jewish reformer and liberator reminds us of Martin Luther, the stories of whose boldness have passed into proverbs; and of John Knox, whom Scotland delights to honor. Of him Carlyle tells the following story in his own inimitable way: "In the galleys of the river Loire, whither Knox and the others, after their castle of St. Andrew's was taken, had been sent as galley slaves, some officer or priest one day presented them an image of the Virgin Mother, requiring that they, the blasphemous heretics, should do it reverence. 'Mother! mother of God!'

can quit my palace and live in a cottage; I can lay my head on a block, and lose my life; but I can not break my oath."—Twiss.

the open letter

In E. Asia, the Persians make up their letters in the form of a roll about six inches long, and a bit of paper is fastened round it with gum, and sealed with an impression of ink, which resembles our printer's ink, but it is not so thick. Letters were, and are still, sent to persons of distinction in a bag or purse, and even to equals they are enclosed, the tie being made with a colored ribbon; but to infe.iors, the letters were sent open, or not enclosed in a bag.

"A lie, like a weed, if it is not nipped in the bud, sheds seeds which every wind of gossip will spread far and wide, so that it soon becomes impossible to stamp it out." — Exp. Bib.

Nehemiah's bold reply

"It is common for that which is the sense only of the malicious, to be falsely represented by them as the sense of the many." — M. Henry.

"False praise can please, and calumny affright none but the vicious and the hypocrite." — Horace.

said Knox, when the turn came to him. 'This is no mother of God; this is "a pented bredd" — a piece of wood, I tell you, with paint on it. She is fitter for swimming, I think, than for being worshiped,' added Knox, and flung the thing into the river." Rather dangerous sport, that! "The courage of his convictions" makes a man a hero. — Hom. Com. Ejaculatory prayer. — Ejaculatory prayer is prayer darted up from the heart to God, not at stated intervals, but in the course of our daily occupations and amusements. The word 'ejaculatory" is derived from the Latin word for a dart or arrow, and there is an idea in it which one would be loth indeed to forfeit. Imagine an English archer strolling through a forest in the old times of Crecy and Agincourt, when the yeomen of this island were trained to deliver their arrows with the same unfailing precision as "a left-handed Gibeonite" discharging a stone bullet from his sling. A bird rises in the brushwood under his feet, a bird of gorgeous plumage or savory flesh. He takes an arrow from his quiver, draws his bow to its full stretch, and sends the shaft after the bird with the speed of lightning. Scarcely an instant elapses before his prey is at his feet. It has been struck with unerring aim in the critical part, and drops on the instant. Very similar in the spiritual world is the force of what is called ejaculatory prayer. The Christian catches suddenly a glimpse of some blessing, deliverance, relief, a longing after which is induced by the circumstances into which he is thrown. Presently it shall be his. As the archer first draws the bow in towards himself, so the Christian retires, by a momentary act of recollection, into his own mind, and there realizes the presence of God. Then he launches one short, fervent petition into the ear of that awful Presence, throwing his whole soul into the request. And lo! it is done! The blessing descends, prosecuted, overtaken, pierced, fetched down from the vault of heaven by the winged arrow of prayer. — Goulburn.

B. C. 445.

"Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape calumny."—Shakespeare.

"Nothing is so swift as calumny; nothing is more easily uttered; nothing more readily received; nothing more widely dispersed."—Cicero.

"I never listen to calumnies, because, if they are untrue, I run the risk of being deceived, and if they be true, of hating persons not worth thinking about."—Montesquieu.

10—14. (10) Shemaiah (Jehovah heareth him), a bad man with a good name; a common name, for there are 20 ref. to in Scripture who bore it. who . . up, he was "shut up" (a) in the sense that he was prevented by ceremonial pollution from mixing in the society of his countrymen or from approaching the temple; or (b) he had shut himself up in his house in order to show by a symbolical action that Nehemiah was prophetically warned to take refuge in some hiding-place. Cf. 1 Ki. xxii. 11; or (c) "he pretended that he was himself in personal danger as a friend and supporter of the governor, and that therefore he found it necessary to keep himself in seclusion. Thus by his own attitude he would try to work on the fears of Nehemiah." Let . . temple, as if the place would prove his sincerity, or sanctify the deed. yea . . thee, claiming that he had been warned as a prophet to save Neh. fr. assassination. (11) Should . . flee, etc., he who is doing God's work by a special call may expect to be kept in safety without neglecting his work to save his life. being . . life, Neh. was not a priest and had no right to take refuge in the temple. This was Shemaiah's purpose to lead Neh. to trespass against the law. Nu. xviii. 7. (12) perceived,[a] by reflection, or discovery of the plot. Tobiah and Sanballat, the transposition of these two names points out who had done the bribing. These adversaries of Neh. were in communication with the enemies of Ezra and Neh. within the city. Tobiah was related with the aristocracy of Jerus. (13) Therefore, for this reason. afraid, for my life. and sin, "by violating the sanctity of the house of God." (14) My . . works,[b] Neh. commended the whole case to the direction of God.

the craft of Shemaiah

a Ez. xiii. 22; Ps. lvi. 2, 3.

b Ps. lxii. 4; Ez. xiii. 17; 2 Ti iv. 14.

"Our firmness will be called obstinacy; our zeal rashness: and our activity ambition; nay, we shall be warned that we are about to affront all our friends, and turn them into enemies; and to bring ourselves into dangers and difficulties, from which we cannot extricate ourselves, unless we follow other counsels and act more circumspectly."—Scott.

Christian firmness. — I will take occasion from this particular occurrence to set before you — 1. The subtlety with which our great adversary will assault us. He will propose to us — 1. To neglect our social duties, with a view to the furtherance of our spiritual welfare; 2. To conform to the world with a view to conciliate their regard; 3. To use undue means with a view to the attainment of some desirable end. II. The firmness with which we should resist him. We should set the Lord ever before us, bearing in mind — 1. Our relation to Him: 2. Our obligation to Him; 3. Our expectations from Him; 4. The interest which God Himself has in the whole of our conduct. Learn— (1) to expect temptation; (2) To place your entire confidence in God in every circumstance. — Simeon.

Should such a man as I flee? — Cyprian, when on his way to suffer martyrdom, was told by the emperor that he would give him time to consider whether he had not better cast a grain of incense into the fire, in honor of

"When the senate informed Augustus of what some bad said of him, 'Tush,' said he, 'we are not at leisure to listen to every slander that's raised of us.' A Christian should be (as is said of Severus, the emperor) careful of what is to be idols, than die so degraded a death. The martyr, nobly answered, "There needs no deliberation in the case." John Huss, when at the stake, about to suffer for his attachment to Christ, was offered pardon if he would recant. His reply was, "I am here to suffer death." Ann Askew, when asked, under similar circumstances, to avoid the flames, answered, "I came not here to deny my Lord and Master." Mr. Thomas Hawkes, an Essex gentleman, said on a like occasion, "If I had a hundred bodies, I would suffer them all to be torn in pieces rather than recant." Human prescience.—Purity can detect the presence of the evil which it does not understand. Just as the dove which has never seen a hawk trembles at its presence, and just as a horse rears uneasily when the wild beast unknown and new to it is near, so innocence understands, yet understands not, the meaning of the unholy look, the guilty tone, the sinful manner. It shudders and shrinks from it by a power given to it, like that which God has conferred on the unreasoning mimosa. Sin gives the same power, but differently. Innocence apprehends the approach of evil by the instinctive tact of contrast; guilt, by the instinctive consciousness of similarity. — F. W. Robertson.

B. C. 445.

done by him, but careless of what is said of him." — Venning.

"The worthiest persons are frequently attacked by slanders, as we generally find that to be the best fruit which the birds have been pecking at." — Bacon.

the wall is finished

15—19. (15) Elul, the sixth mo., corresponds with the latter part of Aug. and the beginning of Sept. in . . days, one of the most extraordinary instances of rapid building on record. Neh.'s haste reflected his apprehension lest by some trick his adversaries might gain the ear of Artaxerxes and induce his recall to the royal court. (16) they . . eyes,[a] this wd. be often the case if the Ch. were faithful and diligent. they . . God, so great a work, done so soon, with such small resources, under such great opposition. (17) nobles . . them, those hindered who should have been the most earnest helpers. Neh.'s enemies held high social and religious position. (18) Shechaniah, Ezr. ii 5. Hence their correspondence was plausible. (19) reported . . me, they tried to annoy him with praise of his enemies, so that he would go out of the city to hold conference with Sanballat and his allies. "It has been well remarked that the rustic tricksters from Samaria were no match for a trained courtier." and . . him,[b] revealed his plans and purposes,[c] to the foe. And . . fear, wh. armed with private information, he thought he could do.

a Ps. xiv. 15; cxxvi. 2, 3.

b Le. xix. 16; Pr. xx. 19; xxvi. 20.

c Heb. matters.

The expedition with which the wall of Jerusalem was built. — It will be profitable to inquire — I. How it was completed in so short a time. We find that the means whereby this great work was accomplished were — 1. The wisdom and energy of the governor; 2. The union and the perseverance of the people; 3. The peculiar blessing of their God. Having thus traced Nehemiah's success to its true cause, we proceed to set before you — II. The great lesson which we are to learn from it. That we all ought to engage in the work of the Lord with energy and perseverance.

"Man has but one state of probation, and that of an exceeding short continuance: and, therefore, since he cannot serve God long, he should serve Him much; employ every minute of his life to the best advantage; thicken his devotions; hallow every day in his calendar by religious exercises, and every action in his life by holy reference and designments; for let him make what haste he can to be wise, Time will outrun him."—J. Norris.

The bad man praised. — The nobles of Judah reporting Tobiah's "good deeds" to Nehemiah is a piece of humorous irony often repeated. What heroes this world does select! "Not this man, but Barabbas!" Historians have made rose-colored villains into heroes. Poets have set to bewitching music names that ought to "blister the tongue." Preachers have written original and beautiful sermons to whitewash poor Cain and Judas and Pilate, and, like the Scotch minister of the story, have looked with almost admiration, at least with sympathy, on the "poor deil." Sometimes this is mawkish perverted sentiment, sometimes cant. — Hom. Com.

"God's work may be done, well done, and successfully, and yet different methods taken in doing it; which is a good reason why we should neither arraign others' management, nor make our own standard."— M. Henry.

The builders. —

All are architects of Fate,
  Working in these walls of Time;
Some with massive deeds and great,
  Some with ornaments of rhyme.

Nothing useless is, or low;
  Each thing in its place is best;
And what seems but idle show,
  Strengthens and supports the rest.

In the elder days of art,
  Builders wrought with greatest care,
Each minute and unseen part;
  For the gods see everywhere.

Let us do our work as well,
Both the unseen and the seen;
Make the house, where God may dwell,
Beautiful, entire, and clean.

Else our lives are incomplete,
Standing in these walls of Time,
Broken stairways, where the feet
Stumble as they seek to climb.

Thus alone can we attain
To those turrets, where the eye
Sees the world as one vast plain,
And one boundless reach of sky.—Longfellow.

B. C. cir. 445.

A listless youth approached some fishermen, expressing a wish for a basket of fish. An old fisherman advised him to cast a line for himself He did so, and soon found his wish gratified.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

1—4. (1) set . . doors, left to the last, see vi. 1. porters, of the temple.[a] Neh. placed all the city gates under the care of these Levitical porters and singers, who were the ancient "police." (2) gave . . Hanani,[b] i. 2. palace, fortress, ii. 8. charge, over the gates, etc. feared . . many,[c] i. e. more than most; a good qualification for office. One who feared God would be just towards man. (3) until . . hot, the day well begun, and light. while . . by, etc., the regularly appointed watch were personally to superintend the opening and closing of the doors. every . . house, "every man was to belong to some particular guard-house, and take his turn in sentinel duty." (4) city . . great, Heb. broad in spaces. but . . builded, hence needed the more careful watching.

the gates are set up

[a] 1 Ch. ix. 17, 27.

[b] Neh. x. 1, 23.

[c] Ex. xviii. 21.

Something left undone.—

Labor with what zeal we will,
Something still remains undone, Something uncompleted still Waits the rising of the sun.

Waits, and will not go away;
Waits, and will not be gainsaid;
By the cares of yesterday
Each to-day is heavier made:

Till at length the burden seems Greater than our strength can bear,
Heavy as the weight of dreams,
Pressing on us everywhere.—Longfellow.

"One reason why the bulk of the Jews (who were originally pastoral, and lovers of agriculture) might rather choose to live in the country than at Jerusalem, was because it was more suited to their genius and manner of life; but at this time their enemies were so enraged to see the walls built again, and so restless in their designs to keep the city from rising to its former splendor, that it terrified many from coming to dwell there, thinking themselves more safe in the country, where their enemies had no pretense to disturb them."—Stackhouse.

"He was a faithful man and feared God above many."—It is said of Obadiah that he feared the Lord greatly. Every saint fears the Lord, but every saint does not greatly fear Him. Oh, there are but few Obadiahs in the world, I mean among the saints on earth. As Paul said of Timothy, "I have none 'like minded,'" so it may be said of some concerning the fear of the Lord: they have scarce a fellow. Hananiah had got, as to the exercise of and growth in this grace, the start of many of his brethren. He "feared God above many." Now, then, seeing this grace admits of degrees, and is in some stronger, and in some weaker, let us be all awakened, as to other graces, so to this grace also; that like as you abound in everything, in faith, in utterance, in knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also.—Bunyan.

5—11. (5) And . . heart, etc., as he sought God's help, so also he attributes to Him all he was led to do. reckoned by genealogy, "As Nehemiah contemplated the vast empty spaces within the city walls, and considered with himself how they might best be peopled, the thought came to him—and he hailed it as a Divine inspiration—that by taking a census of the people he might pave the way for some transfer of the inhabitants of the country districts into the capital."—Pulp. Com. And . . register, wh. is here

the register of the genealogy

B. C. 536.

a B. C. 536.

b Ezr. ii. 2.

inserted. them . . first, with Zerubbabel, etc., ab. 100 yrs. bef.[a] (6) province, Ezr. ii. 1-70. (7) Azariah, or Seraiah.[b]

The nobleness of religious decision. — If there be a loftiness and nobleness in decision, it is most lofty, most noble in religion. You need not go for instances of this, and for the admiration which they are calculated to afford, to such examples as Foster brings before you in his inimitable essay, to the examples selected from history, to Marius, sitting amidst the ruins of Carthage, to Pizarro, to Richard III., to Cromwell, nor even to those drawn from the records of Scripture, to Daniel and to Shadrach, Meshach Abednego; nor to those supplied by Christian martyrology, to John Huss and Jerome of Prague; nor to those borrowed from the annals of philanthrophy, to Howard, to Wilberforce, and to Mrs. Fry — these are all grand, impressive, beautiful, but they are not the only ones that may be cited; nor with whatever lurid or milder radiance they may be surrounded and emblazoned, are they those which are the most appropriate for you to contemplate, or which perhaps will have with you the greatest weight. Look at that manly, pious young man, who has left the shelter and protecting wing of his father's house and home, and is now placed in a modern establishment, and surrounded by fifty or a hundred fellow-shopmen, among whom he finds not one to countenance him in the maintenance of his religious profession, and the greater part of whom select him on account of his religion as the object of their pity, their scorn, their hatred or their contempt. Among them are infidels, who ply him with flippant and specious cavils against the Bible; pleasure-takers who use every effort to engage him in their Sunday parties and their polluting amusements; men of light morality, who assail his integrity; a few lovers of science and general knowledge, who endeavor to allure him from religion to philosophy. How fearful is his situation — and how perilous! Usually it would be better to leave it, for how few can hold fast their integrity in such a situation. But there he — this decided, this inflexible, this noble-minded youth — stands firm, unyielding, decided. He is neither ashamed nor afraid of his principles — he neither denies nor conceals them. Before that laughing crowd he bends his knees and prays — in presence of that jeering set he opens his Bible and reads — from that pleasure-taking company he breaks off, amidst their scoffs to go to the house of God. He bears the peltings of their pitiless storm of ridicule or rage, unruffled in temper, unmoved in principle, and only casts upon his persecutors a look of gentle pity, or utters a mild word of expostulation, or silently presents the prayer, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." He keeps by his firmness the whole pack at bay. Some are half subdued by his wonderful firmness. A secret admiration is bestowed upon him by others, while even they who hate him most, often are astonished most at his inflexible resolution, and it may be that one and another, at length, take hold of the skirt of his garment and say to him, "We must go with you, for we see God is with you." Talk of decision of character — there it is in all its force, beauty and utility. I know of no case in God's world in which it is exemplified with more power than in that. — J. A. James.

"Some decent regulated pre-eminence, some preference—not exclusive appropriation — given to birth, is neither unnatural, nor unjust, nor impolitic." — Burke.

"He who boasts of his lineage boasts of that which does not properly belong to him." — Seneca.

"What heredity has to do for us is determined outside ourselves. No man can select his own parents. But every man to some extent can choose his own environment. His relation to it, however largely determined by heredity in the first instance, is always open to alteration. And so great is his control over environment and so radical its influence over him, that he can so direct it as either to undo, modify, perpetuate, or intensify the earlier hereditary influence within certain limits." — Drummond.

Elam and others

12—17. (15) Binnui, or Bani.

The family. — There are the two opposite poles of masculine and feminine, which contain within them the entire of our humanity — which together, not separately, make up the whole of man. Then there are the diversities in the degrees and kinds of affection. For when we speak of family affection, we must remember that it is made up of many diversities. There is nothing more different than the love which the sister bears toward the brother, compared with that which the brother bears toward the sister. The affection which a man bears towards his father is quite distinct from that which he feels towards his mother; it is something quite different towards his sister; totally diverse, again, towards his brother. And then there are diversities of character. First the mature wisdom and stern integrity of the father; then the exuberant tenderness of the mother. And then one is brave and enthusiastic, another thoughtful and another tender. One is remarkable for being full of rich humor; another is sad, mournful, even melancholy. Again, besides these, there are diversities of condition in life. First, there is the heir, sustaining the name and honor of the family; then, perchance, the soldier, in whose career all the anxiety and solicitude of the family is centered; then the man of business, to whom they look up, trusting his advice, expecting his counsel ; lastly, perhaps, there is the invalid, from the very cradle trembling between life and death, drawing out all the sympathies and anxieties of each member of the family, and so uniting them all more closely from their having one common point of sympathy and solicitude. — F. W. Robertson.

"It is, indeed, a blessing when the virtues of noble races are hereditary; and do derive themselves from the imitation of virtuous ancestors." — Nabb.

"Some men by ancestry are only the shadow of a mighty name." — Lucan.

B. C. 536.

18—23. (18) Adonikam, etc., Ezra. ii. 3–19.

Happiness. — The most obvious lesson in Christ's teaching is that there is no happiness in having or getting anything, but only in giving. And half the world is on the wrong scent in pursuit of happiness. They think it consists in having and getting, and in being served by others. It consists in giving and in serving others. He that would be great among you, said Christ, let him serve. He that would be happy, let him remember that there is but one way — it is more blessed, it is more happy, to give than to receive. — Drummond.

Adonikam and others

"A man's nature runs either to herbs or weeds; therefore let him seasonably water the one and destroy the other "— Bacon.

"Men may live fools, but fools they cannot die " — Young.

24—28. (24) Hariph, etc., Ezr. ii. 20–24. (25) Gibeon, "Gibbar (prob. a mistake) in Ezra."

The indomitable force of will. — The last Hastings of Daylesford had . . . . presented the parish living to his second son, and it was in his house, many years later, that Warren Hastings, his grandson, was born. The boy learned his letters at the village school of Daylesford, on the same bench with children of the peasantry. He played in the fields which his fathers had owned ; and what the loyal and brave Hastings of Daylesford had been, was ever in the boy's thoughts. His young ambition was fired, and it is said that one summer's day, when only seven years old, as he laid him down on the bank of the stream which flows thro' the old domain, he formed in his mind, the resolution that he would yet recover possession of the family lands. It was the romantic vision of a mere boy, yet he lived to realize it. The dream became a passion and he pursued his determination thro' youth up to manhood with that calm but indomitable force of will which was the most striking peculiarity of his character. The poor orphan boy became one of the most powerful men of his time. He retrieved the fortunes of his line, bought back the old estate and rebuilt the family mansion. "When under a tropical sun he ruled 50 millions of Asiatics." — Smiles. Fruits of religious decision. — More than half a century ago, a boy was put apprentice to one of our ordinary trades. There was nothing very remarkable about him, with perhaps one exception — he promised to be a pious lad. But alas ! in his case as in many others, his early goodness passed away. He had to sleep with an ungodly apprentice ; and, on retiring to rest, shame of being seen to pray so shook his firmness that, like his wicked companion, he hurried to bed without bending the knee. Again and again this was done. His regard for old lessons got less and less ; by-and-by he threw them off altogether, and seemed like a boy who had never known anything better. In course of time, however, another apprentice came to his master. He also slept in the same room. Like a lad accustomed to pray, the new apprentice quietly knelt to offer prayer to God on retiring to rest. This was seen with deep emotion by the other. Conscience at once and severely condemned his want of firmness. Shame to pray in the presence of his fellow-apprentice was the first step in his downward course. The poor unhappy and fallen youth was once more brought to reflection, and, with a firmer purpose than ever, he consecrated himself to the service of God. In after life he became a useful and honored minister ; and a month or two ago after turning very many to righteousness, he passed away to glory This minister was the beloved and reverend John Angell James of Birmingham . How much harm may we get from one act of indecision, and how much good may be done by one act of decision !

Hariph and others

"It is of no consequence of what parents any man is born, so that he be a man of merit." — Horace.

"Good deeds lie in the memory of age like the coral islands, green and sunny, amidst the melancholy waste of ocean." — D. Thomas.

Good deeds, like sunbeams, shine by a lustre purely their own; nor can their brightness be tarnished by all the calumnies of the slanderer's tongue.

"He that does good to another man does also good to himself, not only in the consequences but in the very act of doing it; for the conscience of well-doing is an ample reward." — Seneca.

"True fortitude is seen in great exploits that justice warrants and that wisdom guides " — Addison.

29—33. (29) Kirjath-jearim, etc., Ezr. ii. 25–29.

Great men of humble origin. — Was it not an obscure monk who split in twain the Catholic church, and a still obscurer countryman of his, who, by the invention of the printing press, revolutionized the whole intellectual aspect of society? Have you never heard of Clarkson, a man originally of no mark or promise, who by the accidental reading of a pamphlet when the slave-trade was at the zenith of its popularity, was led to see its horrors, solemnly dedicated himself to its extinction, and amid scorn and obloquy, lived to accomplish a purpose which, at its annunciation was ridiculed as an enthusiast's dream. — Wm. Matthews.

men of Kirjath-jearim and others

"Be happy but be so by piety." — Mme. de Stael.

"To bear is to conquer our fate " — Campbell.

B. C. 536.

the other Elam and others

"Philosophy does not regard pedigree; she did not receive Plato as a noble, but she made him so." — Seneca.

34—38. (33) Men . . Nebo, the word "other" has prob. come into the text by accident fr. vs. 34. (34) Elam, etc., Ezr. ii. 30–35.

Great men. — How do I know Shakespeare or Dante? By communing with their word and thoughts. Many men know Dante better than their own fathers. He influences them more. As a spiritual presence he is more near to them, as a spiritual force more real. Is there any reason why a greater than Shakespeare or Dante, who also walked this earth, who left great words behind Him, who has great works everywhere in the world now, should not also instruct, inspire, and mold the characters of men? — Drummond.

the priests

[a] 1 Ch. xxiv. 7–9, 14.

39—42. (39) priests, etc.,[a] Ezr. ii. 36–39.

"Of all vanities of fopperies the vanity of high birth is the greatest. True nobility is derived from virtue, not from birth. Titles indeed may be purchased, but virtue is the only coin that makes the bargain valid." — Burton.

Man not dependent on good fortune. —

He's not the happy man to whom is given
A plenteous fortune by indulgent heaven;
Whose gilded roofs on shining columns rise,
And painted walls enchant the gazer's eyes;
Whose table flows with hospitable cheer,
And all the various bounty of the year;
Whose valleys smile, whose gardens breathe the spring,
Whose carved mountains bleat and forests sing:
For whom the cooling shade in summer twines,
While his full cellars give their generous wines;
From whose wide fields unbounded autumn pours
A golden tide into his swelling stores;
Whose winter laughs; for whom the liberal gales
Stretch the big sheet, and toiling commerce sails;
Whom yielding crowds attend, and pleasure serves;
While youth, and health, and vigor string his nerves. — J. Thomas.

the Levites

43—45. (43) Levites, Ezr. ii. 40. (44) singers, Ezr. ii. 41. (45) porters, Ezr. ii. 42.

Missionaries and music. — The Rev. Jonathan Lees, of the London Mission, Tienstin, North China, has sent Mr. Sankey two little Chinese books, one containing the words of twenty of the well-known Songs and Solos, which he has translated into Chinese, and the other giving the music of ten of them printed in the Chinese version of the tonic sol-fa notation. Mr. Lees says the songs have already proved their fitness to deepen and cheer the Christian life in a most pleasing way. He says the musical faculty is one which seems well-nigh extinct in China, but the northern people are far ahead of the southern in this capacity, and the Tientsin church bids fair to be a musical one. Mr. Lees adds that this is not the first attempt to introduce the tonic sol-fa, but it is in a new form, and one which is thoroughly Chinese. The Rev. J. S. Barradale, another of the missionaries, writing to a friend in England, explains why the ordinary staff notation can never be used by the Chinese. Their letters are ranged in perpendicular columns, and they read from the right-hand side of the page to the left. The tonic sol-fa letters can be placed in this way with ease, but not so with the staff, which is necessarily horizontal. Mr. Barradale says that "the sol-fa notation can be made to retain all its easiness in its Chinese dress, while thoroughly conforming to Chinese usage."

"God sent his singers upon earth
With songs of sadness and of mirth
That they might touch the hearts of men,
And bring them back to heaven again."
— Longfellow.

"Tones are the cadences which emotion gives to thought." — Herbert Spencer

Quieting songs. —

Such songs have power to quiet
The restless pulse of care,
And come like the benediction,
That follows after prayer.

And the night shall be filled with music,
And the cares that infest the day,
Shall fold their tents, like the Arabs,
And as silently steal away. — Longfellow.

the Nethinim

"Being well satisfied that for a man who thinks himself to be somebody, there is nothing more disgraceful than to hold himself up as honored, 46—51. (46) Nethinims, etc., Ezr. ii. 43–45.

The genealogy of the poor. — I. The records of the poor have seldom a place in human history. II. The working man is not overlooked in the Word of God. III. The lowest work, even that of the porter, is worthy of note. IV. Much of the world's noblest undertakings is dependent on the hodman.

B. C. 536.

The Nethinim. — The appearance of the Nethinim in the genealogies is a forcible illustration of the impartial grace of God. That grace which would bring in all the Gentiles as children was foretokened by the brotherly position of the Nethinim (of Gentile blood) among the people of God — the children of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. — Crosby. Genealogies. — The frequent use of the patronymic in Greek, the stories of particular races, the lists of priests, and kings, and conquerors at the games preserved at Sparta, Olympia, and elsewhere; the hereditary monarchies and priesthoods; the division, as old as Homer, into tribes, fratriæ, and γένη, and the existence of the tribe, the gens, and the familia among the Romans; the Celtic clans, the Saxon families using a common patronymic, and their royal genealogies running back to the Teutonic gods, these are among the many instances that may be cited to prove the strong family and genealogical instinct of the ancient world. Coming nearer to the Israelites, it will be enough to allude to the hereditary principle and the vast genealogical records of the Egyptians as regards their kings and priests, and to the passion for genealogies among the Arabs, mentioned by Layard and others, in order to show that the attention paid by the Jews to genealogies is in entire accordance with the manners and tendencies of their contemporaries. — Hom. Com.

not on his own account, but for the sake of his forefathers. Yet hereditary honors are a noble and splendid treasure to descendants."—Plato.

"The influence of a pious example descends downwards from the head of a family, diffuses itself over the main body, till it reaches the very lowest of it." — Seed.

52—56. (52) Besai, etc., Ezr. ii. 46–54.

Reason. —

Two angels guide
The path of man, both aged and yet young,
As angels are, ripening through endless years,
On one he leans; some call her Memory,
And some Tradition; and her voice is sweet,
With deep, mysterious accords: the other Floating above, holds down a lamp which streams
A light divine, and searching on the earth, Compelling eyes and footsteps. Memory yields,
Yet clings with loving check, and shines anew,
Reflecting all the rays of that bright lamp
Our angel Reason holds. We had not walked But for Tradition; we walk evermore
To higher paths, by brightening Reason's lamp.
— George Eliot.

"Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one more contemptible. Vice is infamous though in a prince, and virtue honorable, though in a peasant." — Addison.

"As they who deck themselves have the looking-glass before their eyes, so they who go about any worthy thing must have the example of worthy men in mind, and do it in that manner that others may not scorn to make them their example." — Cawdray.

57—62. (57) children . . servants, etc., Ezr. ii. 55–60. (61) fathers' house, R. V., "fathers' houses." seed, pedigree.

the children of Solomon's servants

The restoration of man. — A researcher of art in Italy, reading in some book that there was a portrait of Dante painted by Giotto, was led to suspect where it had been placed. There was an apartment used as an outhouse for the storing of wood, hay, and the like. He besought and obtained permission to examine it. Clearing out the rubbish, and experimenting upon the white-washed wall, he soon detected the signs of the long-hidden portrait. Little by little with loving skill he opened up the sad, thoughtful, stern face of the old Tuscan poet. Sin has done for man what the whitewash did for the painting. It has covered over the likeness of God upon the soul; and it is only by the Spirit of God Himself that the long-hidden likeness can be manifested again.

"Pride of origin, whether high or low, springs from the same principle in human nature; one is but the positive, the other the negative, people of a single weakness." — Lowell.

63—65. (63) priests, etc., Ezr. ii. 61–63. (65) Tirshatha,[a] governor, i. e. Zerubbabel. till . . Thummim, Ezr. ii. 63.

the register of some of the priests lost

Service versus self-seeking. — Napoleon sought to rule men; Washington aimed to serve them. You see the results of the two systems in what is left of them. At Waterloo to-day you find a great waste desert, in the centre of which is simply a mound to commemorate a great battle. But around the field of Bunker Hill sprang up the great city of colleges and schools, and those influences that went out through all the world; that is the result of the service which Washington rendered in contrast to the domination of Napoleon. You find at Mount Vernon a very plain structure for the tomb of Washington, scarcely to be noticed, except one goes out of his way to see it. Napoleon's tomb is in the heart of Paris, and a marble casket holds his remains. Washington's remains are as broad as the continent. That is the result of service as opposed to self-seeking. — Alexander McKenzie.

[a] Neh. viii. 9.

"If it is fortunate to be of noble ancestry, it is not less so to be such as that people do not care to be informed whether you are noble or ignoble." — Bruyère.

B. C. 536.

the number of the whole congregation

"Let the world have their maygames, their dancings, their puppet shows, hobby-horses, bagpipes, balls, and whatever sports please them best, providing they be followed with discretion."—Burton.

66—69. (66) The . . together, etc., Ezr. ii. 64.

A difficulty well met.—There was once a difficulty amongst the singers of Dr. Samuel West's church, New Bedford, United States, and it was reported that the choir would not sing a note on the next Sunday. The doctor commenced that morning's worship by giving out Watts's hymn, "Come ye, who love the Lord." After reading it through, he looked up very emphatically at the choir, and said, "You will begin at the second verse:—

"'Let those refuse to sing Who never knew our God.'"

They sang that hymn.

70—73. (70) some, part. Tirshatha, either in addition to the information contained in Ezra, or described in greater detail. the treasure, R. V., "the treasury," also, vs. 71, viii. 9. drams,[a] darics. The daric, an anc. Persian gold coin = about 5 dollars. (71) pound of silver, a mina = 60 shekels = about 20 dollars. (72) garments, a customary gift in the E. (73) So, etc., hence the use of this register in guiding the people to their cities. month, Tisri,[b] ch. vii. should terminate with the words, "dwelt in their cities," as it does in the LXX. "Having completed the account of what happened in the sixth month, Elul (ch. vi. 15), and transcribed the register which he had the good fortune to discover at that date, Nehemiah proceeds to relate events belonging to the seventh month."—Pulp. Com.

the contributions to the work

a Ezr. ii. 69.

b Ezr. iii. 1.

Their donations consisted principally of garments. This would appear a singular description of gifts to be made by any one amongst us; but in the East a present of garments is conformable to the prevailing sentiments and customs of society.

Proportionate giving.—I. The chiefs of the people gave with a princely munificence. II. The rest of the people gave as much collectively, by each one giving as much as he could. III. The gifts of the poor not to be despised; the widow's mite was registered in heaven.

Rest from toil.—One great danger in our time is that every man is so active; every man has so much to think about and to do. Nothing moves slowly. If we had the refashioning of the year, we would make it twenty-four months. If we had the refashioning of the day, we would make it forty-eight hours. If we had our own refashioning, we would kindle in ourselves a fire that would burn forty-eight hours without replenishing. Intensity of life, over-wrought occupation comes from the very social, political and commercial conditions in which we live. And, as if this were not enough, we try, by strong stimulus, to wind up the flagging nerve, worn out by too much excitement. We want, in that way, to make twelve hours do the work of twenty-four.—Beecher.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

B. C. cir. 445.

the people gathered to hear the law

1—4. (1) all . . man, to celebrate the Feast of Trumpets.[c] the street, R. V., "the broad place." into . . gate, in S. rampart.[d] they . . scribe, who had come to Jerus. ab. 12 yrs. bef. Neh.[e] The people who have not kept the law are nevertheless anxious to hear it. The omission of Ezra's name up to this point is very singular in view of the social conditions wh. confronted Neh. "It is suggested that Ezra, after accomplishing the reforms described in Ezr. ix., x., returned to Babylon; that after an absence of 12 years, he revisited Jerusalem in time to witness the completion of the city walls by Nehemiah, and was requested by the people to renew his former practice of expounding the law in public."—Cam. B. Others sugges that this whole chapter recounts the events wh. took place in 457 B. C., the second year after Ezra's arrival, just before his great reformation. Cf. 1 Esdras ix. 37 ff., and Josephus. bring . . Moses, the wall being finished the Jews become jealous to revive the distinctive national characteristics. They were ready now to adopt the civil and religious policy of Ezra and Neh. (2) all . . understanding,[f] all old enough, or who knew the language. seventh month, i. e. the opening day of the civil year and also of the sabbatical month. (3) ears . . law, a long service, but an attentive congregation. (4) pulpit, lit. tower. and . . stood, hence this pulpit must have been a high platform, to afford standing-room for 13 persons, prob. laymen.

c "First day of 7th eccles. year; and New Year's day of the civil year." Le. xxiii. 24; 1 K. viii. 2.

d Through this gate the Nethinim brought water into the temple, and there was a large area bef. it.

e B. C. 458, with commission fr. Artaxerxes, Ezr. vii. 8-28; viii. 1.

f De. xxxi. 12.

"Five or six hours together they spent in holy duties, whereas the most amongst us think long of an hour; they sit, as it were, in the stocks while

The oldest pulpit.—This is the first account we have of a pulpit. In structure it was evidently not a very elegant one. It was extemporized for the occasion; it was more of a platform than modern pulpit. The words of the text leads us to make three remarks on this old pulpit. I. It was occupied by duly qualified men. They were the recognized teachers of Israel

A greater curse to Christianity is scarcely to be found than unqualified preachers. II. This old pulpit was attended by an exemplary congregation. 1. It was a congregation disposed to hear; 2. It was a congregation competent to understand; 3. It was a congregation deeply interested in the discourse; 4. It was a congregation inspired with religious reverence. III. This old pulpit accomplished the grand end of preaching. 1. It imparted spiritual instruction; 2. It made a deep religious impression; 3. It stimulated a practical godliness. — D. Thomas.

Long religious services. — Complaints against long religious services are very frequent. Few things appear so bad to some persons as to be kept in the house of God more than one or two hours. Let us see how it was in the seventeenth century. Mr. Howe was then minister of Great Torrington, in Devonshire. His labors here were characteristic of the times. On the public fasts, it was his common method to begin about nine in the morning, with a prayer for about a quarter of an hour, in which he begged a blessing on the work of the day; he afterwards read and expounded a chapter of psalm, in which he spent about three-quarters of an hour; then prayed an hour; preached another hour; and prayed again for half an hour. After this he retired, and took a little refreshment for a quarter of an hour or more, the people singing all the while. He then returned to the pulpit, prayed for another hour, gave then another sermon of about an hour's length, and so concluded the service of the day, about four o'clock in the afternoon, with half an hour or more of prayer. God's word. — The commandment was a lamp, and the law a light. The Greeks call the law the standing mind of God. And if Demosthenes could say of men's laws, that they were the invention of God; if Xenophon could say of the Persian laws, that they kept the people even from coveting any wickedness; if Cicero durst say of the Roman laws, that they far excelled and exceeded all the learned libraries of the philosophers, both in weight and worth, how much more may all this and more be said of this perfect law of God, the book whereof was here brought forth by Ezra, and read and expounded in the ears of all the people? — Hom. Com.

B. C. cir. 445.

they hear the Word read or preached, and come out of the church, when the tedious sermon runneth somewhat beyond the glass, like prisoners out of a gaol."—Trapp.

"The devout man exults in the indications of his being fixed and irretrievable. He feels this confirmed habit as the grasp of the hand of God, which will never let him go. From this advanced state he looks with firmness and joy on futurity, and says, 'I carry the eternal mark upon me that I belong to God; I am free of the universe; and I am ready to go to any world to which He shall please to transmit me — certain that everywhere in height or depth, He will acknowledge me forever."—Foster.

Ezra reads the law to the people

5—8. (5) opened, unrolled. all . . up, reverence for the law of God,[a] prob. sat down again to listen to the reading and explanation. (6) Amen,[b] so be it; or so let it be. Thus they expressed thanks for it, and affirmed their allegiance to it. with . . hands,[c] in supplication to God to grant a blessing. (7) Bani, etc., xii. 8. and the Levites, i. e. the rest of the Levites in addition to the thirteen just mentioned. caused . . law, perh. by means of transla. of Heb. into Chaldee. stood . . place, better "were in their place," i. e. did not leave their place during the seven hours of reading and expounding. (8) so . . distinctly, lit. they read it, so that it was clearly laid out, spread out. A hint to both readers and expositors of the Bible. and . . reading, the people understood, etc.[d]

Effect of Ezra's preaching. — I. The mode adopted by Ezra, namely the expository, we conceive to be peculiarly worthy of imitation. 1. It led the people into a better acquaintance with the Scriptures; 2. It brought every part of the sacred records into view; 3. It brought home truth to the conscience with more authority. But, in considering the Word of God as explained at Jerusalem, we are more particularly led to notice — II. In what manner it should be heard. Truly admirable was the conduct of the people on this occasion. Observe — 1. Their reverential awe; 2. Their devout affection; 3. Their unreserved obedience. — C. Simeon.

The Bible in Iceland. — Dr. Ebenezer Henderson was sent to Iceland by the Bible Society to distribute the Icelandic Scriptures amongst the inhabitants. It was found by Henderson that there was a famine of the Word of God in the island, often only one copy of the Scriptures in a whole parish. During the course of his first and his two subsequent journeys, he disposed, or arranged for the disposal, by gratuitous distribution or by purchase, of 4,055 Bibles, and 6,634 New Testaments, and thousands of tracts, with which the Icelanders might beguile their long winter evenings. The rapture with which his gift of a New Testament was frequently hailed may be gathered from such an incident as the following: He had sent, as was his custom, a notice round the neighborhood where he traveled of the object of his journey. In response, a young man, amongst others, had been despatched by his poor and aged parents to learn the truth of the message they had heard. On receiving a Testament, it was hardly possible for him to contain his joy. As a number of the people

[a] Jud. iii. 20; Job xxix. 8; xxvii. 14.

[b] 1 Co. xiv. 16.

[c] Lam. iii. 14; 1 Ti. ii. 8.

[d] Hooker shows that the reading of the Bible to the people is the best preaching, V., xxi.; xxii.

Constantine the Great and our King Edward the VI. would not hear a sermon but standing.

"Though Fortune's malice overthrow my state, my mind exceeds the compass of her wheel."—Shakespeare.

B. C. cir. 445.

had at the time collected around the door of the tent, he caused the young man to read the third chapter of the Gospel of John. He had scarcely begun when the people all sat down or knelt on the grass, and listened with the most devout attention. As he proceeded, the tears began to trickle down their cheeks, and they were all much affected. The scene was doubtless as new to them as it was to Henderson; and on his remarking, after the young man was done, what important instructions were contained in the Scripture that had been read, they all gave their assent, adding, with a sigh, that these truths were too little attended to. "It is impossible," adds Henderson, "for me to describe the pleasure I felt on this occasion. I forgot all the fatigues of traveling over the mountains, and indeed, to enjoy another such evening, I could travel twice the distance." — O. T. Anec.

"Man feels a thousand deaths in fearing one." — Young.

the people weeping are reproved

9—12. (9) Tirshatha, the Persian title; the Heb. would be Pechah.[a] weep, they wept tears of sorrow at their sins, and of joy at God's goodness. wept, "in the new light of the higher truth we suddenly discover that the 'robe of righteousness' in which we have been parading is but as 'filthy rags.' Then our once vaunted attainments become despicable in our own eyes. The eminence on which we have been standing so proudly is seen to be a wretched mole-hill compared with the awful snow-peak from which the clouds have just dispersed. Can we ever climb that?" — Exp. Bib. 2 Ki. xxii. 11. (10) sweet, new wine. A proverbial expression equiv. to "go and enjoy this day, it is a feast day, let there be no fasting." sorry, i. e. grieved. and . . prepared,[b] they were to be mindful of the absent and the poor. joy, "a mirthfulness wh. springs fr. right relations to God is an element and sign of spiritual strength." (11) Levites, following the example, and obeying the command of their leaders. (12) people, etc., thus comforted, ceased weeping.

a As in vs. 14.

b Est. ix. 19, 22; Re. xi. 10; De. xvi. 14.

"Holy joy is like oil to the wheels of our obedience." — M. Henry.

The manner in which the law was heard. — Observe — 1. Their reverential awe. How rarely do we find persons duly inspired with a sense of their obligation to God for giving them a revelation of His will! How rarely do men at this day look through the preacher unto God, and hear God speaking to them by the voice of His servants! 2. Their devout affections. "When the people heard the words of the law," they all wept, as feeling that they had sinned greatly against it (vs. 9). And when they were reminded that, as the design of the present feast was to bring to their view the tender mercies of their God and to encourage them to expect all manner of blessings at His hands, they ought rather to rejoice (vss. 10, 11), they did rejoice. 3. Their unreserved obedience. No sooner was it discovered that an ordinance appointed by Moses had been neglected, than they hastened to observe it, according to the strict letter of the law, and actually did observe it with greater fidelity than it had ever been observed. — Hom. Com.

"Joy in God is a religious duty. The devout soul derives strength fr. godly thankfulness and holy joy, bec. it knows that God will help those who praise Him and rejoice in Him. If the strength of the Lord is our joy, then the joy of the Lord will be our strength." — Bp. Wordsworth.

Sending portions. — The Eastern princes and the Eastern people not only invite their friends to feasts, but it is their custom to send a portion of the banquet to those that cannot well come to it, especially their relations, and those in a state of mourning. This sending of portions to those for whom nothing was prepared has been understood by those commentators I have consulted to mean the poor; sending portions, however, to one another is expressly distinguished in Esth. ix. 22 from gifts to the poor. There would not have been the shadow of a difficulty in this had the historian been speaking of a private feast, but he is describing a national festival, where every one was supposed to be equally concerned: those, then, for whom nothing was prepared, it should seem, means those that were in a state of mourning; mourning for private calamities being here supposed to take the place of rejoicing for public concerns. But it is not only to those that are in a state of mourning that provisions are sometimes sent; others are honored by princes in the same manner, who could not conveniently attend to the royal table, or to whom it was supposed not to be convenient. So when the grand emir found it incommoded Monsieur D'Arvieux to eat with him, he complaisantly desired him to take his own time for eating, and sent him what he liked from his kitchen, and at the time he chose. — Harmer.

"Nehemiah had Jovianus the emperor's happiness, which was, that he might govern wise men, and that wise men might govern him." — Trapp.

the feast of tabernacles

13—15. (13) on . . day, of the feast.[c] were . . fathers, the desire of the people to hear the law made it the more needful that these should be able to teach. unto . . scribe, a recognized master in Israel. (14) And . . law,[d] i. e. they came to the place in the course of their reading. which . . Moses, c See vs. 1.

d Le. xxiii. 34, 42; De. xvi. 13.

R. V., "how that the Lord, etc." dwell . . month, Feast of Tabernacles. (15) Go . . mount, of Olives, or perchance "the hill country of Judah." olive . . pine, olive and wild olive.

Obedience. — When Leonard Woods, president of Bowdoin college, was in France, he was invited to dine with the king. He presented himself at the palace, and was met by the king with his accustomed courtesy, who said, "We did not know that we were to have the pleasure of your company to-day. You did not answer our invitation." Leonard Woods said, "I thought the invitation of a king was to be obeyed, not answered." When the Spirit says come, it is equal to a command, and we would better put off all other engagements, and come. No matter how gently and winsomely the invitation comes, let us never forget that there is a voice of royal, imperial, imperious urgency and authority behind it. — John McNeill.

B. C. cir. 445.

"Divine knowledge is as a great lady, that will not be easily acquainted with us but upon further suit." — Trapp.

Æneas Sylvius was wont to say of knowledge, popular men should esteem it as silver, noblemen as gold, princes prize it as pearls.

16—18. (16) So . . forth, there were 13 days in wh. to make all necessary preparations. roof . . house,[a] the roof was flat. courts, etc.,[b] i. e. they utilized all open spaces for this purpose. (17) since . . so, i. e. the feast had not been kept with such fulness of joy and close attention to the law of it. And . . gladness,[c] the joy was general as well as deep. "This then is the first application of the law which the people have received with so much distress. It ordains a glad festival. So much brighter is religion when it is understood and practiced than when it is only contemplated from afar!" — Exp. Bib. (18) Also . . God, they were not weary of hearing the Word. eighth day, the great day of the feast.[d] solemn assembly, R. V., marg., "closing festival," manner, R. V., "ordinance."

the feast is kept with great joy

[a] De. xxii. 8.

[b] Ex. xxiii. 14, 17; De xvi. 16; Nu. x, 10; Ps. lxxxi. 3.

[c] 2 Ch. xxx. 21.

[d] Le. xxiii. 36; Jo. vii. 37.

Christian joy. — This same communication of gladness is seen in the life of our Lord, not only during those early sunny days in Galilee when His ministry opened under a cloudless sky, but even amid the darkness of the last hours at Jerusalem, for in His final discourses Jesus prayed that His joy might be in His disciples in order that their joy might be full. A more generous perception of this truth would make religion like sunshine and music, like the blooming of spring flowers and the outburst of woodland melody about the path of the Christian pilgrim. It is clear that Jesus Christ expected this to be the case since He commenced His teaching with the word "Blessed." St. Paul, too, saw the same possibility, as his repeated encouragements to "Rejoice" bear witness. Religion may be compared to one of those Italian city churches which are left outwardly bare and gloomy, while within they are replete with treasures of art. We must cross the threshold, push aside the heavy curtain, and tread the sacred pavement, if we would see the beauty of sculptured column and mural fresco and jeweled altar-piece. — Exp. Bib.

Delight in the Word of God. — "A very poor woman in Edinburgh, who was so nearly blind as not to be able to peruse the Bible, could get no one to read it to her. She was greatly distressed to live day after day without the comfort and direction of this blessed book. She thought of many plans, and made many inquiries, but all in vain. At last she made a bargain with another woman to read her a chapter every night; and for this service she paid her a penny a week out of her scanty pittance." Lady Jane Grey was once asked by one of her friends how she could forego the pleasures of the chase and prefer sitting at home reading her Bible. She replied, "All amusements of that description are but the shadow of the pleasure which I enjoy in reading this book."

"They had listened on the first day of the month from morning unto midday; but the more they heard the Word of God, the more desirous were they to hear it. The more men converse with the Scriptures, the more they will wish and love to do so." — Wordsworth.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

1—3. (1) Now, etc.,[e] "after the celebration of the 'solemn assembly' on the 22d of the month Tisri one day's interval is allowed, and on the 24th a special religious function is performed by the whole people, consisting (1) of a humble confession of national sin; (2) of a national covenant to obey the law." The reformers would avail themselves of the great religious zeal aroused by the feast. sack-clothes, R. V., "sackcloth." earth upon them, i. e. upon their head. (2) strangers,[f] "compare ch. x. 28, by which it appears that the 'strangers' are 'the people of the lands,' or neighboring heathen, of whom there were at all times considerable numbers in Jerusalem. It was not fitting that these aliens should take part in a ceremony of which the main object was that the special people of God should renew their covenant with Him." — Pulp. Com. (3) they . . place, prob. this refs. to Ezra and the solemn repentance of the people

[e] 1 S. iv. 12; 2 S. i. 2; Job ii. 12.

[f] Ezr. ix. 2; x. 2.

"A telegraph wire must be completely insulated before it can convey the electric communication. So we must be separated from the world before God's message to sinners can have free course through us." — G. F. Pentecost.

B. C. 445.

"Whatever else may be said about the Bible, I am sure no man can deny that it is the best book to guide men toward practical virtue and true holiness that ever has appeared in the world. As a practical book, as a light to a man's feet and a lamp to his path, it has proved itself to be, and can by investigation be shown to be, the wisest book to follow that is known." — H. W. Beecher.

readers, who read and explained the law for 3 hrs. worshipped, literally "prostrated themselves."

The confession of sin. — I. It was general. Not one class of people alone. Each had sinned. II. It was public. They had sinned publicly. They would publicly confess that they had sinned. III. It was far-reaching. Into the past. They confessed the sins of the nation in all ages. IV. It was accompanied with a purpose of amendment.

The Bible a treasure. — A good man once entered a house in Germany, and found it very wretched, no fire, no furniture, no food. Everything bore the appearance of utter poverty. But, glancing round, he saw, in a neglected corner, a copy of the Bible; and when he went away he said to the poor inmates, "There is a treasure in this house that would make you all rich." After he had gone, the people began to search the house for what they thought must be a jewel or a pot of gold, and finding nothing they went to dig up the very floor, in hopes of discovering the hidden store of wealth. All in vain One day after that the mother lifted up the old Bible, and found written on the fly-leaf of it, taken from its own pages, these words, "Thy testimonies are better to me than ten thousands of gold and silver." "Ah!" she said, "can this be the treasure the stranger spoke of?" So she told her thought to the rest; they began to read the Bible, became changed in character, and a blessing came in to stay with them. The stranger came back to find poverty gone, contentment and peace in its place, and a hearty Christian welcome, while, with grateful joy, the family told him, "We found the treasure, and it has proved all that you said to us it would."

the Levites stand up and bless the Lord a Neh. iii. 17; vii. 43; x. 10, 14; xiv. 8, 24; Ezr. ii. 40; iii. 9.

b De. x. 14; 1 Ki. viii. 27. See also Bp. Pearson, Creed, i. 64–66.

It may be true, as Jay says, that a sportsman has fired into a flight of birds, and not killed one, and he has killed one when he had only one to aim at, but, on the other hand, if two anglers went out with rod and line to fish, he would surely catch the largest number in a pond where fish were abundant than he who angled where fish were scarce.

4–6. (4) stairs, the scaffold or platform, ch. viii. 4. cried . . God, these eight Levites were set apart to recite in unison some special form of prayer. (5) Levites, for these names consult refs.[a] Stand up, etc., opening exhortation to the people to unite with one accord in gen. confess. of faith. bless . . ever, R. V., "fr. everlasting to everlasting," words connected with "God," rather than the verb "bless." thy glorious name, the name is the Being of God made known to man; the glory of it is its manifestation (Ex. xxxiii. 18, 22). (6) Thou . . alone,[b] etc., confess. of unity, omnipresence, etc., of God; in opposition to heathen errors. heaven . . host, i. e. the heavens in all their immeasurable greatness, the clouds and the stars, the whole solar system. Perhaps "the host" refers to the angelic beings.

The prayer is very like some of the historical psalms. By pointing to the variegated picture of the History of Israel, it shows how God reveals Himself through events. This suggests the probability that the three hours' reading of the fast day had been taken from the historical parts of the Pentateuch. The religious teachers of Israel knew what riches of instruction were buried in the history of their nation, and they had the wisdom to unearth those treasures for the benefit of their own age. In tracking the course of revelation through history, the author of the prayer follows two threads. First one and then the other is uppermost, but it is the interweaving of them that gives the definite pattern of the whole picture. These are God's grace and man's sin. The method of the prayer is to bring them into view alternately, as they are illustrated in the History of Israel. The result is like a drama of several acts, and three scenes in each act. Although we see progress and a continuous heightening of effect, there is a startling resemblance between the successive acts, and the relative characters of the scenes remain the same throughout. In the first scene we always behold the free and generous favor of God offered to the people He condescends to bless, altogether apart from any merits or claims on their part. In the second we are forced to look at the ugly picture of Israel's ingratitude and rebellion. But this is invariably followed by a third scene, which depicts the wonderful patience and long-suffering of God, and His active aid in delivering His guilty people from the troubles they have brought on their own heads by their sins, whenever they turn to Him in penitence. — Exp. Bib.

they recount His good in the past

c Ac. vii. 1–4.

d He. xi. 8.

e Ge. xv. 18–21; xvii. 7, 8; Jos. xxiii. 14.

f Ex. iii. 7; xiv. 10, 15.

g Ex. xviii. 11; Ps. cv. 26, 27; lxxviii. 12, 43.

7–10. (7) who . . Abram, "the selection of the 'chosen people' was the free act of God's love;" Ac. xiii. 17. and . . Chaldees,[c] prob. situated in the northern part of Assyria; Ge. xii. 1. Abraham, Ge. xvii. 5; the significant fact is not the meaning of the word "Abraham," but that the change of name took place in connection with the rite of circumcision. It was the covenant name. (8) And . . thee,[d] Ge. xv. 6. and . . land,[e] Ge. xii. 7. (9) see, etc.,[f] Ex. ii. 25. (10) signs, etc.,[g] the plagues, Ex. vii.–xii.

B. C. 445.

The path of duty the path of trial. — Observe — I. That the path of duty here runs through great trials. Sometimes — 1. It involves the sacrifice of the most endeared friendship; 2. The sacrifice of worldly prospects; 3. The endangering of life itself; 4 An outrage on our tender sentiments. II. That great trials serve to test the principles of pilgrims. 1. It reveals the bad principles of the heart; 2. It reveals the good principles of the heart. III That unbounded faith in God is essential to carry us safely through the path of duty with all its great trials. — Thomas.

Obedience to duty. —

I traveled once a rocky road;
A weary road it was to go;
With burdens, too, a heavy load,
And where it led, I did not know.

A weary road with rivers high;
Wild beasts were standing on the rocks;
And clouds came drifting through the sky,
Filled deep with fires and thunder shocks.

But thro' the clouds, and thro' the flame,
And foaming floods, as on I went,
A voice of hope and cheering came,
"Fear not to go where God hath sent."

That voice is ringing in my ears;
Let mountains rise, let oceans flow;
It matters not. Away with fears,
If God doth send me, let me go. — T. C. Upham.

"The painter's soul is no doubt thrown into his painting, and the sculptor's and architect's into their statues and buildings; but their souls meanwhile exist apart, and are capable of other acts besides these. In a sense, as true as it is grand, the soul of the Creator is streaming through the order and life of creation; but meanwhile He exists independent of and far above them." — McCosh.

11—14. (11) divide, etc.,[a] Ps. lxxiv. 13. (12) leddest,[b] etc., Ex. xiii. 21. (13) Sinai,[c] Ex. xix. 20. judgments . . commandments, "'Right judgments' or 'equitable decisions' opposed to the perversions of justice by partiality or bribery; 'true laws' or 'teachings of truth,' to erroneous teachings. 'Good statutes and commandments' relate, the one to positive enactments upon religious matters, the other to legislation generally." — Cam. Bib. (14) sabbath, etc.,[d] Ge. ii. 3. and laws, R. V., "and a law" i. e. "religious instructions as distinguished fr. positive rules."

His wonders at Sinai

a Ps. lxxviii. 13; Ex. xiv 21, 28; He. xi. 29; Ex. xv. 5, 10.

b Ex. xl. 38; Ps. lxxviii. 14; cv. 39.

c Ps. xix. 8, 9; Ro. vii. 12.

d Ex. xvi. 25, 26; xx. 8–11.

The Word of God. — For my part I propose to addict myself with more incessant assiduity to this delightful and divine study of the Book of God. Away, my Homer, I have no need of being entertained by you, since Job and the prophets furnish me with images much more magnificent, and lessons infinitely more important. Away, my Horace; nor shall I suffer any loss by your absence, while the sweet singer of Israel tunes his lyre, and inspirits me with the noblest strains of devotion; and even my prime favorite, my Virgil, may withdraw, since in Isaiah I enjoy all his correctness of judgment and all his beautiful propriety of diction. — Hervey. Jewish Sabbath observance. — And now the weekly Sabbath, the pledge between Israel and God, had once more come. To meet it as a bride or queen, each house was adorned on the Friday evening. The Sabbath lamp was lighted: the festive garments put on; the table provided with the best which the family could afford; and the Jiddush, or benediction, spoken over the cup of wine, which, as always, was mixed with water. And as Sabbath morning broke, they hastened with quick steps to the synagogue; for such was the rabbinic rule in going, while it was prescribed to return with slow and lingering steps . . . . On no other subject is rabbinic teaching more painfully minute and more manifestly incongruous to its professed object. For, if we rightly apprehend what underlay the complicated and intolerably burdensome laws and rules of Pharisaic Sabbath observance, it was to secure negatively absolute rest from all labor, and positively to make the Sabbath a delight. — Edersheim.

"And made a covenant to be his God and the God of his seed. This was divini mellis alveare, the beehive of the heavenly honey; this was more than to be monarch of the whole world. — Trapp.

their past disobedience is owned

e Ps. lxxviii. 23, 24; cv. 40; Jo. vi. 31.

f Nu. xx. 10, 11; Ps. lxxviii. 15-20; cv. 41; cxiv. 8.

g Nu. xiv. 30.

h 2 Ki. xvii. 14; 2; Ch. xxx. 8; Jer. xix. 15; Ac. vii. 51.

i Ps. lxxviii. 10, 11, 42, 43; cvi.

15—17. (15) bread . . hunger,[e] Ex. xvi. 4, ff. water,[f] Ex. xvii. 6. promisedst, R. V., "commandedst." sworn,[g] R. V., "lifted up thine hand." De. i. 8. (16) fathers,[h] omit "and" before "our fathers;" it should be "they, i. e. our fathers." proudly, presumptuously. De. xxxi. 27. (17) And . . obey,[i] Nu. xiv. 4. ready to pardon, Heb. "a God of forgiveness."

B. C. 445.

13, 21, 24, 25; Ex. xxxiv. 6; Nu. xiv. 18; Ps. lxxxvi. 5; Joel ii. 13; Jon. iv. 2.

"It is our comfort that we have to do with a forgiving, sin-pardoning God, that doth it naturally, plentifully, constantly. This should be a perpetual picture in our hearts."—Trapp.

Pardoning mercy.— I. The text prefers an important charge. 1. A charge of obstinate disobedience; 2. Of criminal forgetfulness; 3. Of hardened impenitence. II. The text contains a gracious declaration; "Thou art a God ready to pardon," etc. The truth of this is manifest and undeniable. Consider—1. The perfections of the Divine character; 2. The glorious scheme of human redemption; 3. The testimonies and promises of Scripture; 4. The multitudes that have obtained forgiveness. III. The text suggests appropriate instruction. We may here learn — 1. The necessity of seeking forgiveness; 2. The possibility of obtaining forgiveness; 3. The felicity of participating in forgiveness.

God's mercy to sinners. — A story is told concerning a bold rebel that had made a great party against one of the Roman emperors. A proclamation was therefore sent abroad that whosoever could bring in the rebel, dead or alive, he should have a great sum of money for his reward. The outlaw, hearing of it, comes, and, presenting himself before the emperor, demands the sum of money proposed. The emperor bethinks himself that if he should put him to death, the world would be ready to say that he did it to save his money; and so he freely pardons the rebel, and gives him the money. Here now was light in a dark lantern, mercy in a very heathen. And shall such a one do thus that had but a drop of mercy and compassion in him, and will not Christ do much more that hath all fulness of grace and mercy in Himself? Surely His bowels yearn to the worst of sinners repenting; let them but come in, and they shall find Him ready to pardon, yea, One that is altogether made up of pardoning mercies. — Whitecross.

mercies and sins in the wilderness

18—19. (18) calf, etc., Ex. xxxii. 4. (19) manifold mercies, etc.,[a] Ps. lxxviii. 38. and . . go, the LXX. omits "and," thus rendering the clause in apposition with the "light." (20) spirit, etc.[b] Nu. xi. 17. manna,[c] Ex. xvi. 35. water,[d] Ex. xvii. 6. (21) sustain,[e] etc., De. ii. 7.

God's goodness in the past.— I. This should not be forgotten. II. The remembrance of it should affect our present feelings towards Him. III. What God has once been, that He will ever be. IV. The past should teach us gratitude and trust.

Providential care.— Luther was one day walking with his brother, when a violent storm of thunder and lightning overtook him; his brother was struck dead upon the spot, and the future reformer spared. Bunyan enlisted as a soldier, but when the time to leave home came, he got some person to go for him as his substitute; the man was shot, and Bunyan spared. Doddridge, when born, was so weakly an infant that it was thought he was dead; but a nurse, standing by, fancied she saw some symptoms of life, and the feeble spark was saved from being extinguished. Wesley when a child was only just preserved from fire; almost the moment he was rescued the roof of the house fell in. Philip Henry had a similar escape. Dr. Adam Clarke was narrowly recovered from being drowned when a boy. Charles of Balk put his saddle-bags into a wrong boat, as he thought; but the boat in which he intended to go was lost, and every hand drowned. The originator of the Bible society was preserved.—Bowls.

a Ps xcix. 8; cvi. 45; Ex. xiii. 32; Nu xiv. 14; 1 Co. x. 1.

b Isa. lxiii. 11.

c Jos. v. 12.

d 1 Co. x. 4.

e De. viii. 4; xxix. 5.

"There is an old tradition among the Jews that the manna tasted like whatever you were hungry for every morning. If you woke up, for example, hungry for Egyptian cucumbers and leeks, and did not murmur after them, but thankfully took your manna, the manna tasted like them."—John MacNeill.

their possession of Canaan

22—25. (22) and . . corners, R. V., "which thou didst allot after their portions." Sihon, Nu. xxi. 24, 32–35. (23) Their . . heaven,[f] Ge. xv. 5. (24) thou . . kings, etc.,[g] Jos. xxiii. 4. (25) And . . cities, etc.,[h] R. V., "fenced cities," e. g. Jericho, Ai, Hebron, but Jerusalem held out until the time of Dav.'s reign. fat land, i. e. fertile soil. wells digged, R. V., "cisterns hewn out." became fat, "grew wanton and self-indulgent." delighted, luxuriated, i. e. became effeminate and degenerate, De. iii. 5.

Prosperity. — Riches are the stairs whereby men climb up into the height of dignity, the fortification that defends it, the food it lives upon, the oil that keeps the lamp of honor from going out. Honor is a bare robe if riches do not lace and flourish it, and riches a dull lump till honor give a soul to quicken it.— Adams. Prosperity most usually makes us proud, insolent, forgetful of God, and of all duties we owe unto Him. It chokes and extinguishes, or at least cools and abates, the heat and vigor of all virtue in us. And as the ivy whilst it embraces the oak sucks the sap from the root, and in time makes it rot and perish, so worldy prosperity kills us with kindness, whilst it sucks from us the sap of God's graces, and so makes our spiritual growth and strength to decay and languish. Neither do men ever f Ge. xxii. 17.

g Jos. xxiv. 11, 12; Ps. xliv. 1–3.

h Nu. xiii. 27; De. viii. 7, 8; Ez. xx. 6; Ps. cv. 44; Jos. xxiv. 13; De. vi. 11.

almost suffer an eclipse of their virtues and good parts, but when they are in the full of worldly prosperity.— Downame. God's gifts.— A Scotchwoman who received kind letters from her son found bank bills inside them, but having never seen such money, thought them only pretty pictures and put them aside. Many people think the promises found in the Bible are very pretty pictures, and perhaps some of you have put them away in an old teapot. Is it not time to understand that they are drafts on the bank of heaven that will be honored night and day.— A. J. Gordon.

B. C. 445.

The Emperor Theodosius wrote out the New Testament with his own hand, and read some part of it every day.

26—29. (26) prophets,[a] Ma. xxiii. 37; 2 Ch. xxiv. 20–22; Jer. xxvi. 20–23. (27) saviours,[b] deliverers; e. g. Othniel, Gideon, Jephthah, Samson, Eli. (28) rest,[c] fr. war, or oppression. (29) and . . shoulder,[d] like an ox shrinking fr., or resisting, the yoke.

Great saviours. — I. In the course of a nation's history God in His goodness sends great deliverances — as Cromwell, William the Third, Washington, Lincoln. II. This is as true of personal history. III. There is only one Saviour from sin and its consequence. A great One.

God's pardoning love. — It is harder to get sin felt by the creature than the burden when felt removed by the hand of a forgiving God. Never was tender-hearted surgeon more willing to take up the vein, and bind up the wound of his fainting patient when he hath bled enough, than God is by His pardoning mercy to ease the troubled spirit of a mourning penitent.—Gurnall. God will pardon a repentant sinner more quickly than a mother would snatch her child out of the fire. — Vianney. Disobedience. — Our first parents forfeited Eden by their disobedience, and Christ, the second Adam, takes up the battle in the wilderness and fights His way back to Paradise. We have to do the same. We have forfeited our Eden of innocence and peace with God by disobedience to some higher law. We have lost our Eden, and we find ourselves in the wilderness, and we must take up the battle, and under Christ's leadership, and relying on His sympathy, and help fight our way back again to Paradise. — H. C. A. Hall. Obedience prompted by faith. — We hear much these days about God's sovereignty and man's free agency. Christ said to the woman of Canaan, "Be it unto thee, even as thou wilt." Here is something that looks like human sovereignty and divine agency. Free to do what we please, because we please to do God's will. Such is the free agency of faith that takes hold of the arm that moves the world. Such free agency Moses had when the Red Sea was no obstacle in the way of his progress. The walls of Jericho fell by this free agency of faith. By means of it any little David is more then a match for the strongest Goliath. — A. C. Dixon.

their troubles in the time of the Judges

[a] Ez. xx. 21; Ac. vii. 52; 1 Th. ii. 15.

[b] Jud. iii. 9.

[c] Ps. cvi. 41, 42; Jud. ii. 14; iii. 8; Ps. lxxviii. 34–36.

[d] Zec. vii. 11; Hos. iv. 16.

"God often lets His people reach the shore as on the planks of a shipwrecked vessel. He frequently takes away our supports, not that we may fall to the ground, but that He may Himself become our rod and our staff. The embarrassments of His people are only the festive scaffoldings on which His might, His faithfulness, and His mercy celebrate their triumphs." — F. W. Krummacher.

30—33. (30) forbear, R. V., "bear with them;" reference to the earlier monarchic period. and . . prophets,[e] 1 Pet. i. 10. 11; 2 Pet. i. 20, 21. therefore . . lands, Isa. v. 5; xlii. 24. (31) Nevertheless, etc.,[f] Isa. lvii. 16. (32) God . . great, etc., note how this description of God points the next thought. let . . thee, "trouble," R. V., "travail," if the history of a cottage seem petty in the eyes of the palace, how much smaller must human vicissitudes be in the eye of the Almighty! Things relatively little to Him may be very great with us. on . . people, "the nation is here described under a threefold division, (1) the aristocracy, the king and the nobles, (2) the religious castes, the priestly officials and the prophetic schools, (3) the laity generally, the heads of the houses or fathers and the mass of the nation." (33) just . . us,[g] we have not suffered beyond our deserts. we . . wickedly, we as a nation, throughout our history.

Divine forbearance. — I. This forbearance of God was marked by constant reproof. Otherwise it might have been construed into approval of their conduct. II. It was marked by constant exhibitions of grace and mercy. III. There is a limit to the forbearance of God. IV. When He at length punishes, all will own that the punishment is just.

Influence of sin on posterity.— He who commits any one sin injures the whole human race. It is often supposed that we ought not to suffer on account of the sins of others, but apart altogether from biblical doctrine we find in history itself that sin, done by whomsoever, carries with it consequences to the third and fourth generation. No man can drink away his senses, or steep himself in sensuality, or give the bridle to his lusts and passions, and yet save his posterity from evil consequences. Though the law may seem to operate unfairly in this one direction, yet the law of the Lord is equal; no man can their captivity

[e] 2 Ki. xvii. 13; 2 Ch. xxxvi. 15; Je. vii. 25; xxv. 4; Hos. vi. 5.

[f] Jer. v. 18.

[g] Da. ix. 14; Ps. cxix. 137.

"It is a high point of heavenly wisdom, in the beginning of our petitions to propound God to ourselves under such holy notions and fit expressions, as wherein we may see an answer to our prayers as here." — Trapp.

Erasmus, speaking of Jerome, says, "Who ever learned by heart the whole Scripture, or imbibed or meditated upon it as he did?"

B. C. 445.

attend to the laws of health, be wise, true, prudent, and wholly good, without his children reaping great advantage from such discipline and culture. — Peop. Bib.

they profess to be servants of God, and make a covenant

34—38. (34) kings . . fathers, much less the common people who followed these great ones. (35) For . . kingdom, i. e. when they had a kingdom of their own and were not subjects of some foreign power. And yet men will delay the service of God till they acquire wealth, power, etc. goodness, i. e. material prosperity. (36) we . . day, etc.,[a] paying tribute to a foreign power, and only here by sufferance. (37) increase, profit in form of tribute. (38) In the Heb. vs. 38 is vs. 1 of ch. x. because . . this, i. e. God's great mercy and forbearance in spite of the continued wickedness of Israel. R. V., "and yet for all this" refers to the people's afflictions wh. have not destroyed faith in the covenant mercies of God. covenant, a solemn league and covenant. princes . . it,[b] as our representatives, and with our assent, to authenticate the document.

[a] De. xxviii. 48; Ezr. ix. 9.

Covenants. — Each party impressed his seal on moist clay, which was then hardened. It is not enough to make a general covenant; the covenant must be single and individual, each man regarding it as if he were severally responsible for it. Verily, this is a joint and several note presented to God by humbled and penitent souls. It is nobly signed if we look at the infinite number of the signatures, and it is pathetically signed if we look at the signatures one by one, each soul saying — I have sinned, and am no more worthy to be called thy son: I have lost my inheritance: God be merciful to me a sinner! There is great utility in solemn vows and covenants; they have a tonic effect upon the soul. Who could look over all the covenants and vows which he has written down as promised to heaven, and yet remain unmoved by the melancholy writing? — Peop. Bib.

[b] 2 Ki. xxiii. 3; 2 Ch. xxxiv. 31; Neh. x. 29; Ezr. x. 3.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

the signing of the covenant

by Nehemiah and the rulers

1—8. Now Nehemiah, etc.,[c] "in the East it is always the seal that authenticates a document. Babylonian documents were often stamped with half a dozen seals or more. These were impressed upon the moist clay, and then the clay was baked. Sometimes each party to the contract stamped his seal upon a separate piece of sealing clay, which he then attached to the document by means of a string." — Pulp. Com. Zidkijah, R. V., "Zedekiah," prob. an official, ranking next to Neh. (8) That 21 and not 24 are recorded, is noteworthy. Various conjectures have been hazarded, e. g. that names have dropped out from the text, or that three of the priestly tribes refused to sign the document, or that the complete list of priestly houses has not yet been reorganized. — Cam. Bib.

The solemn league and covenant. — I. It was entered into by all the people with common consent. II. It was signed first of all by the leaders of the people as an example to the others. III. All regarded themselves as bound by what the leaders had done in their name, and on their behalf.

[c] Ne. xii. 1-7; Ezr. ii. 1, etc.

Oriental Seals. — The importance attached to seals in the East is so great that without one no document is regarded as authentic. The use of some method of sealing is obviously, therefore, of remote antiquity. Among such methods used in Egypt at a very early period were engraved stones, pierced through their length and hung by a string or chain from the arm or neck, or set in rings for the finger. The most ancient form used for this purpose was the scarabæus, formed of precious or common stone, or even of blue pottery or porcelain, on the flat side of which the inscription or device was engraved. Cylinders of stone or pottery bearing devices were also used as signets. One in the Alnwick Museum bears the date of Osirtasen I., or between 2000 and 3000 B. C. Besides finger-rings, the Egyptians, and also the Assyrians and Babylonians, made use of cylinders of precious stone or terra-cotta, which were probably set in a frame and rolled over the document which was to be sealed. The document, especially among the two latter nations, was itself often made of baked clay, sealed while it was wet and burnt afterwards. But in many cases the seal consisted of a lump of clay, impressed with the seal and attached to the document, whether of papyrus or other material, by strings. These clay lumps often bear the impress of the finger, and also the remains of the strings by which they had been fastened. One such found at

"Example has more followers than reason. We unconsciously imitate what pleases us, and insensibly approximate to the characters we most admire. In this way a generous habit of thought and of action carries with it an incalculable influence." — Bovee.

Nimroud was the seal of Sabaco, king of Egypt, B. C. 711, and another is believed by Mr. Layard to have been the seal of Sennacherib. — Smith, Bib. Dict.

B. C. 445.

9—13. Levites,[a] these prob. signed on behalf of their order.

by the Levites

A material witness. — A rich old citizen of Bergamo had lent to one of his countrymen at Florence four hundred crowns, which he advanced without any witness, and without requiring a written acknowledgment. When the stipulated time had elapsed, the creditor required his money; but the borrower, well apprised that no proof could be brought against him, positively denied that he had ever received it. After many fruitless attempts to recover it, the lender was advised to resort to the duke, who would find some method of doing him justice. Alessandro accordingly ordered both the parties before him; and after hearing the assertions of the one, and the positive denial of the other, he turned to the creditor, saying, "Is it possible, then, friend, that you can have lent your money when no one was present?" "There was no one indeed," replied the creditor: "I counted the money to him on a post." "Go bring the post then, this instant," said the duke, "and I will make it confess the truth." The creditor, though astonished on receiving such an order, hastened to obey, having first received a secret caution from the duke not to be very speedy in his return. Meantime the duke employed himself in transacting the affairs of his other suitors, till at length, turning to the borrower, he said, "This man stays a long time with his post." "It is so heavy, sir," replied the other, "that he could not yet have brought it." Again Alessandro left him, and returning some time afterward, carelessly exclaimed, "What kind of men are they that lend their money without evidence? Was there no one present but the post?" "No, indeed, sir!" replied the knave. "The post is a good witness, then," said the duke, "and shall make thee pay the man his money."

[a] Ne. xii. 8, 9, 24; Ezr. ii. 40.

"Nothing enlarges the gulf of atheism more than the wide passage which lies between the faith and lives of men pretending to be Christians."—Stillingfleet.

"The Word of God is the water of life; the more ye lave it forth, the fresher it runneth; it is the fire of God's glory; the more ye blow it, the clearer it burneth; it is the sword of the Spirit; the more it is scoured, the brighter it shineth."—Bp. Jewel.

14—27. (14) chief . . people,[b] the people thus represented, as every one in the country could not possibly affix their names. Signed by houses, not as individuals. Many more names than are found under the same head in Ezra ii. or Neh. vii. Prob. many families returned fr Babylon, since the age of Jerubbabel.

by the chiefs of the people

Unity. — There is a familiar story about John Wesley and others going to the river that bounds the heavenly city, and finding, to their astonishment, that they had to drop their cloaks and garments in which they approached. One drops his cloak, another his robe, another his surplice, and they came out on the other side astonished to find that they are all in the same white, beautiful robe, the robe of righteousness, which is Christ Jesus our Lord. Cannot we gain a little more of heaven upon earth by holding out more of the right hand of fellowship? "Stand fast in one spirit, with one mind."—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

[b] Ne. vii. 6-27; Ezr. ii. 3, 6-8. 10-17, 19, 23.

28—31. (28) rest, etc., regarded themselves as having personally signed; gave their full assent to what their representatives now did. they . . themselves, either the Jews who had not gone into exile, but fell into idolatry; or the proselytes fr. the heathen who had embraced the Jewish religion. knowledge . . understanding, i. e. all old enough to know and comprehend the significance of the covenant. (29) clave to, agreed with. curse . . oath, thus solemnly pledged themselves. "The 'curse' is the penalty which they invoked if they were faithless to the covenant; the 'oath' is the solemn obligation of a duty which they vowed to perform." observe, etc.,[c] and now follow the chief points in their solemn engagement. (30) that . . give, etc., but follow the law of God.[d] (31) sabbath,[e] the proper observance would save men fr. many sins. the holy day, R. V., "a holy day," they would not traffic on any holy day. Cf. Nu. xxviii., xxxi. would leave . . debt,[f] i. e. "we would leave fallow the land each seventh year, and remit at that time the debt of every hand." "By a common error it has been supposed that debts were on this year altogether remitted. The analogy of the 'fallow' land shows that the debts remained, but were not exacted; payment was 'hung up' for a whole year." They would keep not only the Sabbath day, but also the Sabbatic year.

the people promise to keep the law

[c] Ps. cxix. 106; De. xxix. 12-15.

[d] De. vii. 3; Ex. xxxiv. 14-16.

[e] De. v. 12; Ex. xx. 10; Le. xxiii. 3.

[f] Ex xxiii. 10, 11; Le. xxv. 4; De. xv. 1, 2.

The Lord's day. — Stations on the line of your journey are not your journey's end, but each one brings you nearer. Such are our Lord's days. A

"I knew a man who was governed by no one princihaven is not home, but it is a place of quiet and rest, where the rough waves are stayed. Such is the "Lord's Day." A garden is a piece of common land, and yet it has ceased to be common land. It is an effort to regain Paradise. Such is "The Lord's Day." A bud is not a flower, but it is the promise of a flower. Such is "The Lord's Day." The world's week tempts you to sell your soul to the flesh and the world: "The Lord's Day" calls you to remembrance, and begs you rather to sacrifice earth to heaven and time to eternity, than heaven to earth and eternity to time. The six days not only claim you as captives of the earth, but do their best to keep the prison-doors shut that you may forget the way out. "The Lord's Day" sets before you an open door. Samson has carried the gates away. "The Lord's Day summons you to the threshold of your house of bondage, to look forth unto immortality, your immortality. The true Lord's Day is the Eternal life; but a type of it is given to you on earth, that you may be refreshed with the anticipation and foretaste of your rest. — John Pulsford.

B. C. 445.

"I have all reverence for principles which grow out of sentiments. But as to sentiments which grow out of principles, you shall scarcely build a house of cards thereon." — Jacobi.

The rest of the Sabbath. —

Fresh glides the brook and blows the gale,
Yet yonder halts the quiet mill!
The whirling wheel, the rushing sail,
How motionless and still!
Six days of toil, poor child of Cain,
Thy strength the slave of want may be;
The seventh thy limbs escape the chain —
A God hath made thee free!

Ah, tender was the law that gave
This holy respite to the breast.
To breathe the gale to watch the wave,
And know the wheel may rest!
But where the waves the gentlest glide
What image charms to lift thine eyes?
The spire reflected on the tide, Invites thee to the skies.

"No man is so insignificant as to be sure his example can do no hurt." — Lord Clarendon.

To teach the soul its nobler worth
This rest from mortal toil is given;
Go, snatch the brief reprieve from earth,
And pass — a guest to Heaven,
Six days may rank divide the poor,
O Dives, from thy banquet hall;
The seventh, the Father opes the door
And holds His feast for all. — E. B. Lytton.

they make ordinances for themselves

32, 33. (32) third . . shekel,[a] this ordinance wh. they made for themselves, although demanded by the prevailing conditions, was within the spirit of the law. A voluntary poll-tax to be paid by all males. This differed fr. the tax levied in Ex. xxx., wh. was levied only when a census of the people was taken. (33) For, etc.,[b] this was the purpose of this poll-tax, levied upon all above the age of twenty. shewbread, 12 unleavened cakes of fine meal freshly placed every Sabbath upon the table in the Holy Place. It was the "bread of the face," i. e. God's presence. meat offering, R. V., "meal offering." This was offered twice a day, morning and evening, in conjunction with two lambs, the burnt offering. It is styled "continual" because offered at regular stated times. set feasts, the Passover, the Feast of Pentecost, the Feast of Trumpets, the Feast of Tabernacles, cf. Nu. xxviii., xxix. holy things, prob. "wave offerings" and "peace offerings," Lev. xxiii. 10, 17, 19. sin offerings, i. e. (1) the regular offering in connection with the continual burnt offering; and (2) the exceptional offering on behalf of some national transgression, cf. Lev. iv. 13.

Giving. — There is no truly Christian man who keeps an unconverted pocketbook. God's universal law of unselfish service is as supreme in the domain of material possessions — in the realm of that wealth which extends a man's power "to bring things to pass" — as it is in any other department of man's possible efforts. The unvarying law of God which attaches an obligation to every opportunity and places a duty over against every right

[a] Ex. xxx. 13; 2 Ch. xxiv. 6. It was half a shekel in our Lord's time. Ma. xvii. 24. War and captivity had reduced their resources, and they had to pay foreign tribute, hence they agreed to a third.

[b] Nu. xxviii. 2-6; 9-15.

Two Port Royal divines visiting Arnauld, desired Nicole to assist him in a new work; when the latter observed, "We are now old; is it not time to rest?" "Rest!" returned Arnauld: "have we not all eternity to rest in?"

makes no exception of wealth with its vast powers of service. — Merrill E. Gates.

B C 445.

34—37. (34) wood offering,[a] for use of temple, fuel for sacrifices, etc.[b] (35) firstfruits,[c] Ex. xxiii. 19. (36) firstborn,[d] were redeemed for 5 shekels. The firstborn of all unclean beasts only were redeemable, Ex. xiii. 2. (37) dough, R. V., "coarse meal" offerings, i. e. "heave offerings." have the tithes,[e] i. e. the Levites were to collect the "tithes of the ground" and store them in villages near the place of collection, Nu. xv. 21.

Giving. — Men may say they prefer to give their missionary money nearer home, where they see what becomes of it. But remember that it is by setting up standards and beacons, getting hold of a few here and there and Christianizing them, even when results look small, that a great testimony to Christ is finally given. Make the gospel "witness to all nations," before the end comes. The apostles traveled and sailed, casting their bread upon the waters, not too anxious to count up visible results. The great commission was, "Go, preach the gospel to all nations." There is no knowing where the fruit will spring. — Bishop Huntington.

they cast lots for offerings

a Isa. xl. 16.

b On the 22d of Ab. the 5th mo.; Josephus, Bel. ii. 17, 6.

c Le. xxiii. 10; Nu. xviii. 12; De. xxvi. 2.

d Le. xxvii. 26, 27; Nu. xviii. 15; De. xii. 6.

e Le. xxvii. 30; 2 Ch. xxxi. 11, 12.

38, 39. (38) priest . . tithes, "some representative (or representatives) of the priestly order was to be present whenever the Levites collected the tithes, to take note of the quantity, and prevent the Levites from depriving the priests of their due share," and for the people's sake, to see that they gave the due proportion. the tithe . . tithes, "this tenth, being thus ascertained, was to be conveyed to Jerusalem at the expense of the Levites, and deposited in its appropriate store-chamber." (39) children of Israel, i. e. the laity in distinction fr. the priests and the Levites. the offering, R. V., "heave offering." "This 'heave offering' includes both 'the firstfruits' of the children of Israel (vss. 36, 37) and 'the tithe of the tithe' paid by the Levite to the priests (37). It is the special designation of the tithe paid both by Israel and by the house of Levi in Num. xviii. 24–28." we . . God,[f] by wh. all our homes are blessed: and in wh. He is worshipped from whom all prosperity — personal and national — comes.

The house of God. — We call our churches temples. Now you know, or ought to know, they are not temples. They have never had, never can have, anything whatever to do with temples. They are "synagogues," — "gathering-places," — where you gather yourselves together as an assembly; and by not calling them so, you again miss the force of another mighty text — "Thou, when thou prayest, shall not be as the hypocrites are; for they love to pray standing in the churches (we should translate it), that they may be seen of men; but thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is" — not in chancel nor in aisle, but — "in secret." Now you feel, as I say this to you — I know you feel — as if I were trying to take away the honor of your churches. Not so; I am trying to prove to you the honor of your houses and your hills; I am trying to show you not that the church is not sacred, but that the whole earth is. I would have you feel what careless, what constant, what infectious sin there is in all modes of thought whereby, in calling your churches only "holy," you call your hearths and homes profane; and have separated yourselves from the heathen by casting all your household gods to the ground, instead of recognizing, in the place of their many and feeble Lares, the presence of your One and Mighty Lord. — Ruskin.

they promise not to forsake the house of their God

f He. x. 25.

Christians in Greenland very seldom, if ever absent themselves from public worship on account of the weather. When it is so cold that their breath freezes, and forms icicles on their faces, they yet go long distances, — men, women, and children, — through snow and ice and storm, to the house of prayer.

"Thankfulness is measured, both by God and good men, not by the weight, but by the will, of the retributor. God doth highly accept the small offerings of his weak servants when he seeth them to proceed from great love." — Anon.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

1—6. "The connection of ch. xi. is with ch. vii. 4, 5. Having spoken in that place of the insufficiency of the population of Jerusalem, Nehemiah now proceeds to explain the steps which he took to remedy it. He made, it would seem, a census of the entire nation, and required each town and district to transfer one-tenth of its population to the capital. The men in the various localities determined among themselves by lot who should stay and who should go, and Nehemiah no doubt made the necessary arrangements for the reception of the new-comers at Jerusalem."— Pulp. Com. (1) rulers . . Jerusalem, true patriots take the post of honor and danger. rest . . lots, etc., as he could not increase the population fr. the rulers Neh. was obliged to resort the rulers dwell at Jerusalem

B. C. 445.

to the middle and lower classes. (2) that . . themselves,[a] their service the more valuable bec. voluntary. (3) "From this verse to xii. 26 we have a succession of lists: (1) the chiefs of the provinces that dwelt in Jerusalem, 4-26; (2) the town and villages occupied by the Jews, 25–36; (3) the priests and Levites that went up, with Zerubbabel from Babylon, xii. 1–9; (4) the genealogy of the high-priests, beginning at Jeshua, xii. 10, 11; (5) the heads of the priestly houses in the days of Joiakim, xii. 12–21; (6) of the Levitical houses at the same period, xii. 22–26." province,[b] Judah. but . . cities, 1 Ch. ix. 2. Israel,[c] the nation as a whole. (4) dwelt . . Judah, etc., 1 Ch. ix. 3, ff.

Fidelity to duty. — In those scenes of confusion, flight, horror, and despair, which took place on the Atlantic steamer Arctic, which struck another steamer and sunk in four hours, and three hundred souls perished, there is one act, between the time of her accident and her sinking, which looms up with a mournful grandeur never to be forgotten — the firing of the signal gun. This duty belonged to Stewart Holland, a young man of the engineering department, who, when all his comrades deserted the ship, faced the danger and stood at his post. "About two hours after the Arctic was struck, the firing of the gun attracted my attention," says the third mate, "and I recollect when I saw Stewart, it struck me as remarkably strange that he alone of all belonging to the engineering body should be there. He must have had a good chance to go in the chief engineer's boat and be saved; but he did not, it seems, make the slightest exertion to save himself, while there was duty to be done on shipboard. I recollect that, about an hour before the ship sunk, I was hurriedly searching for spikes to make a raft with. I had just passed through the saloon; on the sofas were men who had fainted, and there were many of them, too; the ladies were in little groups, clasped together, strangely quiet and resigned. And as I came out again the scene that presented itself was one that I hope never to see again. Here and there were strong, stout men on their knees in the attitude of prayer; and others, who when spoken to, were immovable, stupefied. In the midst of this scene, Stewart came running up to me, crying, 'Dorian, my powder is out; I want more; give me the key.' 'Never mind the key,' I replied, 'take an axe and break open the door.' He snatched one close beside me, and down into the ship's hold he dived, and I went over the ship's side to my raft. I recollect distinctly his appearance as he once more hailed me from the deck; the right side of his face was black with powder, and when he spoke his face seemed to be lighted up with a quiet smile." During all those terrible hours of anxiety and dread, his signal gun boomed over the wild waste of waters, telling its fearful story of distress, of danger, and of death. His comrades fled, strong men quailed, and cries of agony went up to heaven, but Stewart never flinched; and his last act when the ship went down was to fire his signal gun, in the lingering hope that some passing sail might yet learn their danger and come to their rescue. "His whole conduct can be accounted for by the simple word duty, and nothing else." It was this which gave him his calmness, and inspired him with courage, and made him superior to every consideration of personal safety, and causes the name of Stewart Holland to be pronounced all over this great land with admiration and reverence. — Anon.

a Jud. v. 9.

b Ezr. ii. 1.

c Ezr. ii. 70; x. 10; Ne. vii. 61; xiii. 3. No one can make sacrifice for another, without establishing a bond of interest between them. A boy is rescued from death, and, ever after, he loves to tell, "That man one saved my life." The rescuer, too feels a special interest in the one he has saved.

"Those who are trying to bring men home to God must be on their way to God's home themselves." — R. W. Dale.

"It is not from the few conspicuous deeds of life that the blessings chiefly come which make the world better, sweeter, happier; but from the countless lowly ministries of the every-days, the little faithfulnesses that fill long years." — J. R. Miller.

"To guard the mind against the temptation of thinking that there are no good people, say to them, 'Be such as you would like to see others,' and you will find those who resemble you." — Bossuet.

7—9. (7) Sallu, 1 Ch. ix. 7. (9) second . . city, either second in command,[d] or over second part of the city.[e]

Service. — The first thing a man must do if he desires to be used in the Lord's work is to make an unconditional surrender of himself to God. He must consecrate and then concentrate. A man who does not put his whole life into one channel, does not count for much, and the man who goes into work with only half a heart, does not amount to much. We are living in an intense age, and if a man is to succeed he must set himself apart for the work and throw all his energy into it. — D. L. Moody.

the sons of Benjamin

d As Vulg., LXX.

e As Gesenius.

10—14. (10) priests, 1 Ch. ix. 10. Jedaiah, etc., prob. names of chiefs of classes of priests. (11) ruler, etc., i. e. "the high priest; or, rather, the family which furnished the high priests at this time. The actual high priest was Eliashib, the son of Joiakim, and grandson of Jeshua (see ch. xii. 10; xiii. 4)." (12) eight . . two, 1 Ch. ix. 13. (14) son . . men,[f] R. V., "son of Haggedolim;" Hag. being a proper name.

All the workers shall be rewarded. — Each shall find that he has a share in the completed results, where the labors of all are represented. What does it

the priests

f So LXX. and Vulg.

"In this world there is one godlike thing, the essence of all that ever was or ever will be of matter in which stage of the great process our co-operation has been enlisted? Every man that has had a part in the building shall have a share in the glory. What does it matter whether we have been set to dig out the foundation, working amongst mud and wet, or have laid the lowermost courses, which are all covered up and forgotten, or happen to have been amongst those who bring forth the head-stone with shoutings? We are all builders all the same. The main thing is that we have some work there. Never mind whereabouts it is. Never mind whether it be visible or no. Never mind whether your name is associated with it. You may never see the issues of your toils. If you can see them they will generally not be worth looking at. We work for eternity. We may well wait for the scaffolding to be taken away. Then we shall find that preparatory work is all represented in the final issue; even as the first film of alluvium, deposited in its delta by some mighty stream, is the real foundation for the last, which, long ages after, rise above the surface and bear waving corn and the homes of men. —A. Maclaren.

B. C. 445.

godlike in this world—the veneration done to human worth by the hearts of men."—Carlyle.

"All look as if they knew the day, the hour; and felt with man the need and joy of thanks. Well I ween, where sacrifice is not is never fire."—Bailey.

15—19. (16) outward business,[a] its civil and judicial affairs.[b] (17) begin . . prayer, one who, with a loud clear voice, led the rest. "The leader of the choir which chanted the public praise at the time of the morning and evening sacrifice." Bakbukiah . . Abda, i. e. Bak. was the chief assistant, and Abda held third place in the choir. (19) kept the gates, R. V., "kept watch at the gate."

Giving of thanks.—Saints are not to be always singing praises, or with their lips expressing gratitude; yet there is a sense in which they are always to be "giving thanks." They ought to cherish a thankful heart, a disposition of gratitude; and should frequently take occasion, by every suitable means, to manifest and express it. Thanksgiving should therefore be offered to the end of life, and in every changing circumstance of life. "In everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving," etc. (Phil. iv. 6). This service is never unseasonable; and sometimes it is peculiarly appropriate.—Kidd.

the Levites

a 1 Ch. xxvi. 29, Acts vi. 2-5.

b So Wordsworth, but some think those things wh. were done outside, or in the country, such as collecting provisions.

20—23. (20) This vs. seems out of place; it belongs bet. vss. 24 and 25. (21) Ophel, iii. 26. The hill S. of the temple height. (22) over . . God, as dist. fr. "outward" business, vs. 16. "The R. V., rightly takes the whole verse to be one sentence, defining first the descent and then the duties of Uzzi. The word 'overseer' must be joined with 'over the business;' while 'the singers' is in apposition to 'the sons of Asaph.'" (23) For . . them,[c] i. e. king of Persia.[d] portion, or a sure ordinance. due . . day, as their service so their pay was, daily.

the residue of Israel

c Ezr. vi. 8, 9; vii. 20.

d No doubt this was ordered by request of Neh. or Ezra.

The singers' portion.—I. The service of song in the house of the Lord is one of the most important parts of Divine worship. II. Those who take part in this should be persons with hearts in sympathy with the Being praised, and with the congregation whose praises they lead. III. Too often the singers' portion is much criticism and few thanks from those who have the advantage of their services, and who know little of music or the difficulties of singers. IV. Under the temple ritual, the singers were a paid choir; but then they gave their whole time to this work, and their duties were very onerous. V. The singers' best portion is the joy and satisfaction felt by those who know they are offering the gift of a sweet voice to make the service of God attractive to those who are without.

Singing in eternity.—A young lady who had an exquisitely sweet voice, but who had no love for the Saviour in her heart, and lived only for the pleasures of the world, was one day in company with an earnest Christian minister, who knew her well. After hearing her sing a song with great feeling and power, he went to her side, and in a low voice said, "You have a beautiful voice; where will you sing in eternity?" The "word in season" was like an arrow piercing her heart; she could not forget it; and had no rest until she found rest in Jesus.

It was not uncommon for soldiers who had to undergo amputation to drive the gloom away with songs. One, as he lay upon the amputating table, quieted his pain by making the hospital resound with the hymn, "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds!" etc. Another, in like circumstances, sang, "There'll be no more sorrow there," etc.

24—29. (24) king's . . people, an official who adjusted civil matters, or fiscal concerns. "The exact office borne by Pethahiah cannot be determined; but he evidently held a confidential position, which made him an intermediary for certain purposes between the Persian king and the Jewish people. Perhaps he received and forwarded petitions and complaints" (25) Kirjath-arba, Hebron.[e] Dibon, Josh. xv. 22. villages, lit. daughters.[f] Jekabzeel, Kabzeel.[g] (26–29) See Josh. xv. 26–40.

Pethahiah

e Ge. xxiii. 2.

f Josh. xv. 45.

g Josh. xv. 21.

B. C. 445.

Working for the unknown future.— An old tattered volume found among his father's books, Bunny's "Resolutions," aroused Richard Baxter to concern; and Sibb's "Bruised Reed" led him to the Saviour. From Baxter's pen proceeded "The Call to the Unconverted," which, in addition to its most extensive circulation elsewhere, was given by a beggar at the door where Philip Doddridge lived. It was the voice of God to the youthful reader, who became the author of "The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul"—a book which gave the first impression to William Wilberforce. He became the author of "A Practical View of Christianity," which was blessed to the conversion of Leigh Richmond, a successful minister, and author of "The Dairyman's Daughter" and "Young Cottager," little works that have had many seals in souls won to God. The "Practical View" was also instrumental in the saving change of Dr. Chalmers, whose works are world-wide, and whose labors were so eminently owned for the revival of religion in the ministry and people of Scotland.— Steel.

"Labor is one of the great elements of society,—the greatest substantial interest on which we all stand."— D. Webster.

villages of the craftsmen, etc.

30—36. (30) dwelt . . Hinnom, R. V., "so they encamped, etc.," thus scattered through the land S. of Jerus. (31) Geba,[a] Josh. xii. 12–24. (35) Lod . . Ono,[b] Ezr. ii. 33. the . . craftsmen, they appear to have dwelt together for convenience of their calling.[c] (36) Levites . . Benjamin, R. V., "certain courses in Judah were joined to Benj." Those who were not in Jerus. had settlements here.

Faithful performance of duty.— Napoleon's aim was "Glory"; Wellington's watchword, like Nelson's, was "Duty." The former word, it is said, does not once occur in his dispatches; the latter often, but never accompanied by any high sounding professions. The greatest difficulties could neither embarrass nor intimidate Wellington; his energy invariably rising in proportion to the obstacles to be surmounted. The patience, the firmness, the resolution, with which he bore himself thro' the maddening vexations and gigantic difficulties of the peninsular campaigns, is perhaps, one of the sublimest things to be found in history. In Spain, Wellington not only exhibited the genius of the general, but the comprehensive wisdom of the statesman. — Smiles.

a Ezr. ii. 26–35.

b Ne. vi. 2; vii. 37.

c Thus the bakers, Jer. xxxvii. 21. In London there are curious examples of trade settlements; as publishers in Paternoster Row; watchmakers in Clerkenwell; weavers in Spitalfields, etc.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

B. C. cir. 536.

priests, etc., who went up with Zerubbabel

1—9. (1) Now priests. i. e. vs. 7, "the chief of the priests," the heads of the 24 courses,[d] only 4 of wh. returned fr. the captivity,[e] wh. 4 were divided by Joshua, or Zerubbabel, into orig. num., of these 22 are enumerated here and 20 in vss. 12–21. Ezra, not the Ezra.[f] (4) Abijah, ancestor of Jo. the Baptist.[g] (8) Levites, etc., Ezr. ii. 40. thanksgiving, R. V., marg. "the choirs." (9) watches, or stations, vs. 24, "ministered in their courses, as the others did, and kept their stations over against them in their turns of attendance, which are called their 'watches' or wards."

The sphere of work springing from the sphere of sin. — Bad men are usually acquainted with human life. They know the dispositions of their fellow-men, and whatever knowledge there is of bad men they have. And such men are bound to consecrate their knowledge and to bring it into the service of the Lord Jesus Christ, who has forgiven them and renewed their life, if they are born again. No man ought to be so glad to pluck men out of the burning, as those men who have been themselves brands in the burning, and have been rescued. If a man has been rescued from drunkenness, he ought to take a special interest in those who are in that burning realm. If a man has been a gambler, and is converted from his wicked way, that ought to be a sphere in which he feels peculiarly called to labor. If a man has been a dissipated man, he, more than all others, ought to feel that he is an apostle to the Gentiles in that regard. If a man has from his youth gone step by step down toward wickedness, when he is converted he ought not to be ashamed of his past life in such a way that he will not use it for the good of others. — Beecher.

d 1 Ch. xxiv. 1–20.

e Ne. vii. 39–42; Ezr. ii. 36–39.

f Who returned B. C. 458, 78 yrs. aft. return of Zerubbabel, and labored with Neh. 100 yrs aft. that return.

g Lu. i. 5.

"It is only by labor that thought can be made healthy, and only by thought that labor can be made happy, the two cannot be separated with impunity."— Ruskin.

genealogy of the high priest

10—21. (10) Joshua, "important enumeration, as establishing individual purity of descent." "The six names cover a space of at least 205 years—from the conquest of Babylon by Cyrus, B. C. 538, to the submission of Jerusalem to Alexander the Great, B. C. 333, which gives very long generations, but still such as are historically possible." This list shows that the compilation of this book must have been later than 330 B. C. (11) Joiada, whose son mar. a dau. of Sanballat.[a] Jaddua, son of Jonathan, vs. 22. (22) days . . fathers, as in the days of Jeshua; the sons filled the priestly office in the room of their fathers, though somewere yet alive.

B. C. cir. 536.

a xiii. 28.

Sacredness of labor. — Two men I honor, and no third. First, the toil-worn craftsman that with earth-made implement laboriously conquers the earth, and makes her man's. Venerable to me is the hard hand — crooked, coarse; wherein notwithstanding lies a cunning virtue, indefeasibly royal, as of the sceptre of this planet. Venerable too is the rugged face, all weather-tanned, besoiled, with its rude intelligence; for it is the face of a man living manlike. O, but the more venerable for thy rudeness, and even because we must pity as well as love thee! Hardly entreated brother! for us was thy back so bent, for us were thy straight limbs and fingers so deformed; thou wert our conscript, on whom the lot fell, and fighting our battles wert so marred. For in thee too lay a God-created form, but it was not to be unfolded; encrusted must it stand with the thick adhesions and defacements of labor; and thy body, like thy soul, was not to know freedom. Yet toil on, toil on; THOU art in thy duty, be out of it if who may; thou toilest for the altogether indispensable, for daily bread. A second man I honor, and still more highly; him who is seen toiling for the spiritually indispensable; not daily bread, but the bread of life. Is not he too in his duty; endeavoring towards inward harmony; revealing this, by act or by word, through all his outward endeavors, be they high or low? Highest of all when his outward and inward endeavors are one; when we can name him artist; not earthly craftsman only, but inspired thinker, who with heaven-made implement conquers heaven for us! If the poor and humble toil that we have food, must not the high and glorious toil for him in return, that he have light, have guidance, freedom, immortality? These two, in all their degrees, I honor: all else is chaff and dust, which let the wind blow whither it listeth. Unspeakably touching is it, however, when I find both dignities united, and he that must toil outwardly for the lowest of man's wants is also toiling inwardly for the highest. Sublimer in this world know I nothing than a peasant saint, could such now anywhere be met with. Such a one will take thee back to Nazareth itself; thou wilt see the splendor of heaven spring forth from the humblest depths of earth, like a light shining in great darkness. — Carlyle.

"As we are born to work, so others are born to watch over us while we are working." — Goldsmith.

"Man, it is not thy works, which are all mortal, infinitely little, and the greatest no greater than the least, but only the spirit thou workest in, that can have worth or continuance." — Carlyle.

22—26. (22) Levites . . fathers, those were registered who were chief of the fathers. also . . priests, who were priests. Darius, i.e. Darius III., Codomannus (336–331). The best commentators are agreed that vss. 22, 23 were interjected by some later compiler. (23) book . . chronicles, not the bk. of the sacred canon, but public records of the nation. (24) ward, vs. 9, one company opposite another; reference is to the antiphonal singing in the worship of the temple. (25) thresholds, R. V., "storehouses."

certain chief Levites

Workshop of the world. — There was, and is, a sense in which we are to frown upon this world; that is, we are to frown upon that spirit in the world which represents selfishness, and pride, and lust. But the world is a working place, where we are to be drilled through the instrumentalities of cares, burdens, hopings, bafflings, fears, enterprises, and industries. Why, this is the very wonder of wisdom; it is God's school-house, in which we are to be developed! A man who undertakes to live without these instrumentalities in this natural and business world will come short of his purpose. There may be special exceptions, in which God ministers special blessings. A man living the life of an invalid, and secluded, may have grace according to his day and situation. But when there is such a case it is an exception; whereas the general truth is this: we are to employ the world, and put our bodies into it, with the understanding that God has made all secular things as means of grace to us. — Beecher.

"I find that successful exertion is a powerful means of exhilaration, which discharges itself in good-humor upon others." — Chalmers.

"Letting down buckets into empty wells, and growing old with drawing nothing up." — Cowper.

27—30. (27) at . . wall, he turns to earlier parts of the hist.[b] they . . places, provincial towns and villages. cymbals,[c] instruments of percussion, two metallic discs wh. were struck together. psalteries, or viols, stringed, shape uncertain, a kind of lyre with 10 strings, played with both hands. harps, stringed, often played with plectrum. (28) And . . singers, i. e. of the chief singers. out . . country, R. V., marg. "the circuit," i. e. the country round about Jerus. Netophathi, per. nr. Bethlehem.[d] (29) for . . villages, sug. of their num. and importance. round . . Jerusalem, country people with strong, clear voices: nr. the scene of their chief work. (30) the dedication of the walls

b Ne. vi. 15; viii. 1-13, etc.; this dedication was in B.C. 444.

c 2 Sa. vi. 5; 1 Ch. xiii. 8; xv. 16–28; xvi. 5; two kinds named in Ps. cl. 5; see Topics, ii. 122, 123.

d Ne. ii. 26; 1 Ch. ii. 34; ix. 16.

B. C. 445.

purified, etc., that all — the officials and their work — might be holy to the Lord.

Dedication of the wall — Therefore the ceremony at the new walls was designed in the first instance to direct attention to the very fact of their newness, and to call up those thoughts and feelings that are suitable in the consideration of a time of commencement. We must all acknowledge that such a time is one for very earnest thought. All our beginnings in life — the birth of a child, a young man's start in the world, the wedding that founds the home, the occupation of a new house, the entrance on a fresh line of business — all such beginnings come to rouse us from the indifference of routine, to speak to us with the voice of Providence, to bid us look forward and prepare ourselves for the future. We have rounded a corner, and a new vista has opened up to our view. As we gaze down the long aisle we must be heedless indeed if we can contemplate the vision without a thrill of emotion, without a thought of anticipation. The new departure in external affairs is an opportunity for a new turn in our lives. One of the charms of the Bible is that, like nature, it is full of fresh starts. Inasmuch as a perennial breath of new life plays among the pages of these ancient scriptures, we have only to drink it in to feel what inspiration there is here for every momentous beginning. — Exp. Bib.

"Some of the Fathers went so far as to esteem the love of music a sign of predestination, as a thing Divine, and reserved for the felicities of heaven itself." — Sir W. Temple.

"Music is the fourth great material want of our natures; first, food, then raiment, then shelter, then music." — Bovee.

31—36. (31) two . . thanks, of wh. Neh. and Ezr. were leaders. one[a] . . dung gate,[b] the parties started in opposite directions, to meet presently and unite in one song of praise.[c] (32) after them, the priests, the singers and the musicians led the princes in this giving of thanks. (33) Ezra, not the scribe. (35) trumpets, Nu. x. 2–8. namely Zechariah, R. V. omits "namely" — Zech. was not a priest; he was a Levite. He led a company distinct fr. the young trumpeters. (36) musical . . God, 1 Ch. xxiii. 5. before them, i. e. heading one of the processions.

Songs born out of trial. — Luther's version of the 46th Psalm, which one has called "The Marseillaise of the Reformation," was born out of the stormy life of the great reformer; and Archbishop Trench, writing of the 30 yrs. war in Germany, has said: "There is one fact most noteworthy as a sign of the temper in which this great tribulation was met by those who had to drink of its cup of pain deeper, perhaps, than any other, that very many of the most glorious compositions in the hymn book of Protestant Germany date from the period of the Thirty Years' War; and, most noticeable of all, these contributions are rich, not so much as one might have expected, in themes and lamentations, Misereres, and cries De Profundis as in Te Deums and Magnificats, hymns of high hope and holy joy." Who knows not also that Paul Gerhardt's hymn, "Give to the winds thy fears," was the cry of his soul in an hour of greatest extremity; or that the ode of Cowper, beginning, "God moves in a mysterious way," was the last sane utterance of his mind, as the cloud which darkened his reason was settling over his spirit. . . . A friend, speaking to Mr. Whittier about a well-known hymn, . . . received this answer from the poet: "I do not wonder at your preference. That hymn was born out of the inmost anguish of my heart." Thus the church has been enriched and the souls of all its members refreshed by the recorded experiences of those who have clung to God thro' trial. — W. M. Taylor.

the right-hand company

a vs. 38.

b Ne. ii. 13; iii. 13.

c vs. 40.

"A person being once cast upon a desolate island, spent a day in fasting and prayer for his deliverance, but no help came. It occurred to him then to keep a day of thanksgiving and praise, and he had no sooner done it than relief was brought to him. You see, as soon as he began to sing of mercy exercised, the exercels of mercy was renewed to him. The Lord heard the voice of his praise." — Nevins.

37—39. (37) And . . gate, ii. 14; iii. 15. stairs . . David, iii. 15. even . . eastward, iii. 26. (38) went . . them, in opp. direction. (38, 39) See ii. 1–11 for places named. they . . gate,[d] R. V., "gate of the guard," where they met aft. making the circuit of the walls.

Singing — a service to God. — We want the spirit of Levitical consecration in the heart of every worshiper. Oh! if we but remembered that, as Christians, we are anointed by God's Spirit for His peculiar service, and if we did only faintly realize that the praise of the sanctuary was a portion of that service to which we have been thus set apart, we should be more willing to give the time and attention which are needful to qualify ourselves for it. We have fallen into the grievous mistake of supposing that the music of the sanctuary is for human ears more than for the ear of God: and in seeking to please men by it, we have allowed devotion almost to disappear from it. Nay, we have thereby come even to displease men by it; for it is here, as in so many other things, they who seek human appreciation and applause as the

the left-hand company

d Jer. xxxii. 2.

"In mining operations, the full and empty carriages, or vessels, being connected together, those which have been emptied are from time to time raised up an ascent by the descending of those that have been filled. In this way let the descent of God's mercies, and main ends, invariably, in the long run, lose that which they so desired; while they who think mainly and especially of doing honor to God do at last receive also the respect of men. When in our praise, we can merge all tho't of self in the eager, earnest effort to please God; when, feeling that we are singing to God, we try to give him of our best; then also the ears of men will be turned toward us, and the hymns of the service will, because they are the sincere expression of our hearts, produce the most salutary impressions on those who hear them, and will be as much a means of edification and conversion as the prayers or the discourses. — W. M. Taylor.

B. C. cir. 445.

the gifts bestowed out of His fullness, raise your empty vessels to receive again and again from His inexhaustible treasury all that you need." — Bickersteth.

40—43. (40) So stood, at the prison gate.[a] in . . God, i. e. in the vicinity of the house of God. (41, 42) See vss. 32–38 for names. singers . . loud, lit. made their voice to be heard. A great noise, but full of melody and of heart music. (43) God . . joy, hence not mere animal or emotional excitement, but true spiritual joy. wives . . rejoiced, happy wives, mothers, children. joy . . off, so, our Jerusalem should be the joy of the whole earth.

the two companies meet and sing praises

[a] vs. 39.

The joy of Jerusalem (vs. 43). — We have in this verse — I. The record of an interesting event in Jewish history. Their joy was — 1. The joy of gratitude; 2. Of devout love; 3. Of hope; 4. It was universal — wives and children; 5. It was of Divine origin — God had made them to rejoice. II. We have a clear manifestation of a phase of Christian experience — joyousness. 1. The God of Israel is our God and Father; 2. He is constantly creating occasions of the liveliest joy; 3. It is the duty of His children to rejoice and be glad in Him, and show that theirs is a joy-producing religion. III. We have further a prediction of a glorious future. 1. A happy time for the church; 2. A hopeful time for the world.

"Real joy seems dissonant from the human character in its present condition; and if it be felt, it must come from a higher region, for the world is shadowed by sorrow; the very clouds seem to shed a tear on man's grave, who departs, unlike the beauties of summer, to return no more; who fades unlike the sons of the forest, which another summer beholds new clothed, when he is unclothed and forgotten." — Andrews.

Origin of a hymn. — As Chas. Wesley was sitting by an open window one beautiful day, looking out over the landscape, he saw a hawk swooping down towards a little bird. The poor frightened thing was darting in every direction to escape the fierce grasp of the hawk; and it seemed for a time as tho' it could find no hiding-place. Suddenly seeing the open window, the bird in its terror flew into it, and with beating heart, found refuge in Mr. Wesley's bosom. It is said Mr. Wesley was at the time suffering severe trials, and felt the need of a refuge as much as the poor, trembling, little bird. He took up his pen and wrote the beautiful hymn: "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." — Anon.

44—47. (44) time . . treasurers,[b] etc., their intense spiritual joy did not cause them to overlook practical religion, but for which such joy will soon abate. out of the fields, R. V., "according to the fields," i. e. "out of the portion of cultivable soil attached to each provincial town." portions of, i. e. portions appointed by the law. Judah . . waited,[c] this was one reason for their attention to the secularities of religion. (45) kept . . God, R. V., "And they kept . . . and so did the singers and the porters. The verse, according to the rendering of the R. V. states first that the priest and Levites performed the due ceremonial obligations and then that the same strict conformity to rule was practiced by the singers and porters." according, etc., 1 Ch. xxv., xxvi. (46) Asaph, 2 Ch. xxix. 30; xxxv. 15. (47) sanctified . . Levites, etc., Nu. xviii. 21–26; sanctified = set apart for the use of the Levites. There the Levites set apart 'the tithe of the tithes' for the priests." children . . Aaron,[d] = priests.

the officers of the temple

[b] 2 Ch. xxxi. 11, 12.

[c] Or stood, i. e. ministered before the Lord.

[d] Ne. x. 38.

Songs of thanksgiving. — When true gratitude is manifested, it moves us intensely, even from its very rarity. At the close of the cotton famine in Lancashire, Eng., it stirred the whole British nation to its depths. It was in the town of Staleybridge, which for many months had been suffering the deepest distress. All those weary weeks, its factories had been silent, and its tall chimneys smokeless, and its operatives, all their savings gone, were reduced to a want which they bore with the most heroic endurance. At length the war was ended and a consignment of cotton came to the town. Hastening to the railway depot, the men unyoked the horses from the first wagon and drew it themselves into the courtyard of one of the factories. Soon an immense crowd surrounded it, and the tears filled the eyes of the multitude as they gazed upon it, for it meant employment, and employment meant bread. Just then while all were deeply moved, one solitary voice began to sing the grand old Doxology, "Praise God, from whom all

"Music is one of the fairest and most glorious gifts of God, to which Satan is a bitter enemy; for it removes from the heart the weight of sorrow, and the fascination of evil thoughts." — Luther.

"Where should this music be — in the air or the earth?" — Shakespeare.

B. C. cir. 445.

blessings flow," and in a moment, every one in the vast assemblage joined in, while on the gaunt and famine-stricken cheeks of faces upturned to heaven the big tears kept coursing down. Often has that simple strain been sung in the most inspiring circumstances, but never with more depth of feeling or more fervor of gratitude than on that occasion. — Taylor.

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH.

the reading of the law

1—3. (1) On that day, equiv. to "about that time." and . . written,[a] what we find written in the book we should be willing to practice. We should read in order to learn. come . . congregation, R. V., "enter into the assemblage." (2) because, etc., thus the heinousness of the sin of inhospitality was to be marked. but . . them, Nu. xxii. 5; Jos. xxiv. 9, 10. howbeit . . blessing,[b] God, in His mercy, often brings good out of intended evil. (3) when . . law, etc.,[c] they earnestly practiced what they learned. Previously the Jews withdrew from the strangers, now they expel the strangers fr. among them.

a De. xxiii. 3, 4.

b Nu. xxiii. 11; xxiv. 10.

c Ne. ix. 2; x. 28.

Sorrow. — God has turned the curse of sorrow into a blessing. Sweet are the uses of adversity! In God's hand indeed they are: when he puts his children into the furnace of affliction, it is that he may thoroughly purge away all their dross. A great writer has spoken with great beauty of the resources which God has placed within us for bringing good out of evil, or, at least, for greatly alleviating our trials in the cases of sickness and misfortune. "The cutting and irritating grain of sand," he says, "which by accident or incaution has got within the shell, incites the living inmate to secrete from its own resources the means of coating the intrusive substance. And it is not, or may it not be, even so with the irregularities and unevenness of health and fortune in our own case?" We too may turn diseases into pearls. But how much more wonderful are the wisdom and mercy of God, in making the spiritual trials and distresses of His people their necessary discipline for their highest good, the means for the greatest perfection and stability of their characters! This is indeed a wonderful transformation. "God," says holy Leighton, "hath many sharp cutting instruments and rough files for the polishing of His jewels; and those He especially esteems and means to make the most resplendent, He hath oftenest His tools upon." — Cheever.

"Authority, though it err like others, hath yet a kind of medicine in itself, that skins the vice of the top." — Shakespeare.

"There is nothing sooner overthrows a weak head than opinion of authority; like too strong a liquor for a frail glass." — Sir P Sidney.

the alliance of Eliashib and Tobiah

4, 5. (4) An interval of more than twelve years intervenes bet. vss. 3, and 4. "We may assume that Nehemiah's memoirs embraced the whole interval of twelve years. The compiler, however, makes no extract from the intervening portion. The words 'before this' have therefore no reference to the events of the preceding verses; their retention only shows the exactness with which the extract is reproduced." — Cam. Bib. Eliashib,[d] the high priest. having . . chamber, apartments pertaining to temple. Tobiah,[e] notorious enemy of Israel. Alliance prob. by marriage. (5) prepared . . chamber, made a state room out of a sacred store-room. meat offerings, i. e. the meal offering. offerings . . priests, R. V., "heave offerings for the priests," i. e. the "tithe of the tithes."

d Ne. iii. 1.

Eliashib's sin.—Though one of the three leading enemies of Nehemiah, the ally and supporter of the Samaritan governor Sanballat, this man was actually permitted to have a lodging in the precincts of the temple. The locality was selected doubtless, because it was within the immediate jurisdiction of the priests, among whom the Jewish opponents of Nehemiah were found. It is as though, in his quarrel with Henry, Thomas à Becket had lodged a papal envoy in the cathedral close at Canterbury. To a Jew who did not treat the ordinances of religion with the Sadducean laxity that was always to be found in some of the leading members of the priesthood, this was most abhorrent. He saw in it a defilement of the neighborhood of the temple, if not of the sacred enclosure itself, as well as an insult to the former governor of the city. Tobiah may have used his room for the purpose of entertaining visitors in state; but it may only have been a ware-house for trade stores, as it had previously been a place in which the bulky sacrificial gifts were stowed away. Such a degradation of it, superseding its previous sacred use, would aggravate the evil in the sight of so strict a man as Nehemiah. The outrage was easily accounted for. Tobiah was allied by marriage to the priest who was the steward of this chamber. Thus we have a clear case of trouble arising out of the system of foreign marriages which Ezra had so strenuously opposed. — Exp. Bib.

e Ne. iv. 3; vi. 12-14, 17-19.

Four kinds of pride to be avoided; race pride, face pride, place pride, grace pride.

B. C. cir. 432.

Nehemiah commands the chambers to be cleaned

6–9. (6) But . . Jerusalem,[a] and this advantage was taken of his absence; as of absence of Moses to make the golden calf. certain days, literally 'at the end of days.' No method of computing the duration of Neh.'s absence. The degenerate condition in Jerus. would signify a considerable interval. (7) evil . . Tobiah, in thus profaning the temple and associating publicly with an idolator. (8) And . . sore, etc., directly he heard of this abuse he set himself to reform it: as Moses when he came down from the mount. household stuff, old Eng. word for furniture. (9) thither . . God, etc.,[b] restoring the place to its proper use.

Nehemiah's temper. — What a different man is Nehemiah when the first chapter and the last of his book are brought into contrast! In the first chapter Nehemiah is meek enough; we read that — it came to pass, when he heard certain words, that he "sat down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted, and prayed before the God of heaven" (1–4), — all that could be done in a private house. In the last chapter we find him laying about him with tremendous fury. He hurls everything out of his way in a righteous rage. There is nothing about weeping, and mourning, and fasting. The last chapter is a thunderstorm. Yet the first and the last are related; the man who cannot weep — that is to say, the man who cannot feel deeply and acutely — can never do any great and permanent reforming work in the world; the man who cannot fast — that is to say, hold himself in severest control — can never strike with any real effect; the man who cannot pray — that is to say, connect himself with all the highest forces and energies of the universe, ally himself with the very omnipotence of God — can never stand forth in heroic fearlessness and courage almost divine. In the first chapter we have the man's inner nature — in the last chapter we have the man at work; and between the two, though the contrast is outwardly so striking, there is an intimate and necessary relation. —Peop. Bib.

a vs. 14. Ab. B. C. 432.

b 2 Ch. xxix. 5, 15–18.

"He who reforms himself has done more towards reforming the public than a crowd of noisy, impotent patriots." — Lavater.

Nehemiah reforms the offices of the temple

10, 11. (10) portions . . them,[c] the people withheld their offerings when they saw how things were mismanaged. fled . . field,[d] there to obtain their livelihood. (11) Then . . rulers,[e] the people urged to do their duty through the rulers, who were to set the example. set . . place, the posts of duty wh. they had abandoned.

Reformers. — Luther and Knox were by express vocation priests, and did faithfully perform that function in its common sense, yet it will suit us better here to consider them chiefly in their historical character — rather as reformers than priests. Is not every true reformer by the nature of him a priest first of all? He appeals to heaven's invisible justice against earth's visible force; knows that it, the invisible, is strong. He is a believer in the divine truth of things; a seer, seeing thro' the shows of things; a worshiper of the divine truth of things — a priest that is. If he be not first a priest, he will never be good for much as a reformer. Thus then as we have seen, great men in various situations building up religions, heroic forms of human existence in this world, theories of life worthy to be sung by a Dante, practices of life by a Shakespeare. — Carlyle.

c Mal. iii. 8.

d Nu. xxxv. 2.

e vss. 17, 25; Pro. xxviii. 4.

"Ministers and people who forsake religion and its services and magistrates, who do not what they can to keep them to it, will have much to answer for hereafter." — M. Henry.

tithes paid and treasurers appointed

12–14. (12) brought . . treasuries,[f] stored it in the appointed place for its legitimate use. (13) treasurers, storekeepers. next to them, i. e. attending and aiding the treasurers. for . . faithful,[g] they had a good reputation for honesty and impartiality. office . . brethren, hence the need of right-minded men. (14) Remember, etc.,[h] Neh. looks to God as his paymaster. He took no reward fr. man. offices, R. V., "the observances."

Faithfulness. — The path reveals the purpose, the life confirms the lip. "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." Faulty conduct does not adorn a faultless creed. Notable devotion in church must be supported by noteworthy uprightness in business. If the temple of our character rests upon pillars of dishonesty, its rottenness and instability will soon appear. If the first table of commandments be written in the chancel, the second table must be suspended in the counting-house. If the laws of trade are not compatible with the laws of God, so much the worse for the laws of trade. You may bend if you will, but alas if you cringe because you must! You must forgive your enemies, you must not fear them. Men of the world seal the lips of (so-called) Christian men when these show inconsistencies in life. Would you reprove sin? Then your daily life must rebuke it. Do you desire to maintain the character of a God-fearing man? The penalty you must pay is to deserve the character of a faithful man. — Hom. Com.

f Ne. x. 38, 39; xii. 44.

g Ne. vii. 2; 1 Cor. iv. 2.

h See J. Mede, Wks. 177. He shows that it is lawful to do good works with a view to a future reward.

B. C. cir. 432.

the violation of the Sabbath a Ex. xx. 10.

b Ne. x. 31.

c Jer. xvii. 21-23.

"He that has energy enough in his constitution to root out a vice should go a little further and try to plant a virtue in its place: otherwise he will have his labor to renew. A strong soil that has produced weeds may be made to produce wheat with far less difficulty than it would cost to make it produce nothing."- Colton.

"Reform, like charity, must begin at home. Once well at home, how will it radiate outwards, irrepressible, — into all that we touch and handle, speak and work, — kindling ever new light by incalculable contagion; spreading in geometric ratio, far and wide, doing good only wherever it spreads, and not evil." — Carlyle.

Neh. orders the gates to be shut at sunset d Le. xxiii. 32.

e xii. 30.

f xiv. 31.

"Each year one vicious habit rooted out, in time might make the worst man good." — Franklin.

The queen of England is scrupulous in the observance of the Sabbath, not allowing matters of state to encroach upon holy time, not even if presented by the nobility.

15—18. (15) saw . . sabbath,[a] note the vigilance of the good governor; and his zeal for holy days, as well as places. day . . victuals, as vs. 16 is directed against the selling of wares on the Sabbath the thought here may be: Neh. objected to the Sabbath labor by wh. the produce was conveyed to the city. (16) Tyre, etc.,[b] if heathen men are willing to sell, Israel ought not to be willing to buy on the Sabbath. The laxity of the church may increase the thoughtlessness of the world. (17) What . . do, etc., they were responsible in that, being rulers, they permitted it to be done. (18) Did . . thus, etc.[c] such sin in the past had its punishment. yet . . sabbath, not only doing a present wrong, but treating past warnings with thoughtless indifference.

The Sabbath. — The Sabbath is the guardian of every other Divine institution. The sin of profaning Sabbath stamps in the individual, the family, or the nation, which is guilty of it, the character of irreligious, and speedily ripens them for the judgments of God. This is the danger of being any way concerned in this iniquity, we are furthering an evil which would ultimately destroy religion itself, and which will assuredly prove as ruinous to the temporal renown, as the spiritual interests, of our country. — J. A. Wylie. Each should do what his talent and influence in society enjoin and permit. It is the principle upon which I insist. If we cannot absolutely shut the gates of our great cities to the entrance of merchandise, we may do something to lessen the evil. We may shut the door of our houses — we may prohibit the purchase or reception of articles of consumption by our servants and dependents — we may encourage those upon whom we have any influence to observe the sacred day. Let only the zeal, the courage, the firmness, the disinterestedness of Ezra and Nehemiah be connected with their piety and love to the house of their God, and much would be done. — Bishop Wilson. Conscientiousness. — In December, says Mr. Barsoe, the missionary, a pleasing circumstance occurred; it showed the reverence of our Esquimaux for the Lord's day. Owing to the state of the weather, during the preceding month, but few seals had been taken; and Saturday, the 2d December, was the first day on which the state of the ice permitted our people to go out on the seal hunt. Considering the great uncertainty which ever attends this occupation, the inducement to pursue it on the following day, in the hope of securing a better provision for their families, was anything but slight. We were, therefore, not a little pleased to learn that a meeting of fathers of families had been convened on the Saturday evening, and that it had been resolved that they would none of them go out on the ensuing day of the Lord, but would spend it in a manner becoming the disciples of Christ, who were invited thankfully to commemorate His coming into the world to save sinners. They expressed their belief that their heavenly Father was able to grant them, on Monday, a sufficiency for the supply of their wants. Their confidence in God was not put to shame. On Monday the weather proved so favorable that they captured no fewer than one hundred seals.

19—22. (19) commanded, etc.,[d] took practical steps to prevent this Sabbath market being held. servants, personal attendants whom Neh. could trust. no burden . . day, individuals could pass freely in and out, but merchandise of every kind was prohibited. (20) merchants . . Jerusalem, their wares spoiling, themselves disappointed. Many of them carrying on trade with the Jews, who would come outside the city to deal with them. This unlawful traffic Neh. determined to stop. once or twice, a few times, till they found out the inconvenience of the new and stringent rule. (21) Then, etc., he sent messages of warning. Good rulers will do their best to reduce temptations fr. wh. people suffer. (22) commanded, etc.,[e] having abolished the abuse, he instituted the use of the Sabbath. Remember . . also,[f] happy is he who at the close of ea. undertaking can pray to be remembered "concerning this also."

Sabbath keeping. – The importance attached to this matter is a sign of the prominence given to Sabbath-keeping in Judaism. The same thing was seen earlier in the selection of the law of the Sabbath as one of the two or three rules to be specially noted, and to which the Jews were to particularly pledge themselves in the covenant. Reference was then made to the very act of the Tyrians now complained of, the offering of wares and food for sale in Jerusalem on the Sabbath day. Putting these two passages together, we can see where the Sabbath-breaking came from. It was the invasion of a foreign custom—like the dreaded introduction of the "Continental Sunday" into England. Now to Nehemiah the fact of the foreign origin of the custom would be a heavy condemnation for it. Next to circumcision, Sabbath-keeping was the principal mark of the Jew. In the days of our Lord it was the most highly prized feature of the ancient faith. This was then so obvious that it was laid hold of by Roman satirists, who knew little about the strange traders in the Ghetto except that they "sabbatized." Nehemiah saw that if the sacred day of rest were to be abandoned, one of his bulwarks of separation would be lost. Thus for him, with his fixed policy, and in view of the dangers of his age, there was a very urgent reason for maintaining the Sabbath.—Exp. Bib.

B. C. cir. 432.

"I never knew a man to escape failures in either mind or body, who worked seven days in a week."—Sir R. Peel.

23—25. (23) Jews . . Moab,[a] R. V., "saw I the Jews," i. e. a certain set of Jews, not a general accusation. (24) children, etc., illus. of effect of ill-assorted marriages. (25) cursed, R. V., marg., "reviled," as one in authority he denounced the Divine judgments upon them. smote, etc., ordered them to be scourged. made . . God,[b] took an oath of them to abstain fr. this evil.

"Jew's language."—Throughout the exile, the knowledge of Hebrew was undoubtedly preserved; for the prophecies of Haggai and Zechariah (circ. 516), are written in pure Hebrew, and the same may be said of the prophecy of Malachi and the memoirs of Ezra and Nehemiah, in the century after the return from the exile (460–430). In the fourth and third centuries B. C. the Hebrews had many of them become bilingual. Greek for a time threatened to dispute the position. But the Aramaic dialect prevailed; and although Hebrew remained as the language of the learned, of the law, of tradition, and of religious literature, the dialect spoken by the Jews in the 1st cent. B. C. was Aramaic. — Ryle.

marriages with strange wives

a Ezr. ix. 2.

b Ezr. x. 5; Ne. x. 29, 30.

"It must be remembered that Neh. was a person invested with public authority, and that, as such, he was authorized to denounce God's judgments on those who broke his law."—Wordsworth.

26—28. (26) Did . . things? 1 K. xi. 1, ff. yet . . him,[c] hence he should have been the more careful of his example. nevertheless . . sin,[d] notwithstanding his wisdom, and religious profession, how could they hope to escape the same evil. (27) Shall, etc.,[e] as if you could resist the evil influences of this connection, or escape the just wrath of God. (28) Joiada, prob. his name was Manasseh.[f] therefore . . me, expelled him fr. his office, and personal friendship; perhaps, forced him into exile.

"Beloved of his God."—I. The objects of God's special regard. 1. They are often the children of His servants—like Solomon; 2. They are ever the subjects of special grace—as Solomon; 3. They are always faulty and erring—as Solomon; 4. They are seldom such backsliders as Solomon. II. The reason of God's special regard. The reason why He loves them is only answered by referring to Jesus. It was not the riches, wisdom, zeal, or the success of Solomon, for all these things were bestowed because He was loved. III. The tokens of God's special regard. 1. An experimental knowledge of His love; 2. A passionate, ardent return of His love; 3. Success in labors.

Nehemiah's earnestness.—Here, then, we have discipline, earnestness, definiteness,—the very Cromwell of the Old Testament, the man with a rod in his hand: and nothing stands in his way when he has right to vindicate, when he has law to protect. Where are the Nehemiahs of to-day? There are none. Where are the Cromwells of to-day? They are in the grave. Look at this man's attitude. He is not ashamed to speak of himself. He was indeed the only man of his time worth speaking about. He was as the very spirit of judgment amongst the people. If we do not want Nehemiah's violence we want his earnestness. Never forget the distinction between these two terms. There may be those who condemn the violence of Nehemiah, and then sink into indifference regarding all that is sacred and noble and useful in human history. Do not let us escape on the plea that the day of violence has gone: the day of earnestness ought never to go.—Peop. Bib.

Neh. exhorts the people

c 1 Ki. iii. 13; 2 Ch. i. 12; 2 S. xii. 24.

d 1 Ki. xi. 4 ff.

e Ezr. x. 2.

f Jos. Ant. xi. 8, 3.

"Our appetites of one or another kind are excellent spurs to our reason, which otherwise might feebly set about the great ends of preserving and continuing the species."—C. Lamb.

"These appetites are very humiliating weaknesses. That our grace depends so largely upon animal condition is not quite flattering to those who are hyperspiritual."—Beecher.

29—31. (29) because, etc., R. V., marg. "for the defilings of." "Nehemiah feels that every sin is worse in a priest than in one who is not a priest; that a priest who contracts a pollution 'pollutes the priesthood;' and that there is a tacit covenant by which priests and Levites bind themselves to holiness of life more absolutely and definitely than others."—Pulp. Com. (30) Thus, etc.,[g] in the manner herein bef. descr. (31) Remember . . good, God will certainly "remember," us all. Can ea. reader hope he will be remembered "for good?"

Neh. prays that he may be remembered for good g x. 30; xii. 1, ff.

B C. cir. 432.

"The ending of this Bk. may at first seem rather abrupt; and, since the date of the Bk of Esther is prior to that of Neh., the last words of Neh. are the last words of Biblical hist."—Wordsworth.

Nehemiah's character. — On reviewing the character of Nehemiah, we seem unable to find a single fault to counterbalance his many and great virtues. For pure and disinterested patriotism he stands unrivaled. The man whom the account of the misery and ruin of his native country, and the perils with which his countrymen were beset, prompted to leave his splendid banishment, and a post of wealth, power, and influence, in the first court in the world, that he might share and alleviate the sorrows of his native land, must have been pre-eminently a patriot. Every act of his during his government bespeaks one who had no selfishness in his nature. All he did was noble, generous, high-minded, courageous, and to the highest degree upright. But to stern integrity he united great humility and kindness, and a princely hospitality. As a statesman he combined forethought, prudence, and sagacity in counsel with vigor, promptitude and decision in action. In dealing with the enemies of his country he was wary, penetrating and bold. In directing the internal economy of the state, he took a comprehensive view of the real welfare of the people, and adopted the measures best calculated to promote it. In dealing whether with friend or foe, he was utterly free from favor or fear, conspicuous for the simplicity with which he aimed only at doing what was right, without respect of persons. But in nothing was he more remarkable than for his piety, and the singleness of eye with which he walked before God. He seems to have undertaken everything in dependence upon God, with prayer for His blessing and guidance, and to have sought his reward only from God. — Peop. Bib. Nehemiah's prayer. — With a sense of weary loneliness, taught to feel his own insignificance in that great tide of human life that flows on in its own course, though the most prominent figures drop out of notice, Nehemiah turned to His God, the one Friend who never forgets. He was learning the vanity of the world's fame; yet he shrank from the idea of falling into oblivion. Therefore it was his prayer that he might abide in the memory of God. This was by itself a restful thought. It is cheering to think that we may dwell in the memory of those we love. But to be held in the thought of God is to have a place in the heart of infinite love. And yet this was not the conclusion of the whole matter to Nehemiah. It is really nothing better than a frivolous vanity, that can induce any one to be willing to sacrifice the prospect of a real eternal life in exchange for the pallid shadow of immortality ascribed to the "choir invisible" of those who are only thought of as living in the memory of the world they have influenced enough to win "a niche in the temple of fame." What is fame to a dead man mouldering in his coffin? Even the higher thought of being remembered by God is a poor consolation in prospect of blank non-existence. Nehemiah expects something better, for he begs God to remember him in mercy and for good. It is a very narrow, prosaic interpretation of this prayer to say that he only means that he desires a blessing during the remainder of his life in the court at Susa. On the other hand, it may be too much to ascribe the definite hope of a future life to this Old Testament saint. And yet, vague as his thought may be, it is the utterance of a profound yearning of the soul that breaks out in moments of disappointment with an intensity never to be satisfied within the range of our cramped mortal state. In this utterance of Nehemiah we have, at least, a seed thought that should germinate into the great hope of immortality. — Exp. Bib.

"Much precious fruit falls into our laps before we by prayer shake the tree. Now, if the water of life do flow in such streams upon us when we pray not, how pleasantly will they flow when they are drawn by the attractive power of prayer! If the Lord is found when we seek not, opens when we knock not, answers when we call not; how much more will He open and answer when we knock and call! If the greatest blessing be vouchsafed before we have hearts to pray, how confident may we be that prayer will obtain the less!"—Clarkson.

THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

[233]

Introduction.

I. Author, unknown. It has been ascribed to Ezra, to Mordecai, to the high-priest Joiakim and to others, but there is no sufficient evidence in favor of either. II. Historical character. The most important question touching the book is, — Shall it be regarded as veritable history, or is it an allegory or parable with perhaps a certain basis of fact? The reasons for counting it genuine history seems well nigh conclusive. The objections drawn from the arbitrary conduct of the monarch, and from the cruel slaughter of the enemies of the Jews, seem less and less weighty the more familiar we become with Xerxes and his times. The observance of the Feast of Purim by the Jews all over the world, beginning some 4 or 5 centuries before Christ, is so linked with the events described in this book as to furnish very strong evidence of its historical character. III. Purpose. It shows how the Jews, scattered among the heathen, were preserved, though doomed to destruction. "Though the name of God is not found in the bk., His hand is plainly seen, anticipating threatened evil, defeating and overruling it to the greater good of the Jews, and even of the heathen. The Jews in Babylon were not alone in peril. Had Haman succeeded, the Jews throughout the world must have perished, and with them the whole visible Ch. of God, since the power of Persia was then supreme at Jerusalem, and throughout Asia."

In our copies the bk. ends with vs. 3 of cap. x: but in Gk. and Vulg. there are ten verses more, together with six more chapters wh. the Gr. and Lat. Churches regard as canonical. These are supposed to have been compiled by some Hellenistic Jew, and as they are not extant in Hebrew, they are expunged fr. the sac. canon by Protestants.

Synopsis.

(According to Horne.)

Part I. — The promotion of Esther; and the essential service rendered to the king by Mordecai, in detecting a plot against his life.....i. ii.

Part II. — The advancement of Haman; his designs against the Jews, and their frustration.

Sec. 1. — Promotion of Haman, decree for destroying the Jews.....iii.

Sec. 2. — Affliction of Jews, and measures they pursued.....iv.

Sec. 3 — Defeat of Haman's plot against Mordecai.....v., vi. vii.

Sec. 4. — Defeat of Haman's plot against Jews.....viii., ix. 1–16

Sec. 5. — Institution of feast of Purim..ix. 17–32

Advancement of Mordecai... .x.

B C. 483.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1—4. (1) Ahasuerus, the well-known Xerxes, who figures in Grecian hist. When he came to the throne, B. C. 485, he was about 35 years old. (2) Shushan, Susa.[a] the palace, occupying a lofty but artificial eminence towards the west, while the city lay at the base of this mound, towards the east. (3) third . . feast, etc., this present gathering of his princes and servants was intended to afford opportunity for consultation concerning the famous expedition into Greece. (4) When, etc., Persian custom to unite great councils with great festivities.

The feast of Ahasuerus. — The duration of the feast recorded in the above passage is extraordinary. It continued for half a year, as the Persian year consisted of 360 days. Banquets on so grand a scale, and extending over so great a period, have not been unfrequently provided by the luxurious monarchs of Eastern countries, both in ancient and modern times. The early portion of this festive season, however, seems to have been dedicated to amusement, particularly an exhibition of the magnificence and treasures of the court. — Port. Com. Evils of gluttony. — Epicurus himself, who placed happiness in pleasure, enjoined temperance as a necessary means of this pleasure. An author of our nation justly observes that when a great multitude of alluring dishes are set upon a table, a wise man may see palsies, apoplexies, and other grievous or mortal distempers lurking amongst them. — Geo. Lawson. He is alone temperate who eats not to gratify his taste, but to preserve his life; who is the same at every table as his own; who when he feasts is not cloyed, and sees all the delicacies before him that luxury can accumulate, yet preserves a due abstinence in the midst of them. To govern our appetite is necessary; but there is no necessity that we should always mortify it. Life is no more to be passed in constant self-denial than in a round of sensual enjoyments. — Dean Bolton. True feasting. — It is said of the father of Louis XV., king of France, that when his preceptor one day was speaking of this feast of Ahasuerus, and wondered how the prince of Persia could find patience for such a long feast, he replied, "That his wonder was how he could defray the expense of it." He was afraid that the provinces would be compelled to observe a fast for it. On another occasion the same prince said that he did not understand how a king should taste unmingled joy at a feast, unless he could invite all his subjects to partake; or unless he could be assured, at least, that none of them would go supperless to bed. — Hom. Com.

the feast of Ahasuerus to the princes a Neh. i. 1. Herodotus (vii. 6, 135, 136; ix. 107). Æschylus, Pers. 15, 124, 563.

"Sobriety is that virtue which keeps a medium in the pleasures that arise from eating and drinking, with respect both to the quantity and quality thereof." — Limborch.

"As houses well stored with provisions are likely to be full of mice, so the bodies of those that eat much are full of diseases." — Diogenes.

"Such whose sole bliss is eating, who can give but that one brutal reason why they live." — Juvenal.

"The security and peace of nations consist not in magnificent feasts, but in the good government of its people." — C. Leach.

5—9. (5) in the court of the garden. The "court of the garden" is probably the entire space surrounding the central hall of thirty-six pillars at Susa, including the three detached porticoes of twelve pillars each, described by Mr. Loftus in his "Chaldæa and Susiana" (pp. 365–372). — Pulp. Com. (6) hangings, awnings of fine white linen, cotton cloth and blue stuff. beds, divans. (7) in . . gold, hence profusion of the precious metal.[b] Drinking-vessels of gold were found in considerable numbers in the Persian camp near Platæa (Herod., ix. 80) when the Greeks took it. royal wine, lit. wine of the kingdom, i. e. fr. the king's cellar, prob. Chalybonian.[c] (8) compel, to begin, or refrain.[d] (9) queen, the supreme queen.

Gold and silver beds. — These beds of gold and silver may receive illustration from modern Asiatic furniture; the divan, or hall of audience, as also the room for receiving guests in private houses, is generally covered with a Persian carpet, around which are placed cushions of different shape and size, in cases of gold and silver rincob, or of scarlet cloth embroidered; these are occasionally moved into courts and gardens, and placed under the shahmyanah for the accommodation of company. — Forbes.

Vanity of earthly glory. — Ahasuerus is gone, his royal city has perished, and even his stately palace has left behind only a few insignificant traces. But the simple story of Esther survives. Palaces of marble, as well as mansions made of the less enduring brick, strangely vanish. Strong fortifications disappear. Wonderful it is that material structures seem less enduring than insubstantial thought structures. Suggestive it is that the man Ahasuerus moves a formless shadow across the stage, while his doings and external greatness are vividly represented. — Hom. Com. Glory of the new Jerusalem. — An ancient father, when he first set his foot in Rome, at that time the mis-

the feast made to people

b Æschylus (Pers. 3) applies the epithet Polychrusos to Susa.

All these names are not colors; they are substances, they are jewels, they are precious works. Our little snowball of success is looked down upon by the Jungfraus and Mont Blancs with unutterable disdain. — Peop. Bib.

c Ezek. xxvii. 18; Strabo, xv. 330.

d National habits of princes of provinces respected; some of the mountain tribes famous for their temperance.

B. C. 483.

tress and wonder of the world, made this pious observation: "If an earthly kingdom is so glorious, how glorious must the new Jerusalem be!" If you account those men happy who were feasted in the royal gardens of Shushan, how blessed must those men be who are admitted to an eternal feast in Christ's Father's house! Gold and silver and pearls are but poor emblems of its celestial splendor. — G. Lawson.

Vashti is summoned, and refuses to obey

10—12. (10) Mehuman, etc., writer of this bk., minutely acquainted with palace affairs. chamberlains, R. V., marg. "eunuchs." (11) Vashti . . beauty, her name = beautiful woman. (12) refused,[a] her modesty and rank forbade that she should make a spectacle of herself to gratify a crowd of drunken and licentious revelers. wroth, this was like Xerxes, who flogged the sea for destroying his bridge of boats.

The weak king. — 1. It was certainly the king's weakness to send for the queen into his presence when drunk. (1) He dishonored himself as a husband. He ought to have protected, and not exposed, his wife. (2) He diminished himself as a king in commanding that from his wife which she might refuse, much to the honor of her virtue. 2. Perhaps it was not her wisdom to deny him. (1) She refused, though he sent his command by seven honorable messengers. (2) Had she come, while she did it in pure obedience, it had been no reflection upon her modesty. — M. Henry.

Historical parallel. — Every classical reader will remember the parallel story of the imprudence of Candaules. Candaules, king of Lydia, whose wife was remarkable for personal attractions, promised in a state of intoxication to "show her beauty" to his favorite, Gyges. This promise he performed by introducing him into the queen's apartment, according to the mythologists, by the use of a ring which rendered the wearer invisible. The outraged queen, disgusted at the brutal drunkenness of her consort, with a significant look and gesture placed a dagger in the hand of Gyges, who instantly slew the king, and, afterwards marrying his widow, obtained the throne of Lydia.

The queen's feast. — The women are not permitted to associate with the other sex at an Eastern banquet; but they are allowed to entertain one another in their own apartments. When Ahasuerus, the king of Persia, treated all the people of his capital with a splended feast, Vashti, the queen, we are informed, "made a banquet for the women in the royal house, which belonged to King Ahasuerus." This, observes Chardin, is the custom of all the East; the women have their feasts at the same time, but apart from the men. And Maillet informs us, in his letters, that the same custom is observed in Egypt. — Paxton.

[a] Herodotus v. 18.

"While the king showed the honor of his majesty, the queen and her ladies showed the honor of their modesty, which is truly the majesty of the fair sex."— M. Henry.

"Certainly obedience is due to those in authority; but the command of conscience is superior to the commands of husbands, or of kings. The commands of conscience should be supreme."

"Beauty is worse than wine, it intoxicates both the holder and the beholder."— Zimmerman.

the king consults with his ministers

13—15. (13) which . . times, were adepts in astrology; or knew the laws, what custom required. (14) seven . . Media, Ezr. vii. 14. which . . face, his privy council, his cabinet ministers. (15) What . . law, a momentous question for these great lords. Something must be done, but it must be according to law.

The seven counselors. — Of these Persian privy counselors it is said — 1. That they were wise men. 2. They were skillful in the times, that is, well versed in histories, and well furnished with experiences. 3. That they knew the laws, which they had ready, and at their fingers' ends, as we say. 4. They also knew judgment, that is, equity and moderation, without which utmost right might be utmost wrong, as, indeed, it proved in the case in hand. — Trapp.

The beauty of Vashti. — The Persians, on festival occasions, used to produce their women in public. To this purpose Herodotus relates a story of seven Persians being sent to Amyntas, a Grecian prince, who received them hospitably, and gave them a splendid entertainment. When, after the entertainment, they began to drink, one of the Persians thus addressed Amyntas: "Prince of Macedonia, it is a custom with us Persians, whenever we have a public entertainment, to introduce our concubines and young wives." On this principle Ahasuerus gave command to bring his queen Vashti into the public assembly. — Burder.

"An Indian philosopher being asked what were according to his opinion the two most beautiful things in the universe, answered, the starry heavens above our heads, and the feeling of duty in our hearts. — Bossuet.

We'll keep our aims sublime, our eyes erect,
Although our woman hands should shake and fail.
—Mrs. Browning.

Memucan condemns the conduct of Vashti

16—18. (16) Memucan, we gather from Memucan's reply that the Persian law had provided no penalty for the case in hand — had, in fact, not contemplated it. He first argues the matter on general grounds of morality (vs. 16) and expediency (vss. 17, 18), and then proposes the enactment of a new law — a privilegium — assigning Vashti a special punishment for her contempt of the king's order. The "decree" (vs 20) would not have been necessary had there already existed a law on the point. — Pulp. Com. (18) ladies, R. V., "princesses." Persia, is placed before Media, because it had now assumed the precedence. contempt, in the women. wrath, in the men.

B. C. 483.

Position of woman in the East. — The true position of the female sex is still so little understood in the East, and even among the Asiatic Hebrews so little regarded, that the following expression forms part of the daily prayer of the Oriental Jew: — "Lord of the world, I thank Thee that Thou hast not made me a woman."

"A great English writer has pictured an imaginary character as having a sweet look of goodness, which drew out all that was good in others. There must have been some such Divine attraction to the poor and outcast in the looks and whole person of our Lord."— Geikie.

Esther dramatized. — When Racine composed the tragedy of Esther, to please Madame Maintenon, she very strongly recommended it at court, and every one was charmed with the performance except an honest curate, who refused to see it. Being very urgently pressed for his reasons, he told Madame M. that she knew he was in the habit of publicly reprobating the stage from the pulpit, and that though the tragedy of Esther was far different from the generality of plays, yet it was still known to be a play; adding, that were he to yield to the request, his hearers would compare his conduct with his sermons, and, in their practice, would pursue the course most suited to their sinful inclinations.

at his advice the king deposes Vashti

19—22. (19) laws . . altered,[a] for if altered, the Q. with regained power might punish those who degraded her. royal estate, position, title, portion. unto . . she, as they hoped more subservient. (20) honour, "here and in the account of the honors paid to Mordecai the word 'honor' is not at all adequate to the translation; its meaning is costliness, or preciousness, designating that which is difficult to get and easy to lose. The idea is that the women will come to regard their husbands as peculiarly valuable and rather precarious possessions, against the alienation of which they need to guard with peculiar care." — Prof. Willis J. Beecher. (21) saying . . princes, they could contrive nothing better. (22) writing,[b] character employed in writing. In the hundred and twenty-seven provinces subject to Persia we have no means of knowing how many different languages were spoken: probably the number was large. man . . house,[c] and be lord and master there. that . . people,[d] the sense is that a husband should use the language of his people, and constrain his wives — even though foreigners — to do the same.

Persian law and gospel law. — 1. Persian law was arbitrary, chiefly according to the caprice of the king; and it was cruel. This is seen in the case of Vashti. 2. Gospel law is righteous; it is founded upon God's justice and righteousnees. Persian laws, being dictated by whim and caprice, were often degrading in their effects. But God's laws are always ennobling and exalting. God is ever ready to forgive. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins. Merciful is the gospel. "How often shall I forgive?" inquired Peter; "until seven times?" "Yea, until seventy times seven," said the King of Heaven. — Hom. Com.

Wicked counsel. — A young man devoted himself to a religious life. His ungodly parents sent him many letters to dissuade him. Being fully decided to go on in his chosen course, when any letters came addressed to him he threw them into the fire at once, without opening them. When friends and kindred stand between us and Christ, they must be disregarded. — Hom. Com.

[a] Est. viii. 8; Da. vi. 8, 12, 15.

[b] Est. viii. 9.

[c] Ep. v. 22-24; 1 Ti. ii. 12.

[d] Heb. that one should publish it according to the language of his people.

He is royal who is a member of that kingdom which is to extend from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, which in fact is to include all nations. Other kingdoms shall fail, but Christ's kingdom of love shall ever endure.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

a successor to Vashti is to be sought

1—4. (1) wrath . . was appeased, R. V., "was pacified" perhaps within a few weeks. (2) said . . him, perh. at the dreaded sight of the king's remorse: perh. some of them had reason to dread Vashti's return to power. (3) gather . . virgins, vivid picture of the degradation of woman in Persia. house of the women, a part of the royal quarter. The remains of the palace of Sargon at Khorsabad are the best illustration of the Assyrian form of a domiciliary palace. purification, baths, perfumes, etc.

"Self-reverence, self-knowledge, self-control, These three alone lead life to sovereign power." —Tennyson.

The palace and city of Shushan.—For many ages known only by the records of its greatness in sacred and profane history, the site of the palace and city of Shushan (Est. iii. 15) has been veiled in obscurity. Fatal alike to art and prosperity, the Mohammedan conquest of Asia brought it for a short period into notice, but the more completely to entomb it beneath the ravages of war-

"The youth who follows his appetites too soon seizes the cup before it has received its best ingredients, and by anticipating his pleasures robs the remaining part of life of their share, so that his eagerness only produces a manhood of imbecility and an age of pain." — Goldsmith.

B. C. 483.

Mordecai and Esther fare, superstition, and neglect. And it is only since the enterprising explorations of Colonel Williams, in 1849–1852, that the true position of the ancient capital of Persia has been ascertained, and proved to be buried under the three great mounds on the eastern side of the river Shâour, which are to this day called by the Arabs the Mounds of El Shush. Extending over an area of twelve miles in circumference, and the three principal ridges varying from forty to seventy feet in elevation, these desolate tumuli, covered with tall, rigid grasses, straggling acacias, and rampant weeds, present, even to the scrutiny of an experienced eye, little indication of the fallen city which they inearth, and the beauty which their name perpetuates.

5—7. (5) Now . . Jew, certain Jews were oft. found in palaces of heathen kings.[a] (6) Who, i. e. Kish. carried . . Jeconiah, ab. 117 yrs. bef. Three important deportations of the Jews are mentioned: (1) during the reigns of Jehoiakim, 605 B. C. (2) Jehoiachin or Jeconiah, 598 B. C. (3) Zedekiah, 586 B. C., when Jerusalem was destroyed. (7) Hadassah, Heb. for myrtle. Esther, Pers. for star.[b] uncle's,[c] by her father Abihail. maid . . beautiful, Heb. fair of form and good of countenance. Prob. about twenty years old. took . . daughter, "Mordecai took Hadassah in her infancy and bore her on his arm with the love and care of a father."

True greatness. — Mordecai is greatest when he saw his little cousin left a poor orphan, and took her to his house and to his heart, and became to her a second father, so gentle and loving that she no longer mourned the loss of her first father. She delighted to render to Mordecai the allegiance of a true, loving daughter. We too often lose sight of the fact that life's little things are really life's great things. We begin with the little and go up to the great. But we do not measure correctly. Our terms are untrue. The great deed was when Mordecai took and brought up Hadassah. The little deed was when he reaped the results of his goodness. For sowing is greater than reaping; but the sowing is done in tears, and the harvest is gathered amid a flourish of trumpets. Men are greatest in their little things. The chariot of Ahasuerus was not checked in its course, the attendant courtiers never condescended to notice, when Mordecai guided to his home the orphaned girl. But he was sowing seed which produced strange and yet glorious fruit. The deed was most attractive. He was true to the claims of relationship and to the dictates of humanity. The orphan's tears touched his heart and evoked his sympathies. Let us not say, A father to the fatherless is God in His holy habitation, and leave the fatherless to starvation and beggary. Orphan homes are the trophies of the humanizing tendencies. But adoption of the orphan is better than crowding a lot of poor orphans together to be drilled and marched out like young soldiers. Esthers grow best when the Mordecais become their fathers. Hom. Com. Use and abuse of the beautiful. — I thought in France that the French people were the most interesting people in the world, till I had stayed among them a week or two, when I began to feel, "They are just like a dew-drop, that is exquisitely beautiful, but that I can never draw a bucket of water from." And when I got back to England, I said of the people there, "They are rough, but there is something enduring in them." The French develop the beautiful in the direction of the physical and material, and the English in the direction of the intellectual and the moral. Each is partial in its development of this quality. The ecclesiologist cultivates beauty in church worship. He makes the house of God beautiful; he makes the singing beautiful; he makes the vocalization beautiful; he makes everything belonging to the services of the sanctuary beautiful. And I do not object to that. Right over against him is a Friend Quaker, who says, "Outward beauty is a bait of the devil, to ensnare men withal. I believe in the sweet and sublime stillness of the soul before God. That is beautiful. Give me plainness." Here is one that goes to excess in all external beauty; and here is another that goes to excess of beauty in spiritual things. My doctrine is this: that the element of the beautiful should be developed in everything harmoniously — in dress, in the household, in society, in thoughts, in feelings, in worship, in pleasure, and with the natural restraints and counterbalances that beauty requires to protect it against pride and selfishness. — H. W. Beecher.

8—11. (8) Esther . . house, her beauty seems to have been reported to Hegai. (9) maiden . . him, Hegai, and so had the advantage of special attention. Hegai may have been kind for his own sake, as seeing her prob.

a Joseph, Moses, Daniel, Nehemiah.

b "Her maiden name was Myrtle, her name as queen was Star." — Bertheau.

c Acc. to Josephus (Ant. x. 6, 2) Mordecai was himself her uncle.

"In the true mythology, love is an immortal child, and beauty leads him as a guide; nor can we express a deeper sense than when we say beauty is the pilot of the young soul." — Emerson.

"Age cannot wither her nor custom stale her infinite variety; other women cloy the appetites they feed; but she makes hungry where most she satisfies." — Shakespeare.

"The maiden was fair and beautiful, it is said, — the expressions mean that she was of graceful form and beautiful countenance — and from what is brought out in the history, the endowments of her mind were in harmony with the graces of her person."

Every child of God is where God has placed him for some purpose; do not ask either to be gatekeeper or queen, but whichever you are serve God therein. Mordecai did well because he acted as Mordecai should. — C. H. Spurgeon.

Esther finds favor with Hegai, the keeper of the women exaltation. such . . her, R. V., "with her portions," i. e. her daily allowance of food. meet, i. e. the most suitable attendants. (10) Esther . . kindred, etc., this had been concealed, probably, for Esther's sake. Her name being Persian, no one in authority seems to have suspected her true nationality. When the proper time came Esther made known the fact that she was a Jewess. (11) Mordecai, etc., there gathered up such scraps of palace gossip as might relate to his beautiful kinswoman; perh. he occupied some humble position under the king. — Haley.

A mother's glory. — A boy, hearing a visitor of his father make use of the familiar saying that "An honest man is the noblest work of God," made this innocent annotation upon it: "No, sir, my mamma is the noblest work of God." Let parents be as lovingly anxious for the welfare of their children as Mordecai was for Esther's; let them by judicious treatment, by wise and loving example, and by constant prayer lead them up into the beauty of holiness, and thus their memories will be blessed, and their names held in affectionate esteem. — Hom. Com.

B. C. cir. 478.

"Lovely sweetness is the noblest power of women, and is far fitter to prevail by parley than by battle." — Sir. P. Sidney.

"Could beauty have better commerce than with honesty?" — Shakespeare.

"You have not fulfilled every duty, unless you have fulfilled that of being pleasant" — Charles Buxton.

the manner of purification, and going to the king

12–14. after . . months, a long preparation perh. required by state etiquette. (13) whatsoever . . house, "on this occasion the maiden was permitted, for at least once in her life, to array herself in the most costly attire and ornaments which the king's treasuries contained." — Haley. (14) came . . more, there were two and probably three "houses" or departments in Xerxes' harem; (1) the house of the virgins; (2) the second house, or that of the concubines; and probably (3) a house for the queen, etc.

The women's apartments in the East. — The apartments of the women are counted sacred and inviolable over all the east; it is even a crime to inquire what passes within the walls of the harem, or house of the women. Hence it is extremely difficult to be informed of the transactions in those sequestered habitations; and a man, says Chardin, may walk a hundred days, one after another, by the house where the women are, and yet know no more what is done there than at the farther end of Tartary. This sufficiently explains the reason of Mordecai's conduct, who "walked every day before the court of the women's house, to know how Esther did, and what should become of her." — Paxton.

"Beauty, the fringe of the garment of the Lord." — Bailey.

"There is no beautifier of complexion, or form, or behavior like the wish to scatter joy around us." — Emerson.

Esther is preferred by the king

15–17. (15) required . . appointed, his appointments had been so profuse, or her modesty was so great, or her faith in God was such, that she would not depend on extra aids. (16) Tebeth, fr. new moon in Jan. to that in Feb. seventh . . reign, ab. B. C. 479-8; during this interval his Grecian expedition had met with disaster. (17) women, i. e. "above all his former secondary wives, as well as above all the virgins." — Pulp. Com. favour, kindness. made . . Vashti, so the myrtle that bloomed in the Heb. cottage became a star to shine in the Pers. palace.

"Adorning thee with so much art is but a barbarous skill." — Cowley.

The elevation of Esther. — I. Note the circumstances that led to the exaltation of Esther. 1. The position of Mordecai and his niece; 2. The appropriation of Esther; 3. Her beauty shows what fleeting things some owe their advancement to. II. The enthroning of Esther furnishes the opportunity for the occurrence of those incidents which advance the Divine plan. 1. The elevation of Mordecai; 2. His discovery of the plot.

The path of a good woman is indeed strewn with flowers; but they rise behind her steps, not before them. — Ruskin

True beauty. — A gentleman had two children: one a daughter, who was considered plain in her person; the other a son, who was reckoned handsome. One day the father took them both on his knees, and with much affection gave them the following advice: "I would have you both look in the glass every day; you, my son, that you may be reminded never to dishonor the beauty of your face by the deformity of your actions; and you, my daughter, that you may take care to hide the defect of beauty in your person by the superior lustre of your virtuous and amiable conduct."

According to mythology, Medusa was a maiden of such rare beauty as to provoke the goddess Minerva to jealousy; and on this account she was transformed into a frightful monster. Her admired ringlets became hissing serpents, and no living thing could look upon her without being turned into stone.

Man's duty. —

I hold it the duty of one who is gifted,
And royally dowered in all men's sight,
To know no rest till his life is lifted
Fully up to the great gift's height.

Great gifts should be worn like a crown befitting,
And not like gems on a beggar's hands;

B. C. cir. 478.

And the toil must be constant and unremitting
That lifts up the king to the crown's demands.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

a feast is made in honor of Esther

18–20. (18) Esther's feast, a feast in her honor or one long remembered by this designation. release, "Many think it means not merely or chiefly a holiday, but a temporary release from taxation, and perhaps to some extent from military conscription or service." —Haley. state, R. V., "bounty." (19) virgins . . time, proof of the licentiousness of Xerxes. sat . . gate, prob. in some official capacity. (20) Esther . . people,[a] in the East a person's relations usually rise with him; Esther's silence accounts for Mordecai's low estate; Mordecai's command accounts for Esther's silence. —Pul. Com. did . . him, did not cast off duty and memory of former days.

Release and gifts. — Esther's marriage was celebrated in a manner intended and fitted to impress the nation with a sense of the favor and honor with which she was regarded by the "great king." There was a great feast at Susa, that the metropolis might have an opportunity of honoring the new queen. And throughout the kingdom there took place, according to the command of Ahasuerus, such celebrations and observances as were in accordance with Oriental customs. Particularly are mentioned the releases or remissions — it may be presumed from taxation or military service; and the gifts — probably of robes, and in some cases of jewels. — Pul. Com. Oriental feasts. — The description of this feast corresponds to the statements of ancient Persian luxury and magnificence which the Greek authors have sent down to us, and which they state to have been remarkably evinced in their banquets. Their sumptuousness in this respect, indeed, became proverbial. The vast numbers of persons entertained at their great feasts, as well as the long continuance of these feasts, are points noticed by ancient writers. The Persian kings are recorded to have often feasted as many as 5,000 men at once, each time at the expense of 200 talents. On the march to Greece, those who were required to provide for the king, and the companions of his table, were ruined, though they tarried but a night; and this not more from the number to be entertained than from their luxurious and extravagant habits, which gave occasion to the sarcasm of Megacreon of Abdera, who called upon the people to bless the gods that it was not the custom of King Xerxes to take two meals in one day; for had they been called upon to provide dinner as well as supper, they must either have fled at his approach, or have remained to be utterly ruined.

a vs. 10

"Seest thou how pale the sated guest rises from supper, where the appetite is puzzled with varieties? The body, too, burdened with yesterday's excess, weighs down the soul, and fixes to the earth this particle of the Divine essence."—Horace.

"If you were born to honor, show it now;
If put upon you, make the judgment good
That thought you worthy of it."—Shakespeare.

Mordecai discovers a plot against the king's life

21–23. (21) of . . door, they were members of the king's body-guard and kept the very entrance to the king's apartments, and thus could hope to destroy the king without much difficulty. sought . . Ahasuerus, formed a plot to assassinate the king.[a] (22) Esther . . name, she gave her authority, but did not say he was related to her. (23) inquisition, searching inquiry. hanged . . tree, i. e. impaled. "The victim, usually being first put to death, was hung aloft upon the point of a stake or pole." written . . king, "Herodotus tells us that the Persian inserted in these records the names of those who should be honored."[b] —Haley.

Fabricius. — When the physician of Pyrrhus offered to Fabricius to poison his master, the noble Roman general sent the traitor's letter to Pyrrhus, saying, "Prince, know better for the future, how to choose both your friends and foes." To requite such an act of generosity, Pyrrhus released all the Roman prisoners; but Fabricius would only receive them on condition that he would accept an equal number in exchange; "for," said he, "do not believe, Pyrrhus, that I have discovered this treachery to you out of particular regard to your person, or for the hope of advantage, but because the Romans shun base stratagems, and will not triumph but with open force."—Percy Anec.

Duty its own reward. — On the coast of Wales a vessel was being wrecked, and the life-boat men pushed out to the rescue. Again and again they braved the storm, and drove on through the surging billows, in order to save human life. When the work was completed and the last man brought on shore, they were asked what reward could be given. And their noble reply was, that they wanted no payment, their reward was that they had succeeded in saving the shipwrecked from a watery grave. Mordecai found his reward in the consciousness of having done his duty. An approving conscience is better than the wealth of monarchs.—Hom. Com.

a Xerxes was afterwards murdered at night in his bed by two persons, one of whom was a chamberlain, and the other a captain of his guard."—Ælian V., Hist. xiii. 3.

b Est. vi. 1.

"The wisest man could ask no more of fate
Than to be simple, modest, manly, true,
Safe from the many, honored by the few;
Nothing to court in church, or world, or state,
But inwardly in secret to be great."—Lowell.

B. C cir. 473.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

the promotion of Haman

1—3. (1) Haman, supposed to mean celebrated. Agagite, ref. prob. to place of birth. (2) all . . bowed, this was the Oriental method of doing honor to a superior, but among the Persians the act of prostration before a king was understood to imply worship. Mordecai, etc., because it involved religious homage. (3) Why . . commandment, to them the word of the king was the supreme law.

"But Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence." It does seem a very small matter, but when such a man as Mordecai attached importance to it, we must pause and consider whether the matter was really so small as it seemed. For it is an unsafe way of reasoning to say about anything, it is only one little act; why scruple over it?—Hom. Com.

Danger of quick success. — In a short time Haman was placed above all the princes. The officials of the court were commanded to give him reverence and worship. There seemed to be nothing which the infatuated king was able to refuse him. A quick rise to power, and one that would be envied by many! In most hearts there is a strong craving for rapid success. But it is a mistake to suppose that sudden or easy success is a benefit. For observe — 1. Prosperity is better borne and enjoyed when it is the result of long and steady effort. It is a sweeter and more honorable possession when it comes as the reward of conscientious toil. 2. The self-denying labor which, as a rule, is necessary to prosperity, is itself an incalculable benefit. It brings into healthy exercise the physical and mental endowments. It develops many manly qualities. — Pul. Com.

Fidelity honored.— The Emperor Constantius, father to Constantine the Great, once commanded all his Christian servants to offer sacrifices to the gods of Rome. If they refused to obey his command they were to be dismissed from his service. Many of them obeyed; others did not, and accordingly were dismissed. But in a day or two he turned out all those who complied with his orders, and recalled all those whom he had expelled, saying that those would be most faithful to their prince who were most faithful to their God, and that he would not trust men who were false to their religion. Mordecai was conscientious about trifles, and true to his religion. This he was whether he found the favor with man or not. He looked for the favor of God.— Hom. Com.

Let us have faith that right makes might: and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it.—Lincoln.

Haman resolves to destroy all the Jews for the offense of Mordecai.

4—6. (4) Mordecai's matters,— to see whether his plea of Jewish nationality would be accepted as valid. for . . Jew, in wh. fact was the secret of his conduct. (5) when . . saw, he had not observed him in the crowd till his attention was directed to him. (6) And . . alone, "he felt that the affront would not be sufficiently expiated by the slaughter of the offender alone. A Jew had offered the insult and the Jewish nation must pay the penalty."— Haley. wherefore, massacres on a large scale are of frequent occurrence in the East. Recall Armenian massacre by the cruel Turk.[a]

Mordecai's consistent conduct.— The king's servants endeavored to persuade him to change his attitude, but he would not. He was a witness-bearer, a martyr, and possessed a martyr's courage. Having professed himself to be a Jew, he would make good his profession by adhering to the right. Profession alone is worse than worthless. It injures the professor himself, and the cause with which he claims connection. To act is admittedly more difficult than to profess. Had Mordecai merely professed himself a Jew, while he behaved like a Gentile, he would probably have experienced no difficulty. There is no grandeur in magnificent words, except when they are backed up by noble deeds.— Pul. Com. Reward of vanity.— There was one Michael Fenwick that traveled with Wesley as a sort of groom, nurse, and occasional exhorter. The good man was vain enough to complain one day that his name was never inserted in Wesley's published "Journals." In the next number of the "Journals" he found his name in a connection that probably did not serve to increase his vanity. "I left Epworth," wrote Wesley, "with great satisfaction, and about one preached at Clayworth. I think none were unmoved but Michael Fenwick, who fell fast asleep under an adjoining hayrick."— Haven. Revenge.— The Highland chief lay a-dying in his mountain home, and in his dying heart were hard, revengeful thoughts towards an opposing clan. A minister waited at his bedside, and exhorted him to forgive, assuring him of the fact that God will not forgive if we do not. And, said the chief, I will forgive them; but in almost the same breath he said to his son, that he left him a father's curse if he forgave them. Well would it have been for Haman — well both temporally and spiritually — had he really forgiven the supposed slight of Mordecai. Trouble in every house.— Talmage says, "I passed down a street of a city with Defend good principles as you would your life.

[a] Ps. lxxxiii. 4.

Jealousy is a secret avowal of inferiority.— Massillon.

"O vanity, how little is thy force acknowledged, or thy operations discerned! How wantonly dost thou deceive mankind, under different disguises! Sometimes thou dost wear the face of pity; sometimes of generosity; nay, thou hast the assurance to put on those glorious ornaments which belong only to heroic virtue."—Fielding.

B. C. cir. 473.

a merchant. He knew all the finest houses on the street. He said, There is something the matter in all these houses. In that one it is conjugal infelicity. In that one, a dissipated son. In that, a dissolute father. In that, an idiot child. In that, the prospect of bankruptcy." In Haman's house there was trouble. Mordecai troubled Haman. The good must ever be troublers to the wicked.— Hom. Com.

having cast lots, he seeks and obtains the king's permission a Est. ix. 24

b Perhaps connected with Lat. pars.

c Pr. xvi. 33.

d 2 Ch. xxxvi. 20; Ezr. i. 1-4.

e vs. 13.

"In a vain man the smallest spark may kindle into the greatest flame because the materials are always prepared for it."—Hume.

"Whenever you are angry, be assured that it is not only a present evil, but that you have increased a habit."—Epictetus.

Feigned equity is double iniquity, both because it is iniquity, and because it is feigning.—George Downame.

Let us always remember that holiness does not consist in doing uncommon things, but in doing everything with purity of heart.— H. E. Manning.

7–11. (7) first month, according to the Babylonian method of reckoning it superseded the old Jewish name Abib. Nisan, month of the Passover. in . . Ahasuerus, prob. B. C. 474. Pur,[a] in Pers. pâreh.[b] The superstitious use of lots has always been prevalent in the East. Even the Jews supposed a special Providence to preside over the casting of lots. from . . day,[c] this their custom, and Haman seems to have been guided by their report of the lot-casting, in his conduct fr. day to day. (8) scattered . . kingdom,[d] it was the policy thus to distribute and separate them for obvious reasons. keep . . laws, this charge was false. The Jews were, as a rule, loyal and peaceable subjects. suffer them, i. e. let them alone. (9) let . . destroyed, this was indeed a royal revenge for the offense of one. pay . . treasuries, but this was to be paid out of the spoil.[e] Not unacceptable to the king, whose wars, etc., had been expensive. hands . . business, i. e. the royal treasurers R. V., inserts before "business," "king's." (10) ring . . enemy, thus by the delivery of his signet-ring delegating to Haman the power of life and death. (11) silver is given to thee, "this may have been merely an Oriental way of seeming to refuse, while actually accepting the bribe offered by Haman," or, more probably, the silver of the Jews was placed in his power.

Casting lots.—It was customary in the East, by casting lots into an urn, to inquire what days would be fortunate, and what not, to undertake any business in. According to this superstitious practice, Haman endeavored to find out what time in the year was most favorable to the Jews, and what most unlucky. First he inquired what month was most unfortunate, and found the month Adar, which was the last month in the year, answerable to our February. Then he inquired the day, and found the thirteenth day was not auspicious to them. Some think there were as many lots as there were days in the year, and for every day he drew a lot; but found none to his mind, till he came to the last month of all, and to the middle of it.— Patrick. Deciding by lot.— In nearly all cases where reason cannot decide, or where the right of several claimants to one article has to be settled, recourse is had to the lot, which "causeth contentions to cease." In the East a young man is either so accomplished, or so rich, or so respectable, that many fathers aspire to the honor of calling him son-in-law. Their daughters are said to be beautiful, wealthy and of a good family; what is he to do? The name of each young lady is written on a separate piece of olah, and then all are mixed together. The youth and his friends then go to the front of the temple; and being seated, a person who is passing by at the time is called, and requested to take one of the pieces of olah, on which a lady's name is inscribed and place it near the anxious candidate. This being done, it is opened, and she whose name is written there becomes his wife.— Oriental Illus.

preparations made for a general massacre of the Jews

f Est. i. 22; viii. 9.

g Est. viii. 10.

h 1 Sa. xxii. 17; 2 K. x. 25; xi. 6.

i Est. viii. 15; Pr. xxix. 2.

"Better is the perplexity of him that suffereth evil than the jollity of him that doeth evil."—Trapp.

"The Persians had good arrangements for interchange of 12–15. (12) scribes, R. V., marg. "secretaries." lieutenants, R. V., "satraps." writing . . language,[f] in a country of such vast extent many dialects and languages were spoken. and . . ring, wh. now Haman had, wh. made the edict binding. (13) posts,[g] runners.[h] The Persian system of conveying letters and messages was by means of relays of fresh horses kept in readiness at suitable distances along the route. (14) ready, for slaughter and spoliation. With weapons, and arrangement of troops. (15) decree . . palace, from headquarters, that none might question the authority. king . . drink, making merry by anticipation at overthrow of the Jews. city . . perplexed,[i] many grieved, many wondering where the slaughter would end: many persons of other nationalities feeling that the precedent now set was a dangerous one.

The edict.— Haman caused the edict against the Jews to be published in the language of every people, that they might all be prepared to bear their part in the destruction of the Jews. But the enemies of Israel had one thing in view, and the God of Israel quite another. Haman intended to make the destruction of Judah as sure as possible, but God intended to make all nations attentive witnesses of His power and wisdom displayed in counteracting the designs of their enemies, and accomplishing their salvation. The effect of such an edict would be the fixing of all men's attention on the event: and the event was to make it evident that there was no God like the God of Israel, nor any people on the earth so much the care of heaven as that nation which was held in abhorrence by Haman.— Lawson. Sealing of documents in the East.— The Rev. H. B. Tristram, in traveling through Palestine, desiring a number of guards in order to secure to his party a safe passage through parts of the land, it was necessary for a treaty to be drawn up to complete the arrangements. He says: "Then came the momentous business of affixing the seals. The seal was not worn in this case on the finger, but from the depths of some part of the sheikh's under garments an unsavory cotton rag was produced, knotted and twisted, at one end of which was carefully folded the signet ring. A little ink being rubbed over it, it was then impressed upon the documents. As the chieftain could not write, we saw at once the jealous precaution with which the signet was guarded. 'To trust a man with your ring,' is a Bedouin proverb expressive of unbounded confidence, and indeed it would practically amount to entrusting a friend in England with bank signed cheques. The signature written with the pen was no security in the Arab's eye, and we were requested, after we had signed the deeds, to affix our seals, not with wax, but with ink; nor till this ceremony was completed did Sheikh Hamzi's deep-set eye twinkle on the pile of sovereigns on the office table as without doubt his own."

B. C. cir. 473.

thought and desires. A nation's civilization may be gauged by its facilities for intercommunication.

"The people of Shushan at this time would be in much the same state of mind as a Persian minister of state in later times, who said that he never left the king's presence without putting his hand to his head, that he might feel whether it was still standing on his shoulders."— Lawson.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

Mordecai's sorrow on hearing of this decree

1—3. (1) perceived, R. V., "knew." rent . . ashes,[a] com. signs of great sorrow of heart. Orientals are very demonstrative in expressing sorrow. They smite their breasts, tear their hair and their garments, and utter loud and piercing cries. (2) before, over against. none . . sackcloth, no signs of sorrow permitted in the palace. (3) mourning . . Jews,[b] terror and distress pervaded the kingdom wherever Jews were found.

Shushan, "the City of the Lily."— "The City of the Lily," in the garden of the Lord. Here Œbares plotted the fraudulent omen which was to place Darius upon the Parisian throne; here, according to St. Jerome, was the palace or castle of Daniel the Prophet; and by the banks of the stream, if Jewish and Mohammedan tradition may be credited, is the humble tomb where, doubly wrapped in cloth of gold, his body awaits the resurrection of the just. From Shushan's once magnificent pavilions went forth the army of Xerxes to the conquest of Greece, and here the queen received the tidings of their total and ignominious defeat. Here Artaxerxes held his royal banquet of fourscore days' duration; here Haman concerted the destruction of the Jews; and here also the amiable Smerdis fell beneath the blow of an assassin deputed by his brother Cambyses. On this spot Sardanapalus III. (Ashur-banipal), B. C. 700, overthrew the Greco-Syrian Empire, and savagely superintended the execution of its sovereign in the burning ruins of his own citadel. Generation after generation has passed into eternity,— the Caliph Omar and the Emperor Sanjar, Mede and Persian, Turk and Arab, Zend and Mohammedan have successively conquered and successively revelled in the marble colonnades and tapestried chambers of a capital which has perished from its glory for ever.

[a] 2 Sa. i. 11; Josh. vii. 6.

[b] Isa. lviii. 5; Da. ix. 3.

"Save us, O God, Thine ocean is so large, and our little boat so small."

"Sorrow, like a heavy hanging bell, once set on ringing with his own weight goes; then little strength rings out the doleful knell."— Shakespeare.

Esther sends Hatach with a gift to comfort

4—6. (4) exceedingly grieved, "her grief and alarm were intense, almost convulsive." sent, she thought to show that her position had not robbed her of love and sympathy for her kinsman. (5) Then . . was, the return of the presents suggested some greater sorrow than she had suspected. (6) street of the city, R. V., "broad place of the city," an area in front of the king's gate.

A motive for kindness.— M. Labat, a merchant of Bayonne ill in health, had retired in the beginning of the winter, 1803, to a country house on the banks of the Adour. One morning, when promenading in his robe-de-chambre, on a terrace elevated a little above the river, he saw a traveler thrown by a furious horse, from the opposite bank, into the midst of the torrent. M. Labat was a good swimmer. He did not stop a moment to reflect on the danger of the attempt, but threw off his robe-de-chambre, leaped into the flood, and caught the drowning stranger at the moment when, having lost all sensation, he must have otherwise inevitably perished. "O God!" exclaimed M. Labat, clasping him in his arms, and recognizing, with a transport of joy, the individual he had saved — "sacred humanity! what do I not owe thee? I have saved my son!" — Percy Anec.

B. C. cir. 473

Mordecai tells Hatach, who tells Esther of the decree

7—9. (7) the sum of money, "he evidently considered that the money was an important item in the transaction, and had mainly influenced Ahasuerus." — Pul. Com. (8) Also . . decree, etc., lest so incredible a story should be doubted. Esther . . people, by this injunction to Hatach Esther's nationality is disclosed, even if it were previously unknown to him. (9) Hatach, the queen's trusted and confidential messenger, selected on account of his well-known integrity.

"Every man rejoices twice who has a partner in his joy; a friend shares my sorrow and makes it but a moiety, but he swells my joy and makes it double." — Jeremy Taylor.

An intercession. — If Haman's influence with the king of Persia was used for harm, why should not Esther's be used for good? It was a natural and happy thought on the part of Mordecai to use his ward's influence with Ahasuerus for the deliverance and safety of the Jews. And the sequel shows the wisdom of Mordecai's counsel, and the efficacy of Esther's pleading. Christ, our High Priest, is, as such, our Advocate with the Father. He ever liveth to make intercession for us. As a figure of our Redeemer, the Intercessor, consider Esther, as possessing two qualifications for successful advocacy — Pul. Com.

"Do not despise your situation; in it you must act, suffer and conquer. From every point on earth we are equally near to heaven, and to the Infinite." — Amiel's Journal.

Light on the mountain-tops. —

In Alpine valleys, they who watch for dawn
Look never to the east; but fix their eyes
On loftier mountain-peaks of snow, which rise
To west or south. Before the happy morn
Has sent one ray of kindling red, to warn
The sleeping clouds along the eastern skies
That it is near — flushing, in glad surprise,
These royal hills, for royal watchmen born,
Discover that God's great new day begins,
And, shedding from their sacred brows a light
Prophetic, wake the valley from its night.
Such mystic light as this a great soul wins,
Who overlooks earth's walls of griefs and sins,
And steadfast, always, gazing on the white
Great throne of God, can call aloud with deep, Pure voice of truth, to waken those who sleep.

— Helen Hunt Jackson.

"Every human feeling is greater and larger than the exciting cause — a proof, I think, that man is designed for a higher state of existence." — Coleridge.

Esther reports to Mordecai her relations with the king

10—12. (10) Again, etc., she had grown accustomed to seek his advice, and follow his instructions.[a] (11) come . . called, she knew no request for a private interview would ever reach the king, and to go without being called was perilous. but . . days, she could not tell when the king would summon, so she must risk being put to death.

Duty's price. — To whatever difficult duty we are called, we may lay our account with trials. If thou desirest to serve the Lord, look for temptation. But remember, that "the man is blessed who endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive of the Lord the crown of life which he hath promised to them that love Him." Those who have held on in the path of duty, under sore temptation, shall at last "stand before the throne of God with white robes, and palms in their hands." "But the fearful and unbelieving shall have their portion in the lake of fire burning with brimstone, which is the second death." — Lawson.

[a] Est. ii. 20.

Whoever fears God, fears to sit at ease. — Mrs. Browning.

Consolation respecting Providence. — Whatever way I turned nothing appeared but danger and difficulty. I saw myself in the midst of a vast wilderness, in the depth of the rainy season, naked and alone, surrounded by savage animals, and men still more savage. I was five hundred miles from the nearest European settlement. At this moment, painful as my reflections were, the extraordinary beauty of a small moss irresistibly caught my eye. I mention it to show from what trifling circumstances the mind will sometimes derive consolation; for though the whole plant was not larger than the top of one of my fingers, I could not contemplate the delicate conformation of its roots and leaves without admiration. Can that Being, thought I, who planted, watered, and brought to perfection in this obscure part of the world a thing which appears of so small importance, look with unconcern upon the situation and May we be content to stand where the dear Lord has put us, and fulfil the office that He needs some one to fulfil.

sufferings of creatures formed after His own image? Surely not! I started up, and, disregarding both hunger and fatigue, traveled forward, assured that relief was at hand; and I was not disappointed. — Mungo Park.

B. C. cir. 473.

13. 14. (13) Think . . Jews, literally, "imagine not in thy mind." She must share the fate of her people. (14) enlargement, lit. respiration, R. V., "relief." and . . place, without naming the name of God, he is confident that the great Power which has so long watched over the Israelitish nation, will rescue them from the snares of the destroyer. who . . time, "a very timely and suggestive intimation that Providence had, perhaps, raised Esther to the throne for this very juncture — to effect through her the salvation of her beloved nation." — Haley.

Esther is reminded of her duty

God's purpose and man's opportunity. — I purpose, in humble dependence on Divine help, to draw from the text the following general truths: that running through the Providence of this world there is a gracious Divine purpose for its ultimate salvation; that rich and rare opportunities occur in the progress of things, by which believing men are allowed to come effectually "to the help of the Lord against the mighty;" that the neglect of such providential calls has a tendency to bring destruction; that obedience brings elevation and blessing. Let us then consider — I. The Divine purpose. II. Human opportunity. III. The law of destruction. IV. The law of life. — Raleigh.

"No man's body is as strong as his appetites, but heaven has corrected the boundlessness of his voluptuous desires by stinting his strength and contracting his capacities." — Tillotson.

A noble answer. — That noble Terentius (general to Valens, the emperor), being bidden to ask what he would, asked nothing but that the church might be freed from Arians; and when the emperor, upon a defeat by the Goths, upbraided him with cowardice and sloth as the causes of the overthrow, he boldly replied: "Yourself have lost the day, by your warring against God, and persecuting his people." — Hom. Com.

To God, thy country and thy friend be true. — Vaughan. It is thy duty oftentimes to do what thou would'st not; thy duty, too, to leave undone what thou would'st do. — The Imitation of Christ.

Failure is no sin; faithlessness is.

15—17. (15) answer, an answer that, manifesting Esther's piety, must have greatly comforted him. (16) gather . . fast, etc., by fasting and prayer she thought to arm herself with the protection of God. if . . perish, the habit of obedience could not have been strong enough to carry her through the terrible ordeal if Mordecai's hard requirement had not been seconded by the voice of her own conscience. — Exp. B. (17) So . . way, his own influential position and the queen's command were sufficient to induce the Jews to observe the fast.

Esther is commanded to do her duty, and commands a fast

The valorous queen (vs. 16). — I. The momentous considerations which led her to make this resolution. 1. Personal considerations; 2. National considerations; 3. Religious considerations. II. The almost insuperable obstacles in the way of her enterprise. 1. The king's indifference to her; 2. The established law; 3. The power of Haman. III. The indomitable courage displayed both in the making of this resolution, and in the prosecution of this enterprise. . . . Her eye is fixed on the goal; she will either reach it or perish in the attempt.

"I was acquainted once with a gallant soldier who assured me that his only measure of courage was this: upon the first fire, in an engagement, he immediately looked upon himself as a dead man. He then fought out the remainder of the day perfectly regardless of all manner of danger, as becomes a dead man to be. So that all the life or limbs he carried back again to his tent he reckoned as clear gains, or, as he himself expressed it, so much out of the fire." — Sterne.

Providence the guardian of our weakness. — That image in Lowell's poem of "The changeling" fascinates me. It is so much what I am and ever wish to be.

"I feel as weak as a violet Alone 'neath the awful sky."

Unable to defend myself and apparently undefended, yet guarded by omnipotent love, I would fain pour out a perfume of praise to the Great Invisible who watches over me, and would feel that under the care of Providence I may claim the sweetness of the poet's next stanza:

"As weak, yet as trustful also;
For the whole year long I see
All the wonders of faithful nature
Still worked for the love of me.
Winds wander and dews drip earthward,
Rains fall, suns rise and set,
Earth whirls, and all but to prosper
A poor little violet." — Spurgeon.

He taught us to yield up the love of life,
For the sake of the life of love.

To be brave is not to be boastful. The most beautiful courage is generally a very quiet grace, saying little, but ready to bear a fearful strain without breaking. — Chas. Cuthbert Hall.

A young hero. — An American paper chronicles a bit of heroism by a Peoria county boy which deserves recognition. A coal shaft is being sunk just north of Hollis, Illinois, and the other day a workman, by the name of

B. C. cir. 473.

We know not of what we are capable till the trial comes; till it comes, perhaps, in a form which makes the strong man quail, and turns the gentler woman into a heroine. — Mrs. Jameson.

Harland, lighted a slow match leading to the blast, and then signaled to be drawn up. The depth of the shaft was seventy feet. When he had been raised fourteen feet he struck the bottom of a board partition, and was thrown back to the bottom. Thomas Crandall, a step-son of Harland, was a witness to the accident, and promptly slid down the rope, seventy feet, and tore the match from the fuse in time to prevent an explosion. The act was a brave one, scarcely to be paralleled. The boy's hands were terribly lacerated by the friction of the rope. The step-father was rescued with a broken rib and other severe bruises. The heroic act of this brave boy can be not only "paralleled," but surpassed. Esther exposed herself to equal risk to save a whole people to whom she was bound by the ties of nationality.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

Esther ventures before the king

a Est. iv. 16.

When the hour of death comes—that comes to high and low alike, then it's na what we ha'e dune for ourselves, but what we ha'e dune for others that we think on maist pleasantly. —Sir Walter Scott.

A man complained to his pastor that he had prayed a whole year for the comforts of religion, but had received no answer. His minister replied, "Go home and pray, 'Father, glorify Thyself.'"

1, 2. (1) Now . . day,[a] i. e. reckoning from the day when Haman's plot, was made known to the queen. her . . apparel, "this marks the change from her garb of fasting, and equally her care that nothing should be neglected that might favor the success of her errand."—Hasley. (2) king . . hand, the usual sign of favor and welcome. touched . . sceptre, in token of her submission.

A bold petitioner. — The Romans had a law that no person should approach the emperor's tent in the night, upon pain of death; but it once happened that a soldier was found in that situation, with a petition in his hand, waiting for an opportunity of presenting it. He was apprehended, and going to be immediately executed; but the emperor having overheard the matter in his pavilion, cried aloud, saying, "If the petition be for himself, let him die; if for another, spare his life." Upon inquiry, it was found that the generous soldier prayed for the lives of his two comrades who had been taken asleep on the watch. The emperor nobly forgave them all. Dr. Livingstone's tonic. — This certainly served the great traveler well in the long contest with obstacles of every kind. His work was consecrated to God, and the consciousness that he was faithfully serving Him gave strength in the midst of weakness, and saved him from despair. One month before his death he wrote: "Nothing earthly will make me give up my work in despair. I encourage myself in the Lord my God, and go forward." It was this spirit that sustained him from the first. He might be prostrated again and again by bodily illness, but nothing could make him an invalid Christian, even for a day. — Hom. Com.

Esther's invitation to a banquet

"I had rather do and not promise, than promise and not do. — Arthur Warwick.

"An acre of performance is worth the whole world of promise." — Howell.

"Discretion of speech is more than eloquence."

"Ah, the key of our life that passes all wards, opens all locks, is not, I will, but I must, I must, I must, and I do it." — A. H. Clough.

3—5. (3) given . . kingdom, an expression denoting great liberality, but not to be understood too literally. (4) let . . prepared, the king understood that this invitation to a banquet was simply preliminary to some petition of greater importance. (5) Cause . . haste, such an invitation as this was very unusual. Ordinarily the king and queen dined separately, each in their own apartments. But for the queen to invite not only the king, but also another male guest, not a relation, was a remarkable innovation, and seemed a high act of favor. — Pul. Com. Esther invited Haman as the king's favorite.

A small request. — For the present Esther simply contented herself with the small request, "If it seems good unto the king, let the king and Haman come this day unto the banquet that I have prepared for him." Our requests should be shaped with a view to the character and ability of the promiser. Esther was wise. She had a woman's sharp wit, and a woman's keen, penetrating power. She saw for the present this was all which she could likely secure from the hand of Ahasuerus. She must wait for the perfecting of the good work already begun in Ahasuerus. God's ability and willingness to give are large. But we too may have to wait. His purpose for us may not be ripe. At first he may give small blessings, the harbinger of yet greater blessings. His best things he gives last. — Hom. Com. Ingratitude to God. — The English proverb says, "The river past and God forgotten," to express with how mournful a frequency, He whose assistance was invoked — it may have been earnestly in the moment of peril — is remembered no more so soon as by His help the danger has been surmounted. And the Italian form of it sounds a still sadder depth of ingratitude: "The peril passed, the saint mocked," the vows made to him in peril remaining unperformed in safety, and he treated somewhat as in Greek story Juno was treated by Mandrabulus, the Samian, who, under her auspices and through her direction, discovered a gold mine, in his instant gratitude vowed to her a golden ram, which he presently exchanged in intention for a silver one, and again this for a very small brass one, and this for nothing at all. — Trench.

B. C. cir. 473.

6–8. (6) king . . wine, reminding her of his promise seeks to discover the real cause of such a unique banquet. (7) My . . request, the thought of the immense issues that were depending on her words may well have caused hesitancy and confusion. She saw that her best hope was in delay.— Lowell Heb. Club. (8) king . . them, though kings ate alone, his guests were allowed to take wine with him afterwards.

at the banquet Esther proposes another banquet

Value of prayer. — He that would be little in temptation, let him be much in prayer. Praying only for carnal things shows a carnal heart, and leaves it carnal. Prayer is a key in the hand of faith to unlock God's treasures. A family without prayer is like a house without a roof — exposed to every wind that blows, and every storm that rages. Prayer will compel a man to leave off sinning, or sinning will make him leave off praying. The greatest and hardest preparation for heaven is within; but the spirit of prayer can effect this. Do you profess to love any one for whom you have never prayed? Rhetoric cannot pray, with all his words; but Faith can pray, even when she has no words. In prayer it is better to have a heart without words than words without a heart. Pray, not only in the name of Christ, but in the faith of Christ. The gift of prayer may have praise from men, but the grace of prayer has power with God. — American Churchman's Almanac.

Let prayer be the key of the morning, and the bolt of the evening. Prayer is not conquering God's reluctance, but taking hold of God's willingness — Phillips Brooks.

More things are wrought by prayer
Than the world dreams of. Wherefore let thy voice Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats,
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If knowing God, they lift no hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friends!
For so the whole round earth is every way Bound by gold chains about the feet of God. — Tennyson.

"We should act with as much energy as those who expect everything from themselves; and we should pray with as much earnestness as those who expect everything from God."—Fuller.

9–11. (9) Then . . heart, forth fr. the king's presence puffed up by vanity. but . . Mordecai,[a] Mordecai had declined to prostrate himself before Haman on religious grounds. Now he would not acknowledge his presence. There is nothing more galling than such utter contempt shown openly in the presence of others. (10) refrained,[b] he could afford to do so since the day of his revenge was at hand. Zeresh, he sent for her, that he might consult about his future course. (11) multitude of his children, lit. "of his sons," of these he had ten. "To be the father of many sons was accounted highly honorable by the Persians."

Haman relates his greatness to friends

a Est. iii. 5.

b 2 Sa. xiii. 22.

True nature of pride. — Pride has marred the work of God, given birth to infidelity, apostasy, impiety, blasphemy, and persecution; it is the mother of heresy, and has fomented strife and contention, and wrath, and swellings, and tumults, within the sacred enclosures of the house of God. O beware of giving place to this monster! The man that harbors pride in his heart, harbors a murderer, a fratricide, a parricide, a suicide, a deicide; — for it crucified the Lord of glory, and still crucifies Him afresh in His doctrine and in His members." — McCrie.

"Peace does not dwell in outward things, but within the soul." — Fenelon.

Life. —

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.
Life's but a means unto an end, that end
Beginning, mean, and end of all things, God. — Bailey.

"'Tis thus that pride triumphant rears her head, — a little while, and all her power is fled."— Goldsmith.

12–14. (12) moreover, etc.,[c] reserving this crowning honor as a final surprise. come . . myself, in this respect treated with equal honor to the king. (13) Yet, no satisfaction in all his honors. A single ingredient of bitterness has poisoned the whole. The misery of the situation consumes him. (14) gallows,[d] Heb. tree.[e] fifty . . high, or ab. 75 ft. the structure probably consisted of a stake fixed in a movable base, and this set upon some roof or other elevation would meet all the demands of the text. speak thou unto the

the advice of Haman's wife

c Est. ix. 7.

d Est. .....

e The Vulg. has crux; in Josephus

B. C. cir. 473.

(Ant. ix. 6, 10), and in the LXX. it is xúlon, the word used for cross: Ac. v. 30; x. 39; xiii. 29; 1 Pet. ii. 24.

a Est. vii. 10.

Just because there's fallen
A snow-flake on his forehead,
He must go and fancy
'Tis winter all the year.—T. B. Aldrich.

the king's sleepless night

b The Heb. verb descr. the fluttering undulatory movements of a bird's wings. Is. x. 14; Pr. xxvii. 8; Je. iv. 25.

c Est. ii. 23.

Truly there is a "could not" in the history of all human power.—Peop. Bib.

"When one asked Alexander how he could sleep so soundly and securely in the midst of danger, he told them that Parmenio watched; he might well sleep when Parmenio watched. Oh, how securely may they sleep over whom He watches that never slumbers nor sleeps! 'I will,' said David, 'lay me down and sleep, for Thou Lord makest me to dwell in safety."—Venning.

God's finger touched him and he slept.—Tennyson.

the king seeks the advice of Haman.

d Est. v. 14.

"Pride discovers itself in dwelling upon the thoughts of our gifts, with a secret kind of king, the execution of one Jew would be readily granted by the king to please his chief minister. Then he could enjoy to the full Esther's banquet. he . . made,[a] in anticipation of the king's approval.

Haman's thorn.— Is there not a gnawing worm in the heart of every joy? Is there not a Mordecai in the way of every ambitious man? We cannot have all things exactly our own way; there is one nail we cannot extract, one lock we cannot undo, one gate we cannot open, one claim we cannot pacify. In every path there would seem to be a deep, gaping grave which even mountains cannot fill up; we throw great hills into that grave, and behold the hills sink into the abyss, and the grave remains wide open still. How near are some men to perfect bliss! If but one thorn could be extracted, then the men themselves would be safe in heaven; but that one thorn abides to remind them of their limitations, and to sting them with a useful sense of disappointment.—Peop. Bib

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1—3. (1) On . . sleep, lit. the king's sleep fled away;[b] an unusual thing. he . . chronicles,[c] to pass the time, to lull him to sleep. "Historiographers were attached to the Persian court, and attended the monarch wherever he went."—Haley. they . . king, a providential selection. (2) written, etc., ch. ii. 21. It is evident that the substance of the information he gave was recorded. (3) What . . this? the king felt that some fit acknowledgment of such an act of fidelity was due to his own interests.

Providence of God in withholding sleep,—The late Sir Evan Nepean, when under-secretary of state, related to a friend of his that one night he had the most unaccountable wakefulness that could be imagined. He was in perfect health, had dined early and moderately, had no care—nothing to brood over—and was perfectly self-possessed. Still he could not sleep, and from eleven till two in the morning had never closed an eye. It was summer, and twilight had far advanced; and to dissipate the ennui of his wakefulness, he resolved to rise and breathe the morning air in the park. There he saw nothing but sleepy sentinels, whom he rather envied. He passed the Home Office several times, and at last, without any particular object, resolved to let himself in with his pass key. The book of entries of the day before lay open on the table, and in sheer listlessness he began to read. The first thing appalled him! "A reprieve to be sent to York for the coiners ordered for execution the next day." It struck him that he had no return to his order to send the reprieve, and he searched the minutes, but could not find it, In alarm, he went to the house of the chief clerk, who lived in Downing street, knocking him up (it was then long past three), and asked him if he knew anything of the reprieve being sent. In greater alarm, the chief clerk could not remember. "You are scarcely awake," said Sir Evan; "collect yourself; it must have been sent." The chief clerk said he did now recollect he had sent it to the clerk of the crown, whose business it was to forward it. "Good!" said Sir Evan; "but have you his receipt and certificate that it is gone?" "No!" "Then come with me to his house. We must find him, though it is so early!" It was now four, and the clerk of the crown lived in Chancery Lane. There was no hackney coach, and they almost ran. The clerk of the crown had a country house, and meaning to have a long holiday, he was at that moment stepping into his gig, to go to his villa. Astonished at the visit of the under-secretary at such an hour, he was still more so at his business. With an exclamation of horror, cried the clerk of the crown, "The reprieve is locked up in my desk!" It was brought. Sir Evan sent to the post-office for the trustiest and fleetest express, and the reprieve reached York at the moment the unhappy people were ascending the cart. Surely this was the finger of God.—Leisure Hour.

4—6. (4) Who . . court, "probably some high officer of state was required to be always in attendance upon the monarch, to take his orders at any moment."—Pulp. Com. Haman, etc., anxious to prefer his request.[d] (5) Haman . . court, etc., who so fit to decide on the mode of honoring a man as one who had been himself greatly honored? (6) Haman . . heart, etc., the king's question was in accord with his vanity. The king's manner, too, may have led him to suppose that he was meant.

Who is in the court?—The morning light may have begun to fill his chamber when the king nervously addressed this question to his attendants.

He had spent a sleepless night; and might it not be because another conspiracy was being matured against him? Might it not be something of this kind which was troubling the queen? Did he not deserve that it should be concealed from him, since he had done nothing to reward his former preserver? There might be cause for haste — at least he was impatient of delay; and who was this, at early morn, pacing the outer court of the king's palace, as though also in haste about some great work? Haman. His night's rest had not pacified his thirst for revenge. There was to be the queen's banquet in an after part of the day; and if he was to go in merrily to it he must first have obtained authority for the execution, and had Mordecai hanged on the gallows prepared for him. How fortunate! thought Haman; the king is early astir, and calleth for me. How fortunate! thought the king; my favorite courtier and counselor is early in the way this morning, and is the best man to whom I can submit this business. Behind the back of each of them there was the providence of God, secretly working out His own purposes of mercy and judgment. "And the king said, Let Haman come in."— McEwan.

B. C. cir. 473.

content to see our own face, till at last we fall in love with it. A proud heart is full of himself; his own abilities cast their shadow before him; they are in his eye wherever he goes; the great subject and theme of his thoughts is what he is, and what he hath above all others. Run from such thoughts as from a bear."—A Divine of the Seventeenth Century.

7—9. (7) Haman answered, promptly, joyously. (8) Let . . wear, the spur of personal ambition quickened his ingenuity. horse . . upon, of a special breed called Niseœn. (9) hand . . princes, thinking of himself, he would be served like a king.

Haman gives his advice

The fearful blow to conceit.— We can easily suppose that the command now given by the king to Haman was more galling than the rope placed around his neck when he was hung on the gallows. How galling to have the honors I had intended for myself given to another, and that other the man I most hate, the man whose destruction I have most earnestly plotted! The king told Haman to make haste. What a hard command! To make haste is a hard task when I have to carry on my journey a broken heart, a disappointed nature, blasted hopes, blighted prospects; to make haste when in myself I must carry the hideous ruins of that fair castle which I have just been building with so much skill and labor. Make haste to honor the man I have most hated! Love your enemies is the gospel precept. Where is the Christian that makes haste to heap honors on his enemy? Have pity then on wretched Haman if his heart-strings crack and break as he strives to do the king's bidding. Oh! to be emptied of self-seeking, to lie low at the foot of the cross! it will save us from many a hard knock. Stoop low if thou wouldst not be hurt. Think not too much of thyself. — Hom. Com.

"Do you never look at yourself when you abuse another?"— Clautus.

"Pride, in boasting of family antiquity, makes duration stand for merit."— Zimmerman.

10, 11. (10) Make haste,[a] a good example of what Shakespeare styles: "hoist with his own petar." do . . gate, no time to say a word about the gallows. let nothing fail, no one so well able to observe every particular of honor as the originator thereof. (11) Then . . Mordecai, with what an ill grace he must have played his part! and . . city, Haman walking like a servant at the bridle-rein. Thus . . honour, using words that he himself had recommended. How little did the king know what torture he was inflicting!

the discomfiture of Haman

Royal presents to an official.— The presentation as a gift from a royal personage of that which had been worn on his own person was a special mark of favor and condescension. Morier, in his narrative of A Second Journey through Persia, thus illustrates this custom: — "When a treaty between Russia and Persia was concluded, some years since, in the commencement, according to the usual form, the ranks of the two principal persons who were deputed to arrange it had to be specified. The Russian general was found to have more titles than the Persian plenipotentiary, who was therefore at a loss how to make himself appear of equal importance with the other negotiator; but at length, recollecting that, previous to his departure for the place of conference, his sovereign had honored him by a present of one of his own swords, and of a dagger set with precious stones, to wear which is a peculiar distinction in Persia, and besides had clothed him with one of his own shawl robes, a distinction of still greater value, he therefore designated himself as 'endowed with the special gifts of the monarch, lord of the dagger set in jewels, of the sword adorned with gems, and of the shawl coat already-worn.'"

[a] "The king knew the Jewish origin of his benefactor Mordecai, and was thus better prepared to receive Esther's petition on behalf of herself and her people."— Wordsworth.

"Our life is always deeper than we know, is always more divine than it seems, and hence we are able to survive degredations and despairs which otherwise must engulf us."— H James.

12 — 14. (12) Mordecai . . gate, after this one display of the king's favor Mor. returned to his humble duties. Haman . . covered,[b] when he had escaped the prediction of Haman's friends

[b] 2 Ch. xxvi. 20.

B. C. cir. 473.

It was agony. It was madness. Every syllable left a poisoned arrow rankling in his heart. But he heard and obeyed without a murmur: wonderful illustration of the self-command which a man of such passions could assume, as well as of the abject submission by which he had won the favor of his master.—Hom. Com.

If ought of care this morn oppress thee,
To Him address thee,
Who, like the sun, is good to all.
—Von Caunitz.

from public gaze, he could command himself no longer. He felt he must seek the sympathy of his home and hide himself fr. public gaze. (13) wise men, diviners, those who had cast lots before him. If . . Jew, etc., they prob. thought the decree had excited Mordecai and Esther, and that this humiliation of Haman was the first fruit of their influence. (14) while . . him, etc., customary for the host to send an escort to attend the guests to the place of entertainment.—Pul. Com.

Haman's disgrace.— I. The world's councils are pernicious and unfaithful. II. No worldly advantage will avail one whom God has forsaken. III. The special immunities enjoyed by the Hebrews are transferred to the Christians. IV. God takes particular cognizance of His people in relation to men's dealings with them. V. All the enemies of God and His people are a doomed race.

A sleepless night.— "Because God wouldn't let him," was the answer given by a little boy in one of our Sunday schools of a large city in the west of England to a question asked by the teacher in reference to the Persian monarch not being able to enjoy his accustomed slumbers. It was a simple but sound reply, for God's providence was watching over His ancient people, and when they appeared to be in imminent danger of falling by the hand of the sword He again proved faithful to His promises, and made transpiring events and circumstances to be subservient to His purpose. "On that night the king could not sleep," because—

"There's a Divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will.—Bibl. Treas.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

Esther's second banquet

1—4. (1) to banquet, lit. to drink. In Persian feasts the solid dishes were few, and time was mainly passed in drinking and eating dessert.—Herod. i. 133. (2) said . . day,[a] all is propitious, the fickle king is as gracious as yesterday. (3) my life . . request, a large request in the face of an unalterable decree. (4) sold, for 10,000 talents by the king to Haman. countervail, R. V., "have compensated for," i. e. the man so selling us could not compensate the king for the loss his exchequer would suffer.

[a] Est. v. 6.

A prayer which in many respects is a sublime type of the soul's prayer to God.—Within the four corners of Esther's prayer there are some amazing analogies with the prayer of man to God, of the sinner trembling between fear and hope to the Saviour, of the helpless creature stricken with the sense of unparalleled need to the Possessor and Spirit of life. Esther's prayer is indeed horror to our ears to hear, and grates on every highest sensibility of our nature, when (though no fault to her) we think of it as addressed to a fellow-creature. But we may now put this out of sight. The postulates of prayer are here—1. In the praying disposition of the suppliant. Here are the deep feeling, the just estimate of the critical character of the occasion, the overwhelming sense of the prize of life. There are also to be noticed the natural selection of simplest language, the choice of briefest arguments, and all these held in hand with a self-command almost inconceivable—another touch of a true analogy. All these are the things which characterize heavenward prayer where intense spiritual importunity exists. 2. In the absolute ownership, the omnipotent power, the sovereign sceptre of the being addressed. These do belong to Him whom man addresses in prayer when he prays heavenward. And when these two postulates of prayer meet, rare indeed are the exceptions to that result which is one blessed word we call mercy.—Pulp. Com.

"Prayer is like opening a sluice between the great ocean and our little channels, when the great sea gathers itself together and flows in at full tide."—Tennyson.

Mental prayer, when our spirits wander, is like a watch standing still, because the spring is down; wind it up again, and it goes on regularly. But in vocal prayer, if the words run on and the spirit wanders, the clock strikes false, the hand points not the right hour, because something is in disorder, and the striking is nothing but noise.—Jeremy Taylor.

Kindness to God's people.—A lady was making great preparations for the coming of several young guests to her house. Their home was far distant, and she had never seen them. But she spared no pains to provide for them a welcome. "Why do you take so much trouble for persons whom you never saw?" said an intimate associate to the lady. "I do it," was the reply, "though I never saw them, for their mother's sake; she was the playmate of my childhood, the loved and trusted companion of my riper years, and now, in our maturity, though widely separated in body, we are closer than ever in heart. For her sake, if for no other, the coming guests are welcome to the best I have."—S. S. World.

5, 6. (5) durst . . so, the king is greatly aroused at Esther's petition. (6) Haman . . queen, "Esther adds a second term of reproach — 'enemy' — stronger than the one which she had used before to stir up the king to anger." Pul Com.

Unburdened desire. — The queen knew that the time had come for her to speak. She could no longer delay without injuring her cause. If it is well to know when to be silent: it is also well to know when to speak. It is folly to expose a great matter to a heart that may be cold or hostile. Esther's matter was exceedingly great, and she could not subject it to any needless risk by a premature disclosure. But now the king was so favorable to herself, and so interested in her secret, as to make it plain that she must tell all. So she laid before the king the weighty burden she had been silently carrying. What a relief to open a secret sorrow to those who can feel for us and give us an effective solace! We can at all times speak to God. Whatever barriers of fear and distrust stand between us and him are of our own making. The Redeemer of men is ready to share our every burden and to exceed our largest desires. — Pul. Com. Haman. — Lord Arthur Hervey, in his article on the Book of Esther, in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, remarks: "This book is read through by the Jews in their synagogues at the feast of Purim, when it was, and is still in some synagogues, the custom at the mention of Haman's name to hiss and stamp, and clench the fist and cry, 'let his name be blotted out; may the name of the wicked rot.' It is said also that the names of Haman's ten sons are read in one breath, to signify, that they all expired at the same instant of time. Even in writing the names of Haman's sons in the 7th, 8th, and 9th verses of Esth. ix, the Jewish scribes have contrived to express their abhorrence of the race of Haman; for these ten names are written in three perpendicular columns of 3, 3, 4, as if they were hanging upon three parallel cords three upon each cord, one above another, to represent the hanging of Haman's sons." — Stehelin.

7—10. (7) king . . garden, to consider what he should do. Haman . . queen, he who had doomed the queen herself. saw . . king, evil that Esther might avert. (8) Haman . . was, in his agony of fear he had fallen on her divan,[a] or couch. Will . . house? he thinks this man capable of any evil. they . . face,[b] they saw that his death was determined upon; and covered his face as one who might not see the king's face again. (9) Harbonah,[c] Haman had made himself enemies; here is one who is ready to help on the fall of the great man. Behold . . Mordecai,[d] the king, not having ordered the death of Mordecai, would see how Haman was taking the law into his own hands. who . . king, ref. to the detection and announcement of the conspiracy against the king. Hang . . thereon, the Persians saw in this another illustration of the fickleness of fortune; the Jews saw a gracious answer to prayer. (10) Then . . appeased,[e] when, so far, justice had been done.

Case of retribution. — Tamerlane the Great, having made war on Bajazet, Emperor of the Turks, overthrew him in battle, and took him prisoner. The victor gave the captive monarch at first a very civil reception; and, entering into familiar conversation with him; said, "Now, king, tell me freely and truly what thou wouldst have done with me had I fallen into thy power?" Bajazet, who was of a fierce and haughty spirit, is said to have thus replied: "Had the gods given unto me the victory, I would have enclosed thee in an iron cage, and carried thee about with me as a spectacle of derision to the world." Tamerlane, wrathfully replied, "Then, proud man, as thou wouldst have done to me, even so I shall do unto thee." A strong iron cage was made, into which the fallen emperor was thrust; and thus exposed like a wild beast, he was carried along in the train of his conqueror. Nearly three years were passed by the once mighty Bajazet in this cruel state of durance; and at last, being told that he must be carried into Tartary, despairing of then obtaining his freedom, he struck his head with such violence against the bars of his cage, as to put an end to his wretched life. — Cheever.

B. C. cir. 473.

Esther charges Haman

When Severus, emperor of Rome, found his end approaching, he cried out, "I have been everything; and everything is nothing." Then ordering the urn to be brought to him in which his ashes were to be enclosed on his body being burned, he said, "Little urn, thou shalt contain one for whom the world was too little."

The moving Finger writes, and having writ, Moves on; nor all your piety nor wit
Can lure it back to cancel half a line
Nor all your tears wipe out a word of it.
— Omar Khayyam

the death of Haman

a Est. i. 6.
b Job ix. 24.
c Est. i. 10.
d Est. v. 14; Ps. vii. 16; Pr. xi. 5, 6.
e Ps. xxxvii 35, 36; Da. vi. 24.

The king's retirement is like passing solemn judgment. The custom has descended to our times, and the Shah of Persia, or, if not he, certainly some of his immediate predecessors, have condemned men to death in this way. — Raleigh.

If thou canst not hide thyself from the sun, which is God's minister of light, how impossible will it be to hide thyself from him, whose eyes are ten thousand times brighter than the sun!

B. C. cir. 473.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

Mordecai exalted

1, 2. (1) Mordecai . . king,[a] etc., honored as the saviour of his life before, and now as the relative of his queen he becomes one of the king's privy councillors. (2) ring,[b] his signet ring, badge of office. With this seal Mordecai can now save his nation fr. destruction. Esther . . Haman, so he was rewarded for his care of the poor orphan.

The lowly exalted. — In the east, where monarchs are absolute, and where king's favorites are ministers of state, changes of fortune are familiar and proverbial. When one of our statesmen quits office he usually does so in an honorable way, and loses little of consideration by the change. But a vizier when deposed is disgraced, his property is often forfeited, and he himself is often put to a violent death. So was it with Haman. When the king's wrath turned against him he was slain, and his palace and establishment given to the queen, and his office and authority to Mordecai. — Hom. Com. Signet rings. — On the little finger of the right hand is worn a seal-ring, which is generally of silver, with a cornelian, or other stone, upon which is engraved the wearer's name; the name is accompanied by the words, "His servant" (signifying, the servant, or worshipper of God), and often by other words expressive of the person's trust in God, etc. The seal-ring is used for signing letters and other writings, and its impression is considered more valid than the sign-manual. (Therefore, giving the ring to another person is the utmost sign of confidence.) A little ink is dabbed upon it with one of the fingers, and it is pressed upon the paper; the person who uses it having first touched his tongue with another finger and moistened the place in the paper which is to be stamped. Almost every person who can afford it has a seal-ring, even though he be a servant. — Lane.

[a] Est. ii. 7.

[b] Est. iii. 10.

"The giving riches and honors to a wicked man, is like giving strong wine to him that hath a fever." — Plutarch.

Real merit of any kind will be discovered, and nothing depreciate it but a man's exhibiting it himself. — Chesterfield.

Esther prays for the life of her people

3–6. spake . . king, etc., lit. "Esther continued and spoke before the king, and fell at his feet and wept, and besought him," etc. The five verbs express the queen's intense earnestness on behalf of her own people. (4) king . . Esther,[c] a sign that she and her request were accepted. (5) If, etc., note her various pleas. reverse, lit. "bring back." (6) For . . see,[d] etc., she pleads for mercy on the ground of her love for her people; her strength as a suppliant lies in the king's love for her.

A queen interceding for her people. — When Edward III. took Calais, he consented to spare the place on condition that six of the principal citizens should surrender themselves for execution; and would have forgot his humanity but for his queen, who threw herself at his feet, implored him, and obtained the lives of the noble victims who had offered themselves to save the lives of their fellow-citizens, their friends, their relatives, their wives, their children.

[c] Est. iv. 11; v. 2.

[d] Est. vii. 4; Ne ii. 3.

O God, I pray for our country; that our laws may be just, protecting the good and punishing wrong-doers. Bless all our people with happiness and peace. Teach all men everywhere to worship Thee, and to live in Thy fear. —G. W. Hinsdale.

Dignity of labor. —

What are we set on earth for? Say to toil!
Nor seek to leave thy tending of the vines
For all the heat o' the day, till it declines,
And Death's wild curfew shall from work assoil.
God did anoint thee with His odorous oil
To wrestle, not to reign; and He assigns
All thy tears over like pure crystallines,
For younger fellow-workers of the soil
To wear for amulets. So others shall Take patience, labor, to their heart and hand,
From thy heart and thy hand and thy brave cheer;
And God's grace fructify to thee through all.
The least flower with a brimming cup may stand
And share its dewdrop with another near. — E. B. Browning

Are you in earnest? seize this very minute
What you can do or think you can — begin it.
—Goethe.

the king orders letters to be written

7, 8. (7) him . . Jews,[e] hence the great difficulty was removed, and the king's will made apparent. (8) for . . reverse,[f] the Persian kings claimed to be divine; they could never revoke an order once given. "To maintain the quasi-divine character it was necessary that the king should seem infallible, immutable and wholly free from the weakness of repentance." — Rawlinson. Hence an antidote must be provided.

[e] Pr. xiii. 32.

[f] Est. i. 19; Da. vi. 8.

The stability of God's Word. — I. The Bible addresses itself to men in the name of the Sovereign of all worlds, and claims to be written in the King's name. II. The Bible appears to us bearing certain attestations of its veracity and genuineness, sealed with the King's ring. III. In all ages there have been those who would have been glad to reverse its sacred teachings; but though for a time its foes may seem to have succeeded, the King's writing outlives all their attempts. IV. It is not enough to give it the consent of our minds; it demands the subjection of our lives. V. It will be found to have been a dreadful crime, fatal in its consequences, to deny, despise, or neglect this gracious, sacred, life-giving Word.

Ask and receive. — Sir Walter Raleigh one day asking a favor from Queen Elizabeth, the latter said to him, "Raleigh, when will you leave off begging?" To which he answered, "When your Majesty leaves off giving." Ask great things of God; expect great things from God; let his past goodness make us "instant in prayer." Esther kept on begging till she had secured a position of security for her countrymen. So great was her earnestness that she besought even in tears. Not for herself, but for her country she now prayed to the king. She was an earnest and powerful intercessor. Not so powerful, however, as the great Intercessor; he is a more powerful Pleader, and he approaches a more powerful and more liberal King, even the King of heaven. — Hom. Com

B. C. cir. 473.

As rowers in a boat turn their backs to the shore, and trust to the man at the helm, whose eye is fixed upon it; so should we all to God, who guides the helm."—Bowes

"To be trusted is a greater compliment than to be loved." — MacDonald.

"What is honor? 'Tis the finest sense of justice the human mind can frame." — Wordsworth.

9—11. (9) scribes,[a] secretaries. A position of great importance. lieutenants, satraps. deputies, viceroys, governors. (10) posts, messengers, couriers. mules, or prob. fleet horses. young dromedaries, rather thoroughbred horses; or mules, the sons of mares, a superior breed, famous for speed. (11) Wherein . . life, the Jews have sometimes been spoken of as the aggressors on the actual 13th of Adar, but there is no evidence to support this view. The edict clearly only allowed them to stand on the defensive. — Pul. Com.

by royal letters the Jews are permitted to stand for their defense

[a] Est. iii. 12.

Unchanging laws. — It is said that something like the principle of the unchangeableness of the purposes of the kings of Persia has been preserved in that country even till recent times. And a circumstance may be here alluded to in illustration of this, which although somewhat strange and almost ludicrous, yet does bear some resemblance to the difficulty in which Artaxerxes felt himself placed between the unalterable law, and the willingness which he displayed at the same time to get quit of the obligation to observe it literally. A Persian king, who reigned not very many years ago (Aga Mahmed Khan), having set out upon a military expedition, and encamped in a place convenient for his purpose, gave forth his edict that the encampment should not be removed until the snow had disappeared from the neighboring mountains. The season was severe. The snow clung to the mountains longer than usual, and in the meantime the army became straitened for supplies. Here was an unexpected difficulty. The king's appointment must stand, but the result was likely to be ruinous. To avert the difficulty, then, a vast multitude of laborers were despatched to clear away as far as they could the snow that was visible from the camp; and with their aid, and the help of a few days of sunshine, the snow disappeared, and then immediately the army was put in motion. — Davidson.

"Trust in the Lord, and keep your powder dry." — Cromwell.

"The curious, questioning eye, that plucks the heart of every mystery." — Mellen.

Through doubt, through faith, through bliss, through stark dismay;
Through sunshine, wind, or snow, or fog, or shower,
Draw me to Thee, who art my only day. — Geo. MacDonald.

12—14. (12) Upon one day, the day when the first decree would take effect.[b] The slaughter was to continue but one day, any attempt upon their lives after that would be unlawful. (13) that . . enemies, hence the expedition used that the Jews might have time to prepare. (14) mules and camels, R. V., "swift steeds . . . in the king's service." decree . . palace, that its authority might be unquestioned.

the letters are despatched with all haste

[b] Est. iii. 13.

God a refuge. — During the Irish rebellion of 1798, the "Welsh Horse" were the most dreaded by the inhabitants of the island of any in the whole force of British invaders. One day, a company of these troops, riding through the town of Shorey, suddenly surrounded a church where a congregation had assembled. One frightened cry, "The Welsh Horse!" "The Welsh Horse!" ran from lip to lip, and started every one to his feet; but there was no possibility of escape. The captain dismounted, and marched into the midst of the unarmed assembly. As he strode up the aisle, an old man, one of the few who retained proper presence of mind, called on the minister to pray. The minister, Mr. Thomas Campbell, standing in his pulpit, repeated in a strong clear voice the forty-sixth Psalm: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present

His pine trees whisper "Trust and wait!"
His flowers are prophesying,
That all we dread of change or fall,
His love is underlying.—Whittier.

B. C. cir. 473.

help in trouble. Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed. . . . The Lord of Hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah." Struck with a strong awe, the trooper captain stopped in the aisle. He stood still and listened to the end. Then, to the astonishment of all, he bowed, and turning abruptly about, walked out of the door. The next instant, the whole company were galloping away as rapidly as they had come." — S. S. World.

the joy of the Jews

a Est. iii. 15; Pr. xxix. 2.

b Ps xcvii. 11.

c Ps. xviii. 43.

d Gen. xxxv. 5; Ex. xv. 16.

"There are joys which long to be ours. God sends ten thousand truths which come about us like birds seeking inlet; but we are shut up to them, so they sit awhile upon the roof and then fly away." — Beecher.

Joy is the vital air of the soul.
And not by eastern windows only,
When daylight comes, comes in the light;
In front the sun climbs slow, how slowly!
But westward look — the land is bright.
— A. H. Clough.

15—17. (15) apparel, inner robe. garment, mantle. The Persian monarch himself wore a purple robe and an inner vest of purple striped with white. The one given to Mordecai seems to have been blue with white stripes. These were the colors of the royal diadem. — Pul. Com. city . . glad,[a] a hint of the popular respect for Mordecai. (16) Jews,[b] etc., content to be permitted to defend their lives. (17) many Jews,[c] it was seen that the strength of royal authority and power were to be with the Jews on the day of conflict. for . . them,[d] they saw their numbers, their preparations, their holy confidence: and Esther and Mordecai high in royal favor.

God's opportunity. — After a dark and stormy night, when the clouds have hidden every star, and the fierce winds have been howling over hill and dale, what gladness fills all animated nature as the sun arises in the East. He floods the valleys with his cheerful light, and kindles a blaze of glory upon the mountain-tops. Then the thief and assassin, with every unclean and loathsome creature, seek their hiding-place; then the honest artisan goes forth to his task until the evening; and then sweet concerts are heard in every grove. So after the days of national gloom came the morning of gladness to the Jews. Man's extremity once again proved to be God's opportunity. — Hom. Com.

Good tidings. —

Beginnings of the Golden Times we tell!
Now is the new law opened! Mary's Son Hath opened it, and full years are run,
Peace shall be, and good-will, and mercy shed
Over all flesh and spirit, quick and dead!
The consummation comes, the purposed bliss;
Earth was for now; her glad days spring from this.
— Edwin Arnold.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

the Jews prepare for their defense

e Est. viii. 12.

f Est. viii. 11; Ps. lxxi. 13, 24.

1, 2. (1) in the twelfth month,[e] "in the first month the decree went forth for the destruction of all the Jews; in the third month, the decree permitting the Jews to stand in self-defense was sent forth; in the twelfth month, came the dreadful work of slaughter."— Haley. power, R.V., "rule." (2) Jews . . together, etc.,[f] acting on the defensive, they were everywhere victorious.

Are you ready? — The Rev. Dr. Kidd was a Scotch minister of some prominence, and very eccentric, and one who had his own way of doing things. One of his parishioners says: "I was busy in my shop, when in the midst of my work in stepped the doctor. 'Did you expect me?' was his abrupt inquiry, without even waiting for a salutation. 'No,' was my reply. 'What if it had been death?' asked he, when at once he stepped out as abruptly as he came, and was gone almost before I knew it." What a question! What a thought for every one of us! Does not death come to most, if not all, as unexpectedly as this? And does not the inquiry impress the lesson from our Saviour's lips, "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."— S. S. World.

God gives us power to bear all the sorrows of His making; but he does not give us power to bear the sorrows of our own making, which the anticipation of sorrow most assuredly is.

Anxiety.— Foresight and foreboding are two very different things. It is not that the one is the exaggeration of the other, but the one is opposed to the other. The more a man looks forward in the exercise of foresight, the less he does so in the exercise of foreboding; and the more he is tortured by anxious thoughts about a possible future, the less clear vision has he of a likely future, and the less power to influence it. — Hom. Com.

the Jews smite their enemies

g 2 Sa. iii. 1.

3—5. (3) rulers, etc., ch. viii. 9. helped . . them, not physical help, prob. but moral aid and support. (4) for . . greater,[g] lit. "marching and great." His influence was progressive. (5) did . . would, lit. "according to their will."

Like the bird be thou,
That for a moment rests
Upon the topmost bough;
He feels the branch to bend
And yet as sweetly sings,
Knowing that he has wings. — Victor Hugo.

Faith. —

When over dizzy heights we go,
One soft hand blinds our eyes,
The other leads us safe and slow,
Oh, love of God most wise!
Nothing before, nothing behind;
The steps of faith
Fall on the seeming void, and find,
The rock beneath.

B. C. cir. 472.

I would not, if I could, arrange the how,
The what, the wherefore of to-morrow's plan.
— M. J. Preston.

"True liberty consists in the privilege of enjoying our own rights, not in the destruction of the rights of others." — Pinckard.

6—11. (6) And . . palace, that is in the royal quarter of the city: the number killed was large, showing how furiously their enemies attacked them, and their own prob. fate had there been no concerted defense permitted. (10) The . . Haman,[a] who to avenge their father were prob. foremost of the attacking party. but . . hand, though permitted by the decree to do so,[b] (11) number . . king, who seems surprised at the result of the conflict.

Faith of parents. — An aged minister of Christ had several sons, all of whom became preachers of the gospel, but one. This one lived a life of dissipation for many years. But the good father's faith failed not. He trusted God that his wicked son, trained up in the way he should go, in old age should not depart from it. In this sublime faith the aged father passed away. Five years after, this son of many prayers sat at the feet of Jesus. — Hom. Com.

the slaughter in Shushan

[a] Est. v. 11; Job xviii. 19.

[b] Est. viii. 11.

"God's plans, like lilies pure and white, unfold;
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart,
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold." — May Riley Smith.

12—14. (12) men, see also vs. 15. We have no evidence that the Jews had any desire to destroy the women and children. Neither did they pillage. It was not plunder that they sought, but self-protection. now what,[c] etc., note the confidence of the king in Esther's judgment. (13) granted . . decree,[d] i. e. to defend themselves if again attacked; this she saw was likely to result fr. exasperation of the Jews' enemies. let . . gallows,[e] as a warning to unrighteous plotters, and to avoid further bloodshed by this sight of their slain leaders. (14) hanged . . sons, exposure on a cross was regarded as a deep disgrace, and was a punishment often inflicted by the Persians on persons killed in some other way. — Pul. Com.

the Jews in Shushan to defend themselves a second day

[c] Est. v. 6; vii. 2.

[d] Est. viii. 11.

[e] 2 Sa. xxi. 6-9.

Life. —

We are born; we laugh; we weep;
We love; we droop; we die!
Ah! wherefore do we laugh or weep?
Why do we live or die?
Who knows that secret deep?
Alas! not I.

Why doth the violet spring
Unseen by human eye?
Why do the radiant seasons bring Sweet thoughts that quickly fly!
Why do our fond hearts cling
To things that die?

We toil through pain and wrong;
We fight — and fly;
We love; we lose; and then, ere long,
Stone-dead we lie.
A life! is all thy song:
"Endure and — die!" — B. W. Proctor.

"The word liberty has been falsely used by persons who, being degenerately profligate in private life and mischievous in public, had no hope left but in fomenting discord." — Tacitus.

"I would be quiet, Lord, nor tease, nor fret,
Not one small need of mine wilt Thou forget.
Choose Thou for me." — Julia C. R. Dorr.

"Our best rule is to give God the same place in our hearts that He holds in the universe." — Payson.

15, 16. (15) For, etc., so Esther's anticipation were verified; the Jews were again attacked by those who thought their liberty of defense was but for a day. (16) seventy and five thousand, the Septuagint has the number

the slaughter in the provinces

B. C. cir. 472.

"We may not do evil that good may come; we have no right to break God's law even for God's glory."

"To do what we will is natural liberty; to do what we will consistently with the interests of the community to which we belong is civil liberty—that is to says the only liberty to be desired in a state of civil society."—Paley.

fifteen thousand. laid . . prey, thus showing their forbearance, and that though they were captives and poor, they only sought to defend their lives.

Spiritual foes. — The diligence that Esther used in rooting out her temporal enemies should quicken us to do the like to our spiritual, viz., those evil affections, motions, and passions, that war against the soul. These be our Medes and Persians, with whom we must make no truce, but maintain a constant deadly feud, till we have mastered and mortified them all, for till that be done effectually we must never look to have true peace, either within ourselves or with others. — Trapp.

Ready for life. — Before the battle of Hatcher's Run, a Christian soldier said to his comrade, "You are detailed to go to the front, while I am to remain with the baggage. Let us change places. I'll go front: you remain in camp." "What for?" said the comrade. "Because I am prepared to die, I think; but, you are not." The exchange was made. The thought of the self-sacrifice of his friend, and his readiness for the exposures of life or the realities of death, led the unsaved soldier to repentance and a like preparation for life.

the Jews hold a day of feasting

17—19. (17) fourteenth . . gladness, while their countrymen in Shushan were still fighting for their lives. rested, literally to take breath. They needed now to recall the way in which they had been delivered. (18) fifteenth . . gladness, their enemies not daring to renew the attack. (19) sending . . another,[a] the festival of Purim wh. became one of the regular feastdays of the Jews.

a vs. 22; Ne. viii. 10, 12.

"What is our life without joy? Without joy we can do nothing. We are like an instrument out of tune. An instrument out of tune, it yields but harsh music. Without joy we are a member out of joint. We can do nothing well without joy, and a good conscience, which is the ground of joy."—Sibbes.

"Far beneath a soul immortal is a mortal joy."—Young.

Bright moments. — Once when I crossed the sea, for four or five days we were unable to get a glimpse of the stars, and were without an observation. We were running straight for the Newfoundland Banks, and were extremely anxious to learn our whereabouts. One evening just enough of the clouds lifted to show through the rift a few stars. Our captain, who seemed to be on the alert, was instantly on the spot to take his observation; and he had hardly time to take it before the clouds shut. But he had got it, and the stars could not get it back. It was enough! That glimpse of heaven told him where he was on the earth? The clouds shut down again, but it could not rub out his calculations. There is many a time, while making your voyage on the ocean of life, that a star shines out. It is visible only a moment; but if you make haste you can catch an observation, and then you will know just were you are, and you can sail on with trust in God, and with the guidance of that silent monitor that points the invisible way. Then take these hours of vision, thank God for them, and use them." — H. W. Beecher.

Mordecai appoints a commemorative festival

20—22. (20) And . . things, Mordecai wrote to the provincial Jews, suggested to them the observance of two days of Purim instead of one, without venturing to issue any order. When he found his proposition well received he sent out a second letter, "with all authority" enjoining the observance. — Pul. Com. (22) gifts . . poor,[b] whose defenseless state exposed them to especial danger; the prime minister did all in his power to soften the hard lot of the poor, and prevent class jealousies.

b Ps. xxx. 11; Ne. viii. 11

"Most of our comforts grow up between crosses. Even in your deepest griefs, rejoice in God. As waves phosphoresce, let joys flash from the swing of the sorrows of your souls."—Beecher.

The suddenness of joy. —

A thought of joy that rises in the mind,
Where sadness hath been sitting many an hour!
A thought of joy, that comes with sudden power,
When least the welcome guest we look to find!
Who sends that thought? Whence springs it?
Like the wind,
Its passage is invisible! The shower
That falls is seen; the lightning o'er the bower Passes with fiery wing, and leaves behind Bent boughs and wither'd buds! But air and thought Come and depart we know not how! Be sure From heaven the solace is! — Calder Campbell.

the Jews obey Mordecai

23—25. (23) Jews . . begun, i. e., in the keeping of the feast they had instituted. (24) Because, etc.,[c] the reason, a deliverance never to be forgotten. Pur, iii. 7. (25) when Esther came,[d] R. V., "when the matter came." letters, as before related, ref. to second decree, etc.

c Est. iii. 6, 7.
d vss. 13, 14.

Observance of the feast.—They always, at the feast, read the whole story over in the synagogue each day, and put up three prayers to God: in the first of which they praise God for counting them worthy to attend this Divine service; in the second they thank Him for the miraculous preservation of their ancestors; in the third they praise Him that they have lived to observe another festival in memory of it.—Hom. Com.

B. C. cir. 472.

"If you do not keep pride out of your souls, and your souls out of pride, God will keep your souls out of heaven."—Dyer.

26—28. (26) Purim, they took the Persian word, that is, and gave it a Hebrew plural, either because the Persian method of casting involved the use several lots, or because Haman cast "Pur" several times.—Pul. Com. (27) ordained, etc., incorporated this with the other national feasts. acc. to their writing, R. V., "acc. to the writing thereof," i. e. Mordecai's letter, vs. 20. (28) days . . generation, as they are, in all lands, to this day.

the feast called the feast of Purim

The feast of Purim.—What was here enjoined, which was very good, that they should make it—1. A day of cheerfulness, a day of feasting and joy. When God gives us cause to rejoice, why should we not express our joy? 2. A day of generosity, sending portions one to another, in token of their mutual respect, and their being knit by this and other public common dangers and deliverances so much the closer to each other in love. 3. A day of charity, sending gifts to the poor. It is not to our kinsmen and rich neighbors only that we are to send tokens, but to the poor and the maimed.

"Gratitude is a fruit of great cultivation; you do not find it among gross people."—Samuel Johnson.

Humanity craves God.—M. Thiers gives this singular passage in his history: "Napoleon said, 'For my part, I never hear the sound of the church bell in the neighboring village without emotion.'" He knew that the hearts of the people were stirred by the same deep yearnings after God which filled his own, and so he proposed to restore the worship of God to infidel France. Later, and with deeper meaning, Perrier, successor to Lafayette as prime minister to Louis Phillippe, said on his death-bed, "France must have religion." So we may say, the nations, if they are to live, must have religion. —Hom. Com.

"Do not try to minimize your trials; try to magnify God's goodness." — Endeavorer's Daily Companion.

29—32. (29) Esther . . Purim,[a] a "second letter of Purim" was now issued, "confirming" and establishing the observance. It went forth not as an edict, or in the king's name, but as a letter, and in the names of Esther and Mordecai. —Pul. Com. (30) words . . truth, congratulations. (31) matters . . cry, not only was the deliverance to be remembered, but also those religious acts by wh. it was preceded, ch. iv. (32) decree, vs. 29. written . . book, the chronicles of the kings of Persia.

the feast of Purim confirmed by Esther

[a] Est. viii. 10.

A pacific minister.—George Wishart, one of the first Scottish martyrs at the time of the Reformation, being desired to preach on the Lord's day in the church of Mauchline, went thither with that design; but the sheriff of Ayr had, in the night-time, put a garrison of soldiers into the church to keep him out. Hugh Campbell, of Kinzeancleugh, with others in the parish, were exceedingly offended at this impiety, and would have entered the church by force; but Wishart would not suffer it, saying, "Brethren, it is the word of peace which I preach unto you; the blood of no man shall be shed for it this day. Jesus Christ is as mighty in the fields as in the church, and He Himself while He lived in the flesh, preached oftener in the desert and on the sea-side, than in the temple of Jerusalem." Upon this the people were appeased, and went with him to the edge of a moor, on the south-west of Mauchline, where, having placed himself upon a mound of earth, he preached to a great multitude. He continued speaking for more than three hours, God working wonderously by him, insomuch that Laurence Ranken, the Laird of Shield, a very profane person, was converted by his discourse. The tears ran from his eyes, to the astonishment of all present; and the whole of his afterlife witnessed that his profession was without hypocrisy. — Cheever.

"Leave all, and you shall find all, for everything is to be found in God by him who, for the sake of God, despises everything."—St. Augustine.

"The surest course I have still found in all earthy pleasures, is to rise with an appetite, and to be satisfied with a little."—Bishop Hall.

"How soon a smile of God can change the world, How we are made for happiness!"
— Browning.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

B. C. 472—465.

the advancement and policy of Mordecai

1—3. (1) tribute, to replenish his exchequer, made necessary by the exhaustive drain of the Grecian expedition. land . . sea, either all his dominions, or those especially threatened. (3) next,[b] as grand vizier, or prime minister. accepted, favorably regarded, as their leading or representative man. seeking . . people,[c] by his influence making their property secure, and their trading safe. and . . seed, we must understand those of [b] Ge. xli. 40; 2 Ch. xxviii. 7.

[c] Ne. ii. 10; Ps. cxxii. 8, 9.

B. C. 472–465.

"This is a great fault in a chronologer, to turn parasite; an absolute historian should be in fear of none; neither should he write anything more than truth, for friendship, or else for hate; but keep himself equal and constant in all his discourses."—Lingua.

"The serene silent beauty of a holy life is the most powerful influence in the world next to the might of the Spirit of God."—Spurgeon.

"It was a good thing for Mordecai that he took Esther home and brought her up. Whilst giving he received. 'There is that scattereth and yet increaseth.' This Mordecai experienced."

"Jehovah Shalom," "The Lord send peace."

the same stock with himself — "the seed of Israel." "Speaking peace," means "promoting their peace and safety" — insuring them, so long as he lived and ruled, a quiet and peaceful existence. — Pul. Com.

Moral work.— Integrity must prosper sooner or later. Were it not so, we should lose faith in eternal righteousness. Appearances may be unfavorable for a time; wrong, sorrow, suffering may precede, but either here or hereafter a distinction will most assuredly be made between the true and the false. Joseph, though consigned to prison, was subsequently raised to power; Daniel, though cast into the lions' den, eventually sat with princes; Mordecai, though threatened with death, finally became "next unto King Ahasuerus." — Pul. Com. Greatness. — Thus Mordecai was truly great, considering, first, how to gain the approbation of God; and, secondly, that of his own conscience. He rises above others by virtue of his wider intelligence, his nobler thoughts, his loftier character, and his more manly daring.

The Patriot. —

He serves his country best
Who lives pure life, and doeth righteous deed,
And walks straight paths, however others stray;
And leaves his sons an uttermost bequest,
A stainless record which all men may read;
This is the better way.

Victory.—

"Rejoice, O grieving heart!
The hours fly fast;
With each some sorrow dies,
With each some shadow flies,
Until at last
The red dawn in the east
Bids weary night depart,
And grief is past!
Rejoice, then, sorrowing heart,
The hours fly fast!"

W. W. D.

THE BOOK OF JOB.

[261]

Introduction.

The foundation of the book of Job is no doubt historical. Job, an Arab Sheik of great wealth and eminent virtue (Ezek. xiv. 14, 20; James v. 11), lived in the time of the early patriarchs, in the land of Uz (Jer. xxv. 20; Lam. 4, 21), east of Palestine. He probably passed through unusual afflictions which severely tested his faith in God's righteous administration. His story was handed down by tradition from generation to generation, until, centuries after his lifetime, some highly gifted and divinely guided poet "threw the tradition into the splendid dramatic form in which we now possess it." The author of the book is entirely unknown. Even the age in which he wrote cannot be closely determined. But many modern scholars are inclined to ascribe it to the 7th or 8th century B. C. The subject of the book is stated very concisely by Rev. Mr. Cary in the title of his recent Rhythmical Version of Job, as "The Man who Feared God for Nought." Professor Genung in "The Epic of the Inner Life," sums up the book as follows: "There is a service of God which is not work for reward; it is a heart-felt loyalty, a hunger after God's presence, which survives loss and chastisement; which in spite of contradictory seeming cleaves to what is Godlike as the needle seeks the pole; and which reaches up out of the darkness and hardness of this life to the light and love beyond."

Job, in his terrible affliction, is perplexed and driven almost to despair with the question: How can God be just and still lay these heavy sorrows upon me, who am not conscious of any great sin. His friends reply: God always rewards righteousness and punishes wickedness. Suffering proves sin. You must be guilty of some concealed iniquity. Job is not at first disposed to dissent from the general principles which his friends maintained, but he still defends his own integrity and justly complains of the unsympathizing hardness of the friends. As the discussion goes on, there dawns upon Job's mind the conviction that the methods of the Divine government which his friends maintain cannot be true. There must be some better explanation of God's dealings with men. He longs to come near to God and understand His ways. He has uttered before and now repeats in another form (xvi. 19–21, Rev. Ver.) that remarkable cry for a "Daysman that might lay his hand upon us both" (ix. 33). And he comes at length to the thought, which he seems to grasp like a new discovery, that there must be a later scene of things beyond the grave, when he shall stand face to face with God and the distressing problems of life shall be solved (xix. 25–27). After the three friends have exhausted their arguments a new interlocutor appears, Elihu, a young man, self-confident and enthusiastic. But he has little that is new to offer. Then the Lord speaks out of the whirlwind, reproving the three friends, on the whole defending Job, though chiding his impatience and reminding him that he is not to demand a full explanation of the Divine administration. He is to rest quietly in the Supreme Wisdom and Might and to go on his way in a humble, reverent and trustful spirit.

Synopsis.

(According to Noyes.)

Part I — Historical Introduction (prose).....i, ii.

Part II. — Controversy in Verse..iii.–xlii. 7

1. First series.
   - (a) Speech of Eliphaz.....iv., v.
   - (b) Answer of Job.....vi., vii.
   - (c) Speech of Bildad.....viii.
   - (d) Answer of Job.....ix., x.
   - (e) Speech of Zophar.....xi.
   - (f) Answer of Job.....xii., xiii., xiv.
2. Second series.
   - (a) Speech of Eliphaz.....xv.
   - (b) Answer of Job.....xvi., xvii.
   - (c) Speech of Bildad.....xviii.
   - (d) Answer of Job.....xix.
   - (e) Speech of Zophar.....xx.
   - (f) Answer of Job.....xxi.
3. Third series.
   - (a) Speech of Eliphaz.....xxii.
   - (b) Answer of Job.....xxiii., xxiv.
   - (c) Speech of Bildad.....xxv.
   - (d) Answer of Job.....xxvi.–xxxi.
4. The judgment of Elihu. ...xxxii.–xxxvii.
5. The speech of the Deity...xxxviii.–xlii. 7

Part III. — The Conclusion (prose)... xlii. 7 to end.

(According to Horne.)

Part I. — Exordium.

Sect. 1. Job's circumstances.....i. 1–6
Sect. 2. First trial.....i. 7–22
Sect. 3. Second trial.....ii. 1–10

Part II. — First Dialogue.

Sect. 1. Job's complaint.....iii.
Sect. 2. Speech of Eliphaz.....iv., v.
Sect. 3. Job's reply.....vi., vii.
Sect. 4. Bildad's argument..... viii.
Sect. 5. Job's rejoinder.....ix. x.
Sect. 6. Zophar's exhortation .....xi.
Sect. 7. Job's retort. .....xii.–xiv.

Part III. — Second Dialogue.

Sect. 1. Eliphaz's accusation . .....xv.
Sect. 2. Job's reply .... xvi., xvii.
Sect. 3. Bildad recapitulates.....xviii.
Sect. 4. Job's appeal.....xix.
Sect. 5. Zophar and Job. .....xx., xxi.

Part IV. — Third Dialogue.

Sect. 1. Eliphaz resumes.....xxii.
Sect. 2. Job replies.....xxiii, xxiv.
Sect. 3. Bildad rejoins .....xxv.
Sect. 4. Job answers.....xxvi.–xxxi.

Part V. — Elihu's Summary ..xxxii.–xxxvii.

Part VI. — Conclusion.

Sect. 1. Jehovah's judgment. .xxxvii.–xli.
Sect. 2. Job's submission.....xlii. 1–10
Sect. 3. Job's restoration, etc...xlii. 11–17

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1—3. (1) Uz,[a] Comp. Lam. iv. 21, location was near Edom, on the east of Palestine. The man was therefore a non-Israelite, but noted for his piety.[b] Job, "in Ezek. xiv. 14 Job is alluded to in terms that imply that he was a real person whose piety was well known to Ezekiel's contemporaries by tradition." — Driver. perfect, his moral character was proportionate and complete in all its parts. (2) seven sons, etc. "The round numbers 7, 3, 5, by which Job's children and his flocks are described, express their perfection and complete sufficiency. They teach that what we have before us here is history idealized by the poet and teacher, that he may convey by it moral lessons." — Cam. Bib. (3) was . . sheep, large flocks com. in E. five . . oxen, sug. that Job tilled the soil. five . . asses, esp. useful for their supply of milk. household, following, retainers, tribe. greatest, in wealth, influence, honor.

Wealth and piety. — I. Their common characteristics. 1. God's gifts to be received with thankfulness. 2. Man's ornaments to be borne humbly. 3. A Christian's talents to be used with fidelity. II. Their reciprocal relations. Wealth and piety are not necessarily incompatible. 2. May prove reciprocally helpful. III. Their comparative excellences. 1. Piety may be obtained by all; wealth only by a few. 2. Piety is useful to all; wealth is injurious to some. 3. Piety will abide with all; wealth with none. Lessons: 1. They that have piety can do without wealth. 2. They that have wealth cannot do without piety. — T. Whitelaw.

The Book of Job. — I call that, apart from all theories about it, one of the grandest things ever written with pen. One feels, indeed, as if it were not Hebrew; such a noble universality, different from noble patriotism, or sectarianism, reigns in it. A noble book! all men's book! It is our first, oldest statement of the never-ending problem, man's destiny, and God's ways with him here in this earth. And all in such free-flowing outlines; grand in its sincerity, in its simplicity, in its epic melody, and repose of reconcilement. There is the seeing eye, the mildly understanding heart. So true every way: true eyesight and vision for all things; material things no less than spiritual: the horse — "hast Thou clothed his neck with thunder?" — "he laughs at the shaking of the spear!" Such living likenesses were never since drawn. Sublime sorrow, sublime reconciliation; oldest choral melody, as of the heart of mankind; so soft and great; as the summer midnight, as the world with its seas and stars! There is nothing written, I think, in the Bible or out of it, of equal literary merit. — Carlyle.

4—5. (4) feasted, banqueted. every . . day, i. e. on his birthday, ea. in his turn, entertained the rest. sent . . sisters, who had no separate house of their own. to . . them, the presence of their sisters, and for this purpose, shows that these feasts were not riotous revelries. (5) when . . about, whenever a birthday had thus been celebrated. sent . . them, sent for them. We have a glimpse of the patriarchal age when the father was priest of the family; also an illustration of the perfectness of Job, solicitous for his children, and mindful of their temptations. cursed,[c] R. V., "renounced," i. e. in their pleasure they may have forgotten God, or become defiled through neglect of religious duties. Thus . . continually, seeking pardon for possible as well as known sin, as often as the feasting was completed.

Job's anxiety for his children. — Notice — I. His conduct in relation to his family. Consider his act as — 1. One of magisterial authority; 2. Of paternal love. The peculiarity of his conduct naturally leads us to inquire into — II. The grounds and reasons of it. It was founded on Job's views — 1. Of the extreme depravity of our nature; 2. The corrupt tendency of carnal mirth; 3. The universal need of an atonement. Let us learn from hence — (1) To exercise a jealousy over ourselves; (2) To seek above all things the eternal welfare of our children. — Simeon.

Parental anxiety. — The anxiety of George III. for the welfare and health of his children was once exemplified in the following interesting manner: Soon after the young princes went abroad, he was talking jocosely with a Scottish lady about her native country. On a sudden, she observed that he became absorbed in thought; and, supposing him reflecting on something that

Job's prosperity

[a] "The mention of his name and place where he lived shows that the writer meant to affirm that there was in fact such a man." — Barnes.

[b] The LXX. has Ausitis in place of Uz, and Ptolemy (v. 19) speaks of a tribe Æsitæ in N. part of desert of Arabia, near the Euphrates.

"Man is glorious and happy not by what he has, but what he is." — Channing.

"I do not know any way so sure of making others happy as by being so."

Job's piety

[c] The same word is used for bless, as here for curse. Dr. Good thinks it should always be trans. bless. But this would be dif. in such pass. as 1 Ki. xxi. 10.

"I have been thinking of many expressions of Rutherford's this morning, before I was up. I feel one, the burden of the song: 'I lay my head to rest on the bosom of Omnipotence.' While I can keep hold of this, it shall be a fine day, whether it rains, hails, or shines." — Cecil.

"... is astonishing how soon the whole conscience begins to unravel if a single stitch drops; one little sin indulged makes a hole you could put your head through." — Chas. Buxt n.

had been said in conversation, remarked, "Your majesty, I presume, is thinking of my country." He paused for a few moments, and, dropping a tear, said, "I was entreating God to protect and bless my dear boys." Little, unheeded sins. — A vessel will sink whether filled with heavy stones or with sand. Fine grains of sand will bury travelers in the desert. Fine flakes of snow, so light that they seem to hang in the air, and scarce to fall, will, if they gather over the sleepy wayfarer, extinguish life; if they drift they will bury whole houses and their dwellers. Fine, delicate sins, as people think them, will chill the soul and take away its life. — Pusey.

the sons of God appear before Him

6, 7. (6) when . . God, angels.[a] came . . Lord, to give acc. of their ministry.[b] Satan, the adversary,[c] who also is dependent upon God, and not able to harass men without Divine consent. Notice that the writer's idea of Satan is not that of later days, when he is represented as the head of a kingdom of evil spirits. came . . them, forced to come as one in subjection. (7) Lord . . thou? a similar question may have been asked of the sons of God. "He, too, has to give an account. There is no hint here of a being out of place, who has forced himself into the audience chamber. He also is a vassal of the Almighty."—Watson. going . . walking, "what is suggested is the swiftness and ubiquity of his survey of men."—Davidson.

a Job xxxviii. 7; 1 Ki. xxii. 19.

b He. i. 14.

c 1 Chron., xxi. 1; Zec. iii. 1; Re. xii. 9, 10.

Satan among the angels. — I. Can we in any way realize the scene? II. Here, then, we have next the Scriptural idea of Satan. The response of the Evil One to his Almighty questioner distinctly expresses — I. Indifference; 2. Unbelief; 3. Cruelty; 4. Limitation.— E. P. Hood. The evil one.—I. Has a personal existence. 1. This existence is suggested by reason; 2. It is confirmed by human history; 3. It is declared in the Bible. II. That he is an intruder in the sacred presence. III. That he is amenable to the Eternal. This — 1. Although he is so great; 2. Although so wicked. IV. That he is a vagrant in the universe. The language implies — 1. Homelessness; 2. Zealousness. V. That he is a slanderer of the good.— Thomas.

"Satan knows what orders thou keepest in thy house and closet; and though he hath not a key to thy heart, yet he can stand in the next room to it and lightly hear what is whispered there. He hunts the Christian by the scent of his own feet, and if once he doth smell which way thy heart inclines, he knows how to take the hint."

Satan among the saints.— As soon as the sower goes forth to sow his seed the fowls of the air go forth also. The more good is being done in any place, the more surely will Satan oppose it. Unusual provocations will be given to lukewarm professors by those whose zeal is aroused, and so there will be bickerings. Ready offense will be taken by cross-grained brethren during a revival; for things are apt to be a little out of the regular order, and here is another root of bitterness. Unusual numbers of hypocrites will come forward, just as snails and slugs come creeping forth on a rainy day. Unusual bitterness will be felt by worldlings, and as a consequence, unusual slanders will be current against the more active assailants of the enemy's kingdom. You cannot destroy a wasp's nest without being attacked in return. Yet this is better than stagnation. In a slumbering church it is the adversary's chief business to rock the cradle, hush all noise, and drive away even a fly which might light upon the sleeper's face: Satan's great dread is lest the church should be aroused from her dreamy slumbers. — Spurgeon. The angels.— Was anything like unto angels ever conceived by the minds of any race of men, their poets, or their sages? No; their imaginations have not even come near them. People at all times have taken pleasure in painting those invisible beings, inhabitants of celestial regions, adorned with all those superior qualities that charm the heart of man. But how low, puerile, and vulgar are all their conceptions! Study the angels of the Scriptures; not only is everything there grand, holy; and worthy of God; not only is their character at once ardent and sublime, compassionate and majestic, constantly brought before us there by their names, their attributes, their employments, their habitations, their songs, their contemplation of the depths of redemption, and the joys of their love; but what must strike us more than all is the perfect harmony of the whole, that all these features agree, and are maintained in their justest proportions. They are exhibited to us in every situation, in heaven and upon earth, before God and before men, ministers of mercy, and sometimes executors of vengeance; standing before God, adoring Him day and night; but also employed in the service of the humblest believer. We are defiled, they are perfect; we are selfish, they melt with charity; we are haughty, they are gentle; we are vain and proud in bodies that worms will consume, they are humble in glory and immortality; we are disturbed by passions, they are fervent in spirit, — neither can they die. This uniformity, this purity, comes not from man — it is from God. — R. Hall.

"More servants wait on man Than he will take notice of. In every path
He treads down that which doth befriend him
When sickness makes him pale and wan.
O mighty love! Man is one world and hath Another to attend him."
—George Herrert.

"Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth unseen, both when we sleep and when we wake."—Milton.

8. Hast thou considered my servant Job? etc., the source of the whole movement, is a defiance of unbelief by the Divine Friend of men and Lord of all. There is such a thing as human virtue, and it is the glory of God to be served by it, to have His power and divinity reflected in man's spiritual vigor and holiness. — Watson.

God's inquiry of Satan concerning Job

Job's character estimated by God. — I. God regarded the character of Job. II. God estimated Job as perfect. III. God estimated Job as upright. IV. Job recognized carefully his domestic responsibilities. V. This perfection is alleged of human nature — an upright man. Learn the blessedness of this character. 1. Domestic protection; 2. Business prosperity. — J. S. Exell. "My servant Job." —I. God is never ashamed to own His faithful servants. II. He is an interested spectator of a good man's ways and actions. III. "A servant of God" is the most honorable title. IV. God's people are proved by acting as His servants, not as their own masters. V. A true servant of God is Satan's eyesore. — Hom. Com.

"The place of a man before the pure, all witnessing Spirit of God, and in the estimation of God, and in the estimation of those who are heavenly-minded, determines his place in the world." — P. Z. Mozoomdar.

Your adversary the devil. — The devil is the most diligent preacher of all others; he is never out of his diocese; you shall never find him unoccupied: he is ever in his parish. He keeps residence at all times; you shall never find him out of the way; call for him when you will, he is ever at home. He is ready as can be wished for to set forth his plough, to devise as many ways as can be to deface and obscure God's glory. — Hugh Latimer. God's omniscience. — God sees you always. It is told of Linnæus, the famous naturalist, that he was greatly impressed with this thought, and that it told upon his conversation, his writings, and his conduct. He felt the importance of this so much that he wrote over the door of his study the Latin words, Innocui vivite, Numen adest. "Live innocently, God is here." — Barlow.

"Roberts tells us that in India it is said of a man who cannot be injured, 'Why attempt to hurt him? Is there not a hedge about him?' 'You cannot get at the fellow; he has a strong hedge about him.'"

9—12. (9) Doth . . nought, this "Adversary" is the typical pessimist. "Of course," he says, "Job is pious because it pays." This is the personification of this spirit which is always ready to undervalue and explain away the seeming righteousness of any man, and declares for every act some selfish motive. (10) Hast . . him,[a] raised up protections. "Why," he says, "should not Job be grateful? But (11) put forth thy hand, let trouble come upon him and see how quickly he will rebel." (12) Behold . . power,[b] had not been till now. Was now, only by permission and for a purpose. Neither here nor elsewhere in the book does Satan attempt to mislead by evil suggestion, or temptation. He can only affect outward events and try the faith of his victim.[c] The Adversary is challenged to do his worst; and man as God's champion, will have to do his best, — the world and angels looking on." — Watson.

Job is placed under the power of Satan

[a] Ps. xxxiv. 7.

[b] 2 Co. xii. 7.

[c] Isa. xxvii. 8; Ps. lxxvi. 10; 1 Co. x. 13.

Uncharitable judgment reproved. — We shall consider these words — I. As a base accusation, indignantly to be repelled. 1. How false the accusation in reference to Job, the event proved; 2. Why should the motives of the people of God be called in question? If multitudes of God's people were upright in former ages, why should all who profess themselves His people be counted hypocrites now? II. As an unanswerable truth most gladly to be conceded 1. They desire above all things the salvation of their souls; 2. They actually obtain from God many present benefits; 3. They look forward to the infinitely richer benefits in the world that is to come. Learn: — (1) Regard not the uncharitable censures of ungodly men; (2) Endeavor in all things to approve yourselves to God. — Simeon. Job's character estimated by Satan. — I. This Satanic test of character must be viewed in a twofold aspect. 1. As a subtle scheme suggested by the devil to cause Job's ruin; 2. As a merciful messenger permitted by God to enhance the worth of Job's life. II. This test was severe. III. Satan was defeated and deceived. — J. S. Exell.

"Thou art not the more holy for being praised, nor the more worthless for for being disparaised. What thou art, that thou art; neither by words canst thou be made greater than what thou art in the sight of God. If thou consider what thou art in thyself thou wilt not care what men say of thee." — T. à Kempis.

The devil's tactics. — So long as the devil hath peaceable possession of a man's heart, so long he never molesteth him; he willingly obeyeth the devil, and delighteth in his service; and, therefore, what need the devil impugn him? A king never lifteth up his sword against his own loyal subjects; but if once they begin to rebel, then he raiseth a power to subdue them to his obedience. In like manner, so long as men are sworn subjects to the devil he never stirreth against them: but if once, by the grace of God, they begin to rebel against him, and shake off his yoke, then he rageth and laboreth by all means to reduce them to obedience. A dog, though never so fierce, doth not bark at those of the household. So the dogs of hell will never bark at men, so long as they are of the devil's household; but when they are made "citizens of the dead; so Satan feeds his infernal appetite upon the corrupt and dead souls of mankind."—Guthrie.

"The raven croaks and flaps his wings above corruption, and riots in luxury on the carcasses

with the saints, and of the household of God," then they begin to take on. — C. Richardson. God's purpose for us. — The aim which God assigned to us for our highest is indeed the direct reverse of that which we propose to ourselves. He would have us in perpetual conflict; we crave an unbroken peace. He keeps us ever on the march; we pace the green sod by the way with many a sigh for rest. He throws us on a rugged universe; our first care is to make it smooth. Every way He urges our reluctant will. He grows the thistle and the sedge, but expects us to raise the olive and the corn, having given us strength and skill for such an end. And after all, in spite of the inertia of their will, men are, in their inmost hearts, on the side of God, rather than their own, in this matter. — Martineau. Knowledge without love. — "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord." Man is like the candle lighted by the Spirit of God, radiating the glory of God's nature, and itself glorified by the divine fire. — But some men are unlighted candles. What shall we make of some man rich in attainments, well educated, well-behaved, and who, now that his training is complete, stands in the midst of his fellow-men completely dark and helpless? There are plenty of such men. They build themselves for influence, but no one feels them. No light comes. They die, and the world is no darker for their absence. What does it mean? They are unlighted candles. They are the spirit of man elaborated, cultivated, finished to the priest, but lacking the last touch of God, — silver lamps wrought with wondrous skill, all filled with rarest oil, but untouched with fire. Others are like a candle lighted from the pit. A nature furnished richly to the very brim, a man of knowledge, of art, of skill, of thought, with the very graces of the body perfect, and yet profane, impure, worldly, scattering scepticism of all good and truth about him wherever he may go. His is no unlighted candle, but lighted at the yellow flames that burn out of the dreadful brimstone of the pit."— Phillips Brooks.

"Down thither prone in flight he speeds and through the vast ethereal sky sails between world and world with steady wings, now on the polar winds, then quick with fan winnows the buxom air." — Milton.

"Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell." — Shakespeare.

Job's trials

—

the cattle destroyed

13—15. (13) day . . house, the birth day of the first-born. The most joyous festival of all the round. (14) oxen, etc.,[a] the work proceeding as usual. (15) Sabeans, one or more wandering tribes of predatory Arabs. fell, i. e. suddenly. I . . thee, a dramatic form of speech put in the mouth of ea. of the messengers.

Satan, as a servant of the Infinite, malevolently dealing with Job's circumstances. — Observe — I. The enthusiasm of his malignity. II. The variety of his agents. He employed — 1. Wicked men; 2. Material nature. III. The celerity of his movements. IV. The folly of his calculations. Job worshiped, here we discover — 1. His profound sensibility; 2. His exalted philosophy; 3. His religious magnanimity. — Thomas.

[a] The Chaldee reads:—"The oxen were ploughing, and Lilith, queen of Zamargad, suddenly rushed upon them, and carried them away."

The land of Hamath. — After wandering for a time among the ruins I discovered a poor gipsy crouching in terror, beneath a shattered wall. He was the only living being in Arethusa, and his tale was sad enough. The day before he was rich and happy, the head of a numerous family, and of an attached tribe. Now he was alone and a beggar. The tents of his people had been pitched on the banks of the Orontes, their camels and goats were feeding on the plain. A troop of Anezeh came suddenly upon them and swept them all away — camels, goats, tents, women, children. He with his two sons escaped by plunging into the river and swimming across. His sons were on the track of the plunderers, and he was lurking here in the hope of being able during the night to effect the release of his family, and perhaps also to recover his flocks, or a sufficient equivalent. Property is as insecure still on the borders of the Arabian desert as it was in the days of Job. —L. J. Porter.

"Nothing can work me damage except myself; the harm that I sustain I carry about with me; and am never a real sufferer but by my own fault." —St. Bernard.

God's tenderness. —

More than our feeble hearts can ever pine
For holiness,
The Father in his tenderness divine
Yearneth to bless.
He never sends a joy not meant in love;
Still less a pain;
Our gratitude the sunlight falls to prove;
Our faith the rain. — Francis Power Cobbe.

the sheep destroyed

16. While . . speaking, Satan "would overwhelm Job with the suddenness and greatness of his calamities." The . . God,[b] poet. for great destructive fire. Prob. the lightning is meant. Comp. 1 Kings xviii. 38; 2 Kings i. 12. The adversary is able to employ not only men as his agencies, but also the forces of nature. This emphasizes the fact that what he is doing is also in accord with the will of God.

[b] Ep. ii. 2.

Thankfulness in trouble. — A Christian sailor, who lost one of his legs at the battle of Trafalgar, said that he could very often measure the faith of the people who conversed with him, by the way in which they alluded to his misfortune. Nine out of ten would exclaim, "What a pity that you lost your leg!" and only one in ten, "What a blessing that the other was preserved!" When God comes into the family and takes away one child, instead of complaining because He has taken one it would be wiser to thank Him that He has left the rest. Or He may crush a man's business, and strip him of all his worldly wealth, and yet leave untouched and uninvaded what is dearer than all — the cradle of his only child. Would it not be nobler for such a man to be thankful for what God left than to murmur for what He took away? "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away," but He always gives more than He takes away. If God robs a man of his riches He leaves him his health, which is better than riches. If He takes health He leaves wealth. If He takes both He leaves friends. And if He takes all these — house, and home, and worldly goods, God's providence is not yet exhausted, and He can make blessings out of other things which remain. He never strips a man entirely bare. A man may be left a beggar upon the highway, and yet be able to give increasing testimony to God's goodness and grace." — H. W. Beecher.

"The Lord oftentimes provideth for His own glory, in bringing light out of darkness, and by the humiliation of His children, bringing their greatest exaltation. — S. Smith."

"There is but one way for the soul to escape from the ills of life; it is to escape from its pleasures, and to seek enjoyment higher up." — Joubert.

17. Chaldeans, in time of Job a wandering people fr. the N. and E., as the Sabeans were fr. the S. made . . bands, and so attacked simultaneously fr. three points; common oriental tactics. Comp. Jud. vii. 16; ix. 43; 1 Sa. xi. 11. fell,[a] lit. rushed. They prob. came as a cloud of horsemen, "spreading out" to surround their prey. camels, the most valuable of Job's possessions.

the camels taken

Homiletic notes. — I. Draw a distinction between trial and chastisement. II. The uncertain character of earthly things. III. One thing abides forever — God's presence. IV. Job recognized all his trial as coming from God. V. Children have little idea of the deep solicitude of pious parents. VI. Sin always exposes to danger.

A chain of calamities. — A Christian whom God had prospered in his outward estate, and who lived in ease and piety on his farm, suffered the world to encroach so much upon his affections as sensibly to diminish the ardor of his piety. The disease was dangerous, and the Lord adopted severe measures for its cure. First, his wife was removed by death; but he still remained worldly-minded. Then a beloved son: but, although the remedy operated favorably, it did not effect a cure. Then his crops failed and his cattle died; still his grasp on the world was not unloosed. Then God touched his person, and brought on him a lingering, fatal disease: the world, however, occupied still too much of his thoughts. His house finally took fire; and as he was carried out of the burning building he exclaimed, "Blessed be God, I am cured at last." He shortly after died, happy in the anticipation of a heavenly inheritance. — Cheever. Extent of calamity. — Like as lightnings do smite whatsoever they find in the earth except the laurel tree, as Pliny affirmeth, even so great calamity is able to take away and to overthrow whatsoever is in man, or that he hath, save only constant virtue; for constant virtue is a goodly laurel tree, ever flourishing and green, and will not be consumed, burned up, nor destroyed with any fire that breaketh out of the clouds, be it never so fierce, nor with any violence of torments and troubles whatsoever. — Cawdray.

[a] The word here used is spoken of hostile troops; of locusts; of a marauding army.

"Then welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids nor sit nor stand, but go."
— Browning.

"A weak mind sinks under prosperity, as well as under adversity. A strong and deep one has two full tides when the moon is at the full, and when there is no moon." — Hare.

"Times of general calamity and confusion have ever been productive of the greatest minds."

18—19. (18) sons, etc., see vss. 4, 13. (19) came . . wind, tornado. This alternating series of blows, from Sabæans and lightning, Chaldæans and whirlwind would seem most likely to denote that heaven and earth, God and man are in conspiracy against Job. from . . wilderness, sweeping across the desert. smote . . house, like a hurricane, or whirlwind.

Job's children killed

Lessons from Job's afflictions. — We may learn — I. That true piety will bear the removal of property and friends without murmuring. II. That when we are afflicted we should not vent our wrath on winds and waves, on the fraud and perfidy of our fellow-men, etc. III. That God has the right to take away as well as to give. IV. That we see the nature of true resignation. V. That we may see the true source of comfort in trial. VI. That we may see the power of religion in sustaining in the time of trial. — A. Barnes.

"It is, to a Christian consideration, one of God's greatest mercies, that this world is full of troubles; for, if we so much court her now she is foul, what would we do if she were beautiful? If we take such pains to gather thorns and thistles, what would we do for Whirlwinds in the East. — On the 25th at four o'clock in the afternoon, we set out from the village of the Nuba, intending to arrive at Basbock, where is figs and grapes?" —Lord Capel.

"Every roof is agreeable to the eye until it is lifted; and then we find tragedy, and moaning women, and hard-eyed husbands, and deluges of Lethe."—Emerson.

the ferry over the Nile; but we had scarcely advanced two miles into the plain, when we were enclosed in a violent whirlwind, or what is called at sea the waterspout. The plain was red earth, which had been plentifully moistened by a shower in the night-time. The unfortunate camel that had been taken by Cohala seemed to be nearly in the center of its vortex; it was lifted and thrown down at a considerable distance, and several of his ribs broken. Although, as far as I could guess, I was not near the center, it whirled me off my feet and threw me down upon my face, so as to make my nose gush out with blood; two of the servants, likewise, had the same fate. It plastered us all over with mud, almost as smoothly as could have been done with a trowel. It took away my sense and breathing for an instant; and my mouth and nose were full of mud when I recovered. I guess the sphere of its action to be about two hundred feet. It demolished one-half of a small hut, as if it had been cut through with a knife; and dispersed the materials all over the plain, leaving the other half standing. — Bruce.

Job's submission

20—22. arose, as one stunned by these rapidly accumulating disasters. rent . . mantle, com. outward sign of great sorrow. shaved his head, "renouncing in his grief even the natural ornament of the hair," that his sense of loss may be shown. It was not absence of feeling which explains his resignation. fell . . ground, mark of grief, humility, homage. worshipped,[a] resigning himself to God's will. (21) Naked, etc.,[b] he had nothing at first; he would have nothing at the last. The earth — the universal mother — is here ref. to. gave, etc.,[c] what I had was the Lord's gift; what I have lost is not by mere accident, but by God's will. blessed,[d] he did not curse as Satan sug. (22) foolishly, R. V., "with foolishness." In his profound grief was no sin, nor was there in his heart any bitterness against God. "So far he is master of his soul, unbroken though desolate. The first great round of trial has left thy man a believer still."—Watson.

a 1 Pet. v. 6.

b Ec. v. 15; 1 Ti. vi. 7; Ps. xlix. 17; Ec. xii. 7.

c Ja. i. 17; La. iii. 38; Am. iii. 6; Isa. xlv. 7.

d 1 Sa. iii. 18; 2 Ki. xx. 19; Ps. lxxxix. 52.

The triumph of faith. — The victory of faith. I. Has its foundation in a recognition of God's supremacy. II. Is promoted by reverential devotion. III. Is consistent with great sorrow. IV. Is the tribute of the human heart to the supremacy, the wisdom, and the goodness of God. V. Insures the utmost Divine approval. — Pul. Com. The mourner's song. — Atheism in sorrow is night without a star. I. Man cannot have any property apart from God. II. Death is the assertion of God's proprietorship. III. Submission to Divine arrangements is the highest test of obedience. IV. Submission is most honorable to man, and most acceptable to God, when it rises into thankfulness. In sorrow the soul finds its surest refuge in fundamental principles. 1. There is a God: 2. That God is careful of me; 3. By impoverishing me of other possessions, He is seeking to enrich me with Himself; 4. He will ultimately take as well my family and property; 5. If I can bless His name in the very sanctuary of affliction and death, what rapture shall I feel in the heaven of unclouded and undying love; 6. Out of this filial submission comes a doubling of the very possessions which were taken away. — Parker.

"It was a shrewd remark of Andrew Fuller, that a man has only as much religion as he can command in trial."

"Be like the bird that halting in her flight Awhile on boughs too slight,
Feels them give way beneath her, and yet sings, Knowing that she hath wings."
— Victor Hugo.

"Outward attacks and troubles rather fix than unsettled the Christian, as tempests from without only serve to root the oak faster; whilst an inward canker will gradually rot and decay it." — H. Moore.

"If the sun of God's countenance shine upon me, I may well be content to be wet with some rain in affliction. How oft have I seen the heaven overcast with clouds and tempest; no sun appearing to comfort me; yet even these gloomy seasons have I rid patiently, only with the help of the common light of the day.

Patience under trial. — During the absence of Rabbi Meir from his house his two sons died, both of them of uncommon beauty, and enlightened in the law. His wife bore them to her bed-chamber, laid them upon the bed, and spread a white covering over their bodies. When Rabbi Meir returned, his first inquiry was for his sons. His wife reached to him a goblet, he praised the Lord at the going out of the Sabbath, drank, and again asked, "Where are my sons, that they too may drink of the cup of blessing?" "They will not be far off," she replied, and placed food before him that he might eat. He was in a gladsome and genial mood; and when he had said grace after the meal, she thus addressed him: "Rabbi, with thy permission I would fain propose to thee one question." "Ask it then, my love," he replied. "A few days ago a person entrusted some jewels to my custody, and now he demands them again; should I give them back to him?" "This is a question," said Rabbi Meir, "which my wife should not have thought it necessary to ask. What! wouldst thou hesitate or be reluctant to restore to every one his own?" "No," she replied: "but yet I thought it best not to restore them without acquainting thee therewith." She then led him to the chamber, and stepping to the bed took the white covering from the dead bodies. "Ah, my sons! my sons!" thus loudly lamented the father; "my sons! the light of mine understanding. I was your father, but ye were my teachers in the law." The mother turned away and wept bitterly. At length she took her husband by the hand, and said, "Rabbi, didst thou not teach me that we must not be reluctant to restore that which was entrusted to our keeping? See, the Lord gave, the Lord has taken away, and blessed be the name of the Lord!" "Blessed be the name of the Lord!" echoed the holy man; "and blessed be His glorious name forever."

At last, those beams have broken forth happily, and cheered my soul" — Bp. Hall.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1—3. Jewish interpreters say there was a year bet. the first trial and the second. The situation certainly demands an interval for the first series of evils to do their work before the second test is made. (1) Again . . day,[a] as if such events were periodical. (3) still . . integrity, intense interest in human affairs implied in this commendation of Job. Comp. Dan. xii. 5, 6; 1 Pet. i. 12. cause, these words are ironical. "You incited me against Job by false accusations.[b] Have I proven to you that there is such a thing as disinterested righteousness?"

Satan among the saints. — Since Satan will enter our assemblies, it behooves us to see (1) That no one of us brings him in our company; (2) That no one gives place to him when he enters the congregation; (3) That like Abram with the ravenous birds, we drive him away; or (4) That we pray with all the more earnestness, "Deliver us from the evil one." — Spurgeon.

The source of true beauty. — A German professor has lately made experiments with chalcedony, and other quartzose minerals, and he has demonstrated that when such stones are ground on large and rapidly revolving wheels, they exhibit a brilliant phosphorescent glow throughout their entire mass. So is it with the resolute worker. The more he is ground under the strong wheel of suffering and persecution, the more intensely will his character glow. — G. Barlow.

Satan again before God

a Job i. 6.

b Job i. 9–11.

"I am a mighty spirit, and yet I am but to God what lightning is to light; lightning slays one thing — light makes all things live. — Bailey.

"I am the imperfection of the whole; the great negation of the universe; the pitch profoundest of the fallible. Myself the all of evil which exists; the ocean heaped into a single surge." — Bailey.

4—6. (4) Skin, etc.,[c] a proverbial expression, implying that Job might endure even the loss of his children, but if touched in person this piety would disappear. (5) touch . . flesh, afflict his person. (6) he . . hand, in your power. but . . life, God, who permits this trial, and intends by it to show to the world how faith can endure through utmost suffering, knows what Job can endure, and sets a limit to Satan's endeavors.

Satan permitted to try Job with personal affliction c Ma. vi. 25.

"As the musician straineth his strings, and yet he breaketh none of them, but maketh thereby a sweeter melody and better concord; so God, through affliction, makes His own better unto the fruition and enjoying of the life to come." — Cawdray.

"If you tell your troubles to God, you put them into the grave; they will never rise again when you have committed them to Him. If you roll your burden anywhere else, it will roll back again, like the stone of Sisyphus." — Spurgeon.

The value of life. — I. We shall endeavor to establish the importance of life. 1. In proof of this let us appeal to authority; 2. Let us contemplate human life as the work of God; 3. It has an intimate, unavoidable, inseparable connection with another world, and affords us the only opportunity of acquiring good; 4. Consider it in relation to our fellow-creatures, and as affording us the only opportunities of doing good. II. Explain how the belief of its importance should be applied. 1 We should deplore the destruction of it; 2. We should not expose it to injury and hazard; 3. We should be thankful for the continuance of it; 4. However assured of heaven, we should not be impatient for death; 5. Congratulate the pious youth who is beginning to use it; 6. Let it not be a price in the hand of fools. Learn to improve it. Do not live an animal, a worldly, or an idle life. Live the life of God, and begin to live this life now. — W. Jay. Satan, as a servant of the Infinite, malevolently dealing with Job's personality. — I. Satan's low estimate of human nature. 1. He states that goodness is not so dear to a man as his life; 2. That great personal suffering will turn even a good man away from God, and against Him. II. Satan's great power over human nature. 1. His power moves within fixed limits; 2. It is used to torture the body and corrupt the soul. III. Satan's grand purpose with human nature, but it is frustratable. Job, in frustrating Satan — 1. Reproves his wife; 2. Vindicates God; 3; Is commended by inspiration. — Thomas.

The love of life. — "And what thinkest thou," said Socrates to Aristodemus, "of this continual love of life, this dread of dissolution, which takes possession of us the moment we are conscious of existence?" "I think of it," was the beautiful reply, "as the means employed by the same great and wise Artist, deliberately determined to preserve what He has made." Skin for skin. — Dr. Mason Good thus explains this proverb: "The skins or spoils of beasts, in the rude and early ages of man, were the most valuable property he could acquire, and that for which he most frequently combated. Skins hence became the chief representation of property, and in many parts of the world continue so to the present hour." The true end of life. — If your life were but a fever-

"Virtue may be assailed, but never hurt;
Surprised by unjust force, but not enthralled.
But evil on itself shall back recoil,
And mix no more with goodness.
If this fail,

fit — the madness of a night, whose follies were all to be forgotten in the dawn, it might matter little how you fretted away the sickly hours,— what toys you snatched at, or let fall,— what visions you followed wistfully with the deceived eyes of sleepless frenzy. Is the earth only a hospital? Play, if you care to play, on the floor of the hospital dens. Knit its straw into what crowns please you; gather the dust of it for treasure, and die rich in that, clutching at the black motes in the air with your dying hands — and yet it may be well with you. But if this life be no dream, and the world be no hospital — if all the power and peace and joy you can ever win must be won now, and all fruit of victory gathered here, or never — will you still, throughout the puny totality of your life, weary yourselves in the fire for vanity? If there is no rest which remaineth for you, is there none you might presently take? Was this grass of the earth made green for your shroud only, not for your bed, and can you never lie down upon it, but only under it? The heathen, to whose creed you have returned, thought not so. They knew that life brought its contest, but they expected from it also the crown of all contest. No proud one; no jeweled circlet flaming through heaven above the height of the unmerited throne; only some few leaves of wild olive, cool to the tired brow, through a few years of peace. "It should have been of gold, they thought, but Jupiter was poor." This was the best the god could give them. Seeking a greater than this, they had known it a mockery. Not in war, not in wealth, not in tyranny was there any happiness to be found for them — only in kindly peace, fruitful, and free. The wreath was to be of wild olive, mark you — the tree that grows carelessly, tufting the rocks with no vivid bloom, no verdure of branch, only with soft snow of blossom, and scarcely full-filled fruit, mixed with gray leaf and thorn-set stem; no fastening of diadem for you, but with such sharp embroidery! But this, such as it is, you may win while yet you live — type of gray honor and sweet rest. Free-heartedness, and graciousness, and undisturbed trust, and requited love, and the sight of the peace of others, and the ministry to their pain — these, and the blue sky above you, and the sweet waters and flowers of the earth beneath, and mysteries and presences innumerable of living things — these may yet be here your riches, untormenting and divine, service-able for the life that now is; nor, it may be, without promise of that which is to come. — Ruskin.

The pillared firmament is rottenness,
And earth's base built on stubble."
— Milton.

"How loosely do honors sit on men, when every disease shakes them off and lays them in the dust. How miserable is the condition of the glory of this world, which hardly holds out a life, but often dies before us, ravished away by a frown or forfeited by a fault. Or, if it do last as long as its owners, with the staff of office cracked and thrown into the grave, is there buried with the corpses."— King.

"Do not insult calamity; it is a barb'rous grossness to lay on the weight of scorn where heavy misery too much already weighs men's fortunes down."— Daniel.

Job smitten with boils

7, 8. (7) boils, "he is stricken with elephantiasis, one of the most terrible forms of leprosy, a tedious malady attended with intolerable irritation and loathsome ulcers. The disfigured face, the blackened body, soon reveal the nature of the infection." — Watson. (8) potsherd,[a] piece of broken vessel. to . . withal, perh. bec. of intolerable itching; perh. to remove the matter exuding fr. the sores. sat . . ashes, some think this outside the village, the place where refuse was burned and rubbish thrown, where lepers, excluded from their homes, would sit and beg their living.

[a] The LXX says, a shell.

Complaint. —

I think we are too ready with complaint
In this fair world of God's. Be comforted
And like a cheerful traveler, take the road Singing beside the hedge! What if the bread
Be bitter in thine inn, and thou unshod
To meet the flints? At least it may be said, "Because the way is short, I thank thee, God."
— Mrs. Browning.

"God is commanding us off, every hour of our lives, towards things eternal, there to find our good and build our rest. Sometimes he does it by taking us out of the world, and sometimes by taking the world out of us."— Bushnell.

Unjust complaints. — I have read of Cæsar, that, having prepared a great feast for his nobles and friends, it so fell out that the day appointed was so extremely foul that nothing could be done to the honor of the meeting; whereupon he was so displeased and enraged, that he commanded all them that had bows to shoot up their arrows at Jupiter (their chief god), as in defiance of him for that rainy weather; which, when they did, their arrows fell short of heaven, and fell upon their own heads, so that many of them were very sorely wounded. So all our murmurings, which are so many arrows shot at God Himself, they will return upon our own pates — hearts; they reach not Him, but they will wound us; therefore it is better to be mute than to murmur; it is dangerous to provoke "a consuming fire." (Heb. xii. 29.) — Brooks.

"We should love God's gifts and denials; love what he wishes and what he does not wish." —Joubert.

9, 10. (9) said him,[a] there can be no doubt that she appears as the temptress of her husband, putting into speech the atheistic doubt which the adversary could not directly suggest.[b] Brave and true life appears to her to profit nothing if it has to be spent in pain and desolation. As a figure in the drama she has her place, helping to complete the round of trial.—Watson. (10) said, etc., your words are thoughtless. Shall I believe in God only when He pleases me? He gave riches and has taken them again. He has given health, shall I rebel when He gives sickness? with his lips, i. e. thus far no murmur escaped him.

Good and evil from God.—I. An apparently strange doctrine that good and evil come from God. II. Yet are we not taught that evil as well as good comes from God? III. If evil come upon us we have merited it. IV. The good far more than counterbalances the evil. V. The evil sent upon us by God is the means of working out good for us.—Eadie. Good and evil both from God.—I. Job believed everything to be ordained of God. II. Job considered it an unavoidable consequence of our present state that the life of man should be checkered with good and evil. 1. Let us submit with thankfulness to this form of the Divine administration, in which everything works together for wise purposes; 2. Let us not dare to blame Providence if we see not the tendency of the evils of life; 3. Let us look forward to, and prepare for, that world in which we shall receive only good at the hands of God. III. Job was resolved to receive each state with an equal mind. IV. Explain the nature of resignation. V. Some of those considerations which should lead to the practice of resignation. 1. All affliction cometh from the Lord; 2. It is the consequence of sin; 3. We often mistake the nature of those things we call evils: 4. How many blessings are mingled with them; 5. Affliction produces good results, if we do not by obstinacy oppose its tendency.—Adamson.

A wife's mode of comforting.—At one time I was sorely vexed and tried by my own sinfulness, by the wickedness of the world, and by the dangers that beset the church. One morning I saw my wife dressed in mourning. Surprised, I asked her who had died. "Do you not know?" she replied; "God in heaven is dead." "How can you talk such nonsense, Katie?" I said; "how can God die? Why, He is immortal, and will live through all eternity." "Is that really true?" she asked. "Of course," I said, still not perceiving what she was aiming at; "how can you doubt it? As surely as there is a God in heaven, so sure is it that He can never die." "And yet," she said, "though you do not doubt that, you are so hopeless and discouraged." Then I observed what a wise woman my wife was, and mastered my sadness.—Luther.

the advice of Job's wife a Acc. to Chaldee, "Dinah, his wife, said to him."

b "And yet thou dost hold fast thine integrity, blessing God and dying."—Good.

"Renounce God, and die."—Noyes.

"Bid farewell to God and die."—Rosenmüller.

"Give thanks to God and die."—Castellio.

"Nothing before, nothing behind,
The steps of Faith
Fall on the seeming void and find
The rock beneath."
—Whittier.

"Some very excellent people tell you they dare not hope. To me it seems much more impious to despair."—Sydney Smith.

11—13. Here begins Job's third and severest trial in the visit of his friends, who with the desire to comfort, succeeed only in misunderstanding him, adding to his perplexity of soul and leaving him more utterly alone. (11) when . . friends, his three chief friends. heard . . him, the ruin of so great and rich a man would soon be known. they . . place, ea. fr. his own district; ea. moved by his own sympathy. Eliphaz, (God is strength), "is an old Idumæan name, and Teman, the place of his abode, was famed for the wisdom of its inhabitants (Am. i. 12; Obad. 8; Jer. xlix. 7; Ezek. xxv. 13)."—Cam. Bib. Shuhite, prob. of fam. of Shua.[c] Zophar, sparrow; he was a mere twitterer; he had the least to say, but his speeches were rough and cutting, Naamathite, locality uncertain. for they, etc., if they met at Teman, it was some two hundred miles they were to journey, over dangerous deserts. (12) up . . off, at such a reasonable distance that they might know him. and . . not, the disease had had time enough before their arrival to disfigure him beyond recognition. they . . voice,[d] com. expression to denote grief. (13) seven . . nights, usual time of mourning.[e] "Real is their sympathy, deep, too, as their character and sentiments admit. Let those mock at Job's comforters as wanting, who have traveled two hundred miles over the burning sand to visit a man sunk in disaster, and sat with him seven days and nights in generous silence."—Watson.

Human impotence in the presence of great sorrow.—I. Its causes. 1. Our inability to descend to the depth of another's grief. 2. The powerlessness of any words to relieve the mourner. II. The pain this impotence causes to a true friend. III. The true and only effectual sympathizer, the God-man.—Pul. Com.

Friendship tried in the time of affliction.—It is reported of Herodias, wife

Job is visited by his three friends

c Son of Abraham by Keturah. Acc. to Rawlinson the Shuhites were the Tsukhi, a people on the Euphrates above Hit.

d Ge. xxvii. 38; xxix. 11; Jud. ii. 4; Ru. i. 9; 1 Sa. xxiv. 16.

e Ge. l. 10; 1 Sa. xxxi. 13; Eccles. vii. 2.

"It is by sympathy we enter into the concerns of others, that we are moved as they are moved, and are never suffered to be indifferent spectators of almost anything which men can do or suffer. For sympathy may be considered as a sort of substitution, by which we are put into the place of another man, and affected in many respects as he is affected."—Burke.

"The true test of friendship is to be able to sit or walk with a friend for an hour in perfect silence without wearying of one's company"—Dinah M. Mulock.

"He will have learned the lesson of life who is skilful in the ethics of friendship."—Emerson.

"First on thy friend deliberate with thyself; pause, ponder, sift; not eager in the choice, nor jealous of the chosen; fixing, fix—judge before friendship, then confide till death."—Young.

of Herod the Tetrarch, when the emperor had deprived her husband of the tetrarchy, and banished him into France, understanding that Herodias was Agrippa's sister, gave her all her husband's estate, supposing that she would not go along with him; but she answered the emperor, saying, "There is a cause that hinders me from partaking of your bounty, the affection I bear my husband, because I have shared with him in his felicity." Whereupon the emperor, being displeased with her answer, banished her likewise. And thus it is that true friendship is best tried in times of affliction and distress. A brother, a friend, a wife, is for the time of adversity. Away then with those summer birds, those false-hearted friends, who, like ditches, are full in the winter season, but dry in the heat of summer, when we have most need of them.—J. Spencer. The power of sympathy.—A young lady once visited a lunatic asylum, and was led into a room where there was but one patient, a young girl of the same age as herself. She was standing in the corner of the room, her face almost touching the wall. In stony hopelessness she stood. She neither looked nor spoke. She might have been dead but that she still stood on. It was a pathetic sight. "Will you speak to her?" asked the doctor; "we can do nothing with her. She has been thus for days; but one like yourself might move her." The young lady stepped forward, and, with an upward cry for Divine help, laid her hand gently on the shoulder of the listless form, and with tears in her eyes spoke one sentence of yearning sympathy and compassion. The spell was broken. The poor patient turned, gazed for a moment on the face of the weeping visitor, and then burst into tears. The doctor exclaimed, "Thank God, she may now be saved!" The visitor could never recall the words she had used; but, with the voice softened with tears, they had done their work. The still and cold indifference of the patient gave way before the warmth of a pitying heart and the magic touch of a hand stretched out to help. The eloquence of tears is irresistible.—Hom. Com.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

Job curses the day of his birth

1—3. "In the presence of the companions of his former prosperity, self-control deserts Job, and he breaks out into a passionate cry that he might die. This cry of misery is thrice repeated in the chapter: 1—10. Would God I had never been conceived or born. 11—19. Would God I had died from my birth. 20—26. Why does God continue life to the wretched, who long for death?"—Cam. Bib. (1) After this, i. e. the long silence of his friends. opened . . mouth, formula, expressing deliberation and gravity. cursed, not the word used before,[a] but the proper word for cursing. his day, i. e. his birth day, Comp. i. 4. (2) spake, answered. (3) Let . . born,[b] etc., if there had been no such day, then he had not been. night . . said, R. V., "the night which said," the night is personified as if an agent in this birth.

Job's words of impatience.—Job's language is not to be vindicated, yet in judging of it we are to remember.—I. The extremity of his suffering. II. That the time of his suffering was also a time of spiritual darkness. III. The period at which he lived. IV. The usually depressing nature of his disease. V. That the holiest saint is nothing, except as upheld by Divine Grace. VI. That even in his complaint no reproach is uttered against the Author of his trouble.—Hom. Com.

The maddening force of suffering.—This chapter is the language of a man overwhelmed with suffering, and we must explain it accordingly. We must not apply to it the same canons of interpretation as we would to the language of a man in calmness, in health, in prosperity, in exultation; a man's language must be construed according to the mood of his soul.—Affliction a normal state.—Whatsoever is under the moone is subject to corruption, alterations; and so long as thou livest upon earth looke not for other. Thou shalt not here find peaceable and cheerful dayes, quiet times, but rather cloudes, stormes, calumnies, such is our fate. . . . Yea, but thou thinkest thou art more miserable than the rest, other men are happy in respect of thee, their miseries are but flea-bitings to thine, thou alone art unhappy, none so bad as thyself. Yet if, as Socrates said, "All the men in the world should come and bring their grievances together, of body, mind, fortune, sores, ulcers, madness, epilepsies, agues, and all those common calamities of beggary, want, servitude, imprisonment, and lay them on a heap to be equally divided, wouldst thou share alike, and take thy portion, or be as thou art? Without question a Job i. 11; ii. 9.

b Jer. xx. 14.

"Spots show most on clean white garments. Imperfections seem worst in the best people."—Peloubet.

"It is impossible for that man to despair who remembers that His helper is omnipotent."—Jeremy Taylor.

"I compare the troubles which we have to undergo in the course of the year to a great bundle of fagots, far too large for us to lift. But God thou wouldst be as thou art. If some Jupiter should say, to give us all content—

"Well, be't so then: you, master souldier, Shall be a merchant; you, sir lawyer,
A country gentleman; go you to this,
That side you: why stand yee? It's as well as 'tis."

Every man knows his own but not others' defects and miseries. Be silent then, rest satisfied; comfort thyself with other men's misfortunes, and as the moldiwarpe in Æsope told the fox complaining for want of a tail, and the rest of his companions, "You complain of toies, but I am blinde, be quiet." I say to thee, be thou satisfied. It is recorded of the hares that with a generall consent they went to drown themselves, out of a feeling of their misery; but when they saw a company of frogs more fearful than they were, they began to take courage and comfort again. Confer thine estate with others. Be content, and rest satisfied; for thou art well in the respect of others; be thankful for that thou hast, that God hath done for thee; He hath not made thee a monster, a beast, a base creature, as He might, but a man, a Christian, such a man; consider aright of it, thou art full well as thou art. No man can have what he will; he may choose whether he will desire that which he hath not. Thy lot is falne, make the best of it. If we should all sleep at all times (as Endymion is said to have done), who then were happier than his fellow! Our life is but short, a very dream, and while we look about, eternity is at hand. Our life is a pilgrimage on earth, which wise men pass with great alacrity. If thou be in woe, sorrow, want, distresse, in paine, or sicknesse, think of that of our Apostle, "God chastiseth them whom He loveth," "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy" (Ps. cxxvi. 6). "As the furnace proveth the potter's vessel, so doth temptation try men's thoughts" (Eccles. xxv. 5). 'Tis for thy good. Hadst thou not been so visited thou hadst been utterly undone; as gold in the fire, so men are tried in adversity; and, which Camerarius hath well shadowed in an embleme of a thresher and corn:—

"A threshing separates from straw the corn, By crosses from the world's chaffe are we born."—Burton.

does not requireus to carry the whole at once; He mercifully unties the bundle, and gives us first one stick, which we are to carry to-day, and then another, which we are to carry to-morrow; and so on. This we might easily manage, if we would only take the burden appointed for us each day, but we choose to increase our troubles by carrying yesterday's stick over again to-day, and adding to-morrow's burden to our load, before we are required to bear it."—John Newton.

4, 5. (4) Let . . darkness, etc.,[a] "Let the day of my birth be got rid of, so that no other come into being on such a day; let God pass from it – then He will not give life on that day. Mingled in this is the old world notions of days having meanings and powers of their own. This day had proved malign, terribly bad. It was already a chaotic day, not fit for a man's birth." —Watson. (5) the . . death, = the deepest darkness.[b] stain, R. V., "claim it for their own." Darkness and black death are nearest of kin to that miserable day. Let them claim it for their own." —Cox. cloud . . it, let cloud piled on cloud utterly hide and bury it. blackness . . it, R. V., "let all that maketh black the day terrify it," i. e., eclipses and all kinds of unnatural obscurations.

wishes it may be blotted out a "Let not God seek it."—Noyes.

—"Let not God inquire after it."—Herder.

The maddening force of suffering. — Here is suffering urging a man to the use of extravagant language. Howbeit, it is natural, three facts will show this. 1. Great sufferings generate great passions in the soul; 2. Great passions often become irrepressible; 3. When great passions become irrepressible, they express themselves extravagantly. — Thomas.

Calamity. — A great calamity is as old as the trilobites an hour after it has happened. It stains backward through all the leaves we have turned over in the book of life, before its blot of tears or of blood is dry on the page we are turning. For this we seem to have lived; it was foreshadowed in dreams; in the "dissolving views" of dark day visions; all omens pointed to it; all paths led to it. After the tossing half-forgetfulness of the first sleep that followed such an event, it comes upon us afresh, as a surprise, at waking; in a few moments it is old again — old as eternity. — Holmes.

The fruits of affliction. — Maistres Alyce, in my most hartywise, I commend me to you. And whereas I am enfourmed by my son Heron of the losse of my barnes and our neighbours' also, with all the corn that was therein: albeit (saving God's pleasure) it is a gret pitie of so much good corne lost; yet sith it hath liked Hym to sende us such a chaunce, we must and are bounden, not only to be content, but also to be glad of His visitacion. He sente us all that we have loste, and sith He hath by such a chaunce taken it away

b Phrase of frequent recurrence, Job x. 21, 22; Ps. xxiii. 4; Am. v. 8; Je. ii. 6, etc.

"To be silent, to suffer, to pray when we cannot act, is acceptable to God. A disappointment, a contradiction, a harsh word received and endured as in His presence, is worth more than a long prayer."—Fenelon.

"Graces multiply by affections, as the saints did by persecutions. 'The more they were afflicted the more they multiplied.' These terrors may affront us; they shall not affright us. Crosses be rough and smarting; but we look to the unction of comfort, that makes them portable and easy. In all conditions we bless His providence, who according to His own wisdom, not ours, disposeth things; which, if they be harsh to a state that must suffer, are good for an estate that shall be blessed forever." — T. Adams.

"Instead of cursing the sin in which he was born, Job cursed the day in which he was born."—Moody.

"No human condition should inspire men with absolute despair." —Fielding.

that it may not be numbered with other days

"God is the brave man's hope, and not the coward's excuse." Plutarch.

"When man deals with God, he must never remember what he is before others."

"Before an affliction is digested, consolation ever comes too soon; and after it is digested it comes too late; but there is a mark between these two, as fine almost as a hair, for a comforter to take aim at." — Sterne

"Life takes its coloring from the mind in which it is reflected." —Harris.

againe, His pleasure be fulfilled! Le us never grudge thereat, but take it in good worth and hartely thank Him as well for adversitie as for prosperitie. And peradventure we have more cause to thank Him for our losse than for our winning, for His wisdome better seeth what is good for vs than we do our selves. Therefore, I pray you be of good cheere, and take all the household with you to church, and there thanke God, both for that He hath given us, and for that He hath taken from us, and for that He hath left us; which if it please Hym, He can encrease when He will, and if it please Hym to leave us yet lesse, at His pleasure be it! I pray you to make some good ensearche what my poore neighbours have loste, and bid them take no thought therfore; for if I shold not leave myself a spone, there shal no poore neighbour of mine bere losse by any chaunce happened in my house. I pray you be, with my children and your household, merry in God; and devise somewhat with your frendes what way wer best to take for provisions to be made for corne for our household and for sede thys yere comming, if ye thinke it good that we kepe the ground still on our handes. And whether ye think it good we shall do so or not, yet I think it were not best sodenlye thus to leave it all up, and to put away our folk of our farme, till we have somewhat advised us thereon. Howbeit if we have more nowe then ye shall nede, and which can get them other maisters, ye may then discharge us of them. But I would not that any man were sodenly sent away, he wote nere wether. At my coming hither I perceived none other but that I shold tarry still with the kinge's grace. But now I shal, I thinke, because of this chaunce, get leave this next weke to come home and se you, and then shall we further devyse together uppon all thinges what order shal be best to take. And thus hartely fare you well, with all our children as ye can wishe. At Woodestok, the thirde day of Septembre, by the hand of Thomas More, knight. Your louing husbande.

6, 7. (6) night, vs. 3. let darkness, R. V., "thick darkness," like a robber carry the night away as his booty. joined unto, R. V., "rejoice among," glad in its share of the joyous days; the idea is, that all the days rejoice, but this shall be silent. (7) solitary, R. V., "barren," as Is. xlix. 21. "Let it not experience a parent's joy, and let nought that lives date its birth from it. — Camb. Bib.

The maddening force of suffering. — Here is suffering urging a man to deplore the fact of his existence. In this passage he deplores — 1. The fact that he existed at all; 2. That having existed, he did not die at the very dawn of his being. The fact that suffering can thus make existence intolerable suggests the following truths. 1. Annihilation is not the worst of evils; 2. Desire for death is no proof of genuine religion; 3. Hell must be an overwhelmingly terrible condition of existence. — Thomas.

Hidden sorrows. — Many a heart and countenance wears a semblance of gladness, only to conceal its deep sorrow. We cannot always judge of a man by what he seems. Looking at the sea of life, we see it studded over with white sails and gay pennons, and sparkling waves; we forget its eddying whirlpools and treacherous reefs and brooding storms. How little do God's ministers know, in looking down from their pulpits on apparently bright faces, gay attire, and undimmed eyes, how many breaking hearts there are; sorrows too deep for utterance, with which a stranger dare not intermeddle! No, we cannot let all that looks happy pass for unmingled joy. It is often the reverse; like the wretched singer on the streets, who, passing from door to door, struggles to warble her gleeful songs. Singing! It is a poor counterfeit of crushing sorrow. Singing! The tones are joyous; but little does the passer-by know of the long tale of woe — the widow's agony, the orphan's tears, the desolate hearth, which is muffled and dissembled under that apparent "glee." — Macduff.

8—10. (8) Let . . day,[a] let hired diviners, who are supposed to render a day one of evil omen, invoke maledictions on this day. ready . . mourning, R. V., "ready to rouse up leviathan," the mythical beast who by enfolding and swallowing sun or moon caused eclipses and darkness. (9) twilight, lit. the breathing, i. e. the hour when the cool breezes blow. neither . . day, R. V., "neither let it behold the eyelids of the morning," i. e. the long streaming rays of morning light. Arab poets "use the word eye as a synonym of sun, and describe the flashing of the sun's rays as 'the twinkling of the eye.'" — Cox. (10) nor . . eyes, by preventing conception and birth.

[a] The practice of cursing the day or the sun, is said to have prevailed among an African tribe called the Atlantes.

"Suffering is a wonderful fertilizer to the roots of Afflictions. — Stars shine brightest in the darkest night; torches give the best light when beaten; grapes yield most wine when most pressed; spices smell sweetest when pounded; vines are the better for bleeding; gold looks the brighter for scouring; juniper smells sweetest in the fire; camomile the more you tread it, the more you spread it. The Jews were best when most afflicted. Afflictions are the saint's best benefactors to heavenly affections. Where afflictions hang heaviest, corruptions hang loosest. And grace, that is hid in nature, as sweet water in rose-leaves, is then most fragrant when the fire of affliction is put under to distil it out. — T. Brookes.

character. The great object of this life is character. This is the only thing we can carry with us into eternity. To gain the most of it and the best of it is the object of probation." —Phelps.

Selfish grief. —

Let him walk in the gloom whoso will. Peace be with him! But whence is his right To assert that the world is in darkness because he has turned from the light?
Or seek to o'ershadow my day with the pall of his self-chosen night?
— Solomon Solis Cohen.

11, 12. (11) Why, etc., a question that leads to a descr. of what he then would have been. (12) prevent,[a] R. V., "receive," why did my father, on whose knees I was laid at birth, not disown me? why . . suck? or why did my mother nourish me and keep me alive?

he wishes he had died in infancy

[a] Is. lxvi. 12.

The knees preventing. — This is not to be understood of the mother; but of the father, as it was usual for him to take the child upon his knees as soon as it was born (Gen. i. 23). This custom obtained among the Greeks and Romans. Hence the goddess Levana had her name, causing the father in this way to own the child.

"Sanctified afflictions are healing medicines."

"Afflictions clarify the soul."—Quarles.

13–16. (13) now, instead of this suffering, I should be in the grave slept, the sleep of death. (14) With . . earth, "the speaker wishes to indicate that instead of lying in squalor and being the contempt of the low-born race of men as he now is (ch. xxx.), if he had died he would have been in company of the great dead who played famous parts in life." — Camb. Bib. (16) untimely, premature. infants . . light, as one still-born.

in which case he had been in the grave

The grave a rest. — As the worn laborer longs for the rest of the eventide, so does the over-wrought spirit of the sad long for the rest of the grave. Let us think of the grave — I. As longed for by the weary. II. As the only rest known to the ignorant. III. The grave brings no rest to the unfaithful. IV. The rest of the grave is a true reward to the faithful. But not as a mere cessation of activity. 1. It ends for them the time of exposure to temptation. 2. It marks the limits of probation. 3. It exchanges warfare for triumph; hard toil for honorable repose; danger for safety; the cross for the crown. 4. It brings the perfectness of all blessing in the everlasting life and the fulness of joy which are promised to the obedient and the pure. — Pul. Com. Two standpoints. — John Bacon was an eminent English sculptor. Hundreds of thousands of visitors to Westminster Abbey have gazed upon the fruits of his skill in the monument of Lord Chatham, and his name and fame are transmitted to succeeding generations by the poet Cowper, who says of him, that he — "Gives more than female beauty to a stone,

And Chatham's eloquence to marble lips."

He lived and died in the faith of a Christian, and desiring to bear his testimony to the Gospel after his death, he ordered by his will a plain tablet, with the following inscription, to be placed near his grave: "What I was as an artist seemed to be of some importance while I lived; but what I really was as a believer in Christ Jesus is the only thing of importance to me now."

"As surely as the sepulchre of Christ became an empty sepulchre, so surely the sepulchres of His people shall become empty sepulchres also; as surely as He got up and sang a jubilee of life and immortality, so surely shall His people come out of the grave."—Beaumont.

17. There, in the grave. wicked . . troubling,[b] i. e. "cease from their state of continual perturbation and unrest, Isa. lvii. 20. This is their condition so long as they live; nothing satisfies them; they are always in trouble themselves, and always causing trouble to others." —Rawlinson. rest, this is the central thought in Job's longing for death. His body is worn out. And the grave is to him a place of rest for all classes or men. It is the O. T. idea of the future state as a place in which is no power or energy. Comp. Ps. xciv. 17; cxv. 17.

where there is rest and peace

[b] 2 Pet. ii. 8.

"Within every healing shadow is God Himself." — Collyer.

"The world proposes rest by the removal of a burden. The Redeemer gives rest by giving us the spirit and power to bear the burden."

Rest.—

Through burden and heat of the day
How weary the hands and the feet,
The labor with scarcely a stay
Through burden and heat!
Tired toiler, whose sleep shall be sweet,
Kneel down — it will rest thee to pray;
Then forward, for daylight is fleet.
Cool shadows grow lengthened and gray,
Cool twilight will soon be complete.
What matter the wearisome way Through burden and heat? — Christina Rossetti.

where the prisoners rest, and servants are free

18, 19. (18) prisoners, i. e. captives, who were always employed in hard labor, in mines, on buildings, etc. hear . . oppressor, i. e. their slave-master, who was notoriously cruel. (19) small . . there, for death levels all. "In no part of the O. T. is a difference in the lot of those in the realm of death distinctly spoken of. Only in Isa. xiv. 15; Ezek. xxxii. 23, where the fallen conquerors are relegated to the lowest depths, can we find any indication of different grades in the realm of the dead. Elsewhere only a division into peoples and races, and not a division of the just and unjust is spoken of." — Oehler.

"The earth opens impartially her bosom to receive the beggar and the prince." — Horace.

"The grave is, I suspect, the sole commonwealth which attains that dead flat of social equality that life in its every principle so heartily abhors." — Bulwer Lytton.

The resurrection. — Is it so, that these bodies of yours shall rise and be in glory with Jesus Christ? Then, O all you, the elect of God, fear not death, because death is a fitting your bodies for that estate wherein you shall live with Christ in glory forever. Did death annihilate you and frustrate you of glory, you might fear Death; but death doth to you as a husbandman with his corn. Should he keep his corn always in his house, he would grow a beggar quickly; but he casts his corn in the ground, and there it lies and rots, that so a fivefold reward may come to him of it. So God makes you lie in the grave — not forever, but that He might show His power in raising you up at the last day. — Chris. Love.

he asks why the sad should live

20—23. (20) light, probably we should render, "wherefore gives He light?" the Author of light and life being alluded to obliquely and not named. the bitter, is plur., those that are bitter in soul. Job's eye looks over mankind and sees many in the same condition of misery as himself. Comp. ch. vii. 1 seq."[a] — Cam. Bib. (21) long . . not, regarding death as a privilege. (22) Which . . exceedingly, Heb. "who rejoice upon joy or exultation." (23) light . . hid,[b] light to him only reveals the nature and extent of his woe; but shows no way of escape. The reference is especially to his own mental and spiritual perplexity; comp. xix. 8.

A bitter question (vs. 20). — Life is wisely and graciously continued even to sufferers. I. If the sufferer be unprepared for death, it is continued for such preparation. II. If he be prepared it is continued. 1. For proof and trial of his state. 2. For further sanctification. 3. For enhancement of future glory and happiness. 4. For the edification of others. 5. For the glory of Him who is both the Author and Finisher of Faith. — Hom. Com.

a "To desire to die so as to be free fr. sin is a mark of grace; to desire to die so as to escape troubles is a mark of corruption. He was ill fitted to die, who was so unwilling to live."—Fassett.

Hidden treasures. — We are constantly hearing of treasures which have been or are about to be discovered. Sometimes you may see a large space of ground, which has been completely turned up, or an old foundation, or ruin, entirely demolished, in hopes of finding the hidden gold. A man has found a small coin, has heard a tradition, or has had a dream, and off he goes to his toil. Perhaps he has been seen on the spot, or he has consulted a soothsayer; the report gets out; and then come the needy, the old, and the young, a motley group, all full of anxiety, to join in the spoil. Some have iron instruments, others have sticks, and some their fingers to cratch up the ground. At last some of them begin to look at each other with considerable suspicion, as if all were not right, and each seems to wish he had not come on so foolish an errand, and then steal off as quietly as they can. I once knew a deep tank, made completely dry (by immense labor), in the hope of finding great treasures, which were said to have been cast in during the ancient wars. Passing near, one day, when they had nearly finished their work, and their hopes had considerably moderated, I went up to the sanguine owner (whose face immediately began to show its chagrin), and inquired, "Why are you taking so much trouble to empty that tank?" He replied as calmly as he could, "We are merely cleaning it out." Poor man! I believe he found b Job xix. 8-9; La. iii. 7.

"Tears and sorrows and losses are a part of what must be experienced in this present state of life; some for our manifest good; and all, therefore, it is trusted, for our good concealed,—for our final and greatest good."—Leigh Hunt.

nothing but stones and bones, and a few copper coins. "Dig for it more than for hid treasures," finds a practical illustration in the East, and is a figure of common use in the language. — Roberts.

24—26. (24) sighing . . eat," my sorrow prevents my eating. (25) thing . . me, "gloomy and terrifying apprehensions are one of the most painful symptoms of elephantiasis. And Job here asserts that whatever presentiment of evil it bred in time, was straightway realized."— Cox. (26) I . . safety, R. V., "I am not at ease." One trouble follows another without pause. The writer of this book has to show how far faith may be pressed down and bent by the sore burdens of life without breaking. — Watson.

and deplores his own sad condition a Ps. xlii. 3.

"The holding on to God, the trusting God in the dark, shows more faith, cultivates faith more, than to merely know half the truths in the universe."—Peloubet.

Lessons taught by the sufferings of Job. — We are taught — I. The utmost power that the devil is capable of exerting on man. 1. He did not destroy life; 2. He did not destroy piety. II. We also learn the strength of genuine religion. Here we have two things to help us which Job had not. 1. The example of Christ; 2. The assurance of a future life. — Thomas.

"The thing which I greatly feared." — A tender conscience fears reverses in the height of prosperity, and in consequence of it. Paulus Emilius, a Roman general, on the death of his two sons immediately after an unusually splendid triumph, said, "I have always had a dread of Fortune, and because in the course of this war she prospered every measure of mine, the more did I expect that some tempest would follow so favorable a gale."— Hom. Com. Ministry of affliction. — An invalid of twenty years, whose sufferings were extreme, was one night thinking of the reason of this long-continued infliction. Suddenly the room filled with light, and a beautiful form bent over her, saying, "Daughter of sorrow, art thou impatient?" "No; but I am full of pain and disease, and I see no end, nor can I see why I must suffer thus. I know that I am a sinner; but I hoped that Christ's sufferings, and not mine, would save me. Oh! why does God deal thus with me?" "Come with me, daughter, and I will show thee." "But I cannot walk." "True, true! There, gently, gently!" He tenderly took her up in his arms, and carried her over land and water, till he set her down in a far-off city, and in the midst of a large workshop. The room was full of windows, and the workmen seemed to be near the light, and each with his own tools; and all seemed to be so intent upon their work that they neither noticed the new-comers nor spoke to one another. They seemed to have small, brown pebbles, which they were grinding and shaping and polishing. Her guide pointed her to one who seemed to be most earnestly at work. He had a half-polished pebble, which was now seen to be a diamond, in a pair of strong iron pincers. He seemed to grasp the little thing as if he would crush it, and to hold it on to the rough stone without mercy. The stone whirled, and the dust flew, and the jewel grew smaller and lighter. Ever and anon he would stop, hold it up to the light, and examine it carefully. "Workman," said the sufferer, "will you please to tell me why you bear on, and grind the jewel so hard?" "I want to grind off every flaw and crack in it." "But don't you waste it?" "Yes; but what is left is worth so much the more. The fact is, this diamond, if it will bear the wheel long enough, is to occupy a very important place in the crown we are making up for our king. We take much more pains with such. We have to grind and polish them a great while; but when they are done they are very beautiful. The king was here yesterday, and was much pleased with our work, but wanted this jewel, in particular, to be ground and polished a great deal. So you see how hard I hold it down on this stone. And, see! there is not a crack nor a flaw in it! What a beauty it will be!" Gently the guide lifted up the poor sufferer and again laid her down on her own bed of pain. "Daughter of sorrow, dost thou understand the vision?" "Oh, yes! but may I ask you one question?" "Certainly." "Were you sent to me to show me all this?" "Assuredly." "Oh! may I take to myself the consolation that I am a diamond, and am now in the hands of the strong man, who is polishing it for the crown of the Great King?" "Daughter of sorrow, thou mayest have that consolation; and every pang of suffering shall be like a flash of lightning in a dark night, revealing eternity to thee; and hereafter thou shalt 'run without weariness, and walk without faintness,' and sing with those who have 'come out of great tribulation.'"— Todd.

"God washes the eyes with tears until they can behold the invisible land where tears shall come no more. O love! O affliction! ye are the guides that show us the way through the great airy space where our loved ones walked; and as hounds easily follow the scent before the dew be risen, so God teaches us, while yet our sorrow is wet, to follow on and find our dear ones in heaven."—Beecher.

"Hard words will vex; unkindness will pierce; neglect will wound; threatened evils will make the soul quiver; sharp pain or weariness will rack the body or make it restless. But what says the psalmist, 'When my heart is vexed I will complain.' To whom? Not of God, but to God."— Pusey.

"Human misery is to Divine mercy as a black soil to a sparkling diamond; or as a sable cloud to the sunbeams."— William Secker.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

Eliphaz replies — his courteous commencement

1, 2. (1) Eliphaz, see ii. 11. Here begin the controversies of Job's aged friends, who represent "the dogged defenders of the traditional popular belief."—Dean Stanley. The great debate is divided into three circles of speeches: (1) ch. iv.–xiv.; (2) ch. xv.–xxi.; (3) ch. xxii.–xxxi. Each of these three circles contains six speeches, one by each of the three friends in succession, with a reply from Job. In the last round, however, the third speaker, Zophar, fails to come forward.—Davidson. (2) If . . grieved? will you take it ill, if we venture to speak? but . . speaking, we must speak whether you will or no.

"A man can never be a true gentleman in manner until he is a true gentleman at heart."—Dickens.

Grounds of the harsh judgment of Job by his three friends.—The three friends come to the contemplation of Job's suffering, and to the discussion of the meaning of them, with a principle which they all agreed in holding. Like all Shemitic thinkers they have no idea of what we call second causes. In their view God is in immediate relation to the world and the lives of men, and does all directly that happens. Evil and good come immediately from His hand; and being a righteous ruler every event of His providence must be either a reward of good or a retribution on evil. But God is far from being an impersonal moral balance, weighing out happiness and adversity according to the deserts of men, with no interest in their fate. On the contrary, His eyes are on the righteous, and though He chastens them for their sin, His chastisement is not in order that they may perish (iv. 7); it is correction, meant to wean them from their evil and turn them again in humility and repentance unto righteousness. Therefore "happy is the man whom God correcteth" (ch. v. 17); such correction is an arrest laid upon him in his way of evil. Calamity therefore is not in itself decisive of the character of a man, though it is decisive of the fact that he has sinned. The issue of calamity only can show what a man really is. If he is a righteous man, he accepts it as the warning of God and turns from his evil, and his future life is filled with blessings from God, and he shall enjoy length of days and all prosperity (v. 19–27). If he is evil he murmurs and rejects the Divine correction, and brings wrath upon himself and perishes (v. 2). These principles explain the course pursued by the three friends towards Job. However strange it might seem to them they had on their principles no help but to conclude that Job, though a righteous man as they had always thought him, and continued to think him, had been guilty of acts of sin very displeasing unto God.—Camb. B.

"We write our blessings on the water, but our afflictions on the rock."—Guthrie.

"Afflictions clarify the soul, and, like hard masters, give more hard directions, tutoring the nonage of uncurbed affections."—Quarles.

"What we call zeal for principle is often only a desire to have our own way."—Lookout.

he who had comforted others, now suffered himself

3—5. (3) thou . . many, how to bear their trials. A tribute to Job's character. thou . . hands,[a] Job had been a helper of the weak. (4) Thy . . falling, as words of seasonable encouragement. thou . . knees,[b] he had assisted those who were bowing under the burden of life. (5) it is come, i. e., trouble, which is the common lot of man. faintest,[c] he who had comforted others can find none for himself.

Job.—As for Job he agreed w. his three friends in believing th. all events occurred thro. the immed. agency of God. Further he agreed w. them th. evil or suffering was inflicted by God on those whom He held guilty of having sinned. But Job's consciousness of his own innocence forbade his drawing the conclusion w. his friends th. he had been guilty of great and specific offenses. He was driven therefore to the conclusion that, though he was not guilty, God had resolved to hold him guilty (ix. 29 and often), and treat him as if he were so. Hence he is led to charge God with injustice.—Camb. B.

a Is. xxxv. 3.
b He. xii. 12.
c He. ii. 14, 17, 18; iv. 15, 16.

"This is that which we call character,—a reserved force which acts directly by presence, and without means."—Emerson.

did not this suffering come from sin?

6—8. (6) Is . . ways, R. V., "Is not thy fear of God thy confidence, and thy hope the integrity of thy ways?" i. e. just as he reminded others of their integrity and their fear of God, that he might comfort them, so let him now cherish a like grounded hope and confidence. (7) Remember, etc., the argument thus far is: "The pious and upright are never cut off. You are pious and upright. Why so downcast and despairing? There is solid ground for hope in the uprightness of your life."—Cox. (8) Even . . seen, appeal to observation. they . . same, a proverb.[d] d Ga. vi. 7, 8; Pr. xxii. 8; Hos. viii. 7.

"He that planteth thorns shall not gather roses."—Persian Prov

The life of a sinner is a foolish agriculture.—I. All human life is a sowing and a reaping. II. Life's reaping is determined by its sowing. III. The reaping of the sinner is a terrible destiny. From this subject learn—1. The great solemnity of life; 2. The conscious rectitude of the sinner's doom; 3. The necessity for a godly heart.— Thomas.

The three friends. — The friends have each a well-marked individuality, and represent distinct aspects of religious conviction among mankind. Eliphaz, who on each occasion opens the debate, is the most dignified, the calmest and most considerate, and perhaps the oldest of Job's friends. He is a man almost of prophetic rank, who speaks with the composure and authority and clear eye of a seer, as one to whom revelations by vision have been granted from Heaven (iv. 12 seq). Bildad, a man of less consideration, is a representative of the class of the wise (Jerem. xviii. 18; Prov. i. 6); an observer of life, one who generalizes on the ways of God to man, whose mind is stored with the priceless moral precedents of past ages, and who reposes upon the conclusions of thoughtful men of all times (ch. viii.), while Zophar is the private religious man of strong personal conviction, who doubtless lives by the truth he believes, and cannot imagine how any one should question it; who gets irritated and indulges in unworthy imputations against any one who disputes the truth of his principles. All three were sincere men, though their sincerity had never perhaps been put to the proof as Job's had been.— Camb. B.

"The field of wrong brings forth death as its fruit." —Æschylus.

"When tried and afflicted, be persuaded that your punishment is far beneath your sin; and this will make you patient and thankful." — Greenham.

9—11. (9) blast, etc.,[a] anger of God, ill. by fierce, hot winds of the East (10) The . . lion, etc., the fiercest men, here comp. to lions, cannot withstand the wrath of God. (11) stout lion's whelps, R. V., "whelps of the lioness." It is a den that is broken up.

Breath of the nostrils (vs. 9). — When people are angry they distend their nostrils and blow with great force: the action may be taken from some animals, which, when angry, blow violently through their noses. Of a man who is much given to anger, it is said, "That fellow is always blowing through his nose." "You may blow through your nose for a thousand years, it will never injure me." "Go not near the breath of his nostrils, he will injure you." — Roberts.

sinners perish before the anger of God

[a] Ac. ix. 1; 2 Sa. xxii. 16; Ps. xviii. 15.

"God has been pleased to prescribe limits to His own power, and to work his ends within those limits." — Paley.

12—14. (12) a little, R. V., "a whisper," Eliphaz has received a revelation, and this is the second point he wishes to impress on his friend. He has learned that God only is holy.[b] (13) thoughts . . visions,[c] com. mode of Divine communication in the old time. He had slept and dreamed. Then he awakened and thought upon his dreams. came . . me, while he was thinking he was seized with fear and trembling.[d]

Fellowship with the unseen. — Whatever the nature of this vision, the three following propositions which it suggests would be true: I. That man has a capacity to hold intercourse with the spiritual world. The existence of such a world is one of the fundamental faiths of humanity. II. That man's character places him in a humble position in the spiritual world. The address of the spirit significantly expresses man's moral inferiority. III. That man's earthly state is but a temporary separation from a conscious existence in the spiritual world. This body is spoken of as a house. It is not me, it is only my dwelling. Several things are suggested about this departure into the conscious existence in the spiritual world. 1. It is inevitable; 2. It is constantly progressing; 3. It is frequently disregarded; 4. This departure terminates earthly glory. — Thomas. The mysterious visitant. — Eliphaz gives an account of — I. What he felt. II. What he saw. Concerning this spirit the following particulars are stated. 1. Its proximity; 2. Its stationary position; 3. Its indistinctness; 4. The terror was increased by the silence. III. What he heard. A vindication of the Divine character. 1. His justice; 2. His holiness; 3. His independence and self-sufficiency; 4. His wisdom.

Eliphaz's vision

[b] "Mine ear received a whisper along with it." — Good. "Mine ear caught a whisper thereof." — Noyes.

[c] Is. i. 1; Ge. ii. 21; xv. 12.

[d] So Virgil, — "A cold tremor ran through all their bones." — Æn. ii. 120.

"The slender capacity of man's heart cannot comprehend, much less utter, that unsearchable depth and burning zeal of God's love towards us." — Luther.

15—17. (15) spirit, a breath swept over his face, as if caused by some passing presence. "Spirit" does not mean apparition in O. T. hair . . up, a well-known effect of profound fear.[e] (16) but . . thereof, it was shadowy, indistinct. voice, LXX. gentle breeze, whisper. (17) Camb. B. translates:

> "Can man be righteous before God?
> Can a man be pure before his Maker?"

i. e., all men are imperfect in the sight of God.

Eliphaz reproves Job. — In the course of his reproof, Eliphaz mentions a revelation which he had received from heaven. This revelation we shall now he saw a spirit pass before him

[e] Virgil, Æn. ii. 774; iii. 48; iv. 289; xii. 868; see also the ghost's speech to Hamlet.

"What must He be, great Master Workman, seeing that all the unselfishness, compassion and love that are continually shining out in our humanity are but faint reflections of Him." — Kate W. Hamilton.

consider. I. The truths intended to be made known were these — That no man is pure before God ; 2. That no man can claim anything at the hands of God ; 3. That no man under any circumstances can have reason to complain of God. II. As tending to decide the controversy between Job and his friends. Consider it — 1. As it was applied by Eliphaz ; 2. As it ought to have been applied. — Simeon. The shadowy voice. — I. The sinfulness of man demonstrated. 1. A question (vs. 17) asked, which is (1) searching, (2) elevating. (3) discriminating, (4) challenging. 2. A premise (vs. 18) stated. 3. A deduction (vs. 19) made. II. An affecting representation of human frailty. Contrasted with the angelic race, man is depicted as a creature (1) whose origin is mean, (2) whose duration is short, (3) whose importance is small, (4) whose glory is evanescent (5) whose failure is conspicuous. Learn : 1. That heaven is never far removed from the pious. 2. That those who think most about God obtain most communications from God. 3. That Divine voices seldom speak in tempests and hurricanes, but mostly in still, small voices. 4. That God, being higher than the highest, should be regarded by all His creatures with reverence and fear. 5. That, in the judgment of Heaven, no life is successful that terminates without having attained to wisdom. — Pul. Com.

" Friendship is the shadow of the evening, which strengthens with the setting sun of life."— La Fontaine.

the greatness of God

18—19. (18) servants, i. e. the angels. and . . folly,[a] in the eye of absolute wisdom even the angels are not without flaw. (19) how much less, R. V., "how much more."[b] of clay, i. e. earthy in contrast with the spirit nature of the angels. An enlargement on vs. 17. which . . moth, "like the moth," i. e. crushed as easily as a moth; LXX.

Man's inferiority to angels. — I. The habitation they occupy is mean and obscure. II. They are exposed to all kinds of destructive influences. III. Their departure is felt but little by others, they are destitute of what is of most importance to themselves, — wisdom. — Hom. Com. A message from the unseen (vss. 17–21). — I. The obvious facts. In the three regions man's littleness is compared to God's greatness. 1. Moral. 2. Intellectual. 3. Vital. II. Their just effects. They should work in us — 1. Humility. 2. Contrition. 3. Patience. 4. Trust. 5. Obedience. — Adeney.

a 2 Pe. ii. 4.

b Ps. viii. 4.

The moth (vs. 19). — It is probable that this means a moth-worm, which is one state of the creature alluded to. It is first enclosed in an egg, from whence it issues a worm, and after a time becomes a complete insect, or moth. The following extracts from Niebuhr may throw light on the passage, that man is crushed by so feeble a thing as a worm :— " A disease very common in Yemen is the attack of the Guiney-worm, or the Vena-Medinensis it is called by the physicians of Europe. The disease is supposed to be occasioned by the use of putrid waters, which people are obliged to drink in several parts of Yemen ; and for this reason the Arabians always pass water with the nature of which they are unacquainted, through a linen cloth, before drinking it. When one unfortunately swallows any of the eggs of this insect, no immediate consequence follows ; but after a considerable time, the worm begins to show itself through the skin. Our physician, Mr. Cramer, was, within a few days of his death, attacked by five of these worms at once, although this was more than five months after we had left Arabia. In the isle of Karek I saw a French officer named Le Page, who, after a long and difficult journey performed on foot, and in an Indian dress, between Pondicherry and Surat, through the heart of India, was busy extracting a worm out of his body. He supposed that he had got it by drinking bad water in the country of the Mahrattas. This disorder is not dangerous if the person affected can extract the worm without breaking it. With this view it is rolled on a small bit of wood as it comes out of the skin. It is slender as a thread, and two or three feet long. It gives no pain as it makes its way out of the body, unless what may be occasioned by the care which must be taken of it for some weeks. If unluckily it be broken, it then returns into the body, and the most disagreeable consequences ensue, palsy, a gangrene, and sometimes death. — Burder.

" Man is but a little thing in the midst of the objects of nature, yet by the moral quality radiating from his countenance, he may abolish all considerations of magnitude, and, in his manners equal the majesty of the world."—Emerson.

" Man, if he compare himself with all that he can see, is at the zenith of his power ; but if he compare himself with all he can conceive, he is at the nadir of weakness."— Colton.

the weakness of man

20, 21. (20) from morning to, R. V., "Betwixt morning and," in the course of a single day. Is. xxxviii. 12. Man's life is a short day, during which the work of decay is proceeding. they . . it,[c] of so little importance is any man that the living are unaffected by the work of death around them. (21) Doth . . away, R. V., " Is not their tent cord plucked up within them ? " c Ps. cxlvi. 3, 4.

Pluck up the tent cord and the tent falls. wisdom,[a] they pass away before they know much.

Morning and evening. — Morning and evening are as two great iron plates — gone is a man when they close upon him! He steps upon no eternities, he does not live from generation to generation, in his little personality, — proud, mighty, royal, rich: he will die somewhere betwixt "morning and evening." — Parker.

[a] Is. ii. 22.

I know Thee who hast kept my path and made Light for me in the darkness, tempering sorrow so that it reach me like a solemn joy. — Browning.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1, 2. (1) Call . . thee, R. V., "call now; is there any," etc. Since this is so, and angels as well as men are erring before God, is there any one who will support you in your complaint? The question implies a negative answer. saints,[b] R. V., "holy ones," angels. (2) wrath, the wrath of man with heaven only brings down destruction upon him, and envy of God's dealings brings punishment. "Resentment slayeth the foolish man, passion killeth the silly." — Watson.

who will answer prayer if God does not?

[b] Job xv. 15; Zec. xiv. 5; Ps. lxxxix. 5, 7; Da. iv. 13.

The folly and effects of fretting against God. — I. It is the part only of fools to fret against God and His procedure. II. Fretting against God's dealings brings its own punishment. 1. It robs of peace, which is the spirit's life; 2. Affects the health and hastens death; 3. Injures the life and property of the soul; 4. Brings greater chastening and punishment from God. Note — Passion and impatience in trouble are more hurtful and crushing than the trouble itself. — Hom. Com.

Envy. — There once sailed from the city of New Orleans, in America, a large and noble steam-vessel, freighted with cotton, and having many passengers on board. While the cargo was being embarked, a portion of it became slightly moistened by a shower of rain then falling. This circumstance, however, was not noticed, — the cotton being closely packed, and the hatchways fastened down. During the first part of the voyage all went well, but in the middle of the Atlantic the ship's crew were suddenly alarmed by a fearful cry of fire, and in a few moments the noble vessel was enveloped in flames. The damp and closely packed cotton had become heated, daily smoldering and getting in a more dangerous state until, at last it burst out into a broad sheet of flame, solely from the effects of spontaneous combustion. The passengers and crew were soon compelled to take to the boats; some were consumed or suffocated in the flames, and many more drowned in the sea. The heated cotton smoldering in the hold of this vessel aptly illustrates the condition of that man who harbors resentment and envy in his breast; it gradually stifles all the better feelings of his nature: obtains the complete mastery over his spirit, — then bursts forth into acts of violence, and leads him to the commission of deeds the very thought of which, at another time, would compel him to shudder and start with horror. — Clement.

Envy, like a corroding plaster, lies gnawing at the heart, and indeed is founded in grief, that being the object of it, either in himself or others, through all the conditions that are. Either he grieves in himself when another is happy, or else, if ever he does rejoice, it is certainly because another does suffer; so calamity seems the center that he points into. — Feltham.

Cyrus, the Persian king, was accustomed to say, that did men but know the cares he had to sustain, he thought no man would wish to wear his crown.

3–5. (3) the foolish, i. e. a foolish man, a case under his own observation. taking root, outwardly prospering. but . . habitation,[c] when it was seen that his prosperity was not founded on right and truth. (4) His . . safety,[d] they are involved in their father's ruin. crushed, broken in pieces. gate,[e] in court of justice there held. Their quarrelsome, litigious spirit here suggested. neither . . them, they are not pitied nor aided. (5) harvest, substance. taketh . . thorns, the hedge being broken through. robber swalloweth, etc., R. V., "the snare gapeth for," "all the wealth of the fool and his family would suddenly disappear as through some huge trap, which had long gaped for it, had swallowed it in an instant." — Cox.

the end of the wicked is misery

[c] Ps. lxix. 25; lxxiii. 3, 17, 18.

[d] Ex. xx. 5.

[e] Job xxix. 7; xxxi. 21.

The prosperity of the ungodly. — The ungodly frequently prosper in this life. God may have wise reasons for permitting them to prosper. 1. It exercises the faith and patience of the godly; 2. Teaches the great inferiority of earthly to heavenly blessings; 3. Confirms the truth of a judgment to come. Note: — The godly are too much loved to receive their portion in this life. The good things of this life are only the bones cast to dogs. — Rutherford.

Poverty wants some, luxury many, and avarice all things. — Cowley.

Misery in apparent prosperity. — The greatest wealth does not shield its possessor from misery and unhappiness. "The legends of the East describe Solomon as tormented, indeed, yet not without hope. In the romance of Vathek he is described as listening earnestly to the roar of a cataract, because when it ceases to roar his anguish will be at an end. The king so renowned for his wisdom was on the loftiest elevation, and placed immediately beneath

"It is one of the worst effects of prosperity to make a man a vortex instead of a fountain so that, instead of throwing out, he learns only to draw in." — Beecher.

The more the diamond is cut, the more it sparkles; the heavier the cross is, the heavier is the saint's crown.

the dome, "The thunder," said he, "precipitated me hither, where, however, I do not remain totally destitute of hope; for an angel of light hath revealed that in consideration of the piety of my early youth, my woes shall come to an end. Till then I am in torments, ineffable torments; an unrelenting fire preys on my heart." The caliph was ready to sink with terror when he heard the groans of Solomon. Having uttered this exclamation, Solomon raised his hands towards heaven, in token of supplication, and the caliph discerned through his bosom, which was transparent as crystal, his heart enveloped in flames. — Farrar.

man is born to trouble

a Ge. iii. 17-19.

"Eliphaz leaves Job to make the application of this, and other sayings of his, to himself." — Wordsworth.

6, 7, (6) affliction, etc.,[a] "Affliction is not accidental, nor a spontaneous growth of the earth, but men acting after the impulses of their evil nature bring it on themselves." — Camb B. (7) sparks, lit. children of flame, or sons of the coal.

Trouble. — I. Its origin. 1. It is from a necessity and law imposed on our existence in this world; 2. From sin, which is the ground of that necessity. In the government of a good and righteous God suffering could exist only — 1. As a legal necessity in consequence of disobedience to His laws; or, 2. As a moral necessity for the discipline of His erring children. II. Its universality. Tears moisten the pillow of down as well as the pallet of straw. This ought to render us — 1. Patient under our own trouble; 2. Sympathizing with that of others. III. Its certainty. 1. The hand that made us has, since the entrance of sin, made us sufferers; 2. Only through the incarnation and suffering of the Son of Man, our sufferings are not external, — Hom. Com.

Affliction is like the wind that blows one vessel into port, another to destruction. — Spurgeon.

Music from storms. — "A nobleman undertook to form an Æolian harp between the two great towers of his castle. He stretched the wires, but the wind gave no sound, and he deemed his work a failure. One night there came a mighty storm, and then the silent harp awoke and poured forth its music. It needed the force of the tempest to call forth its tones." So often it needs the storm of trouble to bring the music of heaven from our souls. — Peloubet.

the greatness and goodness of God

b Ps. xxxvii. 5; 2 Ch. xxxiii. 12.

c Ps. cxxxvi. 4; Ex. xv. 11.

d Ro. xi. 33.

e Je. v. 24; Ac xiv. 17; Ps. lxv. 9, 10.

f Ps. cxiii. 7; Lu. i. 52; Ja. iv. 6, 10.

8—11. (8) I, R. V., "but as for me, I," etc., emphatic statement. seek,[b] in humble prayer, not sinfully complain. (9) unsearchable,[c] whose purpose in affliction needs searching out, and must be beneficent. marvellous,[d] and dif. in relation to results fr. what might be expected. (10) rain,[e] "the chief of blessings, and type of all other blessings, to an oriental mind." — Cox. set . . low,[f] not only does He perform such wonders in nature, but on man also He shows His power; He lifts up the lowly, and those who mourn because of calamities He puts in a safe place.

Seeking unto God (vs. 8). — I. What it presupposes. 1. Belief in the existence of God. 2. Consciousness of need. 3. Desire for Divine assistance. II. What it implies. 1. A realization of God's nearness to the soul. 2. A solicitation of God's help for the soul. 3. An acceptation of God's provisions for the soul. III. What it produces. 1. Inward composure. 2. Hopeful expectation. 3. Ultimate salvation. Learn: 1. The grace of God in permitting men to seek Him. 2. The wisdom of men in availing themselves of this permission. — Pul. Com.

And well it is for us our God should feel Alone our secret throbbings; so our prayer
May readier spring to heaven, nor spend its zeal
On cloud-born idols of this lower air."— Keble.

Purification of affliction. —

He that from dross would win the precious ore,
Bends o'er the crucible an earnest eye,
The subtle searching process to explore,
Lest the one brilliant moment should pass by
When, in the molten silver's virgin mass,
He meets his pictured face as in a glass.

Thus in God's furnace are His people tried;
Thrice happy they who to the end endure.
But who the fiery trial may abide?
Who from the crucible come forth so pure
That He whose eyes of flame look through the whole,
May see His image perfect in the soul?

Nor with an evanescent glimpse alone,
As in that mirror the refiner's face;

From within or from behind, a light shines through us upon things, and makes us aware that we are nothing, but the light is all. Emerson.

But, stampt with heaven's broad signet, there be shown Immanuel's features, full of truth and grace:
And round that seal of love this motto be,
"Not for a moment, but — eternity!" — Montgomery.

12—14. (12) He . . crafty,[a] as He helps the humble, so also He thwarts the crafty. enterprise, that wh. seems dictated by practical sagacity. (13) taketh . . craftiness,[b] comp. 1 Cor. iii. 19. This is the only quotation from the Book of Job in the New Testament. counsel . . headlong,[c] i. e. precipitated before it is ready for action and so brought to naught. (14) They . . daytime, etc.,[d] bewildered by the failure of their plans; and things turning out so dif. fr. their expectations.

by His knowledge He overrules the affairs of men a Ne. iv. 15; Ps. xxi. 11; Pr. xxi. 30.

b Ps. vii. 15, 16; Es. ix. 25; Da. vi. 24.

c Pr. iii. 32.

d Pr. iv. 19; De. xxviii. 29; Is. lix. 10.

Comfort in trouble. — Our great comfort in trouble is that we can address God in it. He should be sought in trouble — 1. For counsel and direction; 2. For comfort and support under it; 3. For grace so to bear it as to glorify God by it; 4. For deliverance in His own time and way out of it; 5. For the spiritual benefit and improvement intended through it. Note — (1) It is true wisdom and piety to commit our cause into God's hands. — Hom. Com.

Comfort in times of trouble. —

Hast thou gone sadly through a dreary night,
And found no light;
No guide, no star, to cheer thee through the plain —
No friend save pain?
Wait, and thy soul shall see, when most forlorn, Rise a new morn.

Hast thou beneath another's stern control
Bent thy sad soul,
And wasted sacred hopes and precious tears?
Yet calm thy fears,
For thou canst gain, even from the bitterest part,
A stronger heart!

Has fate o'erwhelmed thee with some sudden blow?
Let thy tears flow;
But know, when storms are past, the heavens appear
More pure, more clear;
And hope, when furthest from their shining rays,
For brighter days.

Hast thou found nought within thy troubled life
Save inward strife?
Hast thou found all He promised thee deceit
And hope a cheat?
Endure, and there shall dawn within thy breast Eternal rest. — Household Words.

"I would bring balm and pour it into your wound, cure your distempered mind and heal your fortunes." — Dryden.

"Your comfort comes, as in droughts the elemental dew does on the earth; it wets, but leaves no moisture, to give the sear'd plants growth." — Glapthorne.

"God puts consolation only where he has first put pain."—Mme. Swetchine.

"Be sure your sorrow is not giving you its best unless it makes you a more thoughtful person than you have ever been before."— Brooks.

15, 16. (15) he saveth, etc., "but he saveth from the sword of their mouth, even the needy from the hand of the mighty." poor . . mouth,[e] by calumny, innuendoes, lies, fraudulent representations, and the like, the ungodly work, perhaps, more injury than by their actions. from the hand, God delivers the poor both from their words and from their deeds. — Rawlinson. (16) So . . hope, without wh. they would be poor indeed; hope is wealth. and . . mouth,[f] recognizing that their speech is in vain.

God is the friend of the poor e Ps. xxxv. 10; xvii. 10, 13; lvii. 4; lix. 7.

f Ps. lxiii. 11.

The poor man's hope. — I. Great in its expectations. Looking for salvation. II. Divine in its origin. Being implanted by God. III. Firm in its foundation Resting, not upon his own piety or strength, but upon God's gracious interposition on his behalf. IV. Present in its enjoyment. The poor hath hope; it forms a principle within them now. V. Sustaining in its operation. Upholding in trouble. VI. Certain in its end. Arriving at ultimate fulfilment. — Pul. Com.

True compassion (vs. 16). — A violent Welsh squire, having taken offense at a poor curate who employed his leisure hours in mending clocks and watches, applied to the bishop of St. Asaph, with a formal complaint against him of impiously carrying on a trade, contrary to the statute. His lordship,

"Though affliction, at the first, doth vex most virtuous natures, from the sense that 'tis unjustly laid; yet, when the amazement which that new pain brings is worn away, they then embrace oppression straight, with such obedient cheerfulness, as if it came from heaven, not man."—Davenant.

"Purchase not friends by gifts; when thou ceasest to give, such will cease to love."—Fuller.

having heard the complaint, told the squire he might depend upon the strictest justice being done in the case; accordingly the mechanic-divine was sent for a few days after, when the bishop asked him how he dared disgrace his diocese by becoming a mender of clocks and watches. The curate, with all humility, answered, "To satisfy the wants of a wife and ten children." "That won't do with me," rejoined the prelate; "I will inflict such a punishment upon you as will make you leave off your pitiful trade, I promise you;" and immediately calling in his secretary, ordered him to make out a presentation for the astonished curate to a living of at least one hundred and fifty pounds per annum.

the happy result of Divine corrections

17, 18. (17) happy, fortunate. correcteth,[a] Eliphaz maintains the position that Job has sinned, and this trouble is for his correction. He can imagine no other reason why sorrow comes to any man, John ix. 2, 3. therefore . . Almighty, try rather to learn the lesson. (18) For . . sore, He wounds only that by healing He may give more perfect life. he . . hands, the same hands hold the rod and the ointment.[b]

The benefits of affliction. — I. Men in times of prosperity are apt to indulge erroneous notions, and neglect important truths. II. God often employs afflictions to correct our mistaken ideas, and rectify our foolish propensities. III. When these ends are answered, he who has been most severely chastened may well think himself most happy.—Ryland.

The wrath of God. — Delivered He was, not to despair, for that was impossible; nor to the torments of hell, which could never seize on His innocent soul; but to the wrath of God, which withered His heart like grass, "burnt up His bones like a hearth," and "brought Him even to the dust of death." Look now upon His countenance — it is pale and wan; upon His heart — it is melted like wax; upon His tongue — it cleaveth to the roof of His mouth. What talk we of death? The wrath of God is truly the terriblest thing in this world — the sting of sin, which is the sting of death. . . . Alas! to us God's wrath doth not appear in its full horror; for if it did, we should sooner die than offend Him. Some do but think of it; few think of it as they should: and they that are most apprehensive look upon it as at a distance, as that which may be turned away; and so, not fearing God's wrath, "treasure up wrath against the day of wrath." To us, when we take it at the nearest and have the fullest sight of it, it appeareth but as the cloud did to Elijah's servant, "like a man's hand." Many sinners have felt His rods: and His rod is comfort; His frown, favor; His anger, love; and His blow, a benefit. But Christ was struck as it were with His axe.—A. Farindon.

Disguised angels.—

All God's angels come to us disguised,
Sorrow and sickness, poverty and death,
One after other lift their frowning masks;
And we behold the seraph's face beneath,
All radiant with the glory and the calm,
Of having looked upon the face of God.—Lowell.

God is a great deliverer

19—21. (19) six . . seven, etc.,[c] God is never tired with helping His people, or wearied by their prayers; six and seven are round numbers meaning "many" or "all." Pr. vi. 16. (20) famine, one of four great troubles here specified; war, slander, ruin, are the others. (21) hid . . tongue, etc.,[d] i. e. misrepresentation; abuse shall not be able to find you.

Homiletic hints on vss. 19–21. — Deliverance promised not in one or two troubles, but in all. Every new trouble needs Divine support and guidance. Preservation in trouble, support under it, and deliverance out of it, all in the believer's charter. The time and mode of deliverance best reserved in God's own hands. Here trouble succeeds trouble, as wave succeeds wave. One past, we are to prepare for another. God either gives His people what He promised or something better. — The security of God's people. — This text has reference to the promises. We shall endeavor. — I. To explain them. 1. They are great and comprehensive; 2. They must be understood with limitations and restrictions. II. To confirm them. The whole Scriptures bear testimony to the truth of them. Search — 1. The law; 2. The prophets; 3. The New Testament. Convinced of the truth of these promises, we are now only concerned — III. To improve them. They teach us — 1. Submission in trials; 2. Confidence in supplications; 3. Activity in obedience. — Simeon.

a Ps. xciv. 12; Pr iii. 12; Re. iii. 19; He. xii. 5 b De. xxxii. 39; Ho. vi. 1; Ps. cxlvii. 3.

"I fear God, and next to God, I chiefly fear him who fears Him not. — Saadi.

"O there is nought on earth worth being known but God and our own souls."—Bailey.

"Perfumes, the more they're chafed, the more they render their pleasant scents; and so affliction expresseth virtue fully, whether true or else adulterate."—Webster.

"When afflicted, love can allow thee to groan, but not to grumble."—Gurnall.

c Ps. xci 5-7; xxxiii. 18, 19; Ge. xiv. 7; 1 Ki. xvii. 6, 15, 16; Le. xxvi. 6; Ez. xxxiv. 25; Is. lxv. 25; xxxv. 9; Da, vi. 22.

d Ps. xxxi. 20

Language most shows a man. Speak, that I may see thee! It springs out of the most retired and inmost part of us. — Ben Jonson.

Proverbs. —

"Give your tongue more holidays than your head."

'With all thy faults I love thee still."

"Tongues are the best and worst meat in the world."

"A fool's tongue is always long enough to cut his throat."

"Tongues run all the faster when they carry little."

"Talkative tongues are like the frogs in Egypt; they did not bite, but they wearied by their endless croaking."

"'The boneless tongue, so small and weak, Can crush and kill,' declared the Greek."

"'The tongue destroys a greater horde,'
The Turk asserts, 'than does the sword.'"

"The Persian proverb wisely saith,
'A lengthy tongue, an early death,'"

"Or sometimes takes this form instead,
'Don't let your tongue cut off your head.'"

"'The tongue can speak a word whose speed,' Say the Chinese, 'outstrips the steed.'"

"While Arab sages this impart,
'The tongue's great storehouse is the heart.'"

"From Hebrew wit the maxim sprung,
'Though feet should slip, ne'er let the tongue.'"

"The sacred writer crowns the whole,
'Who keeps the tongue doth keep his soul.'"

— Spurgeon's Salt-Cellars.

"A tart temper never mellows with age; and a sharp tongue is the only edge-tool that grows keener with constant use."— W. Irving.

"Give not the tongue too great a liberty, lest it take thee prisoner. A word unspoken, is like a sword in the scabbard, thine; if vented, thy sword is in another's hand. If thou desire to be held wise be so wise as to hold thy tongue."— Quarles.

"We need not fear or despair when we must go into a great darkness; we may rather remember, with Tennyson,

'There is a Power behind the world That makes our griefs our gain.'"

22—24. (22) At . . laugh,[a] fearless, bec. knowing that they are powerless. Wild beasts, like plagues, do not harm God's own. (23) thou . . field, industry with God's blessing will overcome natural effects of sterility of soil. beasts . . thee,[b] all nature, inanimate and animate, will understand that you are under the care of God, the master of all. (24) tabernacle,[c] tent, dwelling. visit . . sin, R. V., "visit thy fold, and shalt miss nothing."

Importance of domestic happiness. — I. This appears from the unavoidable intimacy and extent of its influence on human comfort. II. It is a blessing equally attainable by all classes of persons, and which may be enjoyed not occasionally only, but every day that we live. III. By the multiplied and wide-spread mischiefs which daily result from it absence. IV. Its essential and unavoidable influence on the church of God. V. The more general and perfect domestic happiness is, the more pure, harmonious and happy will be the community at large. Note. — 1. The folly of those who undervalue the happiness of the domestic circle, and are constantly seeking happiness elsewere; 2. It is worth while to take the greatest and most constant pains to secure this happiness. — S. Miller.

The importance of the home. — The homes of a country make it what it is. The center of power for building up a country in virtue, religion and prosperity lies in the home. The battle of science has for its central point, its Waterloo, the origin of life; the religious warfare centers round the cross, the Alcyone of all religious forces; the moral battle is about the home. It is the place nearest Paradise on earth, a hint of the Eden of the past, and a prophecy of Paradise regained. — Peloubet. The friendship of the beasts. — In a country where wild beasts are so numerous and so fierce, and where the natives have so few means of defense, can it be a matter of surprise that people on a journey are always under the influence of great fear? The father says to his son, when he is about to depart, "Fear not: the beasts will be thy friends." The dealer in charms says, when giving one of his potent spells, "Be not afraid, young man: this shall make the cruel beasts respect thee." — Roberts.

those whom God befriends may laugh at calamity a 2 Ki. xix. 21.

b Ho. ii. 18.

c De. xxviii. 6.

The only truly happy men I have ever known were Christians. — Randolph.

"It is indeed at home that every man must be known by those who would make a just estimate either of his virtue or felicity; for smiles and embroidery are alike occasional, and the mind is often dressed for show in painted honor and fictitious benevolence.— Johnson.

25—27. (25) Thou . . great, etc., "it must have sounded like a bitter mockery, and as such he resents it." — Spk. Com. (26) Thou . . age, like such shall have prosperity and long life

the patriarchs.[a] cometh, goeth up.[b] (27) Lo, this we have searched, he says; "it is even thus." But the piety and orthodoxy of the good Eliphaz do not save him from blunders at every turn. The religion of Eliphaz is made for well-to do people like himself, and such only. — Watson. "However true his theory might be as a general principle or moral government, it was not universal and did not include Job's case. Job's conscience told him this. Hence the admonitions of Eliphaz fell wide of the mark, and he only aggravated the evil which he sought to heal." — Camb. B.

Homiletic hints on vs. 26. — When the corn is near ripe it bows the head, and stoops lower than when it was green. When the people of God are near ripe for heaven, they grow more humble and self-denying than in the days of their first profession. The longer a saint grows in this world, the better he is still acquainted with his own heart and his obligations to God; both which are very humbling things. Paul had one foot in heaven, when he called himself the "chief of sinners." When corn is dead ripe, it is apt to fall of its own accord to the ground, and there shed; whereby it doth, as it were, anticipate the harvestman, and call upon him to put in the sickle. Not unlike to which are the lookings and longings, the groanings and hastenings of ready Christians to their expected glory; they hasten to the coming of the Lord. — J. Flavel.

Coming to maturity. — Men often remind me of pears in their way of coming to maturity. Some are ripe at twenty, like human Jargonelles, and must be made the most of, for their day is soon over. Some come into their perfect condition late, like the autumn kinds, and they last better than the summer fruit. And some that, like the Winter-Nelis, have been hard and uninviting until all the rest have had their season, get their glow and perfume long after the frost and snow have done their worst with the orchards. — Holmes. Coming to the grave as a shock of corn. — Literally, "in dried up," or "shrivelled age;" and hence the term here employed is applied by the Arabians to designate the winter season, in which everything is corrugated or shriveled. On which account some commentators propose that the text should be rendered "in the winter of life;" poetically, indeed, but not thoroughly consistent with the metaphor of a shock of corn; which, in close congruity with the emblematic picture of winter, at its season of maturity, is dried up and contracted, and thus far offers an equal similitude of ripe old age; but which forcibly increases the similitude by the well-known fact, that, like ripe old age also, it must be committed to the earth in order to spring to newness of life; for, in both cases, "the seed which thou sowest shall not quicken except it die." Tyndal has given the passage thus: "In a fayre age lyke as the corn sheewes are broughte into the barne in due season:" whence Sandys,

> "Then, full of days, like weighty shocks of corn,
> In season reaped, shalt to thy grave be borne."

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

Job's reply; vi.–vii.: three divisions; vi. 1–13 defends his lamentation; 14–30, deplores the attitude of his friend; vii. renews more emphatically his lament and appeals against Providence.

Job's reply

he wishes that his sorrow were duly considered

1, 2. (1) answered, meeting the argument in order. (2) grief, R. V., "vexation." weighed . . balances,[c] he wishes that his vexation and his misfortune might be weighed one over against the other to see if his impatience is indeed too great.

Man's character is estimated by an enlightened natural religionist.—Eliphaz was a natural religionist. I. He regarded the fact that a man suffered as a proof of his wickedness. To judge a man's character by his external circumstances is a most flagrant mistake, for— 1. Suffering is not necessarily connected with sin; 2. It seems almost necessary to the human creature in this world: 3. As a fact it has a salutary influence on the character of the good. II. He regarded the murmuring of a man under suffering, as a proof of his wickedness. In this complaining spirit Eliphaz discovers—1. Hypocrisy; 2. Ignorance of God. — Thomas.

The building up of character. — I have around my little cabin in the country a dozen or so of rhododendrons. Broad-leaved fellows they are. I love them in blossom, and I love them out of blossom. They make me think of many a Ge. xxv. 8; xxxv. 29; Pr. x. 27.

---

b Threshing-floors were usually on hills. Jud. vi. 8; 2 Sa xxiv. 18.

"So mayest thou live, till, like ripe fruits, thou drop into thy mother's lap; or be with ease gathered, not harshly plucked; for death mature." — Milton.

"Eliphaz is confident that no man of sense can come to any other conclusion." — Spk. Com.

"An old age serene and bright, And lovely as a Lapland night."
— Wordsworth.

"Age is not all decay; it is the ripening, the swelling of the fresh life within, that withers and bursts the husk."— MacDonald.

In 1840 there were fifteen persons in Belgium above 100 years of age, of whom nine were women. One of these, Maria Theresa Mayer of Antwerp, was 104 years old; of the others, Maria Ann Stafsin, and Catherine Abrinth, of Luxemburg, were above 150 years old.

c In the Egyptian ritual the day of weighing words is a com. term for the day of judgment.

"'Ah! my lord, could you weigh my poverty, I am sure you would relieve me.' 'The sorrows of that man's soul, who can weigh them?' Alas! if my sorrows could be weighed, then would pity be shown unto me.'" —Roberts.

Christians. They are like some that are in this church. Usually they come up in the spring and blossom the first thing, just as many persons come into Christian life. The whole growth of the plants is crowded into two or three weeks, and they develop with wonderful rapidity; but after that they will not grow another inch during the whole summer. What do they do? I do not know, exactly; they never told me; but I suspect that they are organizing inwardly, and rendering permanent that which they have gained. What they have added to growth in the spring they take the rest of the season to solidify, to consolidate, to perfect, by chemical evolutions; and when autumn comes, the year's increase is so tough that, when the tender plants that laughed at them, and chided them, and accused them of being lazy, are laid low by the frost, there stand my rhododendrons, holding out their green leaves, and saying to November and December, "I am here as well as you." And they are as green to-day as they were before the winter set in. Now, I like Christians that grow fast this spring, and hold on through the summer, and next spring grow again. I like Christians that, having grown for a time, stop and organize what they have gained, and then start again. I like periodicity in Christian growth. And that reproach which Christians so often heap upon themselves and each other, because they are not constant and steady in their development, frequently arises from a want of knowledge of the method by which God builds up human character.— Beecher.

"An English barrister, who was accustomed to train students for the practice of law, and who was not himself a religious man, was once asked why he put students, from the very first, to the study and analysis of the most difficult parts of the sacred Scriptures. 'Because,' said he, 'there is nothing else like it, in any language, for the developing of mind and character.'"—Haven.

3, 4. (3) sand . . sea, prov. expres. for what cannot be numbered or measured.[a] words . . up, R. V., "therefore have my words been rash," he concedes that his language has been vehement, but tries to excuse it. (4) arrows . . Almighty, by his affliction he is thrown back to the conception of God as mere power, which "without giving reason does with man as He will."[b] poison . . spirit, R. V., "the poison whereof my spirit drinketh up," the poison of God's arrows has entered his very spirit. set . . me,[c] assails me in battle-array.

the greatness of his grief may excuse his words a Pr. xxvi. 3.

b De. xxxii.23; Ps. xxxviii. 2; xci. 5; Ez. v. 16; Zec. ix. 14.

c Mk. xiv. 34; 2 Co. v. 11.

The arrows of the Almighty.— Our sufferings are very much as we are made to view them. Job describes these sufferings according to his views and feelings. I. As arrows, sharp, penetrating; coming swiftly, suddenly, and with great force; not one, but many, coming in great succession. II. Arrows of the Almighty. They must be especially sharp and deadly. III. Poisoned arrows — hence especially deadly, and the painful character of his sufferings. IV. These arrows are not only discharged against him, but abiding with him, or being with him. His distress unintermitting. V. The effect of these arrows — drinking up his spirit. VI. No power of men or angel able to withstand these arrows. Note: — Satan working on our unbelief in the time of trouble, is able to make his own arrows to be mistaken for those of the Almighty. — Hom. Com.

The cross on Golgotha will never save thy soul: The cross in thine own heart alone can make thee whole.—Silesius.

Poisoned arrows. — The practice of using poisoned arrows is universal among the interior nations of Southern Africa, to whom the Gospel has not reached. The strongest of all the poisons used is that which has been discovered by the most uncivilized of all the nations, the wild Bushmen; a wound from which is attended with great pain and thirst while the poison is working throughout the system, and attended with great depression. I brought some of the poison with me to England, to see if any antidote against it could be discovered. It has exactly the appearance of black wax, and is found deposited in sheltered corners of rocks, but how it came there is yet unknown. A medical gentleman, who had devoted much attention to the different kinds of known poisons, after delivering some lectures in London on that particular subject, heard of the Bushman poison, and applied to me to furnish him with some of it, that he might analyze it, and endeavor to find out an antidote. I rejoiced that the matter had fallen in such good hands, and immediately forwarded it by post. I received different letters, containing various experiments, but all had failed. I remember the first trial he made of the power of the poison was, by wetting the point of a needle, and, after dipping it into the powder, pricking a bird with it, which died almost immediately. The same experiment was made on a second bird, while some antidote was immediately applied to counteract the effects of the poison. After a short time it also died. Various antidotes were tried in the same way, but all proved equally ineffectual. — Campbell.

"There are minerals called hydrophanous, which are not transparent till they are immersed in water, when they become so; as the hydrophane, a variety of opal. So it is with many a Christian. Till the floods of adversity have been poured over him, his character appears marred and clouded by selfishness and worldly influences. But trials clear away the obscurity, and give distinctness to his piety."—Hitchcock.

5—7. (5) ass . . ox, "Job is not crying out for nothing: if things were as they should be, or even as Eliphaz explains, he would not complain." — Gen-

"Those whose tongues are gentlemen ushers to their wit, and still go before it." — Ben Jonson.

animals are contented when free from pain

ung. (6) unsavoury . . salt,[a] much less can food be taken when bitter and unpalatable, as my food is! taste . . egg,[b] he compares his affliction to an insipid food. (7) things . . meat, R. V., "my soul refuseth to touch them: they are as loathsome meat to me." They, i. e. his sufferings, they are sickening and repugnant to him.[c]

Sorrowful meat. — While the Chinese are mourning for the death of a father or mother, they eat the meanest and most unsavory food. This is done in compliance with very ancient rules, which forbid the son or the daughter to taste any pleasure while they are endeavoring to show their esteem for the dead by the outward garbs of mourning. "Sorrowful meat," or "the bread of mourners," means, in Chinese acceptation, any kind of food which has no pleasant taste, and such as is eaten merely to sustain life, without the slightest reference to enjoyment. Bread or rice of the worst kind, meat and vegetables without salt, are sorrowful meat in China, because they only suit a famished appetite, and never affect the taste with any gratification. The remarks of Eliphaz the Temanite had no taste, no relish at all in the estimation of Job; they lacked the salt of aptitude and sense; they might be good in themselves, but they were out of place, and disgusted instead of soothing the mind of the patriarch. If we would make our counsel acceptable, we must change situations with the afflicted, and borrow, if possible, the very sentiments which are exercising their minds, that we may administer the same consolation to them which we should be glad to have administered to ourselves were we placed in the same circumstances. Consideration for friends. — Don't flatter yourself that friendship authorizes you to say disagreeable things to your intimates. On the contrary, the nearer you come into relation with a person, the more necessary do tact and courtesy become. Except in cases of necessity, which are rare, leave your friend to learn unpleasant truths from his enemies; they are ready enough to tell them. — Holmes.

a Mk. ix. 50.

b The Egyptians kept ducks and geese. Ostrich eggs were probably found and eaten. But the word is sup. by some to mean purslain, an insipid herb. The word is found only here.

c Ps. cii. 9.

"Let us take care how we speak to those who have fallen on life's field. Help them up, not heap scorn on them. We do not know the scars."

he longs for death and the comfort he would then have 8—10. (8) Oh . . request, etc., death is his only hope. (9) destroy, R. V., "crush," even that would be better than this present, long-continued anguish. (10) yea . . spare, R. V., "yea, I would exult in pain that spareth not;" he would endure gladly the keenest torture if only he could know that it would end his existence. not . . One,[d] not yet. He has thus far been loyal, and he longs for death before he loses his integrity.

Job's desire for death. — It arose from — I. The comfort in the prospect of a speedy release from his extreme distress. II. The consciousness of having been God's faithful servant. This implies — 1. Fearlessness in confessing the truth; 2. Faithfulness in communicating it. The testimony of Job's conscience, that he had neither by fearfulness nor faithlessness concealed the truth of God. — Hom. Com.

Murmuring. — Murmuring is a mercy-embittering sin, a mercy-souring sin. As, put the sweetest things into a sour vessel, it sours them; or put them into a bitter vessel, and it embitters them: murmuring puts gall and wormwood into every cup of mercy that God gives into our hands. As holy silence gives a sweet taste, a delightful relish, to all a man's mercies, so murmuring embitters all; the murmurer can taste no sweetness in his sweetest morsels; every mercy, every morsel, tastes like the white of an egg to him. . . . The murmurer writes Marah — that is, "bitterness" — upon all his mercies. . . . As to the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet, so to the murmuring soul every sweet thing is bitter. — T. Brookes.

d Ps. cxix. 13.

"We lose the right of complaining sometimes by forbearing it, but we often treble the force."— Sterne.

"Those who complain most, are most to be complained of."— M. Henry.

"Distress is virtue's opportunity; we only live, to teach us how to die."— Southerne.

he deplores his weakness

11—13. (11) strength,[e] exhausted by suffering, he distrusts his own powers of endurance, and sees no hope on which to rest his patience. hope, of prolonged life, and restored health. end, if I live, what will the rest of life be but a protracted misery? prolong my life, R. V., "be patient." (12) stones, able to resist the storm. (13) Is . . me? etc., R. V., "is it not that I have no help in me, and that effectual working is driven quite from me?" All resource within himself, all means of recovery, is gone.

Hope regained. — A poor, suffering girl, who had long loved the Saviour, under a feeling of depression, confessed to her minister that she had deceived herself, and did not love Him. The minister walked to the window and wrote on a piece of paper, "I do not love the Lord Jesus Christ," and said, 'Susan, here is a pencil. Just put your name to that.' "No, sir," she said, 'I could not sign that.' "Why not?" "I would be torn to pieces before I would sign it, sir." "But why not sign it if it is true?" "Ah! sir," she said, 'I hope it is not true. I think I do love Him."— C. H. Spurgeon.

e Ps. xc. 5, 6; ciii. 15, 16.

We cannot conquer fate and necessity, but we can yield to them in such a way as to be greater than if we could.— Hannah More.

Moderation in sorrow. —

My friend ! enough to sorrow you have given,
The purposes of wisdom ask no more :
Be wise and cheerful ; and no longer read
The form of things with an unworthy eye.
She sleeps in the calm grave, and peace is here.
I well remember that those very plumes,
Those weeds, and the high spear-grass on that wall,
By mist and silver rain-drops silvered o'er,
As once I pass'd, did to my heart convey
So still an image of tranquillity,
So calm and still, and looked so beautiful,
Amid the uneasy thoughts that fill'd my mind,
That what we feel of sorrow and despair
From ruin and from change, and all the grief
The passing shows of Being leave behind,
Appear'd an idle dream, that would not live
Where meditation was. I turn'd away,
And walk'd along my road in happiness ! — Wordsworth.

'Is a servant ordered to do a thing for which he has not strength; to undergo great hardships; he asks, Is my strength as iron? Am I a stone?" — Roberts.

"Nothing can occur beyond the strength of faith to sustain, or transcending the resources of religion to relieve."—Binney.

14, 15. (14) afflicted pity, R. V., "ready to faint kindness," etc. He had expected sympathy, not criticism, from his friends. but he forsaketh, R. V., "even to him that forsaketh," or (Cox) "because he is in danger of forsaking the Almighty." His perilous spiritual condition should call out their friendliness. (15) brook, a desert wady. they pass, R. V., "that pass," i. e. my friends have been to me in my trouble as a dried-up brook to a thirsty traveler.

he reproves his friends' lack of pity

Parepa at a funeral. — A wealthy lady of New York City, a friend of Madame Parepa Rosa, relates an instance of the great singer's sympathetic tact. The lady had for a long time given work to a poor sewing-woman and her young daughter, and when the daughter became feeble, she had supplied her with books and comforted her with gentle attentions. One bitter day in December a sad note from the mother came to tell the lady that the girl had died, and the funeral service would be held that afternoon. Parepa was present, saw the little tear-blotted letter, and at once said : "You must go, and I will go with you." The formal service was soon over, and the minister, after some well-meant words of consolation to the forlorn mourner, took his leave. In the painful pause that ensued, Parepa rose and stood beside the coffin. She laid her white hand for an instant on the cold forehead — and then for the first time the wondering spectators heard her matchless voice :

"Angels ever bright and fair, Take, oh take me to your care !"

The scene was changed as if by enchantment. The hearers stood with rapt faces, and there were many tearful eyes. The minister came softly back, and waited reverently, hat in hand. Those squalid entries had never before known such glory of song. The good and great-hearted woman had brought earth and heaven near to each other by the melody of her art, and transfigured a childless widow's sorrow. Streams in Palestine. — The phenomena of streams in this country aptly illustrate the character of Job's false friends. In winter, when there is no need of them, they are full and strong, and loud in their bustling professions and promises ; but in the heat of summer, when they are wanted, they disappoint your hopes. You think your fields will be irrigated, and your flocks refreshed by them, when, lo ! they deal deceitfully, and pass away. Nearly all the streams of this country, "what time they wax warm," thus vanish, go to nothing, and perish. Such were Job's friends. There is another illustration equally pertinent. You meet a clear, sparkling brook, and so long as you follow it among the cool mountains, it holds cheerful converse with you, by its merry gambols over the rocks ; but as soon as you reach the plain, "where it is hot," it begins to dwindle, grow sad and discouraged, and finally fails altogether. Those which suggested the comparison of Job probably flowed down from the high land of Gilead and Bashan, and came to nothing in the neighboring desert ; for it is added, that the "troops of Tema looked, the companies of Sheba waited for them. They were confounded because they had hoped." It was on those high mountains only that Job could become familiar with the winter phenomena, when the streams "are blackish

"We say in common discourse, that a man may be his own enemy ; and the frequency of the fact makes the expression intelligible. But that a man should be the bitterest enemy of his friends implies a contradiction of a peculiar nature. There is something in it which cannot be conceived without a confusion of ideas, nor expressed without a solecism in language ; yet a man is often injured by the assistance of his friend, whose impulse, however generous and sincere, combines neither prudence for its regulation nor skill for its successful adoption." — Junius.

"It is folly to believe that one can faithfully love who does not love faithfulness." — Sir P. Sidney.

by reason of the ice;" for not only are Lebanon and Hermon covered with snow in the winter and the brooks then frozen, but the same is true also of the higher parts of the Hermon, and of the mountains to the south of it, where Job is supposed to have resided. — Thomson's Land and Book.

false friendship as a deceitful brook

16, 17. (16) blackish, etc., true of turbid streams in the Hauran when the winter is severe. (17) vanish, exhaled by heat of the sun, or losing themselves in the sand, in the time of heat when most needed.

True friendship. — Happy is the house that shelters a friend! It might well be built, like a festal bower or arch, to entertain him a single day. Happier, if he know the solemnity of that relation and honor its law. It is no idle band, no holiday engagement. He who offers himself as a candidate for that covenant, comes up, like an Olympian, to the great games, where the first-born of the world are the competitors. He proposes himself for contests where Time, Want, Danger are in the lists, and he alone is a victor who has truth enough in his constitution to preserve the delicacy of his beauty from the wear and tear of all these. The gifts of fortune may be present or absent, but all the hap in that contest depends on intrinsic nobleness and the contempt of trifles. — Emerson. Oriental rivers. — Major Colebrook, in the seventh volume of Asiatic Researches, "On the Course of the Ganges Through Bengal," observes, — that the occasional obstructions which the rivers of Bengal meet with, on the return of their periodical flux, produce not unfrequently some very extraordinary alterations in the course and bending of their respective beds, and hence some equally extraordinary changes in the general face of the country. While some villages that, in common, are scarcely visited by a river, even at its utmost rise, are overflowed and suddenly swept away; others, actually seated on the banks of an arm, and that used to be regularly inundated, are totally deserted, and the inhabitants have to travel over many miles to obtain water. He adds, that the Ganges has evinced changes of this nature in a greater degree than any other Indian stream; and that even since the survey of Major Rennel, in 1764, it has deviated in its course not less than two miles and a half; whence several of the villages which figure in his map are no longer to be found in the situations assigned them; while islands of considerable magnitude, now inhabited and cultivated, have started into being where the river then rolled its deepest waters. — Good.

"How were friendship possible? In mutual devotedness to the good and true: otherwise impossible, except an armed neutrality or hollow commercial league. A man, be the heavens ever praised, is sufficient for himself; yet were ten men, united in love, capable of being and of doing what ten thousand singly would fail in. Infinite is the help man can yield to man." — Carlyle.

false friendship is disappointing

18—20. (18) paths, etc., R. V., "The caravans that travel by the way of them turn aside; they go up into the waste, and perish." (19) troops . . companies, caravans, nomadic peoples. (20) because . . hoped, to find water. ashamed, bitterly disappointed; their suffering was increased because their rightful expectations were so utterly in vain.

The redeeming power of sympathy. — I. Its secret. It redeems. 1. By giving strength to endure. 2. By softening the heart. 3. By revealing the love of God. II. Its exercise. 1. In God. Our sympathy is but a copy of God's sympathy. 2. In Christ, His redemption is a work of sympathy. (1.) In its origin. (2.) In its application. (3.) In men. We too must save by sympathy. We must understand men if we would help them. — Pul. Com.

"We have many acquaintances, but we can have but few friends: this made Aristotle say that he that hath many friends hath none." — Johnson.

"Sweet as refreshing dews or summer showers, to the long parching thirst of drooping flowers; grateful as fanning gales to fainting swains, and soft as trickling balm to bleeding pains — such are thy words." — Gay.

Brooks in the desert. — In desert parts of Africa it has afforded much joy to fall in with a brook of water, especially when running in the direction of the journey, expecting it would prove a valuable companion. Perhaps before it accompanied us two miles, it became invisible by sinking into the sand; but two miles farther along, it would reappear and run as before, and raise hopes of its continuance; but after running a few hundred yards, would finally sink into the sand, not again to rise. In both cases it raised hopes which were not realized; of course it deceived. Perhaps it is to such brooks that Job refers in the 15th verse. There are many in Africa, which are described in verse 17, which run in the winter, or rainy season; but the return of the hot season completely dries them up, which prove often great disappointments to strange travelers. — Campbell.

he did not ask for their aid

21—23. (21) For . . nothing, ye are like a dried-up brook. my casting down, R. V., "a terror," i. e. "the awful spectacle of God's hand working His wrath in Job's leprosy. Their friendship is at the mercy of their theology." — Genung. (22) Did . . me,[a] he had not asked anything very great from his friends, only sympathy and straightforward dealings, and that they should consider him the truthful man whom they knew him to be.

[a] Je. xv. 21.

Friendship (vs. 22). — I. Its disclaimers. True friendship disclaims the right to be exacting; in its mutual offices all must be voluntary and free. II. Its rights. But we have great rights in friendship. These the patriarch insists on now. He has a right — 1. To good words. 2. To have the truth of his statements accepted. 3. To confidence. 4. To tender compassion, and to guidance by those whose minds are calm. 5. To self-defense. — Johnson. Hollow friendship. — Their feelings might be read in their faces. Only one had spoken with his lips, all with their looks. Their fear as if a pious dread at the signal display of Divine judgment. Afraid — I. Of being found sympathizing with a guilty man. II. Of being involved in the same calamity. III. Of being called upon to relieve or defend the sufferer. Base to withhold sympathy and kindness from regard to our own comfort, credit, or convenience.

Washington and his friends. — An anecdote is told of the great Washington which exhibits, in a fine light, the distinction between public duty and private friendship. During his administration as President of the United States, a gentleman, the friend and the companion of the general throughout the whole course of the Revolutionary war, applied for a lucrative and very responsible office. The opponent of this gentleman was known to be decidedly hostile to the politics of Washington; he had even made himself conspicuous among the ranks of opposition. He had nothing to urge in favor of his pretensions but strong integrity, promptitude, and fidelity in business, and every quality which, if called into exercise, would render service to the State. Every one considered the application of this man hopeless; no glittering testimonial of merit had he to present to the eye of Washington; he was known to be his political enemy; he was opposed by a favorite of the general's; and yet, with such fearful odds, he dared to stand candidate. What was the result? The enemy of Washington was appointed to the office, and his table companion was left destitute and dejected. A mutual friend, who interested himself in the affair, ventured to remonstrate with the president on the injustice of his appointment. "My friend," said he, "I receive with a cordial welcome; he is welcome to my house, and welcome to my heart; but, with all his good qualities, he is not a man of business. His opponent is, with all his political hostility to me, a man of business; my private feelings have nothing to do in this case. I am not George Washington, but President of the United States; as George Washington I would do this man any kindness in my power; but as President of the United States, I can do nothing." — Cheever.

"There is no man so friendless but that he can find a friend sincere enough to tell him disagreeable truths." — Bulwer Lytton.

"A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. You may take sarza to open the liver, steel to open the spleen, flour of sulphur for the lungs, castoreum for the brain, but no receipt openeth the heart but a true friend to whom you may impart griefs, joys, fears, hopes, suspicions, counsels, and whatsoever lieth upon the heart to oppress it, in a kind of civil shrift or confession." — Bp. Reynolds.

"Friendship closes its eyes rather than see the moon eclipst; while malice denies that it is ever at the full."—Hans.

24, 25. (24) Teach,[a] if you are able to instruct. I . . tongue, I will learn in silence. cause . . erred, a hint that otherwise they should be silent. (25) right words,[b] i. e. straightforward speech, that declares without insinuation its real meaning. your arguing reprove, lit. what doth reproving from you, the kind of reproving that comes from you, insinuations and captious laying hold of more excited language, reprove? — Cam. B.

Job's remonstrance. — Observe — I. He had asked no favor at their hands. II. They had not attempted to show him his sin. Note Job's sense of the value of such reproof. Right words. — 1. The form of such words. 1. Argument: 2. Reproof; 3. Instruction; 4. Admonition; 5. Persuasion. II. The character of the words. 1. Right and true in themselves; 2. The whole truth, so far as necessary, in connection with the subject; 3. Correct in their application; 4. Spoken in uprightness and sincerity. III. The efficacy of such words. 1. In enlightening the understanding; 2. In awakening the conscience: 3. In moving the affections and will; 4. In comforting the afflicted. — Hom. Com.

Doing justice to others. — What makes it so difficult to do justice to others is, that we are hardly sensible of merit, unless it falls in with our own views and line of pursuit: and where this is the case, it interferes with our own pretensions. To be forward to praise others, implies either great eminence, that can afford to part with applause; or great quickness of discernment, with confidence in our own judgments; or great sincerity and love of truth, getting the better of our self-love. — Hazlitt.

right words are forcible

a Pr. xxv. 12.

b Pr. xxv. 11; Ecc. xii. 11.

"When the first time of love is over, there comes a something better still. Then comes that other love; that faithful friendship which never changes, and which will accompany you with its calm light through the whole of life. It is only needful to place yourself so that it may come, and then it comes of itself. And then everything turns and changes itself to the best." — Bremer.

26, 27. (26) imagine, propose. speeches . . wind, the frenzied utterance of desperation not to be regarded as proofs of guilt. (27) ye . . fatherless,[c] R. V., "Yea, ye would cast lots upon the fatherless, and make merchandise of your friend." A strong reproof for their unfeeling behavior.

Job's estimate of his friends' reproof. — I. Their argument and reproof had been pointless and profitless. II. Their reproof was directed only against he charges them with cruelty

c "Ye are pitiless as creditors who take the children of a debtor after his death." — Spk. Com.

words uttered in deep distress and great disquietude of spirit. Note the conduct of Job's friends: all the guiltier as being — 1. Under color of friendship; 2. Under profession of piety; 3. With considerable knowledge of Divine truth. — Hom. Com.

he challenges investigation

28–30. (28) Now . . me, etc., R. V., "Now therefore be pleased to look upon me, for surely I shall not lie to your face." Their conduct assumes that he has been lying in his professions of integrity. (29) let it not be iniquity, etc., R. V., "let there be no injustice; yea, return again, my cause is righteous." Return,[a] i. e. from their suspicion to their former friendly confidence in him. (30) taste, moral perception. His spiritual sense is not blunted. "When he says he is righteous it is from a real discernment, as keen as ever of good and evil." — Genung.

Job's challenge to his friends. — I. Appeal of conscious integrity. II. Truth and sincerity read in his countenance. III. The ground of his appeal. Truth and innocence court investigation. No small excellence needful to a correct moral judgment. Grace is indicated not only by a tender, but an enlightened conscience. — Hom. Com.

a Mal. iii. 18.

"Reputation is whatmen and women think of us; character is what God and angels know of us." — Paine.

When heaven sends storms upon men, they must imitate the humble grass, which saves itself by lying meekly down.

Joy flies monopolists; it calls for two.

Self-reliance. — What I must do, is all that concerns me, not what the people think. It is the harder, because you will always find those who think they know what is your duty better than you know it. It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude after our own; but the great man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude. — Emerson.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

an appointed time for man

1–3. (1) Is . . time,[b] R. V., "a warfare;" suggests a fixed period and hard toil. hireling, perh. the mercenary soldier. (2) shadow,[c] by this the time for meals or rest is judged in the E. (3) possess . . vanity,[d] evidently he had suffered some time before his friends arrived. Long months and weary nights.

Human life. — I. As an appointed period. Our days measured out by Him who created us. Hence — 1. Bear meekly life's trials; 2. Wait patiently for its termination; 3. Carefully improve its continuance. II. As a war-service. A time of — 1. Trouble and suffering; 2. Conflict; 3. Service. Lessons — 1. Be prepared for suffering; 2. Be careful to be on the right side; 3. Be faithful, obedient and active; 4. Be hopeful and courageous. III. As the term of a hired servant. A hired laborer has — 1. Self-denying labor to undergo; 2. A limited time to do it in; 3. Due wages to receive when it is done. Hence — 1. Choose the best Master. God's service is (1) Honorable; (2) Pleasant; (3) Satisfying to the conscience. 2. Be diligent in doing the Master's work. — Robinson.

b Ecc. iii. 1, 2; Jo. xi. 9, 10; Ps. xxxix. 4.

c De. xxiv. 14, 15; Ja. v. 4.

d Ps. vi. 6.

"One step more and the race is ended;
One word more, and the lesson's done;
One toil more, and a long rest follows
At set of sun."— Christina Rossetti.

Measuring time by the shadow. — The people of the East measure time by the length of their shadow. Hence, if you ask a man what o'clock it is, he immediately goes in the sun, stands erect, then looks where his shadow terminates; he measures the length with his feet, and tells you nearly the time. Thus they earnestly desire the shadow, which indicates the time for leaving their work. A person wishing to leave his toil often cries out, "How long my shadow is in coming!" When asked, "Why did you not come sooner?" his answer is, "Because I waited for my shadow." — Roberts. In some parts of England it was customary, a few years ago, before watches became common, for all laborers, whom a long familiarity had taught the direction in which the fields lay in respect to the cardinal points of the heavens, when they wished to ascertain the hour of the day, to turn their faces towards the north, and observe the bearing of their own shadow. By this simple expedient they would often guess within a few minutes of the time.

"Why may not I as passionately wish to see an end of life, as a slave in a hot day gasps for the refreshment of the shade? or as the laborer longs for the evening, when he may rest, and be paid for his pains?" — Bp. Patrick.

Life's day. —

From the first gleam of morning to the gray
Of peaceful evening, lo, a life unrolled!
In woven pictures all its changes told,
Its lights, its shadows, every flitting ray
Till the long curtain, falling, dims the day, Steals from the dial's disk the sunlight's gold

"Like the servant, he panteth for the night shade, and like the hireling, he presseth on to his finishing." — Good.

And all the graven hours grow dark and cold,
Where late the glowing blaze of noontide lay. — Holmes.

4–6. (4) When . . say, etc., he recounts the evils of his condition, one is sleeplessness. and . . gone, R. V., "but the night is long." (5) flesh . . worms, exact descr. of the disease. skin . . loathsome, R. V., "skin closeth up and breaketh out afresh." (6) and . . hope, they pass without any prospect of improvement.

the night and the day alike wearisome

The loom and its lessons. — I. As weavers' shuttles are charged with various substances, so men's experiences are loaded with different elements. II. As the weaver works according to a given pattern, so men should have a purpose in life. III. As the work of the weaver employs the whole man, so life demands all our energies. IV. As in the fabric woven, the durability of the whole piece depends on the quality of each thread, so the quality of the whole of life depends on the character of the words and deeds composing it. V. As the process of weaving is often interrupted by the breaking of the thread, so life has its hindrances. VI. As the piece woven is sometimes so wide that two are required to weave it, so life has its necessary partnerships. VII. The shuttle flies swiftly, so does life. VIII. The result in both cases will be one day examined.— J. C. Gray.

"To talk much of one's sorrows makes one weak; but to tell one's sorrows to Him who heareth in secret makes one strong and calm." — Tholuck.

The burden of wings. — There is a myth about the birds, that when they were first created they had no wings; and the story is, that God made the wings, put them down before the birds, and said, "Now, come and take the burdens up and bear them." The birds had beautiful plumage and voices; they could sing and shine, but they could not soar; but they took up their wings with their beaks and laid them upon their shoulders, and at first they seemed to be a heavy load, and rather difficult to bear. But as they cheerfully and patiently bore them, and folded them over their hearts, lo! the wings grew fast, and that which they once bore, now bore them. The burdens became pinions, and the weights became wings. We are the wingless birds, and our duties are the pinions; and when at first we assume them, they seem loads; but if we cheerfully bear them, going after Jesus, the burdens change to pinions, and we, who once thought we were nothing but servants bearing loads, find that we are sons and heirs of God, free to mount up with wings as eagles, running without being weary, walking without being faint. — A. T. Pierson.

"Most persons have died before they expire,— died to all earthly longings — so that the last breath is only, as it were, the locking of the door of the already deserted mansion."— Holmes.

"The expression, when fairly rendered from the original, is peculiarly forcible: 'So much worse is my destiny than that of the bondsman and the hireling, that, while they pant and look early for the night shade, as the close of their trouble, even the night is not free from troubles to myself.'"—Good.

7, 8. (7) my . . wind,[a] a puff, a breath, a sob. see good, i. e. happiness or prosperity in this life. (8) and . . not, nothing can be more hopeless than the tone of vss. 9 and 10: "When my brief life is ended, men will see me no more: and even Thine eye shall look for me in vain."

his life is without hope

Homiletic hints on life. — The frail and fleeting nature of life; its speedy termination; life terminated by a look from the Almighty; life, compared with God's eternity, only a moment; the impossibility of its recall; only one life on earth; solemn responsibility connected with our life. — Hom. Com.

[a] Ps. lxxviii. 39; lxxxix. 47.

The purpose of our lives. — In the Memorial Hall at Harvard University there is a wonderful array of beautiful sentences frescoed on the walls in various colors, but they are all in Latin. And it is said that some of the workmen did not know the meaning of the sentences they painted, but could only put the letters and the colors on the walls as they were told, without understanding the wondrous meaning wrapped up in them. So we are often writing our lives in an unknown tongue; we can only do as we are bidden, but in due time there will be read out in some heavenly language a biography we never dreamed was ours, full of glory and blessing. — Peloubet.

"Those who find pleasure in dwelling upon and amplifying the faults of others, to the partial or total oblivion of their own, remind me of Hogarth's quaint picture in false perspective; wherein the trees that line the road, and the sheep traveling along it, grow larger and more distinct as they recede from the eye."— F. W. Robertson.

Misunderstanding God's love. —

Hard is life
For some. They would that they could soften it;
And in the doing of their work, they sigh
As if it was their choice and not their lot;
And, in the raising of their prayer to God,
They crave His kindness for the world He made,
Till they, at last, forget that He, not they,
Is the true-love of man. — Ingelow.

death will end all

[a] Ge. xxxvii. 35; 2 Sa xxii. 6.

"While we are reasoning concerning life, life is gone; and death, though perhaps they receive him differently, yet treats alike the fool and the philosopher."—Hume.

"Was I deceived, or did a sable cloud turn forth her silver lining on the night?"—Milton.

9, 10. cloud . . away, is dissipated, one knows not how. grave, Heb. Sheol,[a] the underworld, Hades; it means "what is hollow and subterranean." "A neutral word presupposing neither misery nor happiness."—Genung. Comp. note in ch. iii. 17, 18. (10) shall . . house, his dwelling. neither . . more, the Egyptians believed that some men would have power to return to their own houses. — Spk. Com.

The vanished cloud (vs. 9). — More than once we had noticed in our early mornings dull masses of clouds in the sky. As the sun got up and gathered strength, these all vanished. They did not drift away or pass to a different region of the heavens; but they vanished on the spot, such was the absorbing power of the desert sun. Clouds that would have brought a whole day's rain in our climate disappeared. We recognized the figure in Job. — Bonar. In and out. — A fox once came upon a cave, into which he saw many foxes had entered, the sand being full of footprints. He was about to pass in when his cunning eye detected that all the footprints pointed one way. All were turned inwards, and there were none leading out of the cave. We have come to a great cave — the grave — and its entrance is marked by many footprints. All lead in, and none out. But Christ has set His feet the other way; and now, if we go into this cave, we shall follow Him out again. — London S. S. Chronicle.

he complains of Divine restraints

[b] Ps. xxxix. 3; 1 Sa. i. 10; Lu. xxii. 44.

[c] La iii. 7.

11, 12. (11) Therefore,[b] bec. of the brevity of life wh. has been portrayed, and the immediateness of death, Job resolves to give full vent to his complaint. (12) sea, or river, perhaps the Nile, which has to be kept within bounds. whale,[c] R. V., "a sea-monster." Why does God thus mightily exert His powers on any insignificant life?

> Be thou thyself! So strongly, grandly bear > Thee on what seems thy hard, mistaken road,
> That thou shalt breathe heaven's clearest upper air
> And so forget thy feet that meet the clod. — Greene.

he finds no rest at night

[d] Ge. xl. 5, 6; xli. 7, 8.

[e] Ps. cxliv. 4; lxxviii. 33.

God sometimes puts His children to bed in the dark. — Moody.

13—16. (13) When, etc., anticipating relief in sleep. (14) Then . . dreams,[d] com. symptoms in elephantiasis. (15) strangling, all, to sensation of suffocation or choking. Job refers to this symptom, saying that he is driven to desire that it might be really fatal. rather . . life, R. V., "rather than these my bones," his disease left him an emaciated skeleton. (16) let . . alone, this is addressed to God. "I loathe my life. I do not desire to live, cease from inflicting pain, and give a little respite ere I vanish, like a breath." for . . vanity,[e] full of emptiness.

Why the believer does not wish to live always.— I. He knows it is the will of God that he should not live always. II. Because here the work of grace is but imperfectly developed. III. Here the full blessedness of justifying righteousness cannot be enjoyed. IV. Here God is at best but imperfectly worshiped. V. The change is absolutely necessary for the completion of our blessedness, and the perfection of the Divine glory.

why should God consider man?

[f] Ps. cxliv. 3; viii. 4; He. ii. 6.

A man is just as great as he is in the sight of God — no greater.— Farvar.

"The record of life runs thus — man creeps into childhood, bounds into youth, softens into age, totters into second childhood, and slumbers into the cradle 17—19. (17) What, etc.,[f] irony. Why should God concern Himself with so insignificant a creature? (18) visit . . morning, with successive trials. (19) depart from, R. V., "look away from." He prays God to turn His attention on something of more importance than himself! let . . spittle, prov. expres. = a moment or twinkling of an eye.

"Lord, what is man?"— I. The insignificance of man. 1. In origin, allied to the dust. 2. In character, defiled by sin. 3. In experience, weighted with misery. 4. In duration, short-lived and evanescent. 5. In destiny, doomed to dissolution. II. The greatness of man. 1. Created in the Divine image. 2. Preserved by Divine care. 3. Redeemed by Divine love. 4. Renewed (or may be) by Divine grace. 5. Immortalized (or may be) by Divine life. 6. Crowned with Divine glory, already in Christ Jesus, and afterwards in them that are his. Lessons. 1. Since man is so insignificant, be humble. 2. Since man is so great be good. — Whitelaw.

Imperfect instruments. — God makes use of imperfect instruments in doing his work, — imperfect apostles, imperfect churches, imperfect Christians, and yet really good work is done. A young minister insisted that everything must be squared according to his ideas of perfect right. On one occasion he undertook to tune the church organ in an emergency. He took the scale of notes used, and tuned the organ perfectly according to it. Then he struck the notes of Haydn's Mass in five flats, and was astonished at the terrible discords he made. An organ-tuner explained afterwards to him that his scale was right, his system was right, but if you stick too close to it, it sets you wrong. Most fifths must be left flat, some few made sharp, the octaves alone tuned in unison, because the organ is an imperfect instrument. But by making proper allowance for this imperfection, wonderful and harmonious music may be produced by it. — Peloubet.

prepared for him, thence to be watched and cared for." — Henry Giles.

20, 21. I . . sinned, R. V., "If I have sinned, what do I unto thee, O thou watcher of men? why hast thou set me as a mark for thee," etc. what . . thee, i. e. what harm. thou . . men, who knowest all. set . . thee,[a] as a butt or target for thine arrows. (21) why . . iniquity?[b] If I have sinned in some way that I am not aware of, why wilt thou not pardon? in the morning, R. V., "diligently." What is the significance of torturing a life so soon to go out? — Genung.

why is not sin pardoned?

Why is sin not pardoned? — Consider this inquiry — I. In the matter to which it refers. II. In the circumstances under which it may be proposed. 1. When the heart is alarmed under the judgments or threatenings of God, while there is no right knowledge of God's character; 2. When the soul is enveloped in spiritual gloom, arising out of a consciousness of personal guilt, while the Gospel is not rightly understood: 3. When there is earnestness in the spirit in seeking the Saviour, though ignorance of the Saviour's character and work is mingled with it. III. In the answer which may be returned to it. 1. Because there is no real humiliation before God; 2. Because there is no personal faith in Christ; 3. Because there is no actual determination not to turn with the whole heart to God.

[a] La. iii. 12.

[b] Is. lxiv. 9; 2 Sa. xxiv. 10; Mi. vii. 18, 19; Ho. xiv. 2; Jo. i. 29; Tit. ii. 14; 1 Jo. iii. 5.

Dr. Payson was asked, when enduring great bodily affliction, if he could see any particular reason for the dispensation. "No," he replied, "but I am as well satisfied as if I could see ten thousand; God's will is the very perfection of all reason."

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

1—3. (1) Bildad, see ii. 11. (2) these things, i. e. "by way of introducing his principle Bildad expresses his wonder that Job should allow himself to speak such things as his discourse contained. He refers to the general drift of Job's speech, which appears to him to be an assertion that God was unjust." — Cam. Bib. words . . wind, omit "be like:" i. e. thy words are rash, unreasoning. (3) Doth, etc.,[c] you have implied that God is unjust. But this is inconceivable. Therefore (his logic is), if He makes you suffer, it is because you deserve to.

Bildad's reply — is not God just?

[c] Ge. xviii. 25; De. xxxii. 4.

The book of Job a dramatic poem. — Dramatic poetry is that in which the persons introduced speak or act in their own names. It is said that this kind of composition is not found in the Scriptures. On the other hand, it is shown that in the Book of Job we have the essential feature of dramatic poetry. Job, and his wife, and his three friends, are, as it were, introduced to us, and go through their several parts in person before us. Certainly the style both of this book and of the Song of Solomon differs entirely from ordinary narrative. Associating, as we too easily do, the word dramatic with the representations of life produced on the stage, and forgetting the larger and literary meaning of the term, we have been needlessly offended at any portion of our Bible being called dramatic. — R. Tuck.

"A Christian must labor to have his speech as contracted as can be in the things of this earth; and even in Divine things, or words should be few and wary. In speaking of the greatest things, it is a great point of wisdom not to speak much." — Leighton.

Condemnation by public opinion. — There is a great unwritten law of society — a law which both proclaims and enforces itself — the law of public opinion. It holds no courts, and yet its sittings are perpetual. It has no official existence, yet it is stronger than judges and governments and armies. It employs no officers, and yet, when once on a man's track, it never leaves him until it has tracked him down. It has no prisons, and it needs none, for it makes the world a prison from which the convict it condemns has no escape but death. Public opinion is the jury verdict of humanity; and its sentence, uttered by the people's thousand tongues, executes itself in retribution. — S. S. Harris.

It is the one sufficient proof of the grandeur and awfulness of our nature, that we have faith in God; for no merely finite being can possibly believe the infinite. — James Martineau.

4—7. (4) If . . him, the insinuation is that Job's children were punished for some sin. cast them away, etc., R. V., "delivered them into the hand of their transgression." Christ taught us, John ix. 2, 3; Lu. xiii. 4, that physical malady is not a sign of Divine anger upon the individual. This principle of Jewish sheol — rep. by Bildad — is rebuked by the Book of Job. (5) If, etc., i. e. seek forgiveness for your sin. wert,[d] better "art," i. e. if on the other hand, you are as blameless as you claim, then presently he will awake (!)

God accepts those who turn to Him and set matters aright. (7) Though . . small,[a] by comparison with what the end may be.

[d] 1 Jo. iii. 22.

A small beginning and a great ending (vs. 7). — I. The Christian must have a small beginning. 1. In penitence. 2. In childlikeness. 3. In spiritual experience. 4. In enjoyment of blessings. II. The Christian will have a great increase. 1. On earth. 2. In heaven. III. God leads the race from a small beginning to a great increase. — Pul. Com.

Growth to the perfect flower. — Each of us is a distinct flower or tree in the spiritual garden of God, — precious each for his own sake in the eyes of Him who is even now making us, — each of us watered and shone upon and filled with life for the sake of his flower, his completed being, which will blossom out of him at last to the glory and pleasure of the great Gardener. For each has within him a secret of the Divinity; each is growing towards the revelation of that secret to himself, and so to the full reception, according to his measure, of the Divine. And what an end lies before us! To have a consciousness of our own ideal being flashed through us from the thought of God! Surely, for this may well give way all our paltry self-consciousness, our self-admiration, and self-worship! Surely, to know what he thinks about us will pale out of our souls all our thoughts about ourselves. — MacDonald.

The living soul is ever growing in the life of God. — Liddon.

"The oak tree's boughs once touched the grass,
But every year they grew
A little farther from the ground,
And nearer to the blue."

he appeals to antiquity

8—10. (8) Enquire . . age, etc.[b] and prepare, etc., R. V., "and apply thyself to that which their fathers have searched out," i. e. "give heed to the research, or to that which their fathers have searched out. By referring to a former age, and then to the fathers of that age or generation, Bildad intimates that his truth was recognized through all antiquity backwards till history loses itself in the beginning of time."— Cam. B. (9) For, etc.,[c] the tendency of many to underrate the present and refer to the "good old times." But there is a prob. all. to the longevity of patriarchal times. (10) words . . heart,[d] fr. their deep convictions, knowledge, experience.

What is life? —

And what is life? An hour-glass on the run,
A mist retreating from the morning sun,
A busy, bustling, still repeated dream.
Its length? A minute's pause, a moment's thought.
And happiness? A bubble on the stream,
That in the act of seizing shrinks to nought. — J. Clare.

life must have its supports

11—14. (11) Can, etc., "here the sayings of the fathers begin, and they are not without great beauty and impressiveness. Job himself assents to them cf. ix. 2."— Genung. rush, papyrus. flag, reed-grass of Nile. (12) Whilst, etc.,[e] in the very height of its luxuriance its suddenly withers. (13) paths,[f] ways and relations of life. hypocrite's, R. V., "the hope of the godless man," etc. (14) Whose hope, etc., R. V., "whose confidence shall break in sunder."

The spider's web (vs. 14). — Bildad compares the hope of the impious to a spider's web. I. It is quickly woven. II. It is delicate and beautiful to look at. III. It is useful for its natural end. IV. It is excessively fragile. 1. It has no substance. The man trusts (1) To his own wisdom. (2) To his goodness. (3) To his prosperity. (4) To God's goodness, which is out of the reach of the impious. 2. It is heavily tried. Here is a question of life and death. — Adeney.

Hollow prosperity. — Oh that great, brilliant marble house on the corner! Oh the gallery of pictures that stands behind it! Oh the magnificent glass, crystal-cut, that lets the light through the windows or would, if it were not for the splendid rags that are hung up inside! Oh the massive furniture! Oh the gorgeous upholstery! And oh the thin, stingy man who walks up and down in the midst of all this rich abundance! Would you change with him? I would rather trundle a wheelbarrow than be a curmudgeon in what men call "prosperity" in this world. Money in your pocket and hell in your heart do not make you prosperous. Reeking contempt, rasping selfishness, avarice that is vulgar and remorseless, is that prosperity? Is that what you want to live for? Was it for that you came down into life with full freight of anticipation? You cannot have any prosperity that corrupts manhood. There is nothing prosperous which does not make you more than you are. — Beecher.

[a] Pr. iv. 18; Ma. xiii. 31-33.

[b] Ps. xliv. 1; Ro. xv. 4.

[c] 1 Ch. xxix. 15, Ps. xxxix. 5; Ge. xlvii. 9.

[d] Ps. cxlv. 4; Isa. xxxviii. 19; De. vi. 7; xi. 19.

"Life, however short, is made shorter by waste of time."— Johnson.

[e] Isa. xix. 5-7.

[f] De. viii. 19; Ps. cxii. 10; Pr. x. 28.

"As the most succulent plants are dependent upon foreign support for a continuance of that succulence, and in the midst of their vigor are sooner parched up than plants of less humidity: so the most prosperous sinner does not derive his prosperity from himself, and is often destroyed in the heyday of his enjoyments, more signally and abruptly than those who are less favored, and appear to stand less securely."— Good.

15—16. (15) He, the hypocrite. lean,[a] rely upon as a source of comfort; house, worldly wealth, station. hold it fast, R. V., "hold fast thereby,' i. e. he tries to support himself by holding on to it. (16) green . . sun,[b] i. e. "the hypocrite, or ungoldly man is as a gourd, (Jonah iv. 6), or other rapidly growing plant, which shoots forth; full of promise in the early dawn; flourishing."

Forgetfulness of God. — To forget God is — 1. Not to think of Him; 2. Not to thank Him; 3. Not to serve and obey Him. It is to forget — 1. His presence; 2. His providence; 3. His precepts. Forgetfulness of another implies — 1. Want of love; 2. Want of respect. Observe — I. Forgetfulness of God is the root and essence of all sin. II. To forget God is to forget Him who possesses all claims to our remembrance. III. In forgetting God we give our thoughts and hearts to the world, which has no attractions but what it derives from Him, and which can neither satisfy nor save us. IV. To remember God is to elevate, ennoble, and purify ourselves. — Hom. Com.

Exaltation and abasement. — A certain king was dragged in the triumphal train of his conqueror, chained at the back of his chariot as the procession defiled through the dusty street. The servants saw him laughing, as if thoroughly amused by the pageant. And the conqueror turned angrily upon his seat to ask the reason of such exasperating levity. "I am not thinking of the show," the man replied, "but only concerning these wheels I am watching: how they keep whirling! one moment a bit of dust is at the top, and the next it is down upon the road again; now it is above, and now it is under. And it makes one think of kings, too; who is up, and who is down, depends on wheels; and the wheels keep turning between to-day and to-morrow." — C. S. Robinson.

17—19. (17) roots . . heap,[c] he seems therefore to be firmly rooted. seeth . . stones, R. V., "He beholdeth the place of stones;" i. e. sends down his roots to the very foundations and takes hold on "the heart of the earth." (18) If . . him,[d] the subject is God. The point of the verse is that this luxuriant plant is destroyed, and when destroyed utterly dissapears, so that his place says, I never saw thee. it . . deny, etc., as if ashamed of him. (19) this . . way, this is the grand result of all this seeming prosperity. out . . grow,[e] either a better race; or, to be in their turn denied.

Premonitions of death desired. — Lord, be pleased to shake my clay cottage before Thou throwest it down. May it totter awhile before it doth tumble. Let me be summoned before I am surprised. Deliver me from sudden death. Not from sudden death in respect of itself, for I care not how short my passage be, so it be safe. Never any weary traveler complained that he came too soon to his journey's end. But let it not be sudden in respect of me. Make me always ready to receive death. Thus no guest comes unawares to him who keeps a constant table. Job xiv. 2. — T. Fuller.

The peril of the wicked. — Down by Hell Gate, the rock is tunneled, and deep under the solid masses over which men walk with such careless security, there are now laid trains of explosive powder. All seems so safe and firm outwardly, it is hardly possible to imagine that those solid masses will ever be shaken, but a time will come when a spark will fire the whole train, and the mountain will be in a moment rent in the air, and torn to atoms. There are men here who are tunneled, mined; their time will come, not to-day or to-morrow; not for months or years, perhaps, but it will come; in a moment, from an unseen quarter, a trifling incident, their reputations will be blown to atoms, and what they have sown they will reap — just that. There is no dynamite like men's lusts and passions. — H. W. Beecher.

20—22. (20) perfect,[f] "but apparently God despises Job, for Job is suffering God's distinctive scourge. The ending of this speech, courteous though it is, comes weighted with this implication. The courtesy is only a clumsy disguise to what is really cutting and harsh." — Genung. help . . doers, grasp the hand of, etc.; to hold them up. (21) Till . . mouth, R. V., "he will yet fill," etc.,[g] i. e. if thou be perfect. (22) They . . shame,[h] i. e. when, bec. of uprightness, thy mouth is filled, etc.

Human destiny is determined by moral character (vs. 20). — This is Bildad's conclusion, as contained in the three verses before us. In the passage we have two points. I. The real condition of the good. 1. It is a condition in which they will never be deserted of God; 2. It is a condition in which God will the hope of the hyprocrite a Ps. lii. 5-7.

b Ps. xxxvii 35.

'Tis not that the hypocrite despises a good character, that he is not one himself, but because he thinks he can purchase it at a cheaper rate than the practice of it, and thus obtain all the applause of a good man, merely by pretending to be so.—Fielding.

"Hope! fortune's cheating lottery, where for one prize an hundred blanks there be!"—Cowley.

"I will despair and be at enmity with cozening hope; he is a flatterer."—Shakespeare.

the fate of the wicked

c Jer. xii. 1, 2.

d Ps. xcii. 7; xxxvii. 10, 36; lxxiii. 19.

e Ps lxxv. 7; cxiii. 7.

John Howard, the philanthropist, honored by a monument in St. Paul's Cathedral, but more highly honored in the hearts of the relieved prisoners, when parting with a friend previous to an intended visit to Egypt, where it seemed probable that he would die of the plague, said to him, "We shall soon meet in heaven. The way to heaven is as near from Grand Cairo as from London."

the perfect man not cast off

f Ps. xciv. 14.

g Ps. cxxvi 2-6.

h Ps. cxxxii. 18.

When the babe puts his little soft hand into yours his hand is as strong as yours, since it is yours that guides it; so when we put our hands into God's we are by His grace as strong as He is, since He leads and we only follow. — Beecher.

"O you unwise and unlearned! teach us first what God is, that you may be believed in accusing me of impiety; tell us where God is. Is he shut up within the walls of temples? Is this your piety, to place God in the dark, or to make Him a stony god? O you unskillful! know ye not that God is not made with hands, and hath no basis or fulcrum to stand upon, nor can be enclosed within the walls of any temple; the whole world, variegated with plants, animals, and stars, being his temple." — Heraclitus.

inspire them with happiness. II. The other point is the real condition of the wicked. It is here given — 1. Negatively: neither will he help the evil-doers; 2. Positively: they that hate thee shall be clothed with shame, etc. — Homilist.

The fullness of God. — It is better to be restless and unsatisfied than to find rest and satisfaction in anything lower than the highest. But we need not be restless or unsatisfied. There is a rest in expectation, a satisfaction in the assurance that the highest belongs to us though we have not reached it yet. That rest in expectation we may all have now if we believe in God and know we are His children. Every taste of Him that we have ever had becomes a prophecy of His perfect giving of Himself to us. Is is as when a pool lies far up in the dry rocks, and hears the tide, and knows that her refreshment and replenishing is coming. How patient she is. The other pools nearer the shore catch the sea first, and she hears them leaping and laughing, but she waits patiently. She knows the tide will not turn back till it has reached her. And by and by the blessed moment comes. The last ridge of rock is overwashed. The stream pours in; at first a trickling thread sent only at the supreme effort of the largest wave, but by and by the great sea in its fullness. It gives the waiting pool itself and she is satisfied. So it will certainly be with us if we wait for the Lord, however He delays, and refuse to let ourselves be satisfied with any supply but Him. — Phillips Brooks. The riches of God. — God is so rich that He can put more of what is beautiful upon a single lily or tulip than the great King Solomon could put on all his clothing. The peacock carries more that is beautiful upon his tail than the richest king could ever show. And even the poor butterfly, which is to live but a few hours, has a more glorious dress than the proudest, richest man that ever lived. If, then, He can take such care of the lilies, the birds and insects, and make them more beautiful than man can ever be, will He not take care of us, if we obey Him? Suppose your father had more oxen and horses and cattle than you could count over in a day, or in a week, would he not be able to take care of his child, and give him everything he needs? Yes. But God has "cattle upon ten thousand hills;" and "every beast of the forest" is His, and His are "all the fowls of the air." Can He not give you food from all these cattle, and clothe you, and give you beds from the feathers of all these fowls? Yes: He is able to do it all. — J. Todd.

CHAPTER THE NINTH

Job's reply

man cannot argue with God

1—4. (2) I . . truth, I know it is true that God does not pervert judgment. how . . God?[a] "the question implies that man cannot be just because he cannot be sure of the standard of justice. This suffering of his confuses all known standards. It makes God seem wanton in power for the mere power's sake."— Genung. (3) If . . him, in pleading his cause, and vindicating himself. he . . thousand, of the questions God might put to him, or of the charges which God might in subtility bring against him. (4) He is wise, etc., "God's combination of perfect wisdom with infinite strength renders it hopeless for any man to contend with Him." who hath hardened, "no one has ever taken this line of absolute self-justification and prospered." — Rawlinson.

Job's idea of what God is in Himself. — I. He regarded Him as just. II. He regarded Him as wise. III. He regarded Him as strong. IV. He regarded Him as retributive. "Who hath hardened himself against Him, and hath prospered?" — Homilist. Hardened against God (vs. 4). — I. The passage intimates that appeals are addressed by God to men in order to bring them into allegiance to him. God has appealed to you by the instrumentality of — 1. Conscience; 2 Providence; 3. Revealed truth. II. We are to observe that men treat the appeal made by God with obdurate resistance. 1. The habit here indicated, we state to be heinous in its nature; 2. It is also progressive in its influence. III. Obdurate resistance to the appeals made by God exposes to fearful and fatal consequences. — J. Parsons.

Resistance to the Divine will. — Julian, usually styled the Apostate, one of the Roman emperors, with the view of invalidating the truth of our Saviour's prophecies respecting the desolation of the Jews, made an attempt to rebuild the temple of Jerusalem; but from the breaking out of terrible balls of fire near the foundations, the workmen were obliged to abandon their impious attempt. "Who hath hardened himself against God, and hath prospered?" His counsel shall stand, and He will do all His pleasure. Resisting guidance. —

[a] Ps. cxliii. 2; cxxx. 3; 1 Jo. i. 8; Ps. xl. 12.

"Infinity of Being is a pre-eminent mode of the essence of God, by which it is devoid of all limitation and boundary, whether from something above it or below it, from something before it or after it. It is not bounded by anything above it, because it has received its being from no one. Nor by anything below it, because the form, which is itself, is not limited to the capacity of any matter whatsoever that may be its recipient. Neither by anything before it, because it is from nothing efficient;

We were once at a hotel in Switzerland where there lay the dead body of an Austrian count. He had been up on the mountains with a competent guide. The guide had warned him against going to a certain spot; but the traveler had disregarded the advice, had gone, and, slipping over the brink, was killed. The best guide in the world is of no avail to him who will not be guided." — A. F. Schauffler.

5–7. "A description of the might and majesty of God, transcending anything in the Psalms, and comparable to the grandest passages of Isaiah."— Rawlinson. (5) Which . . mountains.[a] He who can instantly, without warning, overturn mountains. anger,[b] as it may seem to the unthinking. (6) Which . . place, "the reference is probably to earthquakes. The earth is conceived as a structure supported on pillars, prob. the roots of the great mountains which extended downwards and bore up the earth, as the part of them above the earth supported the heavens." — Cam. B. (7) Which . . not,[c] darkness, as of night, sometimes overspreads the face of the world; it is as if the sun had not risen. sealeth . . stars,[d] with dense clouds.

God's agency in material nature (vs. 5).— I. Its almightiness is overwhelmingly grand in its manifestations. It should therefore — 1. Impress all with a sense of their utter insignificance; 2. It should impress the sinner with his impious hardihood; 3. It should impress the good with their privileges. II. Its almightiness is co-extensive with the universe. 1. God's universal agency explains all material phenomena; 2. It binds men practically to recognize Him in every part of nature.— Thomas.

God in nature.— The book of Nature is an expression of the thoughts of God. We have God's terrible thoughts in the thunder and lightning, God's loving thought in the sunshine and the breeze, God's bounteous thoughts in the waving harvest, God's brilliant thoughts beheld from the mountain top, and God's sweet thoughts in the little flowers that blossom at our feet. We should read all Nature as our Lord read the sparrows. If the air were a few miles less in height than it is, men would soon be suffocated, if a few miles more, it would be unendurably hot under the sun's rays. If the land were harder or softer than it is it could not be cultivated. If sea-water were heavier than it is, fishes would rise to the surface and could not swim, if lighter, they would sink to the bottom and die. If a man were conveyed to the moon, he would weigh five times less than on the earth; he might bound like a grasshopper, and would be easily overset. If the earth were as large as Jupiter our weight would be increased eleven times, and none of us could walk or stand upright. Nature is adjusted with infinite delicacy.— Hurlbut.

8–10. (8) alone,[e] by His almightiness: having no need of help. waves, mountain billows, in terrific storms, when its waves "mount up to heaven."[f] (9) Arcturus, He made the great northern constellation the Bear, and Orion on the south, and the Pleiades in the east.[g] and . . south, the vast star-spangled spaces of the southern heavens.

Job's idea of what God is to mankind (vs. 10).— He regarded the Eternal as— I. Inscrutable. 1. In His works; 2. In His essence. He regarded the Eternal as — II. Irresponsible. III. As resistless. 1. God is an offendable Being; 2. The proud have aiders and abettors. He regarded the Eternal — IV. As inexorable (vss. 14-19). Job represents God — 1. As uninfluenced by man; 2. Unapproached by human argument; 3. As too holy to encourage any one to have confidence in his own virtues; 4. As regardless of modern distinctions of society.— Thomas.

A child's first impression of a star.—

She had been told that God made all the stars
That twinkled up in heaven; and now she stood Watching the coming of the twilight on,
As if it were a new and perfect world,
And this were its first eve. How beautiful Must be the work of nature to a child
In its first impression! Laura stood
By the low window, with the silken lash
Of her soft eye upraised, and her sweet mouth
Half parted, with the new and strange delight
Of beauty, that she could not comprehend, nor after it, because it does not exist for the sake of another end."— Arminius.

the great power of God a Hag. ii. 6; He. xii. 26.

b "Once look on natural phenomena, of wh. the causes are hidden, as indications of special emotions in the Godhead, and the way is open for erroneous conceptions of His dealings with His creatures." — Spk. Com.

c "There may be a ref. to the darkness in Egypt, Ex. x. 21." — Wordsworth.

d Lu. xxi. 25; Jos. x. 12–14.

The world is the vesture of the unseen God; its whole atmosphere is charged with His presence. — Freemantle.

the power of God in creation. Acturus, Orion, Pleiades e Ge. i, 7, 8.

f Ps. lxxvii. 19; Ge. i. 2; Ma. xiv. 25.

g Am. v. 8.

'Tis the sublime of man,
Our noontide majesty, to know ourselves
Parts and proportions of one wondrous whole . . . .
But 'tis God,
Diffused through all that doth make all one whole.
— Coleridge.

"Look up and behold the eternal fields of light that lie around about the throne of God. Had no star ever appeared in the heavens, to man there would have been no heavens; and he would have laid himself down to his last sleep in a spirit of anguish, as upon a gloomy earth vaulted over by a material arch — solid and impervious." — Carlyle.

And had not seen before. The purple fold
Of the low sunset clouds, and the blue sky
That looked so still and delicate above.
Fill'd her young heart with gladness; and the eve Stole on with its deep shadows. Laura still Stood, looking at the west with that half smile,
As if a pleasant thought were at her heart.
Presently, in the edge of the last tint
Of sunset, where the blue was melted in
To the faint golden mellowness — a star
Peep'd suddenly. A laugh of wild delight Burst from her lips, and, putting up her hands,
Her simple thoughts broke forth expressively —
"Father, dear father! God has made a star." — Proctor.

the mysterious ways of God.

11, 12. (11) Lo,[a] etc., "this is the source of Job's deepest trouble. He has lost the means of tracing God, the standard of life. God seems merely a vast Power, working in the dark, inscrutable." — Genung. (12) Behold, etc.,[b] R. V., "behold he seizeth the prey," etc., i. e. just as God acts in nature, seems capricious and irresistible, so in His relations to men. There is no power in man to question or to resist, only to submit.

The Divine assailant. — I. His mysterious movements. The language (vs. 11) recognizes God's — 1. Personality. 2. Activity. 3. Nearness. 4. Invisibility. II. His resistless power. 1. Invincible. 2. Unchallengeable. 3. Implacable. III. His charges unanswerable because of — 1. Man's weakness. 2. God's greatness.

Learn: — 1. It is impossible to entertain too exalted a conception of the great and holy God with whom we have to do. 2. It is quite possible, even for the best of men, to misconstrue God's dealings with the soul, and to regard Him as an adversary who is really a Friend. 3. It is well to remember, in every appearance of conflict between the Creator and the creature, that all the right lies upon the side of the former. 4. The nearer saints advance towards perfection, the readier they are to acknowledge their imperfection. 5. A humble and self-abased spirit before God is quite compatible with the maintenance of one's blamelessness before men. — Whitelaw.

a Ps. lxxvii. 19; Ti. vi. 16.

b Da. iv. 35; Je. xviii. 6; Ro. ix. 20, 21; Is. xlv. 9.

"A discreet physician minds not so much what we desire as what is convenient; so God Almighty takes away spiritual superfluities rather than grants what we inordinately desire; and a few afflictions help to moderate our affections, and appease our inordinate appetites." —R. Boyle.

Resignation. —

Heart be still!
In the darkness of thy woe
Bow thou silently and low;
Comes to thee whate'er God will, —
Be thou still!

Be thou still!
Vainly all thy words are spoken,
Till the word of God hath broken Life's dark mysteries — good or ill —
Be thou still!

Rest thou still!
'Tis thy Father's work of grace, —
Wait thou yet before His face;
He thy sure deliverance will — Keep thou still!

Lord, my God!
By thy grace, O may I be
All submissive, silently,
To the chastenings of Thy rod:
Lord, my God!

Shepherd King!
From Thy fulness grant to me
Still, yet fearless, faith in Thee,
Till from night the day shall spring! — Shepherd king! — Schiller.

"The Lord is never so displeased with His children as to hate them; neither are His sharpest corrections sent in His wrath, though He may seem at these times to be angry. Outward prosperity is no infallible sign of God's love, neither are afflictions, crosses, and calamities infallible signs of God's displeasure."—S. Smith.

13—15. (13) If God,[a] etc., R, V., "God will not draw his anger; the helpers of Rahab do stoop under Him." Rahab, "literally the proud one. An allusion to some legend, now lost, of some titanic war against God, such as is alluded to in Gen. vi. 4."—Genung. (14) How . . him, if such is the fate of the strongest. (15) Whom, etc.,[b] even innocence could not withstand such power. my judge, R. V., "mine adversary." "Had Job right on his side he could not maintain it; overpowered by the irresistible and awful might of his opponent he would desert his just plea and supplicate his adversary."—Cam. B.

Silence is best where we cannot understand.—A courtier in the retinue of Alexander the Great paid a visit to the studio of Apelles, the celebrated painter, and was received with the consideration due his rank. This excited his talkativeness, which sallied forth upon the fine art question, exposing his ignorance by a variety of criticisms. Apelles interrupted him at length in an undertone, "Do you see those boys that are grinding my colors? While you were silent they admired you, but ever since you began to talk about what you do not understand they have done nothing but laugh at you."—Hurlburt.

Resignation of all to God.—

Since 'tis Thy sentence I should part
With the most precious treasure of my heart,
I freely that and more resign;
My heart itself, as its delights, is Thine.
My little all I give to Thee:
Thou gav'st a greater gift, Thy Son, to me.
Take all, great God! I will not grieve;
But still will wish that I had still to give.
I hear Thy voice; Thou bid'st me quit
My paradise; I bless and do submit:
I will not murmur at Thy word,
Nor beg Thy angel to sheath up his sword.—Keble.

even the righteous cannot answer God a Is. xxx. 7; xxxi. 1-3.

b 1 Pet. ii. 23.

"Believe and fear not! in the blackest cloud a sunbeam hides; and from the deepest pang some hidden mercy may a God declare!"—Robert Montgomery.

Folded hands are not necessarily resigned ones. The Patience who really smiles on grief usually stands or walks or runs.—Ruskin.

"What is resignation? It is putting God between oneself and one's grief."—Mad. Swetchine.

16—18. (16) If . . called, in an agony of despair: or prob. with cry of innocence. would . . voice, for such an answer would be a piece of inconceivable condescension. (17) without cause, "defines Job's issue with his friends; and we who know the prologue know that on God's own confession, ch. ii. 3, he is right. This is not a declaration of sinlessness; but of punishment beyond desert."—Genung. (18) suffer . . breath,[c] trans. "would not suffer," etc., i. e. if I were to call on Him, "but fill me," etc.

The benefit of affliction.—In a journal of a tour through Scotland by the Rev. C. Simeon, of Cambridge, we have the following passage:—"Went to see Lady Ross's grounds. Here also I saw blind men weaving. May I never forget the following fact: One of the blind men on being interrogated with respect to his knowledge of spiritual things, answered, 'I never saw till I was blind; nor did I ever know contentment when I had my eyesight, as I do now that I have lost it. I can truly affirm, though few know how to credit me, that I would on no account change my present situation and circumstances with any that I ever enjoyed before I was blind.' He had enjoyed eyesight till twenty-five, and had been blind now about three years. My soul," Mr. Simeon adds, "was much affected and comforted with his declaration. Surely there is a reality in religion!"—Patience in affliction.—On her arrival Mrs. Tatham was greatly distressed to see her beloved child reduced by acute suffering to a state of total prostration. During this season of anguish, however, the sufferer manifested the most Christian patience. The Rev. G. I. Johnson, an aged minister of Christ, inquired of her what he should particularly pray for, and received answer, "That I may have entire resignation." "How good it is to have Jesus near us in the hour of trial." "Yes," said Miss Tatham, "but I cannot either pray or trust Him as I ought; I feel I deserve to perish. Jesus! Saviour! help me to come to Thee! Save me! Thou art all in all—all in all. My Saviour! be Thou near me through life's night. Give, O give me Thy holy spirit! Jesus! Jesus! may I not be impatient or ungrateful."—Life of Miss Tatham. Faith that God will help.—A missionary discovered in a miserable London attic an aged woman, quite alone and extremely poor. Seeing a strawberry plant growing in a broken tea pot he said, "Your plant flourishes nicely, you will soon have strawberries upon it." "Oh, sir," she said, 'I do not grow it for the sake of fruit. I am too poor to keep any living creature, he is unworthy of Divine regard c He. xii. 11.

vs. 18. "Of a cruel master it is said, 'When his servants stop to take their breath, he abuses them.' 'The man grudges me my breath.' 'What! can I work without taking my breath?' 'The toil is always upon me; I have not time for breathing.'"—Roberts.

He who sits down in a dungeon which another has made has not such cause to bewail himself as he who sits down in the dungeon which he has made for himself.—Dewey.

"Patience in cowards is tame, hopeless fear; but in brave minds, a scorn of what they bear."—Dryden.

"The ground of all great thoughts is sadness."—Bailey.

but I know this plant can only live by the power of God, and as I see it live and grow it tells me God is near, God will help."—Power.

it would be folly to assert perfection

19—21. (19) R. V., "If we speak of the strength of the Mighty, lo, he is there! And if of judgment, who will appoint me a time?"[a] "In these and following lines Job reaches the most agonized height of doubt. The world problem is insoluble on the lines of human righteousness and reward, work and wages." Genung. (20) R. V., "Though I be righteous, mine own mouth shall condemn me; though I be perfect it shall prove me perverse," i. e. overcome in His presence, I should, though innocent, by my random speech declare my own guilt.[b] (21) Though, etc.[c] R. V., "I am perfect; I regard not myself; I despise my life." In the presence of this thought Job declares — "Nevertheless I am innocent. Let God destroy me!" Here perhaps is the climax of his loyalty to righteousness. He will not declare himself to have done the evil that is imputed to him, even if this declaration cause his death.

Job's mental agitation. — I. His inability to plead with God. No creature may dispute with God. Happily, no one needs. Everyone's case left safely in His hands. II. His certainty of condemnation. However upright and consciously innocent, a fallen man must yet stand condemned before his maker. The mouth that pleads "not guilty" before God condemns itself; it is convicted — 1. Of pride; 2. Of rebelliousness; 3. Of falsehood. III. His resolution to maintain his integrity at all costs. A man may boldly maintain his integrity before his fellow-men, while he humbly abases himself as a sinner before God.— Hom. Com.

Afflictions winning the heart for God. — I have been all my life like a child whose father wishes to fix his undivided attention. At first the child runs about the room, but his father ties up his feet; he then plays with his hands until they likewise are tied. Thus he continues to do till he is completely tied up. Then, when he can do nothing else, he will attend to his father. Just so has God been dealing with me to induce me to place my happiness in Him alone. But I blindly continue to look for it here, and God has kept cutting off one source of enjoyment after another, till I find that I can do without them all, and yet enjoy more happiness than ever in my life before. — Payson.

a 1 Co. x. 22.

b Lu. xviii. 14; 1 Jo. i. 8, 10.

c Pro. xxviii. 26; Je xvii. 9, 10; Ps cxxxix. 23, 24.

This may be illustrated by the following incident in the life of Nelson. In time of war, a French officer was once brought into his presence. He went boldly up to the great admiral, and held out his hand. Nelson drew back. "Give me your sword," said he, "and then I will take your hand."

man not dealt with here according to character

22—24. (22) This is one,[d] etc., R. V., "It is all one; therefore I say, He destroyeth the perfect and the wicked," i. e. God does not discriminate. His friends had asserted that the evil were punished, and the good rewarded in this life. (23) If . . suddenly, that there be no time or way of escape. he . . innocent,[e] "Job utters nothing more bitter than this in the whole book."—Jerome. (24) The . . wicked,[f] it seems to him as if only the wicked were left unharmed. covereth . . thereof, that in hearing causes they cannot discern betw. the evil and the good. if not, etc., R. V., "If it be not He, who then is it?" i. e. who is the author of all this inequality if it be not God?

Affliction as a furnace. — I. A furnace is prepared for gold; so afflictions are appointed for the saints, who are compared to gold. II. A furnace refines gold, and makes it much purer than before. III. A furnace is made sometimes very hot, according to the kind and condition of the metal; so are afflictions sometimes very grievous, heavy and trying, as the case requires. IV. A furnace melts the gold, and makes it soft before it is refined; so afflictions those whom they mean to purify. V. A furnace will destroy tin, lead, etc., and also the drossy part of gold; so afflictions burn up from His people all their corruptions. VI. The metal, when it comes forth from the furnace, is more prepared for its proper use; so are the people of God when they come forth from afflictions.— B. Keach.

The happy surprise of death. — The Rev. Mr. Hall, of Arnsby, Mr. Evans, of Foxton, and Mr. Christian, of Sheepshead, attended a ministers' meeting at Mr. Woodman's, Sutton, in the Elms, Leicestershire. In the evening, these ministers spent their time together in the most agreeable conversation. Amongst other subjects, one of them proposed for discussion that passage in Job ix. 23, "If the scourge slay suddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent." When it came to Mr. Christian's turn to speak, he dwelt upon the subject with an unusual degree of feeling. He considered it as referring to the sudden death of the righteous; and was expatiating very largely on the desireableness of such an event, and the happy surprise with which it would be d Ecc. ix. 2, 3.

"There is no difference whether a man be innocent or not."—Delitzsch. — "A terrible statement, but one wh. cannot be gainsaid, without ref. to a future compensation."—Spk. Com.

e "A Titanic outburst of unutterable woe."—Spk. Com.

f Da. iv. 17.

The strength of a man consists in finding out the way in which God is going, and going in that way too; for God goes before and ploughs and we can but follow after and plant our seed in his furrow.—Beecher.

attended; when, amidst a flood of rapturous tears, he took his flight from the world while the words were yet faltering on his tongue!

25, 26. (25) post, lit. a runner; all. two swift couriers that bear dispatches.[a] they . . away, intent only on reaching the end of the stage. they . . good, as the courier is indif. to surrounding things. (26) swift ships,[b] which fly bef. the wind, and leave no track on the sea or river. eagle . . prey, and leaving no mark in the air. He compares himself to that which is fleetest on land, water and air. Yet brief as his life is it has been cut short, withered in its prime, hopeless and miserable.

The brevity of human life (vss. 25–33).—These words give us a view of man in the—I. Brevity of his mortal existence. The figures which are here employed are most expressive. 1. "My days are swifter than a post;" 2. "They are passed away as the swift ships;" 3. "As the eagle that hasteth to the prey." II. As the subject of sore affliction and distress, we remark—1. That the distresses of some are very severe and numerous; 2. That great afflictions should not be regarded as evidence of any special guilt. III. As guilty and polluted, but ignorant of the appointed method of deliverance. Notice—1. The expedient proposed; 2. The inefficacy of this expedient; 3. The reasons of this inefficacy. (1) The disparity in the condition of God and man; (2) The want of a suitable person to interpose between them.

The need of prompt action.—To do anything in this world worth doing we must not stand back shivering and thinking of the cold dangers, but jump in and scramble through as well as we can. It will not do to be perpetually calculating risks. It did very well before the flood, when a man could consult his friends upon an intended enterprise for one hundred and fifty years and then live to see its success. But at present a man waits and doubts and consults his particular friends till one day he finds he is sixty years of age, and that he has lost so much time in consulting his friends, he has no more time to follow their advice.—Sydney Smith. Swift ships.—The author of the Fragments annexed to Calmet's Dictionary observes that it if can be rendered supposable that any animal, or class of animals, may be metaphorically called ships, it is the dromedary, well known to Job. The Eastern writers apply the term to camels and dromedaries. "The whole caravan being now assembled, consists of a thousand horses, mules, and asses, and of five hundred camels; these are the ships of Arabia; their seas are the deserts."—Sandy's Travels. They say that one of these Aarishes will, in one night, and through a level country, traverse as much ground as any single horse can perform in ten, which is no exaggeration of the matter, since many have affirmed to me that it makes nothing of holding its rapid pace, which is a most violent hard trot, for four-and-twenty hours on a stretch, without showing the least sign of weariness or inclination to bait; and that then, having swallowed a ball or two of a sort of paste made up of barley-meal, and, may be, a little powder of dry dates among it, with a bowl of water, or camel's milk, if to be had, and which the courier seldom forgets to be provided with in skins, as well for the sustenance of himself as of his Pegasus, the indefatigable animal will seem as fresh as at first setting out, and ready to continue running at the same scarcely credible rate, for as many hours longer, and so on from one extremity of the African desert to the other, provided its rider could hold out without sleep and other refreshments." The ancient post.—Though it is alas! too plain that the adage, "Time is money," obtains little credence in the East, yet there is one striking exception to the ordinary rule—it is in the case of the post; thus letters are carried inland from Bombay along miserable roads, with scarce any bridges, by relays of horsemen, at the rate of at least 125 miles a day. Nor can the British government claim the credit of having been the first to insist on the speedy transmission of the mail. The necessity for this was fully understood by its predecessors in Eastern rule, the Mogul emperors. Even yet, when important battles or other political events take place in the remoter parts of India, they are said frequently to become known in Calcutta within so short a period that it has occasionally been suspected the natives may have managed to outrun the government dispatches by a private post of their own. It is unnecessary to point out the force which this imparts to the patriarch's words.

27—31. (27) leave off, etc.,[c] R. V., "put off my sad countenance and be of good cheer." (28) afraid . . sorrows, rather, afraid by reason of my sor-

the fleetness of life

a 2 Ch. xxx. 6.

b Lit. ships of reed, or papyrus; see Is. xviii. 2.

Make the best of what you have. The fullest life is not so full of good things as it would be if it reaped all the harvest of good within its reach. Our frailty is in reaching out toward the impossible and the distant.—S. S. Times.

The minutes have their trusts as they go by,
To hear His love who wings their viewless flight;
To Him they bear their record as they fly,
And never from their ceaseless round alight.—Jones Very.

Arrest the present moment,
For be assured they all are arrant tell-tales:
And though their flight be silent . . They post to heaven, and there record thy folly.—Nathaniel Cotton.

"Work while you have light," especially while you have the light of morning. There are few things more wonderful to me than that old people never tell young ones how precious their youth is. They sometimes sentimentally regret their earlier days; sometimes prudently forget them; often foolishly rebuke the young, often more foolishly indulge, often most foolishly thwart and restrain, but scarcely ever warn or watch them.—Ruskin.

Job cannot purify himself

c Je. viii. 18.

rows. (29) If I be wicked, R. V., "I shall be condemned; why, then, do I labor in vain?" i. e. God has resolved to consider me guilty. Why should I labor to clear myself? (30) hands . . clean,[a] lit. clean with lye; i. e. if I make myself white as snow, if I cleanse my hands with potash, yet God will make me unclean, even so that my very clothes would refuse to cover me. (31) Yet . . ditch, "it comes to the idea of arbitrary power; God is so great that He can compel Job to be what He holds him to be." — Genung.

God's impartial judgments. — On one occasion Peter Cartwright preached in a fashionable church at Nashville. In the middle of the sermon Andrew Jackson entered and walked up the main aisle. The president's presence overpowered the preacher in charge so that he bent over and said to Cartwright in an audible whisper, "General Jackson has come in! General Jackson has come in!" "And who," thundered out Cartwright, "is General Jackson? If he don't get his soul converted God will damn him as quick as He would a Guinea negro." The independence of the backwoods preacher won the general's lasting regard. — Strickland.

Affliction an incentive to zeal. — There is an old story in the Greek annals of a soldier under Antigonus who had a disease about him, an extremely painful one, likely to bring him soon to the grave. Always first in the charge was this soldier, rushing into the hottest part of the fray, as the bravest of the brave. His pain prompted him to fight, that he might forget it; and he feared not death, because he knew that in any case he had not long to live. Antigonus, who greatly admired the valor of his soldier, discovering his malady, had him cured by one of the most eminent physicians of the day; but alas! from that moment the warrior was absent from the front of the battle. He now sought his ease; for, as he remarked to his companions, he had something worth living for — health, home, family, and other comforts, and he would not risk his life now as aforetime. So, when our troubles are many we are often by grace made courageous in serving our God; we feel that we have nothing to live for in this world, and we are driven, by hope of the world to come, to exhibit zeal, self-denial, and industry. But how often is it otherwise in better times, for then the joys and pleasures of this world make it hard for us to remember the world to come, and we sink into inglorious ease. — Spurgeon.

32—35. (32) Not a man,[b] his deeply-felt need is that God should be like a man — on some common ground of understanding. The consciousness of his own integrity weighed in the balances of his theology, lead him to conclude that Jehovah transcends human standards. (33) daysman,[c] umpire, arbitrator. that . . both, being accepted by both, partaking of nature of each. (34) his rod,[d] i. e. let God remove his rod. (35) Then, etc., "if God would meet Job as a man, removing His afflicting rod and laying aside His awful majesty, Job would speak out his innocence and plead his own cause without fear." — Cam. Bib. but . . me, there is nothing in me that should make me afraid were only a fair trial given me.

Daysman. — Marg., "umpire;" none between Job and the Almighty. In the combat between Prince Arthur and the two Paynim brothers who had despoiled Sir Guyon, Cymochles insultingly asks the prince :—

> "What art thou
> That mak'st thyself his dayesman to prolong
> The vengeance prest?" — Spenser, Fairy Queen, ii. 8.

It is properly in the Heb. a di-judicator or arbiter between two parties, and is exactly the word used by the indignant Jacob to Laban in Gen. xxxi. 37 — "Set it here before my brethren and thy brethren, that they may judge between us both."

The use of suffering. — Look at some of those exquisite and extraordinary rare workings in iron at old Nuremberg (one of the most charming, I think, of the cities of Europe), in the cathedral. Do you suppose the iron was just pinched out into shape? How many strokes did it receive? How many hittings did it undergo on the anvil? How was it beaten here and there? How was it bent forward, and backward, and forward, and backward again? How was it distorted and contorted? How was it worked and worked till by and by it was covered with little specules as multitudinous as those in frost-pictures, and more delicate and more permanent. They were wrought out by incessant workings in the fire, and on the anvil, under the hammer. Suffering makes a man, or spoils him. A good many are spoiled in the making. — Beecher.

[a] Ps. cxxx. 3.

"Our afflictions are like weights, and have a tendency to bow us to the dust, but there is a way of arranging weights by means of wheels and pulleys, so that they will even lift us up. Grace, by its matchless art, has often turned the heaviest of our trials into occasions for heavenly joy. 'We glory in tribulations also.' We gather honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock." — Spurgeon.

The beginning of anxiety is the end of faith, and the beginning of true faith is the end of anxiety. — George Müller.

the need of a daysman

[b] Je. xlix. 19; Ecc. vi. 10.

[c] 1 Sa. ii. 25; Ps. cvi. 23; 1 Jo. ii. 1, 2.

[d] Ps. xc. 11; xxxix. 10.

"For every sort of suffering there is sleep provided by a gracious Providence, save that of sin." — J. Wilson.

"He who has most of heart, knows most of sorrow." Bailey.

"Should we feel at times disheartened and discouraged, a simple movement of heart towards God, will renew our powers. Whatever He may demand of us, He will give us at the moment the strength and the courage that we need." — Fenelon.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

1—3. (1) leave . . myself, R. V., "I will give free course to my complaint." (2) Do . . me,[a] i. e. do not treat me as one proved to be wicked. shew . . me, let me know wherein I have done wrong. (3) Is it good, is it thy pleasure, does it seem right to thee? Job is groping after the discovery of some characteristic or quality in God to account for his afflictions." — Cam. Bib. despise . . hands, slight Thy servant, whose goodness is fr. Thee. shine . . wicked, cause the plans of the ungodly to prosper. It is like Abraham's question, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

Job's bitter exclamation (vs. 1). — I. Let us see the grounds of this bitter utterance. Observe — 1. His original condition; 2. The reverses he had experienced. II. What has often originated such an exclamation. We see it exhibited in the proud Ahithophel (2 Sam. xvii. 23), the desponding Elijah, (1 Kings xix. 1–4), in the perfidious Judas (Matt. xxvii.) and it is often manifested in the self-destroyed of our times. III. The evil such an exclamation exhibits. It is sin — 1. Against the Author of life; 2. Against the Divine goodness with the life given; 3. Against the great ends of life; 4. Against our own happiness. IV. The Divine remedy for this evil. 1. To look within and see the vileness, corruption, etc.; 2. Look up and see the mercy, love and pity of God waiting for your salvation; 3. Look forward and see what is to be done by you; 4. Look around and see the suffering, sad, and the desolate; 5. Look beneath and see the world of the lost. Learn: — (1) Seek daily grace; (2) Suppress wicked discontent; (3) Look and live for eternal life. — J. Burns.

A lesson taught by an afflicted believer. — My letter was interrupted by being called to visit an old follower of Jesus Christ. I have been much profited by the interview. I have not been to instruct, but to be instructed. One of his expressions was, "Days, weeks, and months have rolled round during my affliction, and I have scarcely known the night from the day, nor the day from the night, so rapidly and joyfully have the hours escaped me; I have felt nothing but joy and love; not for a moment have I been impatient or weary, or wished it otherwise with me; so marvelously has God wrought in me. This is the hand of God. This never grows in nature's soil." — R. Watson. Affliction making us long for heaven. — We had traversed the Great Aletsch glacier, and were very hungry when we reached the mountain tarn half-way between the Bel Alp and the hotel at the foot of the Æggischorn; there a peasant undertook to descend the mountain, and bring us bread and milk. It was a very Marah to us when he brought us back milk too sour for us to drink, and bread black as a coal, too hard to bite, and sour as the curds. What then? Why, we longed the more eagerly to reach the hotel towards which we were traveling. We mounted our horses, and made no more halts till we reached the hospitable table where our hunger was abundantly satisfied. Thus our disappointments on the road to heaven whet our appetites for the better country, and quicken the pace of our pilgrimage to the celestial city. — Spurgeon.

4—6. (4) Hast . . flesh?[b] etc., is this mistaken treatment to be accounted for by imperfect vision? Is God as blind to my character as these friends? (5) Are . . man? etc.,[c] is Thy life, like man's, short, and uncertain, so that Thou must crowd into it even punishment for sins not yet committed, lest I escape? (6) That iniquity, etc.,[d] so eagerly and relentlessly?

Afflictions. — "In all cases of suffering the people of God should consider — I. God wills them and sends them: now the will of God is perfectly righteous, and what He does is so well done that it could not be better done. II. There is need of them or we should not have them. III. Their number, measure, and continuance God determines; and, comparatively speaking, they are but for a moment. IV. The Lord will be sure to support us under them. V. They are not too many, too heavy, or too long, as Satan would have them; nor too few, too short, or too light, as our corrupt nature would have them. VI. Their end is a weight of glory, aud the crown that attends them is everlasting.

Affliction increased with our strength. — "I had," said Latimer, describing the way in which his father trained him as a yeoman's son, "my bows bought me according to my age and strength; as I increased in them so my Job complains of his sufferings

a Ps. vi. 1, 2; Ro. viii. 1.

"Count each affliction, whether light or grave, God's messenger sent down to thee. Do thou with courtesy receive him. Grief should be like joy — majestic, equable, strong, commend great thoughts, thoughts lasting to the end." —Aubrey de Vere.

We rejoice in life because it seems to be carrying us somewhere; because its darkness seems to be rolling on towards light, and even its pain to be moving onward to a hidden joy. — Phillips Brooks.

"Come, then, affliction, if my Father bids, and be my frowning friend. We welcome clouds which bring the farmer rain, though they the present prospects blacken round, that, by their rich stores enrich'd, the earth may yield a fruitful summer and a plenteous crop." —C. Swaine.

the greatness of God makes man unworthy of notice

b 1 Sa. xvi. 7; Lu. xvi. 15.

c 2 Pe. iii. 8.

d Ps. xliv. 21; Zep. i. 12.

"Afflictions are God's potions, which we may sweeten by faith and fervent prayer; but we, for the most part, make them bitter, putting into God's cup the evil ingredients of our impatience and unbelief." — J. Dod.

"Our crosses are not made of iron, though painted sometimes with iron colors: they are formed of nothing heavier than wood. Yet they are not made of pasteboard, and will never be light in themselves, though our Lord can lighten them by His presence. The Papists foolishly worship pieces of wood supposed to be parts of the true cross, but he who has borne the really true cross, and known its sanctifying power, will value every sliver of it, counting his trials to be his treasures, his afflictions argosies of wealth, and his losses his best gains." — Spurgeon.

"Sorrow is a kind of rust of the soul, which every new idea contributes to its passage to scour away. It is the putrefaction of stagnant life, and is remedied by exercise and motion." —Johnson.

bows were made bigger and bigger." Thus boys grew into cross-bowmen, and by a similar increase in the force of their trials, Christians become veterans in the Lord's host. The affliction which is suitable for a babe in grace would little serve the young man, and even the well-developed man needs severer trials as his strength increases. God, like a wise father, trains us wisely, and as we are able to bear it He makes our service and our suffering more arduous. As boys rejoice to be treated like men, so will we rejoice in our greater tribulations, for here is man's work for us, and by God's help we will not flinch from doing it. — Spurgeon. Benefit of afflictions. — What can differ more than the aspect of the on-coming and the whole phenomenon of a summer's rain, and its actual after results? The sun goes out. Birds cease their singing. Low and terrific sounds and voices, vengeful thunders, are in the air. Great winds come as avant-couriers, sweeping onward, and causing the trees to groan and writhe as if in pain. Weakly leaves are shredded off and hurled hither and thither. All beasts hide themselves. Everything looks dark as the judgment-day. Then comes, with mighty roar, the outpouring and beating rain, that still further shreds off the leaves, and tears the trees, and beats down the grass, and overwhelms the grain, and dishevels the flowers. In the midst of this storm let a man look out, and he will sceptically say, "Is this the refreshment of nature? Is this the cup that is put to the lips of the flowers that they may drink and be revived?" And yet, let the hour go by: let all its gloomy works and seemings be swept away with it; let the sun reappear; let the birds begin to sing again; let the trees shake themselves of drops of rain; let the grass lift itself up once more, and then man will instinctively praise God for that which before seemed to be only a process of destruction. The storm seems to have gone, but it has not gone. Those things which at first appeared — all the external signs of fury — these have passed away; and now the storm is at work on the root, and every blade of grass is drawing, and every tree is pumping, and every flower is drinking. Who could have cleansed the air as that breathing wind has? Who could have swept the vapors out of the heavens as that tornado has? Who, by any appliance of human skill, could have watered the acres as that rain has? Who could have given new life to the wasting herbage as that thunderstorm has, which went tramping through the valley and the wilderness, apparently a messenger of evil? One hour after it is gone all things silently thank God, that one hour before shuddered and trembled, and said, "Hast Thou forgotten to be gracious?" So it is with the ministrations of suffering and sorrow. While the storm pelts, men shrink. While the thunder sounds, they slink down. While the tempest rages, it is as if they were ruined. But when the violence abates a little, they begin to lift up their head, and to perceive that it was not all dark, that it was not all thunder, that it was not all beating, that there was an element of good in it; and gradually they learn the sweet bounty and benefit that God meant to bestow upon them by afflictions. — H. W. Beecher.

Job is as God made him

7—10. (7) Thou . . wicked,[a] for Thine eye reads the heart of man. none . . hand,[b] Thy days are everlasting, none can escape Thee. Job has been trying one explanation after another, but finds no solution of the problem. (8) Thine hands, etc. Since Thou hast taken such pains to make me what I am, wilt Thou forsake the work of Thine own hands? (9) Remember . . clay,[c] does the potter mold a vessel only to dash it to pieces? And hast Thou made me only to destroy me? (10) Hast . . milk, etc.,[d] ref. to human embryo, often referred to as "the most sacred and wonderful of mysteries."

Conscious integrity (vs. 7). — We propose to show — I. What we are to understand by this appeal. Job never intended to assert that he was possessed of sinless perfection. But he appealed to God — 1. That he was free from the sin imputed to him; 2. That he was on the whole upright before God. But that we may not be too hasty in making such an appeal, let us consider — II. What is necessary to warrant it. 1. That we are free from all allowed sin; 2. That we endeavor habitually to approve ourselves to God. But in proportion to the difficulty of making this appeal is — III. The blessedness of being able to make it — 1. Under any trouble that may come upon us; 2. In the prospect of death and judgment. Address — (1) Those who are living in any known sin; (2) Those who think themselves in a good state. — Simeon.

Note on vs. 10. — Much philological learning has been brought to the explanation of this passage. In the preceding verse Job is speaking of his death a Ps. i 6; vii. 8; xvii. 3; xxvi. 1-5.

b De. xxxii. 39; Ps. l. 22; Jo. x. 27-30.

c Per. a ref. to clay of the potter. Is. xxix. 16; xlv. 9; Ro. ix. 21-23.

d Ps. cxxxix. 14-16.

"I am heartily sorry for those persons who are constantly talking of the perishable nature of things

"Wilt thou bring me into dust again?" But what has the pouring out of milk to do with death? The people of the East pour milk upon their heads after performing the funeral obsequies. Has a father a profligate son, one he never expects to reclaim, he says, in reference to him. "Ah! I have poured milk upon my head," i. e. "I have done with him: he is as one dead to me." "And curdled me like cheese." The cheese of the East is little better than curds; and these also are used at the funeral ceremonies. — Roberts. Confidence in God's faithfulness. — A good woman known as Old Nanny lives in the Scotch Highlands. Her pastor once said to her, "Suppose, Nanny, God were to cast you off at last? What then?" "Why, man," she replied, "God wad be the greater loser. Nanny wad lose her soul, but God wad lose His character, and if His promises should be broken, the whole universe wad gang to ruin." — Lange.

11–13. (11) Thou . . flesh, ref. to fœtal existence. fenced,[a] R. V., "knit me together," the intricate bodily structure. (12) favour,[b] providential care, including parental solicitude, etc. spirit, life. (13) these things, i. e. these present evils. hast . . heart, all that has happened has been the outworking of Thy hidden purpose from my creation! know . . thee, better "this was with thee," — was thy purpose, and in thy thoughts.

Wonders of the body. — Our bodies are at all times like the fire which was shown to the hero of The Pilgrim's Progress, in Interpreter's house, which had water poured on it on one side of the wall against which it blazed, and oil on the other. Here one tissue is burning like fuel, and there another is becoming the depository of combustible matter. We have, as it were, millions of microscopic wind-furnaces, converting into carbonic acid, water, vapor, and other products of combustion, all the combustible elements of the body; and millions of blast-furnaces reducing the starch and sugar of the food, and the sulphates and phosphates of the body, into inflammable oils and other fuels, which are finally transferred to the wind-furnaces, and burned there. Burning, and what we must call, in contradistinction, unburning, thus proceed together; the flame of life, like a blow-pipe flame, exhibiting an oxidizing and a reducing action, at points not far distant from each other. Such is the human body, ever changing, ever abiding; a temple always complete, and yet always under repair; a mansion which quite contents its possessor, and yet has its plans and materials altered each moment; a machine which never stops working, and yet is taken to pieces in the twinkling of an eye, and put together in the other; a cloth of gold, to which the needle is ever adding on one side of a line, and from which the scissors are ever cutting away on the other. — G. Wilson. Preservation in danger. — An English tradesman started to attend a fair in Bristol. On the way he was taken ill and detained so long it was useless for him to go, and he returned home. Some years afterward he happened to be present at the execution of a criminal, who beckoned him to approach. The criminal then asked him, "Do you not recollect once starting for Bristol Fair?" "Yes, perfectly well." "It is well that you did not go, for I and several others who knew that you had considerable money with you had resolved to waylay and rob and then murder you to prevent detection." — Hurlbut.

14–16. (14) then . . me, i. e. it was Thy purpose to watch for my least sins and not to pardon mine iniquities.[c] (15) If . . me,[d] i. e. and if I commit some great sin — then some unutterable penalty was laid up in store for me. and . . head, and if I commit no sin, I must not dare to walk erect, but with bowed head, as if guilty. I . . confusion, etc., R. V., "being filled with ignominy and looking upon mine affliction."[e] (16) increaseth, etc., R. V., "and if my head exalt itself, thou huntest me," etc., i. e. "If he should lift up his head and assert his integrity, God would spring on him like a lion." — Cox. again . . me, inflicting marvellous and mysterious trials.

Man's confusion and God's order (vs. 15.) — I. Man's confusion. 1. The conflict between health and disease; 2. The conflict between family order and domestic confusion; 3. The conflict between friendship and alienation; 4. The conflict between inheritance and destitution; 5. The conflict between spiritual good and evil. II. God's order. 1. Bodily order; 2. Family order; 3. Social order; 4. Circumstantial order; 5. Moral order. — Homilist.

Imputed righteousness, — When we walk abroad on a beautiful day, and survey a landscape lit up by the beams of a summer sun, our eye catches a his physical frame and life are from God a Hence the application of the word texture and the term muscular tissue.

b Ac. xvii. 28.

God is all to thee; if thou be hungry, He is bread; if thirsty, He is water; if in darkness, He is light; if naked, He is a robe of immortality. — St. Augustine.

"As prisoners in castles look out of their grated windows at the smiling landscape, where the sun comes and goes, so we, from this life, as from dungeon-bars, look forth to the heavenly land, and are refreshed with sweet visions of the home that shall be ours when we are free." — Beecher.

Job is pursued with trials

c "'Whatever sin I might commit, it was Thy intention to watch and record it, and not to cleanse me from my guilt.' The words represent an inner travail of spirit, a struggle between the consciousness of sin which Job never disguises, and the feeling that the sin, not being wilful, was not sufficient to account for his sufferings." — Spk. Com.

d Ex. xxxiv. 6, 7; Is. iii. 11. Ro. ii. 8, 9.

e Lu. xvii. 10.

and the nothingness of life; for, for this very end we are here, to stamp the perishable with an imperishable worth." — Goethe.

"Those who always love have not the leisure to complain and to be unhappy." — Joubert.

"I will labor not to be like a young colt first set to plough, who more tires himself out with his own untowardness (whipping himself with his misspent mettle) than with the weight of what he draws; and will labor to bear patiently what is imposed upon me."— Fuller.

variety of colors lying on the surface of this landscape, — there is the yellow of the golden grain, the green of the pasture land, the dark brown of those thickly planted copses, the silver gleam of the stream which winds through them, the faint blue of distant hills seen in perspective, the more intense blue of the sky, the purple tinge of yonder sheet of water; but none of these colors reside in the landscape, they are not the properties of the material objects on which they rest. All colors are wrapped up in the sunlight, which, as is well known, may be seen resolved into its elementary colors in the prism or rainbow. Apart from the sunlight no object has any color: as is shown by the fact that as soon as light is withdrawn from the landscape, the colors fade from the robe of nature. The difference of color in different objects, while the sun is shining, is produced by some subtle difference of texture or superficies, which makes each object absorb certain rays, and reflect certain other rays, in different proportions. Now Christ is the Sun of Righteousness, in whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily — the fair color of every grace and Christian virtue. When Christ is shining upon the heart, then these virtues are manifested there, by one Christian grace of one description, by another of another, according to their different receptivity and natural temperament, just as, when the sun is shining, colors are thrown upon a landscape, and reflected by the different objects in different proportions. But as no part of the landscape has any color in the absence of the sun, nor can acquire any independently of the sun, so Christians have no grace except from Christ, nor hold any virtue independently of Him." — Goulbourn.

Job regrets that he ever lived a Job iii. vi. 3.

The more a tree of righteousness is shaken by the wind, the more it is rooted in Christ.

"Oh, what an excellent interpreter is experience. For thus the serious Christian getteth a view of spiritual things which the most subtle school men cannot reach; yea, by the practice of truth, nearness to God, and retiring of the soul to Him, hath oft obtained more light in one hour than others by many days, putting their judgment and invention on the rack." —Fleming.

17—19. (17) renewest, Thou wouldst call up new. changes . . me, R. V., "changes and warfare are with me." (18, 19) Wherefore . . womb?[a] "After all that the friends have urged and all the aspects in which the case has been viewed, it remains true that there is no satisfactory solution of life. This is the summing up of the present section comprising the dreary outcome of the friends' philosophy." — Genung.

The destructive force of suffering (vs. 18).— The sufferings of Job had destroyed within him for a time — I. A sense of duty. II. A love of life. III. Hope of hereafter. Learn — 1. That great suffering in this world in the case of individuals does not mean great sin; 2. The power of the devil over man; 3. The value of the Gospel.

Afflictions awakening gratitude. — Afflictions when sanctified make us grateful for mercies which aforetime we treated with indifference. We sat for a half an hour in a calf's shed the other day, quite grateful for the shelter from the driving rain, yet at no other time would we have entered such a hovel. Discontented persons need a course of the bread of adversity and the water of affliction, to cure them of the wretched habit of murmuring. Even things which we loathed before, we shall learn to prize when in troublous circumstances. We are no lovers of lizards, and yet at Pont St. Martin, in the Val d'Aosta, where the mosquitoes, flies, and insects of all sorts drove us nearly to distraction, we prized the little green fellows, and felt quite an attachment to them as they darted out their tongues and devoured our worrying enemies. Sweet are the uses of adversity, and this among them — that it brings into proper estimation mercies aforetime lightly esteemed. — Spurgeon. — Noble piety nourished by affliction. — The pine, placed nearly always among scenes disordered and desolate, brings into them all possible elements of order and precision. Lowland trees may lean to this side and that, though it is but a meadow breeze that bends them, or a bank of cowslips from which their trunks lean aslope. But let storm and avalanche do their worst, and let the pine, find only a ledge of vertical precipice to cling to, it will nevertheless grow straight. Thrust a rod from its last shoot down the stem, it shall point to the centre of the earth as long as the tree lives. Amid the sternest trials the most upright Christians are usually reared. The Divine life within them so triumphs over every difficulty as to render the men, above all others, true and exact. What a noble spectacle is a man whom nothing can warp, a firm, decided servant of God, defying hurricanes of temptation! — Spurgeon.

he pleads for rest on the ground that life is short b Ps. xxxix. 5, 13.

c 2 Sa. xii. 23; xiv. 14.

d "The undiscovered country, from whose bourne no traveler returns." — Shakespeare.

e Virgil, Æn. vi. 259, ff.; Am. iv. 13; Is. viii. 22; ix. 1.

20—22. (20) Are . . few? etc.,[b] since life is so short, allow me a little respite fr. suffering. (21) Before . . return,[c] to the grave.[d] to . . darkness,[e] "Job's idea of the receptacle of the dead was probably derived from Chaldea, on which the land he inhabited bordered. It was within the earth, consequently dark and sunless."— Rawlinson. (22) without . . order, chaotic,[a] "a new characteristic which we do not find in other accounts of Hades." light . . darkness, uncertain, flickering: not clear and pure.[b]

Longings for immortality. — There are times when the best life seems a sheer failure to the man who has lived it; his wisdom folly, his genius impotence: his best deed poor and small; when he wonders why he was suffered to be born; when all the sorrows of the world seem poured upon him; when he stands in a populous loneliness, and though weak, can only lean upon himself. In such hours he feels the insufficiency of this life. It is only his cradle-time, he counts himself just born; all honors, wealth and fame are but baubles in his baby-hand; his deep philosophy but nursery rhymes; yet he feels the immortal fire burning in his heart. Still worse, the consciousness of sin comes over him: he feels that he has insulted himself. All about him seems little; himself little; yet clamoring to be great. Then we feel an immortality through the garish light of day we see a star or two. The soul within us feels her wings, contending to be borne, impatient for the sky, and wrestles with the earthly worm, that folds us in. — Theodore Parker. — Light in death. — When John Holland died, it was about five or six in the evening, the shadow of night was gathering round, and it was growing darker and darker. When near the last moment he looked up, and said to the family: "What is this? What is this strange light in the room? Have they lighted the candles, Martha?" "No," she said. He replied, "Then it must be heaven. Welcome, heaven." — Talmage.

a "Dark, wasteful, wild." — Milton.

b "No light; but rather darkness visible, served only to discover sights of woe."—Milton.

"I thank thee, my God, that though the river of Lethe may indeed flow through the Elysian fields, it does not water the Christian's Paradise." — Madame de Gasparin.

"Alas! while the body stands so broad and brawny, must the soul lie blinded, dwarfed, stupefied, almost annihilated?" — Carlyle.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

Zophar's answer

Job charged with falsehood

1—4. (1) Zophar, "Zophar's indignation rises still higher than that of the others; being a narrower man, his views are correspondingly more intense and dogmatic." — Genung. (2) a . . talk,[c] lit. a man of lips, one who makes such great professions. (3) lies, R. V., "boastings." (4) doctrine, i.e. that God afflicts one whom He knows to be righteous. This was Job's doctrine and he had dared to defend it and to claim to be irreproachable in the sight of God.

Questionable reproof. — The reproof which Zophar addressed to Job suggests two remarks. I. The charges he brings against Job, if true, justly deserve reproof. He charges him with — 1. Loquacity; 2. Falsehood: 3. Irreverence; 4. Hypocrisy. But — II. The charges, if true, could not justify the spirit and style of the reproof. — Thomas.

A talker. — His measure of talk is till his wind is spent, and then he is not silenced, but becalmed. His ears have catched the itch of his tongue; and though he scratch them, like a beast with his hoof, he finds a pleasure in it. He shakes a man by the ear as a dog does a pig, and never loosens his hold till he has tired himself as well as his patient. He is a walking pillory, and punishes more ears than a dozen standing ones. He will hold any argument rather than his tongue, and maintain both sides at his own charge; for he will tell you what you will say, though perhaps he does not intend to give you leave. His tongue is always in motion, though very seldom to the purpose; like a barber's scissors, which are kept snipping as well when they do not cut, as when they do. He is so full of words that they run over, and are thrown away to no purpose; and so empty of things, or sense, that his dryness has made his leaks so wide, whatsoever is put in him runs out immediately. He is so long delivering himself, that those that hear him desire to be delivered too, or despatched out of their pain. — Butler.

c Pr. x. 19; Ja. i. 19; Ac. xvii. 18.

"Bad words are as influential as the plague and the pestilence. They have wrought more evil than battle, murder, and sudden death. They creep through the ear into the heart, call up all its bad passions, and tempt it to break God's commandments. A few bad words got into the ear of the mother of mankind; and they led her on to eat the forbidden fruit, and thus to bring death into the world." — G. Mogridge.

he wishes that God would speak

5, 6. (5) oh . . speak, etc., ref. to Job's wish[d] that God would address him. Zophar sug. that if God were to reply, Job would be convinced of his guilt. (6) double[e] . . is, R. V., "that it is manifold in effectual working," i. e., wisdom is a far more complex matter than Job conceives. less . . deserveth,[f] "Eliphaz was courteous and indirect, exhorting to repentance; Bildad spoke of the sons' calamity as just. But Zophar finds Job's punishment less than his desert." — Genung.

Divine forbearance. (vs. 6). — The desert of sin. Its 1. Nature. 2. Severity. 3. Certainty. 4. Justice. II. God's forbearance. 1. The proof of it. (1) Our own lives. (2) God's word. (3) God's providential dealings with man. 2. The reason of it. (1) Mercy to man. (2) Justice to Christ. (3) His own honor. III. The instruction of man. Precious lessons should be derived d Job x. 2.

e Ps. xxv. 14; Ma. xiii. 35; Ro. xvi. 25, 26.

f Ez. ix. 13; Ps. ciii. 10.

"Stars shine brightest in the darkest night; gold looks brighter for scouring; the palm tree proves the better for pressing. Such is the condition of God's people; they are most triumphant when most tempted, most glorious when most afflicted." — Bogatsky.

"Through all Thy sorest judgments love doth shine — Lord, of a truth, Thou doest all things well." —Ingelow.

from the study of so grand a truth. 1. Submission. 2. Repentance. 3. Hope.— Pul. Com.

Sin detected. — I could both sigh and smile at the simplicity of a native American, sent by a Spaniard, his master, with a basket of figs and a letter (wherein the figs were mentioned) to carry them both to one of his masters' friends. By the way this messenger ate up the figs, but delivered the letter, whereby his deed was discovered, and he was soundly punished. Being sent a second time on the like message, he first took the letter (which he conceived had eyes as well as tongue) and hid it in the ground, sitting himself on the place where he put it; and then securely fell to feed on his figs, presuming that that paper which saw nothing could tell nothing, then, taking it again out of the ground, he delivered it to his master's friend, whereby his fault was perceived, and he worse beaten than before. Men conceive they can manage their sins with secrecy; but they carry about them a letter, or book rather, written by God's finger, their conscience bearing witness to all their actions. But sinners being often detected and accused, thereby grow wary at last, and to prevent this speaking paper from telling any tales, do smother, stifle and suppress it, when they go about the committing of any wickedness. Yet conscience (though buried for a time in silence) hath afterwards a resurrection, and discovers all, to their greater shame and heavier punishment.— Thomas Fuller.

the unsearchableness of God

7—9. (7) Canst . . God?[a] can you fathom the depths of the wisdom of God? canst . . perfection? can you understand the perfection of the Almighty? (8) It . . heaven,[b] "His wisdom is immeasurable, unfathomable. The words are an exclamation: heights of heaven! what canst thou do? — thou art impotent before it, to scale it or reach it."— Camb. B. (9) measure, etc.,[c] it includes all lengths and breadths. That is, He is infinite in knowledge, man is finite.

a Ps. lxxvii. 19.

b Is. lv. 9; Ps. cxxxix. 6–8; Am. ix. 2.

c Ep. iii. 18, 19; Ps. cxxxix. 9, 10; lxv. 5–8.

Incomprehensibility of God. — The Emperor Trajan pressed the Rabbi Joshua to show him his God. In vain the Jew replied that his God, though everywhere present, was invisible. The emperor insisted, and the other replied: "Come, then, with me; I will show you first one of his embassadors." He led the emperor into the open air — it was about midday, and no cloud obscured the sun. The rabbi desired the emperor to look at it. "How can I, man?" said the latter; "the light blinds me." Then the Jew said: "Art thou unable to endure the sight of one of God's creatures, and yet dost thou expect to behold the infinitely brighter glory of the Creator? Such a sight would not dazzle thee only, it would destroy thee. For thus it is written, 'Thou canst not see my face; there shall no man see me and live.'"— Krummacher. — Though the sun is the source of light, there is little good in gazing at it except to get blinded. We use the light the sun gives us to see by and to search into all things, the sun excepted. Himself we cannot explore beyond what he reveals of himself in the light and heat which he sheds upon us, and in the colors by which he is reflected from the earth. There is no searching of the sun; our eyes are too weak. How much less can we search the sun's Creator, before whom the myriads of suns are as so many cloud-bodies. — Pulsford. — All the discoveries of modern science serve to exalt the Deity; but they do not contribute a single iota to the explanation of His purposes. They make Him greater, but they do not make Him more comprehensible. He is more shrouded in mystery than ever. It is not Himself whom we see, it is His workmanship; and every new addition to its grandeur or to its variety which philosophy opens to our contemplation, throws our understanding at a greater distance than before from the mind and conception of the sublime Architect. Instead of the God of a single world, we now see Him presiding, in all the majesty of His high attributes, over a mighty range of innumerable systems. To our little eye He is wrapt in more awful mysteriousness; and every new glimpse which astronomy gives us of the universe magnifies, to the apprehension of our mind, that impassable barrier which stands between the counsels of its Sovereign and those fugitive beings who strut their evanescent hour in the humblest of its mansions. If this invisible Being would only break that mysterious silence in which He has wrapt Himself, we feel that a single word from His mouth would be worth a world of darkling speculations. Every new triumph which the mind of man achieves in the field of discovery binds us more firmly to our Bible; and by the very proportion in which philosophy multiplies the wonders of God, do we prize that

"Let us be men with men, and always children before God; for in his eyes we are but children. Old age itself, in the presence of eternity, is but the first moment of a morning."—Joubert.

"Patience, time, and money overcome everything. The world is his who has patience." — Italian.

"Mine be the reverent, listening love
That waits all day on thee,
With the service of a watchful heart
Which no one else can see; —
The faith that, in a hidden way
No other eye may know, Finds all its daily work prepared And loves to have it so."
—A. L. Waring.

book on which the evidence of history has stamped the character of His authentic communication. — Chalmers.

10—12. (10) If he, etc.,[a] R. V., "If he pass through, and shut up, and call unto judgment, then," etc.; If God be against a man who shall call Him to question? (11) knoweth . . men,[b] hollow, empty men. will . . it? rather, He doth not consider it: i. e. it causes Him no loss of time to estimate man: He does so at a glance. (12) For vain man,[c] etc., R. V., margin, "But an empty man will get understanding, when a wild ass's colt is born a man," i. e. never.

Taking away in love. — To a lady, who was bitterly lamenting the death of an infant child, Bishop Heber related the following beautiful apologue, as one with which he had himself been affected. A shepherd was mourning over the death of his favorite child, and in the passionate and rebellious feeling of his heart, was bitterly complaining that what he loved most tenderly, and was in itself most lovely, had been taken from him. Suddenly, a stranger of grave and venerable appearance stood before him, and beckoned him forth into the field. It was night, and not a word was spoken till they arrived at the fold, when the stranger thus addressed him: "When you select one of these lambs from the flock, you choose the best and most beautiful among them; why should you murmur, because I, the Good Shepherd of the sheep, have selected from those which you have nourished for Me, the one which was most fitted for My eternal fold?" The mysterious stranger was seen no more, and the father's heart was comforted.

Existence of God. —

And can there be who doubt there is a God,
And life eternal! When the river flows,
Deny the fountain-head who will, the wave
That, curling, murmurs farthest from its source,
That source attests. Show me some well-wrought work
Of matter or of mind; though you produce
No author, I conclude that such there was,
Or this had never been, and give him praise.
And why should sense demur? When the poor slave,
Doom'd by some tyrant's hard decree to starve,
Wakes in his dungeon on his rocky bed,
From sleep, then wildly casts his eyes around,
As if in search of death, let him espy
In osier frame sweet herbage of the field
To greet his famished lip, and from the spring,
In earthen jar, the lucid draught to cheer
His parching tongue; will he not straight exclaim
That some kind hand hath oped his prison door,
And brought this bounty? Will he not invoke
A blessing on the donor as he tastes,
And feels the temperate tide of health return
To cool the heated vessels of his heart,
And pacify the fever in his brain?
Tell him 'twas chance — but no; you could not thus Abuse his ear, nor wound his swelling soul
In presence of the angel Gratitude. — Cowper.

13, 14. (13) If . . heart,[d] "thou" is emphatic. Passage means, bring into a right condition of thought and feeling. stretch . . him,[e] in earnest prayer. (14) If . . hand,[f] if thou hast gotten anything unlawfully, make restitution. in thy tabernacles, practically charges him with having the spoils of robbery in his tent.

The life of the godly and the doom of the wicked (vss. 13–20). — I. The life of the godly. 1. The nature of a godly life. Two leading facts are associated with it. (1) The seeking after God; (2) The abandonment of evil. 2. The blessedness of a godly life. There is in it — (1) Cheerfulness of aspect; (2) Steadfastness of mind; (3) Fearlessness of soul: (4) Deliverance from all suffering: (5) Cheerfulness of being. II. The doom of the wicked. 1. Here is the loss of energy; 2. Here is the loss of safety; 3. Here is the loss of hope. — Thomas.

God knows and can do all things

[a] Is. xiv. 27; Re. iii. 7.

[b] Ps. xciv. 11; x. 13, 14; He. iv. 13; Re. ii. 23.

[c] Ro. xii. 16; 1 Co. iii. 18–20.

"There are certain pagans whose god is known as Buddha. Their priests say to the people, 'Think of Buddha and you will be transformed into Buddha. If men pray to Buddha, and do not become Buddha, it is because the mouth prays and not the mind.' How much greater the power of prayer sincerely offered to the Christian's God!"

"We all must suffer, if we aught would know;
Life is a teacher stern, and wisdom's crown
Is oft a crown of thorns, whence trickling down, Blood, mixed with tears, blinding her eyes, doth flow."
— Lowell.

"He that troubles not himself with anxious thoughts lives little less than the life of angels, whilst, by a mind content with little, he imitates their want of nothing." — Cave.

He exhorts Job to put away sin.

[d] 2 Ch. xii. 14; xix. 3; Pr. xvi. 1.

[e] La. iii. 41.

[f] Ez. xviii. 30, 31; Is. i. 16; Ja. iv. 8.

"All the doors that lead inward to the secret place of the Most High, are doors outward — out of self, out of smallness, out of wrong."— MacDonald.

"Patience! why 'tis the soul of peace; of all the virtues, 'tis nearest kin to heaven; it makes men look like gods."— Decker.

A forgotten beholder. — A man who was in the habit of going into a neighbor's corn-field to steal the ears, one day took his son with him, a boy of eight years of age. The father told him to hold the bag, while he looked if any one was near to see him. After standing on the fence, and peeping through all the corn rows, he returned and took the bag from the child, and began his guilty work. "Father," said the boy, "you forgot to look somewhere else." The man dropped the bag in a fright, and said, "Which way, child?" supposing he had seen some one. "You forgot to look up to the sky, to see if God was noticing you." The father felt this reproof of the child so much that he left the corn, returned home, and never again ventured to steal; remembering the truth his child had taught him — that the eye of God always beholds us. — Whitecross.

he promises comfort if he be innocent a Pr. xxviii. 1; xiv. 26; Ps. cxii. 6-8; cxix. 6.

b Is. liv. 4; lxv. 16.

c Pr. iv. 18; Ps. cxii. 4.

d Mal. iv. 2.

15—17. (15) For then, R. V., "surely then." lift . . spot, stain of sin. stedfast,[a] molten; i. e. firm as metal cast by melting in the furnace. (16) waters . . away,[b] see on vi. 15–17. (17) age, R. V., "life," not "old age." clearer . . noonday,[c] as the sun rising out of morning mists to the brightness of noon. thou . . forth,[d] R. V., "Though there be darkness, it shall be as the morning," as the darkness of night disappears before the dawn.

The confidence of innocence. — Julius Drusus, a Roman tribune, had a house that in many places lay exposed to the view of the neighborhood. A person came, and offered that, for five talents, he would so alter it that it would not be liable to that inconvenience. "I will give thee ten talents," said Drusus, "if thou canst make my house conspicuous in every room of it so that all the city may behold in what manner I lead my life."— Arvine.

and adds the promise of peace and safety

e Le. xxvi. 5; Pr. iii. 26; Ps. iii. 5.

f Pr. xi. 7; Am. ix. 1.

18—20. (18) secure,[e] confident, because then, having confessed, he need fear no more calamity. He will be at peace with God. dig, R. V., "search," i. e. for grounds of alarm, and finding none, rest in security. (19) lie . . afraid, thy nights shall be peaceful instead of full of suffering as now, or fearful of enemies as in the past. shall . . thee, caress thee: lit. stroke thy face, i. e. be eager to win your aid and friendship. (20) eyes . . fail,[f] when they look for relief. they . . escape, the justice of God. hope . . ghost, R. V., "shall be the giving up of the ghost," i. e. death, the only thing they can expect to hope for.

The deceitful hope (vs. 20). — It is like giving up the ghost, for — I. It is giving up that which is very dear. II. Yet, dear as it is, it must be given up. III. Yes, it must be given up, and that suddenly. IV. Depend upon it, the giving up must be soon. V. When given up it will leave no substance but perfect despair.

"Affliction has its dangers as well as prosperity. The one is a smooth sea with rocks beneath the shining surface. The other is a troubled ocean, in a dark and stormy night."

The hope of the upright. — In the time of Lord North "Junius" was in opposition. It was resolved to hire Goldsmith to baffle his terrible sarcasm. Dr. Scott, chaplain to Lord Sandwich, was deputed to negotiate with him. I found him," says Dr. Scott," in a miserable suite of chambers in the Temple. "I told him my authority. I told how I was empowered to pay for his exertions; and would you believe it? he was so absurd as to say, 'I can earn as much as will supply my wants without writing for any party; the assistance you offer is therefore unnecessary to me;' and so I left him in his garret." A rich banker of Tipperary — a radical and a demagogue — got himself returned to Parliament, and in course of time, to quiet him, he was made a lord of the treasury. A coronet seemed to gleam before his eyes. But in this he was disappointed. He had launched into Italian, American and Spanish railways, and lost heavily. Then he began to forge deeds, conveyances and bill for hundreds of thousands of pounds. His clever but unprincipled schemes failed; his bills were dishonored; his ruin was imminent. Late at night he entered his study, and took from it a phial of prussic acid. He strayed to Hampstead Heath, drank the poison and died. One of the last letters that he wrote was to his cousin. He said, "To what infamy I have come step to step, heaping crime upon crime. I am the cause of ruin, and misery, and disgrace to thousands. Oh how I feel for those on whom this ruin must fall! I could bear all punishment, but I could not bear to witness their sufferings. It must be better that I should not live. Oh that I had never quitted Ireland! Oh, that I had resisted the first attempts to launch me into speculation! I might then have remained what I was — honest and truthful. I weep and weep now, but what can that avail?"— Samuel Smiles.

"The hours of a wise man are lengthened by his ideas, as those of a fool are by his passion. The time of the one is long because he does not know what to do with it; so is that of the other because he distinguishes every moment of it with useful or amusing thoughts; or, in other words, because the one is always wishing it away, and the other always enjoying it."— Addison.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

Job's reply

he ridicules the wisdom of his friends

1—3. (1) answered, Job who has thus far accepted the friends' philosophy, while unable to reconcile it with facts, now sees how futile it is. There is some other philosophy of suffering. Henceforth "he ceases to arraign God and arraigns the friends instead."—Genung. (2) ye . . people, the only wise men in the world. (3) understanding, lit. heart.[a] I . . you, in power to quote and apply proverbs. yea . . these, the reference is to Zophar's exhib. of the Divine wisdom and might, ch. xi. 7–12.

Independency of thought in religion (vss. 1–5). — That this is man's prerogative appears from the following considerations: I. From the capacity of the soul. 1. Man has a capacity to form conceptions of the cardinal principles of religion; 2. And a capacity to realize the practical force of these conceptions. II. From the despotism of corrupt religion. It always seeks to crush this independency of the individual soul. III. From the necessary means of personal religion. It begins in individual thinking. IV. From the condition of moral usefulness. V. From the teachings of the Bible. Men are commanded to use their reason. VI. From the transactions of the judgment. Men will have to give an account of their thoughts and words as well as deeds. — Thomas.

Colored light. — I can picture to myself a candle which should in some way mingle a peculiarity of its own substance with the light it shed, giving to that light a hue which did not belong essentially to the fire at which it was lighted. Men who saw it would see not only the brightness of the fire. They would see also the tone and color of the lamp. And so it is, I think, with the way in which some good men manifest God. They have really kindled their lives at Him. It is His fire that burns in them. They are obedient, and so He can make them His points of exhibition, but they cannot get rid of themselves. They are mixed with the God they show. They show themselves as well as Him." — Brooks.

a With the Hebs. the heart was the seat of the understanding and the bowels the seat of the emotions.

"Wisdom is better without an inheritance, than an inheritance without wisdom."—Lacon-ics.

"Patience is a plaster for all sores. The longest day will have an end. When one door shuts, another opens. It is a sore battle from which none escape."—English Proverbs.

he reproves them for shallow judgments

4—6. (4) I . . neighbour,[b] "I am to be one that is a laughing-stock to his friends, I who called on God and he answered me: a laughing-stock, the just and perfect man." — Cam. Bib. the just, etc., by the situation in which he is placed, being innocent and yet suffering. (5) He . . feet, etc., R. V., "In the thought of him that is at ease there is contempt for misfortune; it is ready for them whose foot slippeth." All, to the contempt of these friends. (6) into . . abundantly,[c] contrasts the seeming Divine protection of the wicked with the evident suffering of the righteous.[d]

Contempt for the unfortunate. — I. We cannot understand the trouble we do not share. II. We are tempted to despise the trouble we do not understand. III. We may use our own trouble as a means of stimulating our sympathy with the troubles of others. IV. The sorrows of Christ helped to make Him a perfect Saviour. — Adeney.

The uncertain security of the wicked. — A scientific gentlemen was deputed by the English government to examine the scene of a fatal explosion. A colliery hand accompanied him. As they were inspecting the edge of a region of foul air their safety lamps were "afire." "I suppose," said the inspector, "there is a good deal of fire-damp hereabout." "Thousands and thousands of cubic feet," replied his companion. "What!" exclaimed the official, "do you mean to say there is nothing but that shred of wire gauge between us and eternity?" "Nothing but that gauge, sir, to keep the whole mine from being blown up." So it is with sin. We must not tamper with danger. — Hurlbut.

b Ps. xxii. 7, 8; Ma. xxvii. 29; Heb. xi. 36.

c Ps. xxxvii. 35; lxxiii. 12; Mal. iii. 15.

d "Who has no God but his own hand, or weapon."—Spk. Com.

"Oh was it spoken,
'Go ye forth, heal the sick, lift the low, bind the broken,'
Of the body alone? Is our mission then done
When we leave the bruised hearts if we bind the bruised bone?'
—Meredith.

he directs them to nature as a teacher

7—10. But . . beasts, etc.,[e] so far fr. these three friends having a monopoly of wisdom, all creation was full of illustrations of Divine wisdom, and capable of instructing them. teach . . till, etc., that God does not deal with His creatures acc. to their character. (8) earth, ref. to all forms of lower animal life wh. reveal the ways of Providence. (9) Who . . these,[f] etc., i. e. by all these: i. e. by these the great truths of Divine sovereignty and power may be learned. Lord, the word Jehovah occurs here only in Job's addresses and those of his friends. (10) soul,[g] life. every . . mankind, all are subject to the rule of one sovereign God, who dispenses life and death to man and beasts in absolutely arbitrary fashion.

e Pr. vi. 6; Is. i. 3; Je. viii. 7.

f 1 Sa. ii. 7.

g Da. v. 23; Ps. civ. 29, 30.

"We comprehend the earth only when we have known heaven. Without the spiritual world the material world is a disheartening enigma."—Joubert.

"You have marked the spring as it has unfolded its mantle, and hung it gracefully on the shoulders of the hills, and spread its gifts of flowers on the lap of the grateful earth; that is a manifestation of God's all-transforming powers."—J. Parker.

"Thy might is self-creative, and Thy works immortal, temporal, destructible, are ever in Thy sight and blessed there. The heavens are Thy bosom, and Thine eye is high o'er all existence; yea, the worlds are but Thy shining footprints upon space."—Bailey.

"The noblest mind the best contentment has."—Spenser.

God's treatment of man in this world not according to human character. — Three things show this. I. The experience of human life. The prosperity of the wicked is — 1. One of the most common facts in human experience; 2. One of the most perplexing facts in human experience; 3. One of the most predictive facts in human experience. — Thomas. — The history of inferior life. — The creatures of God may be studied in two aspects. I. As a revelation of God: His wisdom, goodness, superintending care. II. As a revelation of duty they teach us by their conduct how we should act. 1. They act in harmony with the laws of their nature, so should we; 2. They seek their pleasure from the true source, so should we; 3. They answer the ends of their existence, so should we.

The earth as a teacher. — To the attentive ear all the earth is eloquent; to the reflecting mind all nature is symbolical. Each object has a voice which reaches the inner ear, and speaks lessons of wise and solemn import. The streams murmur unceasingly its secrets; the sybilline breeze in mountain glens and in lonely forests sings forth its oracles. The face of nature is everywhere written over with Divine characters, which he who runs may read. But beside the most obvious lessons which lie, as it were, on the surface of the earth, and which suggest themselves to us often, when we are least disposed for inquiry or reflection, there are more recondite lessons which she teaches to those who make her structure and arrangements their special study, and who penetrate to her secret arcana. She has loud tones for the careless and superficial, and low suggestive whispers to those who hear with an instructive and attentive mind. She has beautiful illustrations to fascinate the childish, and solemn, earnest truths in severe forms to teach the wise; and those who read her great volume, admiring with the poet and lover of nature the richly colored and elaborate frontispieces and illustrations, but not arrested by these — passing on, leaf after leaf, to the quiet and sober chapters of the interior — will find in these internal details revelations of the deepest interest. As we step over the threshold, and penetrate into the inner chambers of nature's temple, we may leave behind us the beauty of the gardens and ornamental parterres, but we shall find new objects to compensate us — cartoons more wonderful than those of Raphael adorning the walls, friezes grander than those of the Pantheon, sculptures more awe-inspiring than those which have been disinterred from the temples of Karnak and Assyria. In descending into the crust of the earth we lose sight of the rich robe of vegetation which adorns the surface, the beauties of tree and flower, forest, hill, and river, and the ever-changing splendors of the sky; but we shall observe enough to make up for it all in the extraordinary relics of ancient worlds strewn around us and beneath our feet. — Hugh Macmillan.

he refers them to the voice of experience a Pr. viii. 14; Is. xl. 13, 14.

"Although the living members of Christ be never without trouble in this world, but always exercised under the cross, yet the cause and consideration why God will have them thus exercised is either for the honor and glory of His own name, or the profit, commoditie and exceeding benefit of them whom He thus afflicteth, or for both these considerations together."—T. Timme.

11—13. (11) mouth, R. V., "even as the palate tasted its meat." "Is it not as much the business of the ear to discriminate between wise and unwise words, as of the palate to determine between pleasant and unpleasant tastes?" — Rawlinson. Even so our reason is able to discern bet. truth and falsehood. (12) ancient, aged. wisdom, etc., this would be more likely at a time when knowledge was gained by experience and observation. (13) With him, i. e. with God.[a]

The duty of exercising private judgment (vs. 11). — Men's duty to examine and judge of what they hear. Observe — I. Man possesses a faculty by which to judge of moral and religious statements. II. Man's duty to exercise that faculty in regard to all such statements, with 1. Seriousness and attention. 2. Candor and patience. 3. Modesty and humility. 4. Impartiality and absence of prejudice. 5. Prayer for Divine enlightenment. III. Human authority on Divine subjects to be respected, but not regarded as paramount, vss. 12, 13. In vs. 12 Job's object is 1. To vindicate his own knowledge of God. 2. To show that the wisdom of God infinitely surpasses the wisdom of men. — Hom. Com.

Pursuit of knowledge. — Some years ago an effort was made to collect all the chimney-sweepers in the city of Dublin, for the purpose of education. Among others came a little fellow, who was asked if he knew his letters. "Oh, yes," was the reply. "Do you spell?" "Oh, yes," was again the answer. "Do you read?" "Oh, yes." "And what book did you learn from?" "Oh, I never had a book in my life, sir." "And who was your schoolmaster?" "Oh, I never was at school." Here was a singular case: a boy could read and spell without a book or a master. But what was the fact?

Why, another little sweep, a little older than himself, had taught him to read by showing him the letters over the shop doors which they passed as they went through the city. His teacher, then, was a little sweep like himself and his book the sign-boards on the houses. What may not be done by trying!

14–16. (14) he . . down,[a] cities, houses, personal estates, by wars, or by the destructive forces of nature, cyclone and disease as in Job's case. he . . man, in poverty, sorrow, etc., such as take away man's freedom of action. (15) waters,[b] rain springs. (16) wisdom, R. V., "effectual working." He has the power to execute his plans. deceived . . his,[c] lit. "he that errs and he that leads into error," he that is ruled and he that rules oppressively. These are distinctions among men; to God both are the same, or both are equally in his hand. —Cam. Bib.

he asserts that power and wisdom are with God

[a] Mal. i. 4.

[b] Je. xiv. 22; Na. i 4; Ja. v. 17, 18.

[c] Ez. xiv. 9; 1 Ki. xxii. 21–23.

Reasonableness of miracles. — "I regard a miracle," said uncle, "to be merely such an interference wi' the established coorse o' things as infallibly shows us the presence and the action o' a supernatural pooer. What o'clock is it wi' you, sir, if you please?" "It is half-past twelve, exactly; Greenwich time," replied Smith. "Well, sir," said uncle, pulling a huge old time-piece from his pocket, "it's ane o'clock wi' me. I generally keep my watch a bitte forrit. But I may hae a special reason noo for setting my watch by the railway; and so, see ye, I'm turnin' the hauns o't around. Noo, wad ye say that I have violated the laws o' a watch? True, I hae dune what watchdom, wi' a' its laws, cooldna hae dune for itself; but I hae dune violence to nane o' its laws. My action is only the interference o' a superior intelligence for a suitable end; but I hae suspended nae law, violated nae law. Weel, then, instead o' the watch, say the universe; instead o' moving the hands, say God acting worthily of Himsel'; and we hae a' that I contend for in a miracle: that is, the unquestionable presence of an Almighty hand working the Divine will. And, if He sees fit to work miracles what can hinder Him? He has dune it aftener than once or twice already, and wha daur say that He'll not get leave to do't again?" —Peloubet.

"God uses not the rod where He means to use the sword."—Bishop Hall.

"Heaven is above all yet. There is a Judge that no king can corrupt."—Shakespeare.

17, 18. (17) counsellors,[d] great and wise men; also politic schemers. spoiled, stripped of office and power. "So much is said here of captivity and of removal, as from an eye-witness, that we conclude some great national upheaval was fresh in memory. To me this event seems most probably to have been the fall of the Northern kingdom."—Genung. maketh . . fools, in human estimation by the overthrow of their plans. (18) He . . kings, with which they hold others in bondage. and . . girdle, that they be led in captivity themselves.

and that He confounds the wise and mighty

[d] 2 Sa xvii. 14; Is. xix. 12; xxix. 14; 1 Co. i. 19, 20.

The overthrow of the proud. — You will never be worth anything for God and the church until you lose fifty thousand dollars, or have your reputation upset, or in some way, somehow, are thrown and humiliated. You must go down before you go up. Joseph finds his path to the Egyptian court through the pit into which his brothers threw him. Daniel would never have walked amidst the bronze lions that adorned the Babylonish throne if he had not first walked amidst the real lions of the cave. And Paul marshals all the generations of Christendom by falling flat on his face on the road to Damascus. Men who have always prospered may be efficient servants of the world, but will be of no advantage to Christ. You may ride majestically seated on your charger, rein in hand, foot in stirrup, but you will never be worth anything spiritually until you fall off. They who graduate from the school of Christ with highest honors have on their diploma the seal of a lion's muddy paw, or the plash of an angry wave, or the drop of a stray tear, or the brown scorch of a persecuting fire. In nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of the thousand there is no moral or spiritual elevation until there has been a thorough worldly upsetting. — Talmage.

"As every mercy is a drop obtained from the ocean of God's goodness, so every affliction is a drachm weighed out in the wisdom of God's providence."

"We mount to heaven mostly on the ruins of our cherished schemes, finding our failures were successes." — Louisa M. Alcott.

19–21. (19) princes,[e] R. V., "priests." The chief of a tribe was at that time both prince and priest.[f] (20) speech, lit. lip. "He takes away the power of giving safe counsel or good advice." taketh . . aged, on whose wise speech the young relied. (21) He . . princes,[g] by making them objects of scorn.

and makes them incapable of ruling and advising

[e] Da. ii. 21.

[f] As Melchizedek and Jethro.

[g] Jos. x. 24, 42; 1 Sa. xvii. 50; Is. xlv. 1.

All that God does is well done. — Rabbi Akiba was once traveling through the country, and he had with him an ass, a rooster, and a lamp. At nightfall he reached a village, where he sought shelter for the night without success.

"A saint may suffer without sinning, but he cannot sin without suffering. The vessels of mercy are seasoned with affliction, and then the wine of glory is poured in."

"All that God does is well done," said the rabbi, and, proceeding toward the forest, resolved to pass the night there. He lit his lamp, but the wind extinguished it. "All that God does is well done," he said. The ass and the rooster were devoured by wild beasts, yet still he said no more than "All that God does is well done." Next day he learned that a troop of the enemy's soldiers had passed through the forest that night. If the ass had brayed, if the rooster had crowed, or if the soldiers had seen his light, he would surely have met with death, therefore he said again, "All that God does is well done." —Talmud.

He brings hidden things to light a Is. iii. 1-3.

"Affliction is the wholesome soil of virtue; where patience, honor, sweet humility, calm fortitude, take root and strongly flourish." — D. Mallet.

"The desire of knowledge, like the thirst of riches, increases ever with the acquisition of it." — Sterne.

He takes away the confidence of men

b Is. xxiii. 9; Ex. viii. 2, 6, 16, 24; Da. iv. 33; Ac. xii. 23.

c Ps. cvii. 27; Ac. xiii. 11.

"There is more evil in a drop of sin than in a sea of affliction."

"The most difficult thing in life is to know yourself." — Thales.

22, 23. (22) He . . discovereth, i. e. "brings to sight." God through his wisdom sees into the profoundest and darkest deeps, and brings what is hidden to light. (23) He, etc.,[a] as hist. abundantly proves. straiteneth them, R. V., "bringeth them in." ref. to the marvelous growth and then shrinkage of empire, so common in the East.

God at work. — Wherever there are beings of free will, there, whether it be in far-off stars or in the depths of space beyond that farthest star itself, there must be struggle, the possibilities of evil, the choice between the evil and the good. And in no part of His universe can God be passive. Everywhere He must be the foe of the evil and the friend of the good. Everywhere, therefore, throughout the great perplexed, tumultuous universe we can see the flashing of His sword. "His sword," we say; and that must mean His nature uttering itself in His own form of force. Nothing can be in His sword which is not in His nature. And so the sword of God in heavenly regions must mean perfect thoroughness and perfect justice contending against evil and self-will, and bringing about everywhere the ultimate victory of righteousness and truth. — Phillips Brooks.

24, 25. (24) heart, intelligence. of . . people,[b] rulers. wander . . way, rulers without a policy, and full of perplexities. (25) grope . . light, ignorantly trying to feel their way. stagger, "wander;" pursuing a devious and senseless course.[c]

A drunkard rebuked. — A rich drunkard kept two monkeys for his sport. One day he looked into his dining-room, where he and his guests had left some wine, and the two had mounted the table, and were helping themselves generously to the wine — jabbering and gesturing, as they had seen their master and his guests. In a little time they exhibited all the appearance of drunken men. First they were merry, and jumped about; but soon they got to fighting on the floor, and tearing out one another's hair. The drunkard stood in amazement. "What!" said he, "is this a picture of myself? Do the brutes rebuke me?" It so affected his mind that he resolved he would never drink another drop; and from that day he was never known to be any other than a sober and a happy man.

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH.

he retorts their charge of falsehood

d Je. xii. 1; Ps. lxxiii.

e Is. i. 18-20.

f Ps. cxix. 69.

g Je. vi. 14; viii. 11; Ez. xxxiv. 4; Ho. v. 13; Je. xlvi. 11.

h "Quacks, not physicians, in the cure of souls." — T. Hood. "'A numine salus,' the motto on the coach of an eminent quack was translated by Ld. Mansfield, God help the patient."

i Am. v. 13.

j Pr. xvii. 28.

1—5. (1) Lo . . this, etc., i. e. I am speaking out of my own observation and experience. (2) What . . also, see xii. 4. (3) Surely . . Almighty,[d] bec. his friends cannot help him in his dilemma, nor present anything worth the name of reason. I . . God,[e] what he believes about God and what he sees of God's doings seem not to agree, and only God can explain. (4) forgers,[f] they had misquoted his statement and made out for him a character that was not true. all . . value,[g] they came without being sent for, and had no remedy to offer;[h] vss. 4-12 are a digression; an outburst of wrath against the boasted wisdom of his friends. (5) O . . peace,[i] and that would make for Job's peace. and . . wisdom,[j] for now your speech betrays your folly.

Speaking to God (vs. 3). — This speaking to God — I. Implies the highest practical recognition of the Divine existence. II. Involves the truest relief of our social natures. Before a man will unbosom his soul to another he must be certified of three things: 1. That the other feels the deepest interest in him; 2. Will make the fullest allowance for his infirmities; 3. Will assist him in his trials. III. The most effective method of spiritual discipline. IV. Reveals the highest honor of created spirit. — Thomas.

A charlatan. — Count Cagliostro sold at an enormous price the "Balm of Life," and declared he had already attained an age of two hundred years; an that with the use of this wonderful medicine he was entirely insensible to poison. When descanting one day at Strasburg before a large audience, he made the statement that he was invulnerable to poisons. A physician who was present left the room privately and obtained two pills. Coming back to the hall where the Count was haranguing the people, he approached him and said, "Here, my worthy Count, are two pills — the one contains a mortal poison, the other is perfectly innocent. Choose one of them and swallow it, and I engage to take that which you leave. This will be considered a decisive proof of your medical skill, and enable the public to ascertain the efficacy of your extolled elixir." Cagliostro struggled with the situation, made many apologies, but would not touch the pill. His opponent swallowed both, and then proved by the apothecary that they were simply common bread.

"If in all our afflictions Christ is afflicted, surely we may take comfort in His sympathy."

he reproves them for false zeal in the defense of things holy 6–9. (6) Hear, etc., in reply to the wise things you have said. Job answers their assertions "that he has offended God;" "that God will restore prosperity if confession is made." (7) Will . . God,[a] defending God's ways and character on wrong principles. talk . . him, not only should the truth be stated, but stated truly. (8) Will . . person?[b] R. V., "Will ye respect His person?" i. e. will ye be partial on His side, unjust to me in order to gain favor with God? will . . God, as a special pleader. (9) Is . . out? what would be the result if God were to examine the arguments you employ in defense of Him, and in explanation of my condition. mocketh, etc., R. V., "deceiveth another, do ye so deceive him?" with specious, deluding statements.

God-dishonoring zeal in religion (vss. 6, 7). — I. Men sometimes set forth false views in order to honor God. II. Those views are an insult to the Almighty and exposed to His displeasure. III. Those views are irreverent and rotten. — Thomas.

Unrighteous zeal for God. — A Jewish story relates how that when Abraham sat at his tent door he espied an old man, a hundred years of age, leaning on his staff and weary with travel, coming toward him. He received him, washed his feet, and provided supper, but, observing that the old man begged no blessing from God, inquired as to the reason. The other said he worshiped the fire only, and acknowledged no other God; at which Abraham grew so angry that he thrust him out of his tent and exposed him to the evils of the night. When the old man was gone God asked where he was. Abraham said, "I thrust him away because he worshiped not Thee." God answered, "I have suffered him for these hundred years though he dishonored me, and couldest thou not endure him for one night?" — Stanley.

a 2 Co. iv. 2.

b Ro. x. 2.

"We may not lie for the glory of God." — "Bp. Sanderson, ii. 57.

"If a cause be good the most violent attacks of its enemies will not injure it so much as the unjust defense of it by its friends."

"One of the ancient fathers replied to a clamorous disputant who shouted, 'Hear me! hear me!' 'I will neither hear thee nor do thou hear me, but let us both hear Christ.'" — Hurlbut.

he exhorts them to reverence for God, and silence

10–13. (10) if . . persons,[c] R. V., "respect persons," for with God justice will be the first and sole consideration. (11) excellency, exaltation, majesty, glory. afraid,[d] of His righteous anger. (12) remembrances,[e] R. V., "Your memorable sayings are proverbs of ashes. Your defenses are defenses of clay;" and therefore likely to crumble away. ashes, valueless.

Fear of God forbids respect of persons. — Knox furiously opposed Queen Mary's proposed marriage with the Roman Catholic prince of Spain. She regarded him as her enemy. She sent for him, and in tears said that no prince had ever been handled as she; she had borne his bitterness and endured his reprimands, but now she would be avenged. He said, "Madam, I never delighted in the weeping of God's creatures. I can scarcely abide the tears of my own boys whom my own hand corrects, but I have spoken the truth, and must sustain your majesty's tears rather than hurt my conscience." — Hurlbut. The providence of God. — Must not the conduct of a parent seem very unaccountable to a child when its inclinations are thwarted; when it is put to learn letters; when it is obliged to swallow bitter physic; to part with what it likes, and to suffer, and do, and see many things done contrary to its own judgment? Will it not, therefore, follow from hence, by a parity of reason, that the little child man, when it takes upon itself to judge of parental providence — a thing of yesterday to criticise the economy of the Ancient of Days — will it not follow, I say, that such a judge of such matters must be apt to make very erroneous judgments, esteeming those things in themselves unaccountable which he cannot account for! and concluding of some things, from an appearance of arbitrary carriage toward him, which is suited to his infancy and ignorance, that they are in themselves capricious or absurd, and cannot proceed from a wise, just, and benevolent God? — Berkeley.

c Pr. xxiv. 23; Ps. lxxxii. 2; Ja. ii. 1, 9.

d Je. v. 22; Re. xv. 4.

e Ps. xxxiv. 16.

"Dust are your stored-up savings." — Good.

"Your maxims are words of dust." — Noyes.

"The seeds of knowledge may be planted in solitude, but must be cultivated in public." — Johnson.

he avows his undiminished confidence in God a Is. ix. 20.

b Is. xii. 2; Je. iii. 23; Ac. iv. 12.

"The heart that trusts forever sings,
And feels as light as it had wings;
A well of peace within it springs." —Isaac Williams.

"And my soul complaineth not,
For she knows not pain or fear,
Clinging to her God in faith, Trusting though He slay her here."
—Winkler.

"I would run into the arms of Christ if He stood with a drawn sword in His hand."—Luther.

he prays them to give heed to his words

c Ps. xxxvii. 6; Job xlii. 9; Is. l. 8.

"Those who have suffered much are like those who know many languages: they have learned to understand and be understood by all."—Mad. Swetchine.

"Man cannot really disguise for long periods the true features of the soul."—Liddon.

he prays that his afflictions may be less, and a trial vouchsafed d Ps. xxxix. 10.

"Fasten your hold on Christ. Having him, though my cross were as heavy as ten mountains of iron, when He putteth His sweet shoulder under me and it, my cross is but a feather."

14—16. (14) Wherefore . . teeth,[a] "Why do I incur this danger, do you say? Never mind. It is not your affair. For bare existence I care nothing."—Watson. (15) though, etc., R. V., "Though He slay me, yet will I wait for Him: nevertheless I will," etc. The sense of the A. V. is right, though the translation is not correct. but . . maintain, etc., I will vindicate my sincerity. (16) He . . salvation,[b] "This also shall be my salvation, that a godless man," etc.,—Amer. Revisers; i. e. my innocence is my protection. Only the godless need fear.

Note on vs. 15.—When a master chastises an affectionate slave, or tells him to leave his service, he says, "My lord, though you slay me, yet will I trust in you." Does a husband beat his wife, she exclaims, "My husband, though you kill me, I will not let you go." "Kill me, my lord, if you please, but I will not leave you; I trust in you." "Oh! beat me not; do I not trust in you?" "What an affectionate wife that is: though her husband cut her to pieces, yet she trusts in him." "The fellow is always beating her, yet she confides in him."—Roberts.

Firm trust in God.—Some years ago an officer in the army, who was a pious man, was drafted abroad with his regiment. He accordingly embarked, with his wife and children. They had not been many days at sea when a violent storm arose, which threatened the destruction of the ship, and the loss of all their lives. Consternation and terror prevailed among the crew and passengers; his wife was also greatly alarmed. In the midst of all he was perfectly calm and composed; his wife, observing this, began to upbraid him with want of affection to her and her children, urging, that if he was not concerned for his own safety, he ought to be for theirs. He made no reply, but immediately left the cabin, to which he returned in a short time with his drawn sword in his hand, and with a stern countenance pointed it to her breast; but she, smiling, did not appear at all disconcerted or afraid. "What!" said he, "are you not afraid when a drawn sword is at your breast?" "No," answered she, "not when I know that it is in the hand of one who loves me." "And would you have me," replied he, "to be afraid of this storm and tempest, when I know it is in the hand of my heavenly Father, who loves me?"

17—19. (17) Hear, etc., he invites them to closely watch his line of argument. (18) ordered, arranged. I shall be justified,[c] R. V., "I am righteous," as the very first point he reasserts his innocence of evil. (19) Who . . me? argue against me. if I hold, etc., R. V., "shall I hold my peace and give up the ghost? Shall I die without speaking and stating my case?"

The soul turning from man to God.—Mark the attitude of a saint towards God. I. It is confidence. II. It is confidence as a sinner. III. It is confidence arising from God's character alone. IV. It is confidence in spite of all accusers.—Bonar.

A rock to rest on.—The Rev. John Rees, of Crown street, Soho, London, was visited on his death-bed by the Rev. John Liefchild, who very seriously asked him to describe the state of his mind. This appeal to the honor of his religion aroused him; it freshened his dying lamp, and raising himself up in his bed, he looked his friend in the face, and with great deliberation, energy, and dignity, uttered the following words:—"Christ in His person, Christ in the love of His heart, and Christ in the power of His arm, is the Rock on which I rest; and now (reclining his head on the pillow), death, strike!"

20—22. (20) two things, stated in next verse. then will I not hide, etc., i. e. then I shall be able to stand before God and plead. (21) Withdraw . . me,[d] let this bodily suffering end, so that it may not distract my mind. He looks upon the pain as from God, and ceasing when God's hand is lifted. let . . afraid, so that my mind may be calm to argue. (22) call, i. e. call me to the trial, and state the case against me. or . . speak, let me speak first, as the plaintiff.

The mercy and love of God.—The great and wonderful abasement of the Word's Divine person and nature, by its incarnation, should stir up in us a love of and thankfulness unto God. . . . We may gather how much He reckoned of us, by how little and low He was made for us. Oh! what matter of admiration and astonishment doth His mercy afford! The Word put on flesh; God, dust and ashes; the Potter, clay; Life, death. The veiling of God in the flesh is the revealing and manifestation of God's love unto the flesh; a manifestation of the special extraordinary, and tender mercies of God; of the riches and treasures of His love and goodness unto mankind.—Jeanes.

God hears prayer. —

Thou wilt not hold in scorn the child who dares Look up to thee, the Father — dares to ask More than thy wisdom answers. . . . .
. . . . . Thine image, the great sun,
Girt with his mantle of tempestuous flame,
Glares in mid-heaven; but to his noontide blaze
The slender violet lifts its lidless eye,
And from his splendor steals its fairest hue,
Its sweetest perfume from the scorching fire. — Holmes.

"The body of all true religion consists in obedience to the will of the Sovereign of the world, in a confidence in His declarations and an imitation of His perfections."—Edmund Burke.

23—25. (23) How . . sins? So great suffering must mean many sins. How many? and what are they? make . . sin, that in particular on acc. of wh. I now suffer. (24) Wherefore . . face,[a] as if offended. "Job does not believe God to be his enemy, but he recognizes a present alienation, and desires to be made acquainted with the cause of it."[b] — Rawlinson. (25) break . . fro?[c] he compares himself to a leaf severed from the living tree, withered and driven about by the wind. wilt . . stubble? a poor, vain, helpless thing, unworthy the anger of God.

Note on vs. 24. — Job, in his distress, makes this pathetic inquiry of the Lord. Should a great man become displeased with a person to whom he has been previously kind, he will, when he sees him approaching, avert his face or conceal it with his hand, which shows at once what is the state of the case. The poor man then mourns, and complains and asks, "Ah! why does he hide his face?" The wife says to her offended husband, "Why do you hide your face?" The son to his father, "Hide not your face from your son." — Roberts.

The explanation of suffering. — Do you suppose all suffering is sent according to desert? Suffering comes as summer does. A wise way to take summer is not to say: "I wonder whether God sent this summer that I might raise a hundred bushels of wheat or a hundred bushels of corn." Did God think of any such thing as that? No, He willed it so that you might determine what should be the results of the summer. Now God puts you under a discipline of suffering, and leaves you to say, not this: "Where did it come from?" but this: "What can I do with it?" It is not for you to say, "Why was I sick?" but "Having been overtaken by sickness, what can I do with it?" We are no to say, "Why did I lose such a friend?" but, "Having lost such a friend, how shall I be more a man in consequence?" Ask, "How shall I see the bright lining that is beyond the dark cloud?" In other words, study suffering through the lens of hope. Look forward, and not backward. Suffering may be a rod to chastise. It may be a sceptre to empower. Make it a sceptre. Rule in it and rule over it. So God rules in you. — Beecher.

he protests his great unworthiness a Ps. x. 1; lxxxiii. 14.

b La. ii. 5.

c Is. xlii. 3; Ma. xii. 20.

"Take me, O Infinite Cause, and cleanse me of wrong!
Take me, raise me to higher life through centuries long!
Cleanse me, by pain, if need be, scores of days!
Take me and purge me, still will I answer with praise —
There is no death forever."
— E. Morris.

"Sanctified afflictions are like so many artificers, working on a pious man's crown, to make it more bright and massive."

26—28. (26) writest . . me, ref. to judicial proceedings. The "bill of indictment," filled with alleged offenses. possess, R. V., "inherit." the . . youth, to answer for in my age, the sins I committed when young. (27) stocks, fetters of affliction and poverty. lookest . . paths, so that I cannot escape. settest . . feet, R. V., "Thou drawest thee a line about the soles of my feet," drawing bounds beyond which he may not move. (28) and he, etc., R. V., "Though I am like a rotten thing which consumeth, like a garment," etc. garment . . eaten,[d] worthless, will not hold together.

Influence of past habits. — Late observations have shown that under many circumstances the magnetic needle, even after the disturbing influence has been removed, will continue wavering, and require many days before it points aright, and remains steady to the pole. So it is ordinarily with the soul, after it has begun to force itself from the disturbing forces of the flesh and of the world. — Coleridge. — Habits are habitual acts. — As habits belonging to the body are produced by external acts, so habits of the mind are produced by the exertion of inward practical principles — that is by carrying them into act, or acting upon them, the principles of obedience, of veracity, justice and charity . . . . Resolutions to do well are properly acts . . . . All these, therefore, may and will contribute towards forming good habits. But going over the theory of virtue in one's thoughts, talking well, and drawing fine pictures of it, this is so far from necessarily or certainly conducing to form a habit of it in him who thus employs himself, that it may harden the mind in a contrary course, and render it gradually more insensible — that is, form a habit of insensibility to all moral considerations. And from these two observations

he is haunted by the sins of his past life

d Ps. xxxix. 11; Ho. v. 12.

"O white young souls, strain upward, upward still, Even to the heavenly source of purity." — L. Morris.

vs. 26. "'Ah! the things that man has written against me to the judge, are all kassapu, all bitter.' 'Oh! that is a bitter, bitter fault.' 'Who will make this bitterness sweet?'"

"Habitual evils change not on a sudden, but many days must pass and many sorrows; conscious remorse and anguish must be felt, to curb desire, to break the stubborn will, and work a second nature in the soul, ere virtue can resume the place she lost."—Rowe.

"Wherever formed, habit acts involuntarily and without effort, and it is only when you oppose it that you find how powerful it has become."—Smiles.

"Habits are a necklace of pearls, untie the knot, and the whole unthreads." — From the Russian.

together, that practical habits are formed and strengthened by repeated acts, and that passive impressions grow weaker by being repeated upon us, it must follow that active habits may be gradually forming and strengthening, by a course of acting upon such and such motives and excitements, while these motives and excitements themselves are, by proportionate degrees, growing less sensible — that is, are continually less and less sensibly felt, even as the active habits strengthen . . . . Active habits are to be formed by exercise. — Butler.—The peril of tampering with sin. — A gentleman wandering along the beach of Scotland, where the high rocks came near the sea, was unmindful of the fact that the tide was rising, which would cut off his retreat. A man on the top of the rocks shouted, "Hallo! the tide is rising, and this is the last place through which you can make your escape; you had better climb up on to the rocks!" The man laughed at the warning and went on. After a while, he thought it was time to return; he came back and found retreat cut off. He tried to scale the rocks; he clambered half way up, could get no farther. The waves came to his feet, came to his waist, came to his chin, and with a wild shriek for help, he perished. The tides of eternity are rising. Those only will be saved who get on to the Rock of Ages; yet men saunter along in their sin and play in the sand. We come out and shout, "Hallo! Hallo! the tide is rising." They laugh at our excitement, and say there is no danger. After a while they resolve to return, but it is too late. The waters of eternal destruction gather about their feet; they try to climb, but get no farther than the foot of the rock, and, with eyes rolling in horror, and hands flung up, and a shriek of despair that rolls among the mountains of death with long-reverberating echo, they drop forever. — Talmage.

CHAPTER THE FOURTEENTH.

the life of man is brief and sorrowful

a Ecc. ii. 23.

b 1 Ch. xxix. 15.

c Ps. cxliii. 2.

Afflictions of the good. — Joseph (Ge. xxxix. 20-23; Ps. ciii. 15-19). Moses (He. xi. 23). Eli. (1 Sa. iii. 18).

"I have learned to seek my happiness by limiting my desires rather than in attempting to satisfy them."—J. S. Mill.

"Why should we ever weary of this life!
Our souls should widen ever, not contract
Grow stronger, and not harder, in the strife, Filling each moment with a noble act."
— Lowell.

"One thing acquired with pain is better than a hundred acquired with ease."

1—3. (1) Man . . of woman, herself weak and doomed to sorrow. and . . trouble,[a] i. e. his short life is full of trouble. (2) cometh . . flower, beautiful and full of promise. and . . down, by the ills of life, or by death; as a flower by the wind. fleeth . . shadow,[b] swift, noiseless. and . . not, leaves no trace. (3) dost . . one,[c] as man, so weak and worthless. and . . thee, "can it be right that a creature so frail, so evanescent, so laden with sorrow, should be dogged with incessant vigilance and called to a stern judicial account?" — Cox.

Clean out of unclean (vs. 4). — I. Matters of impossibility in nature. 1. Innocent children from fallen parents. 2. A holy nature from the depraved nature of any one individual. 3. Pure acts from an impure heart. 4. Perfect acts from imperfect men. 5. Heavenly life from nature's moral death. II. Subjects for practical consideration for every one. 1. That we must be clean to be accepted. 2. That our fallen nature is essentially unclean. 3. That this does not deliver us from our responsibility. 4. That we cannot do the needful work of cleansing by our own strength. 5. That it will be well for us to look to the Creating Spirit for new creation. III. Provisions to meet the case. 1. The fitness of the gospel for sinners. 2. The cleansing power of the blood. 3. The renewing work of the Spirit. 4. The omnipotence of God in spiritual creation, resurrection, quickening, preservation and perfecting. Lessons — 1. Despair of drawing any good out of the dry well of the creature. 2. Have hope for the utmost cleansing, since God has become the worker of it. — Spurgeon.

Man proposes, God disposes. — The wild fellow in Petronius that escaped upon a broken table from the furies of a shipwreck, as he was sunning himself upon the rocky shore, espied a man rolled upon his floating bed of waves, ballasted with sand in the folds of his garments, and carried by his civil enemy, the sea, towards the shore to find a grave: and it cast him into some sad thoughts that peradventure this man's wife, in some part of the continent, safe and warm, looks next month for the good man's return; or it may be his son knows nothing of the tempest; or his father thinks of that affectionate kiss which still is warm upon the good old man's cheek ever since he took a kind farewell, and he weeps with joy to think how blessed he shall be when his beloved boy returns into the circle of his father's arms. These are the thoughts of mortals, this the end and sum of all their designs: a dark night and an ill guide, a boisterous sea and a broken cable, a hard rock and a rough wind, dashed in pieces the fortune of a whole family, and they that shall weep loudest for the accident, are not yet entered into the storm, and yet have suffered shipwreck. —Jeremy Taylor.

4–6. (4) Who . . unclean?[a] i. e. "Oh, that out of this impure origin one pure person might be born. But there is not one!" A confession of universal sin. (5) Seeing . . determined,[b] as they are fixed he cannot pass the bounds of his allotted time. (6) Turn from him, etc., cease to watch him so pitilessly. accomplish, fill up the little time that is given to him. hireling, who works no longer than the appointed time.

the length of life is fixed by God a Je. xiii. 23; Lu. i. 35.

b Ac. xvii. 26; Lu. xii. 20.

The bills of mortality. — In the most healthful times, two hundred and upwards was the constant weekly tribute paid to mortality in London. A large bill, but it must be discharged. Can one city spend according to this weekly rate and not be bankrupt of people? At leastwise, must not my shot be called for to make up this reckoning? When only seven young men, and those chosen by lot, were but yearly taken out of Athens to be devoured by the monster Minotaur, the whole city was in a constant fright, children for themselves, and parents for their children. Yea, their escaping of the first was but an introduction to the next year's lottery. Were the dwellers and lodgers in London weekly to cast lots who should make up this two hundred, how would every one be affrighted! Now none regard it. My security concludes the aforesaid number will amount of infants and old folk. Few men of the middle age, and amongst them surely not myself. But oh! is not this putting the evil day far from me, the ready way to bring it the nearest to me? The lot is weekly drawn (though not by me) for me, I am, therefore, concerned seriously to provide, lest that death's prize prove my blank.—T. Fuller.

"The following are common sayings:—'Who can turn a black crow into a white crane?' 'Who can make the bitter fruit sweet?' 'Who can make straight the tail of the dog!' 'If you give the serpent sweet things, will his poison depart?'" —Roberts.

7–10. (7) hope . . tree,[c] but not of man. Even the inanimate world seems to be more favored than man. (8) Though . . earth, etc., and seems to have perished. (9) scent, lit. breath, exhalation. bud, germinate. (10) But man,[d] the word is "the brave, strong man," even he must die and be "laid prostrate." Where is he? The attitude of the O. T. toward the condition after death; not a certainty, but a question.

comparison of the end of a tree and of a man

c Jo. xii. 24; 1 Co. xv. 36.

d Lu. xvi. 22, 23.

Death. —"Where is he"—I. As to any opportunity of serving God? II. As to any means of benefiting his own soul? III. As to any hope of carrying into effect his purposes and resolutions? IV. As to any possibility of preparing for his eternal state? Let me then ask—1. If the time were come for us to give up the ghost, where should we be? 2. As the time for your giving up the ghost will shortly come, where should you now be?—C. Simeon. — The death of man.—I. On the supposition that he was a good man, then—1. He is where he has long desired to be; 2. Where he was prepared to be; 3. Where he will for ever remain. II. On the supposition that he was a bad man—1. He is where he never desired to be; 2. Where he was prepared to be; 3. Where he can never wish to remain. — Ad. Clerum.

"We go to the grave of a friend saying, 'A man is dead;' but angels throng about him saying, 'A man is born.'" —Beecher.

"I feel my immortality o'ersweep
All pains, all tears, all time, all fears, and peal,
Like the eternal thunder of the deep,
Into my ears this truth—'Thou livest forever!'" —Byron.

Life after the grave. — In this world of sin, he that takes away the hope of heaven, takes away the consolation of those that sorrow. There is nothing else that can comfort a heart crushed by bereavement and losses. It is but for a moment. Out of my tree the bird has flown, and sings there no more. But it sits in the tree of life and sings, and I shall hear it again. I am alone; I have no counsellor; I am without a companion; I am heart-sick and life-sick—but, what then? I shall find again all that I have lost, and more, and more blessedly. Sorrows, as storms, bring down the clouds close to the earth; sorrows bring heaven down close; and they are instruments of cleansing and purifying. I have seen many a man that was not true to his philosophy, and whose theory broke down at the side of the grave, because he could not endure the belief that he was burying what he had loved; and who said, "Is my child like a clock, when some chance blow has passed through it? Is my child like a shattered clock, that kept time until it was struck, and then ceased, and shall never keep time again?" Never was there such an engine of torment as this world; never was there such a miserable thing as men with such susceptibilities, and in whom sorrows so beat like waves of the sea on the shores of experience, if there is no balm, no hope and no future. —Beecher.

vs. 7. "Trees here appear to be more tenacious of life than in England. The plantain-tree, after it has borne fruit once, is cut down; but from its roots another springs up, which, in its turn, also gives fruit, and is then cut down, to make way for another."—Roberts.

life compared with failing waters

11, 12. (11) As . . fail, by evaporation. sea, or large body of water, as lake or river.[e] flood, river, so that nothing is left of it; complete extinction.

e Nile, Is. xix. 5. Euphrates, Is.

xxvii. 1. See also 2 K. xxv.

(12) So . . down, in the grave. and . . not, to his former state. till . . more,[a] i. e. never.

The future life. — I. The eager, unsatisfied cry of men apart from Divine revelation. II. The partial unfolding of the truth in the earlier revelations. III. The perfect and unequivocal revelation made by Jesus Christ. Of this last we may notice — 1. Christ's teachings all proceed on the assumption that there is a future life. 2. His teachings are constantly supported by an appeal to the future conditions of reward and punishment. 3. Very much of His teaching would be unmeaning and inexplicable in the absence of such future. 4. But He crowns all His teaching by Himself becoming the Disputant, and affirming and demonstrating the future life. 5. He crowns all by the raising of the dead to life, and by the example of His own triumph over death. — Pul. Com.

Doubt of the resurrection removed. — I am about to relate to you one of the strong emotions of my life. I found myself in the crypt of a church at Palermo. My friends and I had gone down into it without exactly knowing where we went, and walked with more of surprise than terror between a double line of skeletons. And yet the spectacle was ghastly enough. Those perpendicular dead bodies, dressed in brown garments that hung loosely around their bony limbs, with crossed hands, holding some sort of shield, with their names written on it, had fallen into dislocated attitudes, even more grotesque than horrible. The portals of our Gothic church cathedrals have no representations that equal this. And yet we were not conscious of any terror. Death presented us, indeed, with his material aspect, his sad, repulsive aspect, but the likeness of humanity was still there. With one word, we felt God could call those dry bones to life again. The next chamber had a more appalling spectacle in reserve. All along the walls — as in the cabin of some great ship — were ranged berths of equal lengths, and on these, dressed in gorgeous attire, hands gloved, lay corpses of women, with discolored faces, empty eye-sockets, sunken features, hollow mouths, and wreaths of roses upon their heads. There were hundreds upon hundreds of them, in all the pomp of their court dresses, and a nauseating smell, the cold, faint smell of death, rose from the vaults where the bodies were drying. In the presence of these faces, with their beauty so inexorably destroyed, of this ghastly satire on worldly vanities, I felt my blood congeal. But when at the end of the passage, lit by our guide's torch, a well yawned before us, and he lowered the red and smoking light he held to show it better; when I saw that nameless detritus, damp, pestilential, which overflowed the well's mouth, and when our guide said, "This is the dust of those yonder; when they have lain their time, we throw them in here," I remained almost lifeless with horror. With my hand half plunged in those ashes, looking at what they had left on my fingers, a despairing doubt flashed blightingly across my soul. As I fled in haste from that fatal crypt, and mounted with unsteady step the stair that led us back into the nave, just where the daylight began to appear, I suddenly saw four letters carved on the wall, I. N. R. I. Then a voice resounded very near, "Believest thou that I am able to do this?" Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews, yea verily, Thou wilt do it! From that day I have never for a moment doubted of the resurrection of the dead. — Mad. de Gasparin.

"We have had in these vss. 'such a picture of faith struggling to get free from the inexorable suggestions of this phenomenal life and find a full standing point in the unseen beyond as can hardly be paralleled elsewhere in literature.'" — Genung.

"Our journey is not to the grave. I am not growing into old age to be blind, and to be deaf, and to be rheumatic, and to shrink a miserable cripple into the corner, shaking and tottering, and forgetting all that ever I knew. The best part is untouched. I sit enshrined within the me. No physical weakness touches the soul."
—Beecher.

"It is said of Cleombrotus, a heathen, that, after reading the discourses of Plato upon the immortality of the soul, he cast himself headlong from a high rock, and brake his neck, that he might enter upon that immortality which he loved, and believed would follow after death."

death a great change

13, 14. (43) O . . grave,[b] "Job rises to the thought that there might be another life after this one. This thought is expressed in the form of an impassioned desire." — Cam. Bib.; see on iii. 13. until . . past, wh. now rages like a tempest. that . . time, "that God would appoint him a period to remain in death, and then remember him with returning mercy and call him back again to His fellowship." (14) If . . again,[c] Job begins now to think that there is another life. my appointed time,[d] etc., R. V., "my warfare would I wait, till my release should come," i. e. I would endure any suffering if only I could hope for that final restoration. till . . come, of the precise nature of wh. change he is ignorant.

The change that takes place at death. — I. What is that change that awaits us all? It is — 1. Great; 2. Momentous; 3. Permanent. II. Let us consider our duty in reference to it. To wait in a state of — 1. Patient expectation; 2. Of diligent preparation. Let the subject teach us — (1) The folly of ambition; (2) The wisdom of true piety. — Simeon. — A glimpse into the life beyond. — "If a man die, shall he live again?" I. No! 1. The voice of nature is against it. 2. The testimony of experience is against it. 3. The verdict of a Is. li. 6; 2 Pe. iii. 7-10; Is. lxv. 17; Re. xx. 11; Jo. xi. 25; 1 Th. iv. 14-16.

b "Job has no hope on earth; he longs for the grave, as the gate to a resurrection in another world." — Bp Wordsworth. Barnes thinks the word here rendered grave should be taken to mean the place of departed spirits.

c Ac. xxvi. 8; Ez. xxxvii. 3-10; Jo. v. 28, 29; Re. xx. 12, 13.

d La. iii. 25, 26; Ja. v. 7, 8.

science is against it. II. Yes! 1. The phenomena of nature suggest it. 2. The instincts of humanity desire it. 3. The dignity of man demands it. 4. The witness of revelation proclaims it. 5. The resurrection of Christ secures it.—Pul. Com.

"Though winter howleth at the gate,
In our hearts 'tis summer yet."
—Sargent.

The soul; its existence apart from the body.—We once heard a minister trying to teach some children that the soul would live after they were all dead. They listened, but evidently did not understand. He was too abstract. Snatching his watch from his pocket, he said, "James, what is that I hold in my hand?" "A watch, sir!" "A little clock!" says another. "Do you see it?" "Yes, sir." "How do you know it is a watch?" "Because it ticks, sir." "Very well, can any of you hear it tick? All of you listen now." After a pause, "Yes, sir, we hear it." He then took off the case, and held the case in one hand and the watch in the other. "Now, children, which is the watch? you see there are two which look like watches." "The little one in your right hand, sir." "Very well, again. Now I will take the case, and put it away down here in my hat. Now, let us see if you can hear the watch ticking?" "Yes, sir, we hear it!" exclaimed several voices. "Well, the watch can tick, and go, and keep time, you see, when the case is taken off, and put in my hat. The watch goes just as well. So it is with you, children. Your body is nothing but the case—the body may be taken off and buried in the ground, but the soul will live and think, just as this watch will go, as you see, when the case is taken off."—J. Todd.—Paulinus.—There is an anonymous poem concerning Paulinus, who preached to the heathen Britons, and was the means of the conversion of Northumbria. He bade King Edwin cast out his idols and worship the Lord, but "Edwin answered not a word."

"Has not the soul an end which nothing else can fulfil?"—Plato.

"I'm kneeling at the threshold, weary, faint and sore;
Waiting for the dawning, for the opening of the door;
Waiting till the master shall bid me rise and come To the glory of His presence, to the gladness of His home!"

"Rose then a sage old warrior,
Was five score winters old,
Whose beard from chin to girdle
Like one long snow wreath rolled.

At Yule time, in our chamber,
We sit in warmth and light,
While cold and howling round us Lies one black land of night.

Athwart the room a sparrow
Darts from the open door,
Within the happy hearth-light,—
One red flash and no more.

We see it come from darkness,
And into darkness go;
So is our life, King Edwin—
Alas that it is so!

But if this pale Paulinus
Have somewhat more to tell,
Some news of whence and whither
And where the soul will dwell,

If on the outer darkness
The sun of hope may shine,
He makes life worth the living,
I take his God for mine."

"There is nothing strictly immortal but immortality. Whatever hath no beginning may be confident of no end. All others have a dependent being, and within the reach of destruction."—Sir T. Browne.

"Bonaparte was visiting the picture gallery of Soult with Dénon, and was struck with one of Raffaelle's pictures, which Dénon complimented with the term 'immortal.' 'How long may it last?' asked Bonaparte. 'Well, some four or five hundred years longer,' said Dénon. 'Belle immortalité!' said Bonaparte, disdainfully."—Lady Morgan.

15, 16. (15) Thou . . thee, faith that the voice of the living God would penetrate the region of the dead. thou . . hands,[a] "and surely, he argues, if I have such a yearning for God must not He who implanted it have a corresponding yearning for me?"—Cox. (16) now . . steps,[b] the present diligent oversight a pledge of the future. dost . . sin, or, acc. to Ewald, "wilt thou not pass over (and forgive) my sin?" "His thoughts return to his present condition. He is a criminal at the bar of an incensed and powerful judge, who dogs his every step and maintains a keen and incessant watch for every sin."

our steps numbered, and sin watched a Ps. cxxxviii. 8; Phi. i. 6.

b Ps. cxxxix. 1-3; Je. xvi. 17; Pr. v. 21.

God sees everything.—The master of three drunken and thievish slaves.

having observed a great change in their conduct, asked its cause. One of them replied, "Massa, God Almighty in top!" (above). He was answered, "Was not God Almighty in top when you got drunk and robbed me?" "Yes, massa; but we not know then." He then asked them how they came to know. They answered, "Massa, we been gone a chapel, and preacher tell we so; and now we 'fraid to get drunk and rob, like fore time. God will see, and He will be angry: Him see ebery thing."—God sees our sins.—How dreadful is the eye of God on him who wants to sin! Do you know about Lafayette, that great man who was the friend of Washington? He tells us that he was once shut up in a little room in a gloomy prison for a great while. In the door of his cell was a very small hole cut. At that hole a soldier was placed day and night to watch him. All he could see was the soldier's eye; but that eye was always there. Day and night, every moment when he looked up, he always saw that eye. Oh! he says, it was dreadful! There was no escape, no hiding: when he lay down and when he rose up, the eye was watching him. How dreadful will the eye of God be upon the sinner, as it watches him in the eternal world forever.—J. Todd.

"Spencer tells of a village in England called Wotton, to which it was said God never came. Could such a place be found now, it would be more thronged than Saratoga. To obtain a residence in some land where God's eye never penetrated, what would men not give?"—Cuyler.

"Hope is like the sun, which, as we journey towards it, casts the shadow of our burden behind us."—Samuel Smiles.

transgressions sealed

17—19. (17) My . . bag,[a] counted, hoarded up, so that there can be no diminution or loss when the day of settlement comes. sewest, one sewn to another. (18) mountain . . nought,[b] etc., the most solid of earthly things are movable, why should man hope to be exempt fr. the law of change? (19) thou washest, R. V., "the overflowings thereof wash away the dust of the earth." Mountains, rocks, the earth itself, under the influence of constant forces, are worn away. the hope of man, is destroyed by this constant severity of God.

Sealed transgression (vs. 17).—I. We cannot take back our sins. II. Our sins are with God. III. Our sins are reserved for the future. IV. It is our impenitence, not God's will, that causes our sins to be sealed up in God's bag. V. The gospel of Christ breaks the seal of sins.—Adeney.

Sealed up in a bag.—Not only had the Oriental judge or accuser an open pouch in which he kept documents needful for the establishment of his case, but he had an inward and lesser compartment, carefully sewn up, in which were the special proofs that the general impeachment was sound. This is what Job saw when he looked upon God. Said he: I see the scrip the full pouch; I see the documents that are written against me; and behind them all are proofs I cannot deny; the case is well ordered and set forth with masterly skill; not a point will be overlooked, and where I am strongest in denial God will be strongest in evidence. Men make mistakes about this matter; they confuse their documents and their references; sometimes they lose papers which are essential to their case, and sometime they cannot read all their own hands have written: and therefore even the wicked man will escape a just judgment: but when God undertakes to be judge, there is the scrip, there is the general accusation, there are the particular proofs, day and date, down to hour and moment, and locally down to a footprint, and there is no reply to omniscience.—Parker.

a Ho xiii. 12; De. xxxii. 33-35.

b Re. vi. 14.

vs. 19. "Is a man found fault with because he makes slow progress in his undertaking, he says, 'Never mind; the water which runs so softly, will, in time, wear away the stones.'"—Roberts.

"The path of sorrow, and that path alone, leads to the land where sorrow is unknown; no traveler ever reached that blest abode, who found not thorns and briars in his road."—Cowper.

the end of human life

20—22. (20) Thou, the God of nature, and all power. prevailest, etc., i. e. thou art continually oppressing poor, weak man. passeth, he is dissolved away. thou . . countenance, all. to change of death. and . . away, fr. presence of living. (21) His sons, etc.,[c] having passed away, ignorant of the honors or disgraces of his posterity. (22) flesh . . pain,[d] the dead knoweth nothing of the upper world, only this can be said of him that his flesh hath pain and his soul mourneth.—Cam. Bib.

Lessons to be learned from the speech of Job.—I. The comparative insignificance of worldly prosperity or adversity in view of the eternal world. II. The infinite importance of securing a place of happiness beyond the grave—1. For ourselves; 2. For our children and friends. III. The value of the gospel, and the duty of making ourselves acquainted with its precious contents. IV. The paramount necessity of a personal interest in Him who is "the way, the truth, and the life."—Robinson.

Death always near.—"My ancestors," said a sailor, "were all seamen, and all of them died at sea: my father, my grandfather, and my great-grandfather, were all buried in the sea." Then said a citizen, "What great cause have you then, when you set out to sea, to remember your death! and to commit your soul to the hands of God!" "Yea, but," said the mariner to c Ps. xxxix. 6.

d Or, "his flesh shall drop away from him."—Good.

"'Paid the debt of nature.' No; it is not paying a debt; it is rather like bringing a note to a bank to obtain solid gold in exchange for it. In this case, you bring this cumbrous body, which is nothing worth, and which you could not wish to retain long; you the citizen, "where, I pray, did your father and your grandfather die?" "Why," said he, "they died all of them in their beds." "Truly, then," said the mariner, "what a care had you need to have every night, when you go to bed, to think of your bed as the grave, and the clothes that cover you as the earth that must one day be thrown upon you!"—Spencer.

If I should die to-night.—

If I should die to-night,
My friends would look upon my quiet face
Before they laid it in its resting-place,
And deem that death had left it almost fair;
And, laying snow-white flowers against my hair,
Would smooth it down with tearful tenderness,
And fold my hands with lingering caress.
Poor hands, so empty and so cold to-night.

If I should die to-night,
My friends would call to mind with loving thought,
Some kindly deed the icy hand had wrought,
Some gentle word the frozen lips had said;
Errands on which the willing feet had sped.
The memory of my selfishness and pride,
My hasty words, would all be put aside,
And so I should be loved and mourned to-night.

If I should die to-night,
Even hearts estranged would turn once more to me,
Recalling other days remorsefully.
The eyes that chill me, with averted glance
Would look upon me as of yore, perchance,
And soften in the old, familiar way.
For who could war with dumb, unconscious clay?
So I might rest, forgiven of all, to-night.

Oh friends, I pray to-night,
Keep not your kisses for my dead, cold brow.
The way is lonely, let me feel them now.
Think gently of me; I am travel-worn;
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn.
Forgive, oh hearts estranged, forgive, I plead!
When dreamless rest is mine, I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long to-night.

"We know, O Lord, that our rent due to Thee is our soul, and the day of our death is the day, and our death-bed the place, where this rent is to be paid. And we know, too, that he that hath sold his soul for unjust gain, or given away his soul before in society and fellowship of sin, or lent away his soul for a time by a lukewarmness and temporizing to the dishonor of Thy name, to the weakness of Thy cause, to the discouraging of Thy servants, he comes to that day and to that place, his death and death-bed, without any rent in his hand, without any soul, to this purpose, to surrender it unto Thee."—Donne.

"To live in hearts we leave behind, is not to die.—Campbell.

CHAPTER THE FIFTEENTH.

the answer of Eliphaz

unprofitable talk.

1–3. (1) answered, here begins the second colloquy betw. Job and his friends. (2) wise man, Eliphaz regards the guild of wise men dishonored by these strange ideas of Job. vain knowledge,[a] Heb. knowledge of wind. belly, seat of thought and desire. east wind, withering, parching,[b] and violent.[c] (3) should . . talk? words to no purpose.

The egotistic talker. — Almost every circle is blessed with the egotist, who exercises a kind of dictatorship over it. Are you in a mistake as to the matter of fact? He cannot suffer you to proceed till you are corrected. Have you a word on the end of your tongue? He at once comes to your relief. Do you talk bad grammar? He quotes rules and gives examples like a pedagogue. Does he discover that there is a link wanting in the chain of your argument? He bids you stay till he has supplied it. Do you drop a word to which he has devoted much research? He asks you whether you know its primitive signification, and straightway inflicts upon the circle a long philological disquisition. When you relate an incident which you suppose new and affecting, your friend listens without emotion. When you have done, he observes that he heard the same long ago, and adds a very material circumstance which you omitted. He is never taken by surprise, and it is impossible to give him any information. And yet he never takes the lead in conversation, nor advances an original thought. It is his business to come after, and [a] Mat. xii. 36, 37.

[b] Ex. xiv. 21; Is. xxvii. 8; Jonah iv. 8.

[c] Ps. xlviii. 7.

"The wise man can never be without pleasure in himself, nor can anything out of himself molest and trouble him. Nor is this a happiness to be attained to but by long accustomance, and by doing by our mind just as we do by our bodies in time of pestilence, that is, by carefully avoiding all commerce with those that are sick." — Flecknoe.

"Life is short, and conversation apt to run to mere words."— Holmes.

self-condemnation

a Lu. xviii. 1; Ja. iv. 2.

"Thee mustna undervally prayer. Prayer mayna bring money, but it brings us what no money can buy — a power to keep us from sin, and be content with God's will whatever He may please to send." — Geo. Fliot.

"The pure and noble, the graceful and dignified simplicity of language, is nowhere in such perfection as in the Scriptures and Homer. The whole Book of Job, with regard both to sublimity of thought and morality, exceeds beyond all comparison, the most noble parts of Homer."— A. Pope.

let the past teach

b De. xxiv. 29; Ro. xi. 31; 1 Co ii. 11, 26; Pr. iii. 32.

"When a majority of people agree on any subject, should an individual pertinaciously oppose them, it will be asked, 'What! were you born before all others?' 'Yes, yes; he is the first man; no wonder he has so much wisdom!' 'Salam to the first! man.'" — Roberts.

"Hope is a prodigal young heir, and Experience is his banker; but his drafts are seldom honored, since there is often a pick up the words which others let slip in a running talk, or to check their impetuousity, that he may point out to them their missteps. Had he lived in the days of Solomon, he would have flattered the royal sage with an intimation that some of his proverbs were but plagiarisms; or, had he been a contemporary of Solomon's father, would have felt himself bound to give the slayer of Goliath some lessons on the use of the sling, and hinted to the sweet singer of Israel his private opinion that the shepherd bard did not perfectly understand the use of the harp. — G. W. Harvey.

4—6. (4) casteth off, R. V., "doest away with fear." prayer,[a] rather, devout meditation. (5) uttereth, i. e. teacheth. R. V., "for thine iniquity teacheth thy mouth," i. e. his mouth is used by his evil speech as its instrument. chooseth . . crafty, instead of teachings of wisdom. (6) Thine . . thee, by the sentiments thou dost utter.

Christian speech. — I. That the interests of religion are greatly in the keeping of its professors. II. That a believer in trouble should be careful, so to speak, as to bear a good testimony to religion before the world. — Robinson. Restraining prayer. — I. Its evils. We lose—1. What God gives in response to prayer. 2. The spiritual blessedness of prayer. II. Its causes. 1. Whatever leads to unbelief. 2. Worldly living. 3. Sin. — Pul. Com.

Dogmatical talking. —

When men of judgment creep and feel their way,
The positive pronounce without dismay;
Their want of light and intellect supplied
By sparks absurdity strikes out of pride.
Without the means of knowing right from wrong,
They always are decisive, clear and strong;
Where others toil with philosophic force,
Their nimble nonsense takes a shorter course;
Flings at your head conviction in the lump,
And gains remote conclusions at a jump;
Their own defect, invisible to them,
Seen in another, they at once condemn;
And, though self-idolized in every case,
Hate their own likeness in a brother's face.
The cause is plain and not to be denied,
The proud are always most provoked by pride;
Few competitions but engender spite;
And those the most where neither has a right. — Cowper.

7—10. (7) Art . . born? sug. of old belief in the original wisdom of Adam; or hast thou lived fr. the creation and treasured up all the wisdom since? (8) Hast . . God?[b] or "wast thou present as a hearer in the counsel of God?" restrain . . thyself? hast thou a monopoly of wisdom? (9) What . . not? by wh. exceptional knowledge, or means of knowing, thy superior wisdom may be proved. (10) With us, etc., we are speaking the experience of ancient sages, or, "among us is one gray-headed and aged," an indirect claim for himself as worthy of respect and his judgments as mature and experienced above Job's.

Provision for happiness in old age. — It is not for youth alone that the great Parent of creation hath provided. To novelty, to acuteness of sensation, to hope, to ardor of pursuit, succeeds what is, in no inconsiderable degree, an equivalent for them all, "perception of ease." Herein is the exact difference between the young and the old. The young are not happy but when enjoying pleasure; the old are happy when free from pain. The vigor of youth was to be stimulated to action by impatience of rest; whilst to age, quietness and repose become positive gratifications. This same perception of ease oftentimes renders old age a condition of great comfort, especially when riding at its anchor after a busy or tempestuous life. It is well ascribed by Rousseau to the interval of repose and enjoyment between the hurry and the end of life. — Paley. — The humility of wisdom. — I have heard of a young man who went to college; and when he had been there one year, his parent said to him, "What do you know? Do you know more than when you went?" "Oh, yes!" said he; "I do." Then he went the second year, and was asked the same question, "Do you know more than when you went?" "Oh, no!" said he; "I know a great deal less." "Well," said the father, "you are getting on." Then he went the third year and was asked the same question, "What do you know now?" "Oh!" said he, "I don't think I know anything." "That is right," said the father: "you have now learned to profit, since you say you know nothing." He who is convinced that he knows nothing of himself, as he ought to know, gives up steering his ship, and lets God put his hand on the rudder. He lays aside his own wisdom and cries, "O God! my little wisdom is cast at thy feet: my little judgment is given to thee." — Spurgeon.

heavy balance against him, because he draws largely on a small capital, is not yet in possession, and if he were, would die."—C. Colton.

11—13. (11) consolations,[a] etc., R. V., "Are the consolations of God too small for thee, and the word that dealeth gently with thee?" i. e. are our interpretations of Providence not of sufficient importance to meet your case? In the phrase "dealeth gently," etc., he refers to the gentle manner of his first speech. (12) Why . . away? why allow yourself to be controlled by feeling? wink,[b] or roll in pride, contempt. (13) spirit, "Job has turned against the friends' conception of God, a being without affection, and dealing only according to iron justice." — Genung.

there must be a reason for turning from God a 2 Co. i. 3-5.

b Pr. x. 10.

Heart wanderings (vs. 12). — I. We are led by our hearts; by 1. The inner life. 2. The thought. 3. The affections and desires. II. Our hearts are prone to err. 1. In weakness. 2. In sinfu inclination. III. The wandering heart leads to ruin. We are tempted to neglect the evil on three accounts. 1. That it is internal. 2. That it is under our control. 3. That it only concerns ourselves. IV. The wandering heart needs to be renewed. 1. Cleansing. 2. Recovery. 3. Preservation. — Adeney.

Consolation for a mother. — Dr. Payson, visiting a mother who was disconsolate for the loss of a child, said, "Suppose, now, some one was making a beautiful crown for you to wear, and you knew it was for you, and that you were to receive it and wear it as soon as it should be done. Now, if the maker of it were to come, and, in order to make the crown more beautiful and splendid, were to take some of your jewels to put into it, should you be sorrowful and unhappy because they were taken away for a little while, when you knew they were gone to make up your crown?"

"It is when our budding hopes are nipped beyond recovery by some rough wind, that we are the most disposed to picture to ourselves what flowers they might have borne, if they had flourished."—Dickens.

14—16. (14) What . . clean?[c] what is there to justify such passion — thy pretended innocence? (15) saints, servants, i. e. the angels. heavens, all places and beings impure and imperfect, by comparison, in view of a holy God. (16) How . . man, R. V., "How much less one that is abominable and corrupt, a man that drinketh," etc. which . . water?[d] sins as naturally as when thirsty he drinks water.

the holiness of God

c Pr. xx. 9; Ec. vii. 20.

God and man. — When Christ showed us God, then man had only to stand at his highest and look up to the Infinite above him to see how small he was. And always the true way to be humble is not to stoop till you are smaller than yourself, but to stand at your real height against some higher nature that shall show what the real smallness of your greatest greatness is. The first is the unreal humility that always goes about depreciating human nature; the second is the genuine humility that always stands in love and adoration, glorifying God. — Phillips Brooks.—The holiness of God.— The holiness of God is not to be conceived of as one attribute among others: it is rather a general term representing the conception of His consummate perfection and total glory. It is His infinite moral perfection crowning His infinite intelligence and power. There is a glory of each attribute viewed abstractedly, and a glory of the whole together. The intellectual nature is the essential basis of the moral. Infinite moral perfection is the crown of the Godhead. Holiness is the total glory thus crowned. — Hodge.

d Pr. xix. 28; Ps. xiv. 1-3; Ro. i. 28-32; iii. 9-19.

No stranger can get a great many notes of torture out of a human soul; it takes one that knows it well; — parent, child, brother, sister, intimate. — Holmes.

17—19. (17) I . . thee, "Eliphaz here introduces a studied description by himself of the proceedings and consequent sufferings of the wicked. It is plainly leveled at Job."— Rawlinson. (18) and . . it, but freely communicated it. (19) earth, land where they lived. and . . them,[e] the idea is that the coming in of strangers would have corrupted the truth.

appeal to antiquity

The unreliableness of tradition. — Would persons as readily believe the correctness of a report transmitted by word of mouth in popular rumors from one end of the kingdom to another, as if it came in a letter passed from one person to another over the same space? Would they think that because they could trust most servants to deliver a letter, however long or important, therefore they could trust the same to deliver the contents of a long and e "Eliphaz here speaks like a genuine Arab, whose pride is in his tongue, his sword, and his pure blood."—Umbreit.

"Not to know what has been transacted in former times, is to continue always a child. If no use is made of the labors of past ages, the world must remain always in the infancy of knowledge." — Cicero.

important letter in a message by word of mouth? Let us put a familiar case. A footman brings you a letter from a friend upon whose word you can perfectly rely, giving an account of something that has happened to himself, and the exact account of which it concerned you to know. While you are reading and answering the letter, the footman goes into the kitchen and there gives your cook an account of the same thing, which he says he overheard the upper servants at home talking over as related to them by the valet, who said he had it from your friend's son's own lips; the cook relates the story to the groom, and he in turn tells it to you. Would you judge of that story by the letter, or the letter by the story? — Illus. of Truth.

the state of the ungodly in this life

20—22. "Here begin the words of the fathers, Eliphaz brings up this lurid picture of the wicked in order to counteract Job's intimations that the wicked are prospered, while the righteous suffer." — Genung. (20) wicked . . days, a constant sufferer through his sin. and . . oppressor, R. V., "Even the number of years that are laid up for the oppressor." (21) dreadful sound,[a] R. V., "A sound of terrors," he thinks he hears the sound of coming destruction. prosperity . . him, all this was in all. to the case of Job himself. (22) believeth . . darkness, etc., his sin destroys all hope of recovery.

Deceitfulness of sin. — It hath many secret ways of insinuating; it is like a Delilah; it is like a Jael to Sisera; sin is a sweet poison, it tickleth while it stabbeth; the first thing that sin doth is to bewitch, then to put out the eyes, then to take away the sense and feeling; to do to a man as Noah's daughter did to him, make him drunk, and then he doth he knoweth not what. As Joab came with a kind salute to Abner, and thrust him under the fifth rib, while Abner thought of nothing but kindness, so sin comes smiling, comes pleasing and humoring thee, while it giveth thee a deadly stab. — Anthony Burgess. — The horrors of a guilty conscience. — Philo Judæus telleth that Flaccus played all the parts of cruelty that he could devise against the Jews, for their religion's sake, but afterwards, when the doom of Caligula fell upon him, and he was banished to Andros, an island near Greece, he was so tormented with the memory of his bloody iniquities, and a fear of suffering for them, that if he saw any man walking softly near to him, he would say to himself, "This man is devising to work my destruction:" if he saw any go hastily, "Surely it is not for nothing; he maketh speed to kill me." If any man spake him fair, he suspected that he would cozen him, and sought to entrap him; if any talked roughly to him, then he thought that he contemned him. Thus his sin did lie upon him, and ever reminded him that some vengeance was to follow. — Spencer. — Sin and cowardice. — Rowland Hill was one dark night traveling with his wife in a phaeton, near London, when they were stopped by three highwaymen. The preacher thought that he would try the effect of noise upon their cowardly consciences; so he bawled and screamed out a succession of unearthly noises, till one of them exclaimed, "O we've stopped the devil by mistake!" and away they scampered. — Hurlbut.

[a] Th. v. 3; Ac. xii. 22, 23; 1 Sa. xxv. 36–38.

"The panic fears of a conscience-stricken criminal, however wealthy and noble, rob him of rest, and prevent him from enjoying his prosperity." — Wordsworth.

"Fear in itself is a thing not sinful. For is not fear a thing natural, and for men's preservation necessary, implanted in us by the provident and most gracious Giver of all good things, to the end that we might not run headlong upon those mischiefs wherewith we are not able to encounter, but use the remedy of shunning those evils which we have not ability to withstand?" — Hooker.

the ungodly man is full of fears

23—25. (23) He . . bread,[b] as one reduced to bitterest poverty. he knoweth, the wicked man is sure that he will suffer for his wickedness, and he fears the dark day as if it were always at hand. darkness,[c] destruction. (24) king . . battle,[d] ready to attack, and vain to resist. (25) For, etc., R. V., "Because he hath stretched out his hands against God, and behaveth himself proudly against," etc. These are the reasons for his apprehensions.

Effects of the first sin. — There was a time when all the sin which was in the world was enclosed in one sinful wish in the breast of one woman. She had permission to eat of every tree but one, but that one God prohibited, saying, "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shall surely die." A transient thought, immediately repressed or disapproved, would not have been sin; for, as Milton says:

> "Evil into the mind of God or man
> May come and go, so unapproved, and leave > No spot or blame behind;"

but she indulged that wish, and hankered after that fruit; and in the sinful wish all the sin of the earth once lay. That wish became an act; and now let him who would write the sins and woes of earth first count for us the [b] "He is destined to be food for vultures." — LXX.

[c] Pr. i. 24–27.

[d] Pr. vi. 11; xxiv. 34.

"He that stands below, and looks to the top of St. Paul's, or any other high place, thinks the people upon the height but children, while those below are giants. If he stands on the height, and looks snowflakes of five thousand winters, and tell us the number of drops in all the rivers and oceans. "By one man's disobedience many were made sinners;" and their history is the history of wars, lust, intemperance, violence. O sin! what hast thou done? What canst thou not do? — N. Adams. — Needless fear. — I believe that when you are worrying yourself by imagining all kinds of evils as likely to befall you, it will do you a great deal of good to be allowed to see something of other people, who are always expecting something awful to happen, and with a morbid ingenuity devising ways of making themselves miserable. You will discern how ridiculous such people look; how irritating they are; how, so far from exciting sympathy, they excite indignation. My friend Jones told me that after several months of extremely hard head-work, which had lowered his nervous system, he found himself getting into a way of vaguely dreading what may come next: and of receiving his letters in the morning with many anticipations of evil. But happily a friend came to visit him, who carried all this about a hundred degrees farther; who had come through all his life, expecting at least an earthquake daily, if not the end of the world. And Jones was set right. In the words of Wordsworth, "He looked upon him, and was calmed and cheered." Jones saw how like a fool his friend seemed; and there came a healthy reaction; and he opened his letter-box bravely every morning, and was all right again. Yes, let us see the Helot drunk, and it will teach us to keep sober. My friend Gray told me that for some little space he felt a growing tendency to scrubbiness in money matters. But having witnessed pinching and paring (without the least need for them) carried to a transcendent degree by some one else, the very name of economy was made to stink in his nostrils; and he felt a mad desire to pitch half-crowns about the streets wherever he went. In this case, the reaction went too far; but in a week or two Gray came back to the middle course, which is the safest and best.

down, the case is reversed. So it is with men. Their troubles and worldly interests seem great while groveling among them; but let them get up where God resides, and how trivial will all appear!"

"There needs no other charm to raise infernal spirits up, but fear, that's both a prisoner to itself, and jail; draws more fantastic shapes than in the grains of knotted wood, in some men's crazy brains, when all the cocks they think they see, and bulls, are only in the insides of their skulls." — Butler.

26—28. (26) even . . neck, R. V., "He runneth upon him with a stiff neck, with the thick bosses of his bucklers." "The words describe the wicked man's demeanor toward God. The figure is that of a warrior making an assault. The 'bosses'[a] are the convex sides of the bucklers,[b] the sides turned to the foe, who here is God." — Cam. Bib. (27) Because,[c] etc., i. e. he gives himself up to a life of animal pleasures. (28) dwelleth, or "and he dwelt." are ready to become, or, "were destined to be." The idea seems to be that the wicked man settled in and rebuilt places that were under the curse of God, and destined by Him for perpetual desolation. To settle in and rebuild such ruins indicates the extreme of impiety. — Davidson.

the headlong impiety of the ungodly

Ancient wrestlers. — Wrestlers, before they began their combats, were rubbed all over in a rough manner, and afterward anointed with oil, in order to increase the strength and flexibility of their limbs. But as this unction, in making the skin too slippery, rendered it difficult for them to take hold of each other, they remedied that inconvenience, sometimes by rolling themselves in the dust of the Palæstra, sometimes by throwing fine sand upon each other, kept for that purpose, in Xystæ, or porticoes of the Gymnasia. Thus prepared, they began their combat. In this manner the athletæ wrestled standing, the combat ending with the fall of one of the competitors. To this combat the words of Eliphaz seem to apply, "For he stretcheth out his hand against God," like a wrestler, challenging his antagonist to the contest, "and strengthening himself," rather vaunteth himself, stands up haughtily, and boasts of his prowess in the full view of "the Almighty," throwing abroad his arms, clapping his hands together, springing into the middle of the ring, and taking his station there in the adjusted attitude of defiance. "He runneth upon him, even on his neck," or with his neck stretched out, furiously dashing his head against the other. — Paxton.

a Ross fr. Fl. bosse, = a bunch or lump; Du. bosse, or busse, the knob of a shield. A boss is a knob or protuberance ornament; generally, but not exclusively applied to the knob of a shield.

"God knows, thou art a collop of my flesh." — Shakespeare.

b Mal. iii. 13; Da. v. 22, 23; Ac. ix. 5.

c De. xxxii. 15; Je. v. 26, 28.

29—31. (29) He . . rich,[d] see last vs. neither shall he prolong, etc., R V., "shall their produce bend to the earth," i. e. of all his effort he shall reap no mature fruit, his wealth shall not last.[e] (30) He . . darkness,[f] he shall not escape from calamity. flame . . branches,[g] the wrath of God shall consume him as a fire destroys a dry tree. breath . . mouth, by the blast of God. (31) Let, etc.,[h] R. V., "Let him not trust in vanity, deceiving himself." Comp. iv. 8; v. 13.

the recompense of trusting in vanity

d Ja. v. 1-5.

e "His possessions shall not be extended on the earth." — Noyes.

f 2 Pe. ii. 9, 17; Ma. xxii. 11, 13; Jude 13.

g Ez. xx. 47; 2 Th. i. 7-8.

h Ga. vi. 7, 8.

The folly of trusting in vanity. — Let us consider — I. The caution. Men are apt to trust — 1. Vain conceits; 2. In vain possessions; 3 In vain hopes;

4. In vain purposes. Consider — II. The reason with which this caution is enforced. They shall reap — 1. Disappointment; 2. Vexation; 3. Ruin. Observe — (1) How necessary it is to mark the state and habit of our minds; (2) How thankful should we be that there is an all-sufficient Friend to trust. — C. Simeon.

Not with possession, not
With fairest earthly lot,
Cometh the peace assured, his spirit's guest;
With much it looks before,
With most it yearns for more;
And "this is not our rest" and "this is not our rest."—Ingelow.

The value of trust in God. — Several German princes were once extolling the glory of their realms. One boasted of his excellent vineyards; another of his hunting-grounds; another of his mines. At last, Abelard, Duke of Wurtemburg, took up the subject, and said, "I own that I am a poor prince, and can vie with none of these things: nevertheless, I, too, possess a noble jewel in my dominion; for were I to be without attendants, either in the open country or wild forests, I could ask the first of my subjects whom I meet to stretch himself upon the ground, and confidently place my head upon his bosom, and fall asleep without the slightest apprehension of injury." Was not this a precious jewel for a prince? I, however, have something better, for I can rest my head and heart in the lap of God's providence, and upon the bosom of Christ Jesus our Lord, with a perfect assurance that neither man nor devil can touch me there.— Gotthold.

32—35. (32) accomplished, or "while yet his time is not, it shall be paid in full." — Genung. i. e. while he yet lives he shall receive a fearful recompense for his evil. branch . . green, but shall wither away. (33) unripe . . vine,[a] as in this country a late frost will often strip a tree of its young fruit. cast . . olive, which the slightest breath of wind will scatter. So transient and unprofitable is the life of the wicked. (34) congregation, household. the . . bribery, the homes of those who receive bribes. "Every trace of the wicked man perishes, not a vestige is left to tell of his labors,— a statement even more untrue to facts than those which preceded!" — Cox. (35) They . . vanity, vanity, or emptiness, the great outcome of their plottings.

the fate of the hypocrite

[a] Rev. i. 13.

"Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player, that struts and frets his hour upon the stage, and then is heard no more; it is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing."—Shakespeare.

The wind and the blossom.— A north or a northeast wind frequently proves injurious to the olive trees in Greece, by destroying the blossom. Dr. Chandler says, "We ate under an olive tree, then laden with pale yellow flowers; a strong breeze from the sea scattered the bloom and incommoded us, but the spot afforded no shelter more eligible." In another place he observes: "The olive groves are now, as anciently, a principal source of the riches of Athens. The mills for pressing and grinding the olives are in the town; the oil is deposited in large earthen jars, sunk in the ground, in the areas before the houses. The crops had failed five years successively when we arrived; the cause assigned was a northerly wind, called Greco-Tramontane, which destroyed the flower. The fruit is set in about a fortnight, when the apprehension from this unpropitious quarter ceases. The bloom in the following year was unhurt, and we had the pleasure of leaving the Athenians happy in the prospect of a plentiful harvest."— Burder.

Saint Anthony and the cobbler.— We read a pretty story of St. Anthony, who, being in the wilderness, led there a very hard and strait life, insomuch that none at that time did the like; to whom came a voice from heaven, saying, "Anthony, thou art not so perfect as is a cobbler that dwelleth at Alexandria." Anthony, hearing this, rose up forthwith, and took his staff, and went till he came to Alexandria, where he found the cobbler. The cobbler was astonished to see so reverend a father come to his house. Then Anthony said unto him, "Come, and tell me thy whole conversation, and how thou spendest thy time." "Sir," said the cobbler, "as for me, good works have I none, for my life is but simple and slender. I am but a poor cobbler. In the morning, when I rise, I pray for the whole city wherein I dwell, especially for all such neighbors and poor friends as I have; after I set me at my labor, where I spend the whole day in getting my living; and I keep me from all falsehood, for I hate nothing so much as I do deceitfulness; wherefore, when I make to any man a promise, I keep it and perform it truly. And thus I spend my time poorly with my wife and children, whom I teach and instruct, as far as my wit will serve me, to fear and love God. And this is the sum of my simple life." In this story you see how God loveth those that follow their vocation, and live uprightly without any falsehood in their dealing. Anthony was a great holy man; yet this cobbler was as much esteemed before God as he.—Bp. Latimer.

The hope of the hypocrite is like "a spider's web." He may call it a house, but it is unavailable to "hide from the storm, or cover from the tempest." He may hold fast by it, but it shall fall, and he perish in the ruins. There is, there can be, no shelter, safety, nor security, in the cobweb of self-righteousness. If not stript off in the world, it will be swept away by the first breath of eternity.

CHAPTER THE SIXTEENTH.

1—4. (2) I . . things, moral commonplaces. miserable . . all, (see xiii. 4), irritating, disappointing. (3) vain words, lit. "is there any end to words of wind?" i. e. this sort of speech can go forever and is as vain as the wind. emboldeneth, R. V., "provoketh." answerest? in such a way as this. (4) I . . do, easy to speak thus. if . . stead, if I were you. could heap up, better could compose, as you have so calmly done. shake . . you,[a] and look as wise and solemn at you, as you now at me.

Miserable comforters.—I. Miserable comforters fail for lack of sympathy. II. Miserable comforters add to the griefs which they vainly try to assuage, through 1. Disappointment. 2. Weariness. 3. Injustice. III. We need Divine grace to help us to be true comforters. —Pul. Com.

The power of sympathy. — Happy is the man who has that in his soul which acts upon the dejected as April airs upon violet roots. Gifts from the hand are silver and gold; but the heart gives that which neither silver nor gold can buy. To be full of goodness, full of cheerfulness, full of sympathy, full of helpful hope, causes a man to carry blessings of which he is himself as unconscious as a lamp of its own shining. Such a one moves on human life as stars move on dark seas to bewildered mariners; as the sun wheels, bringing all the seasons with him from the south. — Beecher.

5—8. (5) But, if you were me, and I were you. strengthen, encourage, comfort. mouth and lips, are the emphatic words. "I could give you lip comfort." asswage, restrain. (6) Though I speak, "he hardly knows whether he shall speak or be silent, so overcome is he and so unavailing to help him or make men judge truly of him are both speech and silence."—Cam. Bib. (7) he . . weary, God has taken my strength away. company, family. (8) thou . . wrinkles,[b] etc., R. V., "thou hast laid fast hold on me," referring to the afflictions which are assumed to be proofs of guilt.[c] leanness . . face, the idea seems to be — my poverty, etc., is turned into a reproach, and made to witness against me.

A true comforter. — To be a true comforter we require — I. To be able to sympathize with the troubled. II. To understand generally the meaning and use of trouble. III. To be acquainted ourselves with the truth with which we are to comfort others. IV. To possess the spirit and imitate the conduct of Him whose mission on earth was to "comfort them that mourn." V. To speak truthfully and suitably to the case, while we present such views of God and His dealings as are fitted to impart light and comfort to the sad and sorrowing. — Robinson.

The appeal of need to God. — The unconscious needs of the world are all appeals and cries to Him. He does not wait to hear the voice of conscious want. The mere vacancy is a begging after fullness; the mere poverty is a supplication for wealth; the mere darkness cries for light. . . . Alas for us if God helped us only when we knew we needed Him and went to Him with full self-conscious wants! Alas for us if every need which we know not, had not a voice for Him, and did not call Him to us! Our hope is in the ear which God has for simple need; so that mere emptiness cries out to Him for filling, mere poverty for wealth. — Ph. Brooks.

9, 10. (9) teareth, etc.,[d] R. V., "He hath torn me in his wrath, and persecuted me." Fig. taken fr. the ferocity of the wild beasts. mine . . eyes, all. to fierce and glaring eyes of lions, etc., when ab. to spring on their prey. (10) They, Job's undefined terms for the powers of evil. gaped . . mouth,[e] like the wild beast ref. to in vs. 9. they . . cheek,[f] per. the greatest insult that can be inflicted on an Oriental. they . . together,[g] forming bands of conspirators ag. his peace.

Opportunity in affliction. — There are no times in life when opportunity, the chance to be and do, gathers so richly about the soul as when it has to suffer. Then everything depends on whether the man turns to the lower or the higher helps. If he resorts to mere expedients and tricks, the opportunity is lost. He comes out no richer nor greater; nay, he comes out harder, poorer, smaller for his pain. But if he turns to God, the hour of suffering is the turning hour of His life. Opportunity opens before him as the ocean opens before one who sails out of a river. Men have done the best and worst, the noblest and the basest things the world has seen, under the pressure of excessive miserable comforters

Job's reply to Eliphaz

[a] Ps. xxii. 7; cix. 25.

Consolation indiscreetly pressed upon us, when we are suffering under affliction, only serves to increase our pain and to render our grief more poignant. — Rousseau.

what he would do if he were in their place

[b] Ru. i. 21.

[c] "What is consolation? It is the relief of mind under any trouble or pain; or the presence and enjoyment of a good which is able to prevent altogether, or else carry away and bear down before it, as in a full tide or flowing stream, all evil felt or feared."—Beaumont.

"We are always thinking we should be better with or without such a thing; but if we do not steal a little content in present circumstances, there is no hope of any other." — Adam. (Phil. iv. 11).

the conduct of his persecutors

[d] La. iii. 11; Ho. v. 14.

[e] Ps. xxii. 13; xxxv. 21.

[f] Is. l. 6; Ma. xxvi. 67.

[g] Ps. xxxv. 15.

"His eyes are like arrows; they pierce my life."

"Truly, his cutting eyes are always upon me."

"Words are the counters of wise men, and the money of fools."—Hobbes.

pain. Everything depended on whether they looked to the depths or to the hills for help. — Phillips Brooks. Sympathy. — To understand any man, we must have sympathy for him, even affection. No intellectual acuteness, no amount even of pity for his errors, will enable us to see the man from within, and put our own souls into the place of his soul. To do that, one must have passed more or less through his temptations, doubts, hunger of heart and brain. — Chas. Kingsley.

he had been delivered to the ungodly a Ps. xxvii. 12; Job i. 15, 17.

b La. iii. 11; ii. 11.

c Jer. xxiii. 29.

d "As a warrior assaults a city."—Wordsworth.

Blossoms are to plants what comforts are to Christians, very beautiful, but very fading.

11—14. (11) God . . ungodly, etc.,[a] as a captive, to do with him as they pleased. Job perceived what had really occurred. (12) ease, happy and secure. but . . asunder, crushed me. taken . . pieces,[b] as an animal its prey. mark,[c] for His arrows. (13) archers, or arrows. compass . . about, fly or whiz around me. (14) He . . breach, the attack is again and again renewed. he . . giant,[d] as a mighty and irresistible warrior.

Hope from suffering. —

I look upon the peopled desert Past,
As on a place of agony and strife,
Where, for some sin, to Sorrow I was cast,
To act and suffer, but remount at last
With a fresh pinion; which I felt to spring,
Though young, yet waxing vigorous as the blast
Which it would cope with, on delighted wing, Spurning the clay-cold bonds which round our being cling.
— Byron.

he asserts his integrity

e Ps. lxxv. 10.

f "Involuntary weeping is said to be a symptom of elephantiasis."—Cam. Bib.

g Ps. lxvi. 18, 19; Pr. xv. 8.

"Emblems of prayer. Incense; a bow drawn by the hand of faith; the air by which we live; the little pitcher which fetches the water from the brook; the barometer of the soul; the tuning of an instrument; the link that connects earth with heaven; the 'gift of the knees,' the Yoruba Christian's phrase for prayer; the letter sent from the child on earth to his 'Father in heaven.'"—Bowes.

15—17. (15) sewed . . skin, a sign of mourning; it was worn next the skin. By sewing it on Job indicates that his mourning is perpetual; or it clung to his sores and could not be removed. horn . . dust,[e] i. e. his insignia of honor was defiled. (16) foul, swollen.[f] and . . death, his sight had failed. (17) Not . . hands, R. V., "Although there is no violence in mine hands;" he still asserts his innocence of sins on acc. of wh. his friends said he suffered. my . . pure,[g] "his whole religious walk with God was pure. This is reply to xv. 4, and the first part of vs. is reply to xv. 34."

Purity in prayer. — Prayer is pure when — I. Not in hypocrisy or out of feigned lips. II. When not accompanied with the practice of sin. III. When from right motives and for right objects. IV. When addressed to the only true God. V. When presented in a way according to His own will. VI. When offered with right disposition and feelings. VII. When made with humility through the one Mediator, and with faith in His atoning sacrifice. — Robinson.

The reason of tribulation. — In the pictures of an ancient mode of threshing grain, one man is seen stirring up the sheaves, and another is riding on a rude dray, with three or four rollers instead of wheels, drawn by a pair of oxen. This ancient threshing instrument was called by the Romans tribulum. The rollers had sharp stones, or rough bits of iron, imbedded in their surface, to make them cut up the straw and facilitate the separation of the grain. From hence we get our word tribulation. Just as the sheaves might be imagined to complain of the sharp rollers going over them and cutting into them; so a man in great affliction would speak of himself as a sheaf torn to pieces under the tribulum. But as no thresher ever yoked his tribulum for the mere purpose of tearing up his sheaves, but, on the contrary, for the sole purpose of bringing the precious grain into a shape to be useful to him as food, so our loving Father never puts us under the tribulum for the mere purpose of bringing upon us tribulation, but always for a Divine purpose of good. — W. W. Smith.

he asserts that his record is on high h Ro. i. 9.

i Heb. v. 7.

"In all ages and all countries, man, through the disposition he inherits

18—20. (18) earth . . blood, all. to the old belief that the blood of one slain unjustly remains on the earth, comp. Is. xxvi. 21; Ezek. xxiv. 76. place, R. V., "resting place," i. e. where it will cease to be heard. (19) witness . . heaven,[h] men on earth witnessed against him; God, in heaven, witnessed for him. record, R. V., "he that voucheth for me." The climax of this conception is reached in xix. 25–27. (20) My . . me, or, scorners are my friends. but . . God,[i] who would understand his integrity though man might scorn.

The heavenly witness and record. — View this text — I. In reference to Job. 1. A declaration of his belief; 2. An avowal of his sincerity; 3. A proof of his devotion. II. In reference to ourselves. 1. In seasons of self-suspicion; 2. Under assaults of calumny; 3. In the prospect of death. — G. Brooks. The appeal of innocence to the highest tribunal (vss. 19–20). — Before man can commit his cause to God with confidence he needs — I. A conviction of the insufficiency of human judgments. II. A conscious integrity. III. An unhesitating faith in God's righteous dealings. IV. A calm patience to await the Divine award. — Green.

A word to students for the ministry. — The Rev. Dr. Payson, of America, being once asked what message he would send to the young men who were studying for the ministry in one of the colleges, thus addressed them: "What if God should place in your hand a diamond, and tell you to inscribe on it a sentence which should be read at the last day, and shown there as an index of your thoughts and feelings! What care, what caution would you exercise in the selection! Now this is what God has done. He has placed before you immortal minds, more imperishable than the diamond, on which you are about to inscribe, every day and every hour, by your instructions, by you spirit, or by your example, something which will remain, and be exhibited for or against you at the judgment day." Still small voice. — I have had to do that in past days, to challenge Him through outer darkness and the shadow of night, till I almost expected that He would vindicate His own honor by appearing visibly as He did to St. Paul and St. John; but He answered in the still small voice only; yet that was enough. — Kingsley.

from our first parents, is more desirous of a quiet and approving, than of a vigilant and tender conscience; desirous of security instead of safety; studious to escape the thought of spiritual danger more than the danger itself: and to induce, at any price, some one to assure him confidently that he is safe, to prophesy unto him smooth things, and to speak peace, even when there is no peace."— Whately.

21, 22. (21) O . . one, etc., R. V., "That he would maintain the right of a man with God, and of a son of man[a] with his neighbour." "Job is thinking of the Daysman (ix. 32 ff.) whom he so longed for; and we see his advance in faith by the fact that the being whose existence he despairingly decried then, he now acknowledges with passionate assertion." — Genung. neighbour, his friend whom he knows and loves. (22) few . . come,[b] if years, yet few at the utmost. way . . return, the old way of all the race, — death. This vs. belongs with xvii. 1, 2.

The final journey anticipated. — I. Consider the momentous journey which is here anticipated. It is — 1. Solemn in its nature; 2. Indisputable in its certainty; 3. Unknown in its commencement; 4. Important in its consequences. II. Describe the effect which this anticipation ought to produce. 1. It should elicit serious examination respecting our state of preparation: 2. Excite just fear in those who are unprepared; 3. Stimulate the righteous to constant watchfulness; 4. Furnish a source of consolation to the afflicted Christian.

Appearance of death. — Many a man has an ill-favored countenance, is lean and haggard, pale and sallow, and mean in his attire, and yet, under an ungainly exterior, conceals great talents and virtues. Such is the case with death. Ah, me! how much that is good and sweet and blessed is concealed beneath its sour aspect and transitory bitterness! It is not I who die when I die, but my sin and misery. As often as I think of death, I figure to myself that I see a messenger coming from a distant land, bringing me good news of my Saviour, the Bridegroom of my soul, and of the inheritance which He has purchased with His blood, and reserves for me in heaven. What care I although the messenger have an ugly face, be armed with a long dart, wear a tattered coat, and knock rudely at my door? I attend less to his appearance than to his business. — Gotthold.

the way whence we shall not return

[a] Job xiii. 20, 21.

[b] Job vii. 21; xix. 25–27.

"It is with us in this world as with poor men, that, being invited to a rich man's board, have the use of his plate and silver whilst they are there: but if any of them are so bold as to put up a piece of plate or a spoon, there is search made by the porter, ere they are let out, for what is missing. So it is with us in regard to temporal blessings. We have liberty to use them while here; but when we go hence, there is One waiting that will be sure to strip us, and suffer nothing to pass with us."— Spencer.

The evanescence of life. —

Between two breaths what crowded mysteries lie,—
The first short gasp, the last and long-drawn sigh!
Like phantoms painted on the magic slide,
Forth from the darkness of the past we glide,
As living shadows for a moment seen
In airy pageant on the eternal screen, Traced by a ray from one unchanging flame,
Then seek the dust and stillness whence we came. — Holmes.

Death's cold white hand is like the snow
Laid softly on the furrowed hill,
It hides the broken seams below,
And leaves the summit brighter still.— Holmes.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTEENTH.

the waiting grave

1, 2. (1) corrupt,[a] R. V., "My spirit is consumed." (2) Are . . me, R. V., "Surely there are mockers with me, and mine eye abideth in," etc. The connection indicates that the reference is to the illusory hopes and promises of restoration in this life which the friends held out to Job. — Davidson. continue, lodge, live.

Death always ready. — A man far advanced in years, or one who is in deep affliction, says, "The place of burning is near to me, and the wood is laid together for my funeral pile." "How are you, my friend?" "How am I? I will tell you. Go, order them to get the wood together to burn this body." A father sometimes says of his wicked sons, "Yes, I know they desire my death; they have been preparing for the funeral; they are ready to wash me: the bier is at hand, and the wood is prepared." "Why do you all look so anxious? I am not ready for the washing." — Roberts. The approach of death. — Mr. George Moir, an eminently pious man, after having been worn out by a long and painful illness, was told by his wife that the change of his countenance indicated the speedy approach of death. "Does it?" he replied, "bring me a glass." On looking at himself in the glass, he was struck with the appearance of a corpse which he saw in his countenance; but giving the glass back, he said, with calm satisfaction, "Ah! death has set his mark on my body, but Christ has set His mark upon my soul." — Whitecross.

"Death is a commingling of eternity with time; in the death of a good man, eternity is seen looking through time."—Goethe.

"Death is not dreadful to a mind resolved: it seems as natural as to be born."—Lee.

he asks in vain for a surety

3, 4. (3) Lay . . now,[b] R. V., "Give now a pledge, be surety for me with thyself." Job beseeches God to undertake that He will cause his innocence to be acknowledged with God. A division of God into two parties, persecutor and surety. who . . me? and thus pledge himself, my surety with God? (4) For . . understanding,[c] "the insight that Job's faith has given him makes him see also that the friends are spiritually blind. He has mistrusted this before, now he is sure of it. (Comp. xii. 1–3.) From this point on he is their open antagonist."— Genung. therefore . . them, by giving them their anticipated verdict.

Job's appeal to God.— We have a twofold ground of Job's request for a fair trial of his case by God Himself. I. The incapacity of his friends to judge in the matter. II. His consciousness of his innocence and that in the controversy he will gain the cause. Job is called to wage a double controversy. 1. As against God, in His appearing to afflict him as a wicked man; 2. As against his friends, in their charging him with being such. — Robinson.

Hidden from understanding.— There is a little preliminary that the astronomer has to do before he can make his observation. He has to take the cap off his telescope. Many a man thinks he is looking at truth when he is only looking at the cap. Many a time I have looked down my microscope, and thought I was looking at the diatom for which I had long been searching, and found I had simply been looking at a speck of dust upon the lens itself. Many a man thinks he is looking at truth when he is only looking at the spectacles he has put on to see it with. — Drummond.

A good conscience is better than two witnesses. It will consume your grief as the sun dissolves ice — it is a spring when you are thirsty — a pillow in death.

"Blush at terror for a death which gives thee to repose in festive bowers, where nectars sparkle, angels minister, and more than angels share, and raise, and crown, and eternize the birth, bloom, bursts of bliss."—Young.

he had been made a byword of the people

5—7. (5) He that,[d] etc., R. V., "He that denounceth his friends for a prey."[e] even . . fail, his punishment shall reach to his children. (6) byword,[f] a term of reproach. and . . tabret, R. V., "And I am become an open abhorring," or an abominable thing. (7) dim . . sorrow,[g] weakened by much weeping. all . . shadow, emaciated by suffering.

False friends.— Observe — I. Treachery and unfaithfulness on the part of professed friends one of the most cutting trials with men, and the most condemning sins with God. II. Some sins are more heinous in themselves and more disastrous in their consequences than others. III. Sin in many cases entails its consequences on a man's children as well as on himself.— Robinson.

The sorrow-dimmed eye. (vs. 7.)—I. Sorrow prevents us from seeing all the truth. II. Sorrow should lead us to exercise faith. III. Sorrow may open our eyes to new truths. IV. It is cruel to be harsh with those whose blindness comes from sorrow. V. Ultimately God will give clear vision to the sorrow-blinded eye.— Pul. Com.

Considerate friendship.— When the attempt was made upon the life of King George III. by Margaret Nicholson, as he was going to St. James's to hold a levee, a council was ordered to be held as soon as the levee was over.

a Is. xxxviii. 10; Ps. lxxxviii. 3-5.

b He. vii. 22.

c Ma. xi. 25.

d Pr. xxix. 5; Ps. xii. 3; Pr. xx. 19; 1 Th. ii. 5.

e Lit. "a man who gives up his friend to be despoiled." — Spk. Com.

f 1 Ki. ix. 7; Ps. xliv. 14.

g Ge. xxvii. 1; De. xxxiv. 7; Zec. xi. 17; Ps. vi. 7; xxxi. 9.

The Marquess del Campo, the Spanish ambassador, being apprised of that circumstance, and knowing that the council would detain the king in town three or four hours beyond the usual time, took post horses, and set off for Windsor. Alighting at the castle, he called upon a lady there with whom he was acquainted. The queen, finding that the king did not return at the usual time, and understanding that the marquess was in the palace, sent to ask him if he had been to the levee. He replied that he had, and that he had left his majesty in perfect health, going to council. When the king arrived, he, of course, told her majesty the extraordinary occurrence of the morning. The queen expressed great surprise that the Marquess del Campo, who had been nearly three hours in the palace, had not mentioned the subject to her; he was then sent for, when he told their majesties that finding upon his arrival at the castle that no rumor of the attempt upon the life of his majesty had reached the queen, he did not think it expedient to apprise her of it till his majesty's arrival gave full assurance of his safety; but at the same time, fearing that some incorrect and alarming reports might be brought down, he deemed it right to remain in the palace, in order, in that case, to be able to remove all apprehensions from her majesty's mind by acquainting her with the real facts. The king took the ambassador graciously by the hand, and assured him that he scarcely knew a man in the world to whom he was so much obliged.

"The loss of my friend, as it shall moderately grieve me, so it shall another way much benefit me, in recompense of his want; for it shall make me think more often and seriously of earth and of heaven, Of earth, for his body which is reposed in it; of heaven for his soul which possesseth it before me; of earth, to put me in mind of my like frailty and mortality; of heaven, to make me desire, and (after a sort) emulate his happiness and glory."—Bp. Hall.

8—10. (8) Upright . . this,[a] at his sufferings and men's treatment of him. and, etc., stimulated by his example. (9) righteous . . way, the righteous will not allow themselves to be misled from the path of rectitude by these moral wrongs which they see prevail in God's rule of the world; they will cling in spite of them to their righteous life.—Cam. Bib. shall . . stronger,[b] in his attachment to God and holiness. (10) return, to the charge. cannot . . you,[c] he challenges them contemptuously to go on with their accusations. They only reveal their own folly and ignorance.

Dark dispensations overruled for the establishment of the saints.—We will proceed to state—I. The general principles upon which the perseverance of the saints is founded. It may be proved—1. From the immutability of God; 2. From the covenant of grace; 3. From the intercession of Christ. II. The particular manner in which the most untoward circumstances shall be overruled to promote it. To guard against an abuse of this doctrine, we entreat you to bear in mind—1. The characters who alone can take comfort in it; 2. The way in which alone it should be improved.—C. Simeon.

Providence helping the righteous.—In the early part of his ministerial career, a circumstance occurred which he regarded as a particular interference of Divine Providence. Knowing that he could not always enjoy the benefit of the Polyglot Bible in the public library, he began earnestly to wish to have a copy of his own; but £3 per quarter and his food, which was the whole of his income as a preacher, could ill supply any sum for the purchase of books. Believing it to be the will of God that he should cultivate Biblical knowledge, both on his own account, and on that of the people to whom he ministered, and that the knowledge of the Scriptures in their original languages was necessary for this purpose; and finding that he could not hope to have money sufficient for this purchase, he thought that God, in the course of His providence, would furnish him with this precious gift. He soon after received a letter, containing a bank note of £10, from a person from whom he never expected anything of the kind. He wrote to a friend in London, who procured him a copy of "Walton's Polyglot," the price of which was exactly £10.

"Satires and lampoons on particular people circulate more by giving copies in confidence to the friends of the parties, than by printing them."—Sheridan.

11—13. (11) My . . past, my life is nearly over. my . . off,[d] my plans are frustrated. thoughts, cherished schemes, hopes. (12) They, seems to refer to his friends, with their delusive words. light . . darkness, R. V., "The light, say they, is near unto darkness," i. e. it is "always darkest just before dawn." (13) If . . house, etc., R. V., "If I look for Sheol as mine house: If I have spread my couch in the darkness;" vss. 13 and 14 should each end with a semicolon. These vss. form the protasis, and vs. 15 the apodosis. bed, where I shall soon lie down. darkness, in the grave.

Broken purposes.—I. Men form purposes. Mind is active and made to think. Men speculate and resolve. II. These purposes not always fulfilled. 1. As they are impossible to realize; 2. Providence intervenes; 3. Procrastination prevents performance; 4. Satan hinders. III. This is a sad fact in

Nothing in nature weeps its lot,
Nothing, save man, abides in memory,
Forgetful that the past is what Ourselves may choose the coming time to be.

the way of the righteous

[a] Ec. v. 8.

[b] Ps. lxxxiv. 7-11; Is. xl. 29-31; 2 Co. xii. 9, 10.

[c] 1 Co. vi. 5.

It is from the depth of our humility that the height of our destiny looks grandest. For let me truly feel that in myself I am nothing, and at once, through every inlet of my soul, God comes in and is everything in me—Mountford.

broken purposes

[d] Ro. i. 13.

All things are circular; the Past
Was given us to make the Future great;
And the void Future shall at last
Be the strong rudder of an after fate.
—J. R. Lowell.

"In the pursuit towards the similitude of God's goodness or love, which is one thing, neither man nor spirit ever hath transgressed or shall transgress."—Bacon.

"See first that the design is wise and just
That ascertained, pursue it resolutely.
Do ,not for one repulse forego the purpose
That you resolved to effect."
—Anon.

"Sarcasm I now see to be, in general, the language of the devil, for which reason I have long since renounced it."—Carlyle.

experience. My purposes. Good resolutions formed and never carried out. Plans adopted and forsaken Speculate less and work more. Mistaken purposes. — These are of an intermediate character. Good in intention, they would not have turned out well if we had been permitted to execute them. Therefore God has frustrated them. Some of these are quite excellent, only they are altogether beyond our reach. The brave lifeboat crew tries to save the shipwrecked sailors, but, alas! the sea runs too high to permit them to approach, and their purpose is broken. Some whole lives seem to be failures simply because their owners have mistaken their vocation. The man who is a failure as a barrister might have become an excellent farmer; he has chosen an unsuitable sphere. We wish to do good. Then let us pray for light lest we blunder into mischief-making in the very effort to help our neighbors.—Pul. Com.

Steadiness in purpose. — Many who slumber in nameless graves, or wander through the tortures of a wasted life, have had memories as capacious, and faculties as fine as he (Macaulay), but they lacked the steadiness of purpose, and patient, thoughtful labor, which multiplied the "ten talents" into "ten other talents beside them." It is the old lesson, voiceful from every life that has a moral in it — from Bernard Palissy, selling his clothes, and tearing up his floor to add fuel to the furnace, and wearying his wife and amusing his neighbors with dreams of his white enamel, through the unremunerative years. It is the old lesson, a worthy purpose, patient energy for its accomplishment, a resoluteness that is undaunted by difficulties, and, in ordinary circumstances, success.— J. M. Punshon. Steadfastness of purpose.— We have, indeed, but to glance at the biographies of great men to find that the most distinguished inventors, artists, thinkers, and workers of all sorts, owe their success in great measure, to their indefatigable industry and application. They were men who turned all things to gold,—even time itself. Disraeli, the elder, held that the secret of all success consisted in being master of your subject, such mastery being attainable only through continuous application and study. Hence it happens that the men who have most moved the world, have not been so much men of genius, strictly so-called, as men of intense mediocre ability, untiring workers, persevering, self-reliant and indefatigable; not so often the gifted, of naturally bright and shining qualities, as those who have applied themselves diligently to their work, in whatever line that might be.— Smiles.

no rest but in the grave

a Ps. xvi. 10; 1 Co. xv. 42, 53, 54.

14—16. (14) I have said, R. V., "if I have said,"[a] in ref. to the grave wh. he foresees. father, etc., he speaks of death as his nearest relative who will soon claim kindred with him. (15) And where . . hope? R. V., "Where then is my hope?" the hope that the friends suggest. Not in this life! as . . it, if I have any hope, who will see its fulfillment? (16) They, my hopes. to . . pit, to the lowest deep. when . . dust, R. V., "When once there is rest in the dust," i. e. when he has reached this rest at last.

Hope and its value. — Nothing can compensate for the loss of hope in a man, — it entirely changes the character. "How can I work, — how can I be happy," said a great but miserable thinker, "when I have lost all hope?" Hope is like the sun, which, as we journey towards it, casts the shadow of our burden behind us. One of the most cheerful and courageous, because one of the most hopeful of workers, was Carey, the missionary. When in India, it was no uncommon thing for him to weary out three pundits, who officiated as his clerks, in one day, he himself taking rest only in change of employment. Carey, himself the son of a shoemaker, was supported in his labors, by Ward, the son of a carpenter, and Marsham, the son of a weaver. By their labors a magnificent college was erected at Serampore; sixteen flourishing stations were established; the Bible was translated into sixteen languages, and the seeds were sown of a beneficent moral revolution in British India. — Smiles.

vs. 14. "Those who retire from the world to spend their lives in a desert place, for the purpose of performing religious austerities often exclaim to the beasts, 'Yes; you are my relations, you are my parents; these are my companions and friends.'" — Roberts.

the reply of Bildad

CHAPTER THE EIGHTEENTH.

he reproves Job for ensnaring words

b Pr. xviii. 13.

c "How long wilt thou go on artfully and deceitfully

1—3. (1) Then, etc., "Eliphaz made the punishment of the sinner come greatly from his own conscience; Bildad attributes it to the order of nature and the moral instinct of mankind, both of which rise up against the sinner; while Zophar explains it from the retributive operation of sin itself."— Cam. Bib. (2) long . . words?[b] R. V., "How long will ye lay snares for words?" i. e. you have to hunt for your argument! mark,[c] consider, understand. (3)

Wherefore . . beasts, as if we had no sense. and . . vile, R. V., "And are become unclean," as contrasted with xvii. 4, 10.

Note on vs. 2. — The commentators are not agreed to whom the opening of this speech is addressed. Being in the plural number, it cannot, according to the common forms of Hebrew colloquy, be addressed to Job alone. Le Clerc, however, attempts to prove that, under particular circumstances, such a form may be admitted, and especially when particular respect is intended. Other interpreters conceive that it is addressed to Job and Eliphaz, to whom Job had just been replying. But the greater number concur in supposing that it relates to the family or domestics of Job, in conjunction with himself, who, it may be conceived, were present, and at least tacitly approving his rebukes: Tu cum tuâ familiâ," is the explanation of Reiske. It is more probable that it applies to the interlocutors generally. — Good.

devising words for the purpose of entrapping us." — Wordsworth.

"Words make truth to spangle, and its rays to shine." — Bunyan.

4—7. (4) He, etc., R. V., "Thou that tearest thyself." shall . . thee? reproof of pride: shall all things give way for thee? rock . . place? "to oppose the well-established conclusions of wisdom seems to Bildad like the childish madness which would attempt to overthrow mountains." — Genung. (5) Yea, truly, behold. light, joy, prosperity. spark . . fire, the last spark of even the smoldering ashes. (6) light . . tabernacle,[a] the lamp that cheers the tent shall go out. The tent — the house — shall be joyless. his . . him, his hope and joy shall expire. (7) The . . straitened,[b] his mighty strides to prosperity shall be shortened. and . . down,[c] the plans in which he trusted shall precipitate his ruin.

The king of terrors. — I. The origin of his empire. II. The characteristics of his reign. III. The overthrow of his dominion. — T. Barrow.

Eastern lamps. — I may take the opportunity of stating that the houses of the Arabs are never without lights. They burn lamps, not only all the night long, but in all the inhabited apartments of the house. This custom is so well established in the East that the poorest people would rather retrench part of their food than neglect it. Therefore Jeremiah makes the taking away of the light of the candle, and the total destruction of a house, the same thing. Job describes the destruction of a family among the Arabs, and the rendering of one of their habitations desolate, after the same manner, "How oft is the candle of the wicked put out! and how oft cometh their destruction upon them!" On the other hand, when God promises to give David a lamp always in Jerusalem (1 Kings xi. 36), considered in this point of view, it is an assurance that His house should never become desolate. So Virgil, Æn., ii. line 281, "O lux Dardaniæ! spes O fidissima Teucrum!" "O Ilium's light, the Trojan's surest hope!" — Land of the Messiah.

the light of the wicked

a Pr. xx. 20; xxiv 20.

b "If a man do not keep within the limits of his powers, his wide steps shall be straitened." — Ibu Doried.

c Pr. i. 31, 32.

vs. 4. "'Foolish man, why are you so angry? Will your anger pull down the mountain, or take a single hair from the head of your enemy?' 'This evil is only felt in your own heart and house; it is your own destruction.'" — Roberts.

8—10. (8) For . . net,[d] the moral order of the world is such that wherever he moves or touches upon it it becomes a hidden instrument of destruction that seizes and holds him. (9) gin, spring, or trap. heel, foot. robber . . him, R. V., "And a snare shall lay hold on him," as a robber surprises his unsuspecting victim. (10) snare, etc., R. V., "A noose is hid for him," not only does he fall into his own snare, but is a prey to others.

Note on vs. 8. — The original implies a snare with pieces of wood, or other substance, put crosswise, or barwise, so as to sustain the deceitful covering of turf, or other soil, put over it to hide the mischief it conceals. The term is used (Exod. xxvii. 4) to express a grating, or network of brass. The same kind of snare or pitfall is still frequently employed throughout India in elephant-hunting. — Good.

Proneness to evil. — The sinner sees a fascination in the region of the snare. Perhaps it is set in a bed of flowers, or in an orchard of fruit. It may be that some pleasant shady dell conceals it, or possibly it is hidden by a mossy couch that invites repose. At all events, it is most deceptive and powerful where sin most abounds. A sort of fatality dogs the footsteps of the sinner. Start how he may, he is sure to direct his feet at last straight for the snare. He is like one mesmerized. He can but walk into the net. The hideous explanation of his fascination for ruin is that he is no longer his own master. He has made himself the slave of Satan. Yet even he may find safety in the mighty deliverance of the Christ who came to destroy the works of the devil. — Pul. Com.

snares laid for the ungodly

d Ps. ix. 15.

"His light being put out, he wanders ab. in darkness, and falls into the springes which he has set ab. his robber den to catch the unwary." — Spk. Com.

There is nothing more pitiful than a life spent in thinking of nothing but self; yes, even in thinking of nothing but one's own soul. — Farrar.

11—13. (11) Terrors,[e] phantoms of the mind.[f] drive . . feet, R. V., "chase him at his heels," like a pack of hounds after a fugitive. (12) His . .

the foes of the wicked

e Jer. xx. 4; Le. xxvi. 36.

f "Terrors here are represented as allegorical persons, like the Furies in the Gk. poets."—Noyes.

hunger-bitten, "his prosperity shall be changed into famine." — Merx. destruction, etc., R. V., "calamity shall be ready for his halting," ready to take advantage of his stumbling. (13) strength . . skin, R. V., "the members of his body." firstborn, etc.,[a] i. e. leprosy, the most dreaded and awful of all diseases. his strength, R. V., "his members."

Disease and death.— In the natural world, it only requires a single vital correspondence of the body to be out of order to insure death. It is not necessary to have to have consumption, diabetes and an aneurism to bring the body to the grave if it have heart disease. He who is fatally diseased in one organ, necessarily pays the penalty with his life, though all the others be in perfect health. And such, likewise, are the mysterious unity and correlation of functions in the spiritual organism that the disease of one member may involve the ruin of the whole.— Drummond.

a "Death has his family; all diseases, sorrows, horrors, wh. come in his train, or go before him to prepare his way."—Spk. Com.

14—17. (14) his . . tabernacle, R. V., "He shall be rooted out,"[b] etc., a heartless allusion to Job's condition, as a leper, cast out of his tent to the ashheap! terrors,[c] R. V., "And he shall be brought to," etc., i. e. he shall die. (15) It, etc., R. V., "There shall dwell in his tent that which is none of his," i. e. not his own family. brimstone, the image of desolation suggested by the overthrow of Sodom. (17) His . . earth,[d] he shall so utterly perish that not even the remembrance of his name shall survive.

b Ps. cxii. 10; Pr. x. 28.

c "Terror pursues him like a king."—Noyes.—"Dissolution shall invade him like a monarch."—Good.—"Terror shall seize him as a king."—Wemyss.

Additional notes (vs. 15).— A very singular method of expressing sorrow among the ancients, was by burning brimstone in the house of the deceased. Livy mentions this practice as general among the Romans; and some commentators think it is referred to in these words of Bildad: "Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation." The idea corresponds with the design of the speaker, which is to describe the miserable end of the hypocrite.—Paxton. Verse 16. — Man is often described as a tree, and his destruction by the cutting off of the branches. "Alas! alas! he is like a tree whose branches have been struck by the lightning." "He is a tree killed by the shepherds;" which alludes to the practice (in dry weather, when the grass is burned up) of climbing the trees to lop off the branches and leaves for the use of the flocks and cattle, "His branches and shoots are destroyed;" which means himself and family. "I know all his branches and bunches;" meaning all his connections. —Roberts. Verse 17. — "What kind of man is Ramar?" "I will tell you; his name is in every street:" which means, he is a person of great fame. "Ah? my lord, only grant me this favor, and your name shall be in every street." "Who does not wish his name to be in the streets?" "Wretch, where is thy name? What dog of the street will acknowledge thee?" "From generation to generation shall his name be in the streets." "Where is thy name written, in stone? No; it is written in water."—Roberts.

d Mal. iv. 1. Ps. xxxiv. 16.

"The world dares say no more of its devices than 'dum spiro spero' (whilst I breathe, I hope): but the children of God can add, by virtue of this living hope, dum expiro spero, (whilst I expire, I hope)."—Leighton.

the doom of the ungodly

18—21. (18) driven . . darkness,[e] fr. prosperity to adversity, and . . world, and from adversity to death. (19) neither, etc.,[f] his family shall cease. nephew, R. V., "son's son," comp. Ps. cix. 14. He shall leave no offspring. A cruel reminder of Job's bereavement. (20) They . . astonied,[g] Posterity will be astonished at his punishment even as his contemporaries were frightened by it. (21) Surely, etc.,[h] such is the conclusion of the whole matter.

e Pr. ii. 22.

f Je. xxii 30.

g They that come after, are perh. the men of the West; those who went before, those of the East.

h Ex. v. 2,

Death of Cardinal Mazarin. — What a terrific picture does the following passage exhibit of the death-bed of a man devoted to the pomp and vanities of the world, and who is at ease in his possessions! A fatal malady had seized on Cardinal Mazarin, whilst engaged in the conferences of the treaty, and worn by mental fatigue. He consulted Guenand, the physician, who told him he had but two months to live. Some days after, Brienne perceived the cardinal in his nightcap and dressing-gown tottering along his gallery, pointing to his pictures, and exclaiming, "Must I quit all these?" He saw Brienne, and seized him: "Look at that Correggio! this Venus of Titian! that incomparable Deluge of Caracci! Ah! my friend, I must quit all these. Farewell, dear pictures, that I love so dearly, and that cost me so much!" A few days before his death he caused himself to be dressed, shaved, rouged and painted. In this state he was carried in his chair to the promenade, where the envious courtiers paid him ironical compliments on his appearance. Cards were the amusement of his death-bed, his hands being held by others; and they were only interrupted by the papal nuncio, who came to give the cardinal that plenary indulgence to which the prelates of the Sacred College are officially entitled. Mazarin expired on the 9th of March, 1661. — Lardner's Ency.

"It is hard to feel the hand of death arrest one's steps, throw a chill blight o'er all one's budding hopes, and hurl one's soul untimely to the shades, lost in the gaping gulf of blank oblivion."—Kirke White.

"Leaves have their time to fall,

The death-change comes. —

Death is another life, we bow our heads
At going out, we think, and enter straight Another golden chamber of the king's Larger than this we leave, and lovelier.
And then in shadowy glimpses, disconnect,
The story, flower-like, closes thus its leaves.
The will of God is all in all. He makes,
Destroys, remakes, for His own pleasure, all.— Bailey.

And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set — but all, Thou hast all seasons for thine own, oh! Death."
—Mrs. Hemans.

CHAPTER THE NINETEENTH.

the answer of Job

he reproves them for their shamelessness

1–3. (1) Job, "makes a sudden leap out into the light, and rises by an inspiration to the assurance that his innocence shall yet be revealed, that God will yet publicly appear for him, and that he shall see God." — Cam. Bib. (2) vex,[a] torture, harass. break, crush, as in a mortar. (3) ten times,[b] i. e. many times. make . . strange,[c] R. V., "that ye deal hardly with me."

Unfeeling conduct towards a friend is held base even among the heathen. The light of nature teaches that "he who hath friends, must show himself friendly." The effect of false religious views is to render men cruel and unfeeling towards others. Religious persecutions are especially malignant. True religion is a religion of gentleness and love — the more of it, the more gentle and loving, the more of a false religion, the more cruel and unfeeling. Herod put one or two of Christ's disciples to death because it pleased the Jews; Saul, with more religion, kept "breathing out threatenings and slaughter against them." — Hom. Com.

a Pr. xii. 18; xviii. 21.

b Ge. xxxi. 7; Le xxvi. 26.

c vss. 2, 3. "Three points are urged; his friends' cruelty, their pertinacity and injustice. — Spk. Com.

they should reflect that he suffered at the hands of God

4–6. (4) be . . erred,[d] Job repudiates the offenses insinuated against him. Davidson suggests as a trans. "had I indeed sinned, my error would remain with myself, I should be conscious of it." (5) magnify . . me,[e] set themselves up as his judges. (6) hath overthrown me, R. V., "hath subverted me in my cause." God is the cause of this suffering. His own feet had not led him into the net.

Note on vs. 6. — The allusion here may be to an ancient mode of combat practiced among the Persians, Goths and Romans. The custom among the Romans was this: one of the combatants was armed with a sword and shield, the other with a trident and net: the net he endeavored to cast over the head of his adversary, in which, when he succeeded, the entangled person was soon pulled down by a noose that fastened round his neck, and then despatched. The person who carried the net and trident was called Retiarius, and the other, who carried the sword and shield, Secutor, or the pursuer, because, when Retiarius missed his throw, he was obliged to run about the ground till he got his net in order for a second throw, while the Secutor followed him to prevent, and despatch him. The Persians used a running loop, which horsemen endeavored to cast over the heads of their enemies, that they might pull them off their horses. The Goths used a hoop fastened to a pole. — Olaus Magnus.

The erring soul and its God. — The reasons for reserve among men do not apply to our relations with God. As God knows all, so He rightly understands everything. He will never misjudge us. Moreover, His love secures His perfect sympathy with us. Man's prying curiosity subjects the quivering nerves of its victim to a process of vivisection; but God's searching gaze of love and sympathy heals and saves. It is necessary that we should receive this willingly if we are to profit by it. A foolish shyness of God leaves us without the cheering of His presence. It is always a bad thing when one has to say, as a son exclaimed of his lately deceased father, whom everybody was praising, "It may be all true; but I cannot say, as I never knew him." It is not our Father's fault if we do not know Him. He rewards confidence with an exchange of confidence. Now, our first and most necessary duty is to fling aside all reserve before God, to own that "we have erred and strayed from His ways like lost sheep," to confess ourselves utterly helpless and worthless, and, trusting our emptiness to Him, to be ready to welcome the fullness which He always bestows on his trusting children. — Pul. Com.

d 2 Co. v. 10; Ez. xviii. 4; Ga. vi. 5.

e Zep. ii. 10.

"He that loses his conscience has nothing left that is worth keeping. Therefore look to that. And in the next place look to your health; value it next to a good conscience; for health is the second blessing that we mortals are capable of; therefore, be thankful for it." — Izaak Walton.

"Words indeed are but the signs and counters of knowledge, and their currency should be strictly regulated by the capital which they represent." — C. C. Colton.

"Words are like leaves; and where they most abound, Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found."
— Pope.

he cried, but could not obtain justice

a Hab. i. 2; Ps. xxii. 2; La. iii. 8.

b La. iii. 7.

c Ps. lxxxix. 44.

"Great trials come at lengthened intervals, and we rise to breast them; but it is the petty friction of our every-day life, with one another — the jar of business or of work, the discord of the domestic circle, the collapse of our ambition, the crossing of our will, or the taking down of our conceit — which makes inward peace impossible." — Drummond.

7—9. (7) wrong, violence. He does not seem to complain of injustice. cry . . judgment,[a] nevertheless he still expects justice eventually. (8) fenced . . pass,[b] he was a traveler in a cul de sac. he . . paths, "Job complains of the want of light. Nothing vexes him so much as his inability to understand why he is afflicted." — Rawlinson. (9) glory,[c] all that contributed to his respectability, and honor.

The fenced way. — We blunder in the darkness. There are precipices over which we may fall, jungles in which we may become victims to prowling enemies, By-path Meadows that may lead us to Doubting Castle. Therefore God shuts us in. We are annoyed at the restraint, but it is for our soul's preservation. Liberty is not always good. God sees when it may be abused; then in His great mercy He withdraws it. Thus the ambitious man fails to reach the giddy height from which he would soon be flung headlong to ruin. Business does not bring one in the wealth that was expected, for God sees that money is becoming an idol. Many delights are shut off, and a man looks over the fence with great envy towards them; but God knows that they would be poison and death to him. We feel ourselves checked and hindered on every side. Our busy activity is stopped. Even our good designs are frustrated. We find it hard to account for such treatment. Possibly it is just the punishment of our sins. This has come not as direct pain and loss, but as hindrance and failure. We feel like the Egyptians when their chariot-wheels stuck in the bed of the sea. But it may be that the cause lies not so much in sin as in a need of wholesome discipline. Perhaps as we can serve God better by patient endurance than by vigorous activity. Then what looks like failure is really the divinely chosen method of success. He fences up our way that we may learn to serve by waiting. — Pul. Com.

his hope had departed like a tree d La. ii. 5.

"Hope is the daughter of faith, but such as is a staff to her aged mother; and will produce a bold and wise profession of the truth before men, as also prayer to God. It is as the cork upon the net; though the lead on the one side sink it down, yet the cork on the other keeps it up." — J. Trapp.

10—12. (10) He . . side, there is nothing left. he . . removed, R. V., plucked up, "Like a great tree, under whose branches many had found shelter, caught by a tempest and torn up, he lies dishonored on the ground." — Cox. (11) He . . wrath,[d] for some unknown reason God has become his Adversary; this is a more terrible fact than any calamity. (12) troops, troubles sent like an army of soldiers. and . . tabernacle, as if to lay siege to me.

Discipline and its fruits. — We remember a parable in which a preacher says, "Look at this flute; it was a piece of wood; what has made it a flute? The rifts, the holes in it." What life is there through which affliction does not make some rift? All went well till then; but through that rift in the life came thought and feeling. "So," said the preacher, "I listened to a flute one day, complaining that it was spoiled by having a number of holes bored in it. 'Once,' it said, 'I was a piece of wood, very beautiful to look upon; now I am spoiled by all these rifts and holes;' and it said all this mournfully and musically. 'O thou foolish flute,' I said, 'without these rifts and holes thou wouldst only be a mere stick, a bit of mere hard, black ebony, soon to be thrown away. Those rifts and holes have been the making of thee; they have made thee into a flute: they are thy life, thy character, thy music and melody, and thou wilt not now be cast aside with contempt, but touched by even the fingers of future generations.'" — Sunday at Home.

even his own house ceased to sympathise with him

e Ps. lxix. 8; lxxxviii. 8, 18; Ma. xxvi. 56.

f Ps. lv. 12-14; Jo. xiii. 18; Ma. x. 21.

"Your hopes are like happy blossoms fair, and promise timely fruit, if you will stay but the maturing" — Ben Jonson.

13—16. (13) He . . me, etc.,[e] "God removed far from him all human sympathy. And there is something more breaking to the heart in the turning away of men from us than in the severest sufferings. We steel ourselves against it for a time and rise to it in bitterness and resentment, but gradually it breaks us and we are crushed at last." — Cam. Bib. (14) kinsfolk,[f] those who were near, not necessarily relations. (15) They . . house, the household. alien, i. e. a foreigner, with no claim to sympathy. (16) I . . answer, his dependents had ceased to respect and obey. intreated, R. V., "Though I intreat," commands being unavailing.

A sympathetic jewel.—I heard Dr. Virgin, of New York, say the other day that he visited with a friend Tiffany's great jewelry store. His friend showed him a magnificent diamond with its gleaming yellow light, and many other splendid stones. As they went along he saw one jewel that was perfectly lustreless, and he said, "That has no beauty about it at all." But his friend put it in the hollow of his hand and shut his hand, and then in a few moments opened it, and he said, "What a surprise! There was not a place on it the size of a pin-head that did not gleam with the splendor of the rainbow."

And then he said, "What have you been doing with it?" His friend answered, "This is an opal. It is what we call the sympathetic jewel. It only needs the warmth of the human hand to bring out its wonderful beauty."—A. E. Dunning. Sympathy—a fruit of suffering. That love is sweetest, divinest, in which there is greatest power of suffering with and for another. If God should say to us: "I will take from your heart the power of pain, and from your eyes all future tears; you shall look on the sorrows of others and not feel them; you shall recognize humanity's heart throb, and your heart shall not throb; you shall behold life's woes, and your eyes shall glisten with no tear, and your heart shall feel no pain," who would not, with clasped hands, cry out to God, "Oh! give me back the blessedness of tears!" Every experience of pain with and for another is one round in the ladder whereby we climb up to the heart of a suffering God. — Abbott.

"Prayer does not directly take away a trial or its pain, any more than a sense of duty directly takes away the danger of infection; but it preserves the strength of the whole spiritual fibre, so that the trial does not pass into temptation to sin."—Stopford Brooke.

17—20. (17) My . . wife, voice unrecognized by her: or, his breath had become loathsome. though I intreated, etc., R. V., "And my supplication to the children of my mother's womb," i. e., to my brothers. He is intolerable to those most dear to him. (18) Yea . . me,[a] even these did not reverence or fear. arose . . me, "they jeer at his painful efforts to walk." (19) All . . friends,[b] most intimate friends, such as these who are with him now. (20) bone . . flesh,[c] as we say "worn to a skeleton." escaped . . teeth, "the only parts unaffected by disease are the teeth with their skin or gums." —Spk. Com.

he was escaped with only the skin of his teeth a Is. iii. 5; 2 Ki. ii. 23.

b Ps. xli. 9.

c Ps. cii. 5; xxii. 14-17.

The aged despised by the young. — Consider the conduct of these children in — I. Its object. An old man, who on that account should have been reverenced. A good man, who should therefore have been loved. A poor man, who should have had kindness shown him. A poor man who had known better days and should have had the more pity therefore. A man whose bodily ailments prevented self-help. II. Its cause. Want of thought: all they despised in Job might come upon them. Want of sensibility: young children should be tender-hearted. Want of manners: they should have known better; you do. III. Its effect. Upon Job: added to his grief; he had enough without this. Upon them: the exercise of this heartlessness would increase it; what would they be as adults, if such their childhood? They would incur the displeasure of God, who pities the unfortunate, and whose servant Job was. IV. Its lessons. Honor all men, more especially such as Job, the good, aged, unhappy. Be especially kind to the tried — those with bodily ailments, as blind, etc., and with mental defects, as the imbecile. Consider the conduct of Jesus to such. Do as you would be done unto. — Hive.

"What is to become of us," asks Amiel, "when everything leaves us, health, joy, affection, when the sun seems to have lost its warmth, and life is stripped of all charm? Must we either harden or forget? There is but one answer, Keep close to duty, do what you ought, come what may."

Confidence in God. — Friends often fail in the time of sorest distress; they are summer-birds, and pass away when the colder weather sets in. Men are liars, fickle as the wind. Their alienation is ascribed to God, because He has caused the distress; if He had not caused the distress, they would have remained. Here, again, we are reminded that the child of God may be called to be conformed to the image of the Saviour's sufferings. He knew what it was to be deserted by all men, even His dearest disciples and closest adherents. So we are to learn to build no confidence on man, but on the living God alone. whom faith can hold eternally fast. —Pul. Com.

"Men of age object too much, consult too long, adventure too little, repent too soon and seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves with a mediocrity of success."—Bacon.

Pity. —

Soft pity never leaves the gentle breast
Where love has been received a welcome guest;
As wandering saints poor huts have sacred made,
He hallows every heart He once has swayed,
And, when His presence we no longer share, Still leaves compassion as a relic there."

— Sheridan.

"Where all life dies death lives." —Milton.

21, 22. (21) Have, etc.,[d] "overcome by his sense of the terrible enmity of God, Job piteously cries out for the compassion of men." — Davidson. (22) Why . . God,[e] heavily and without deigning to give a reason. are . . flesh? he comp. them to wild beasts.[f] he craves pity at the hands of his friends

d Ro. xii. 15; He. xiii. 3.

e Ps. lxix. 26.

f "Eater of flesh, is the Syriac ex-

To a distant friend. —

Why art thou silent? Is thy love a plant
Of such weak fibre that the treacherous air
Of absence withers what was once so fair?
Is there no debt to pay, no boon to grant?

Yet have my thoughts for thee been vigilant,
Bound to thy service with unceasing care —
The mind's least generous wish a mendicant
For naught but what thy happiness could spare.

Speak! — though this soft warm heart, once free to hold
A thousand tender pleasures, thine and mine,
Be left more desolate, more dreary cold
Than a forsaken bird's nest filled with snow
'Mid its own bush of leafless eglantine —
Speak, that my torturing doubts their end may know!
— Wordsworth.

23—25. (23) my words, which I am about to utter (vss. 25-27). written, plainly, that I might not be misquoted. printed, carved, cut in. book, tablet, of stone, or metal. (24) That, etc.,[a] i. e. permanently. Referring to the ancient manner of engraving inscriptions on the rocks. After being cut in, the lines were filled with molten lead. — Genung. (25) redeemer,[b] Heb. Goel, one who has the right and duty to vindicate one who suffers wrong. liveth, is now living, though judging by my circumstances I seem to be friendless. at . . day, hereafter, at some future time. "No longer expecting a justification of his innocence while living, he believes that even over his grave God will appear as his vindicator, to retrieve his honor before the world by inflicting judgments upon those who had suspected him, and that he shall behold this divine interposition." — Oehler.

My Redeemer. — The word has the general meaning "ransomer," "deliverer," and specially denotes one who takes up a man's cause and vindicates his rights, either by avenging him on his foes, or by restoring him or his heirs to possessions of which he has been defrauded. Job has already expressed a wish that there might be an umpire between him and God; then he goes further, and desires an advocate; then he declares that he has a witness, one who exactly knows his rights, in heaven; then calls upon God Himself to be his advocate. He now takes a stronger position, and declares his certainty that there is One who adds to all these conditions that which gives them solidity, and assures his final triumph: there lives One who will vindicate his righteousness, and clear his cause completely. — Spk. Com. The body, not the man, buried. — "The disciples came and took up the body and buried it." I like that way of speaking of human burial; it is the true way; it is emphatically the Christian way of speaking of the act. You buried it, not Him. "By and by," said Socrates to his friends, "you will be saying, 'Socrates is dead,' but Socrates will not be dead. By and by you will be saying, 'Socrates is in his coffin,' but Socrates will not be in his coffin. By and by you will be saying, 'We are going to bury Socrates,' but you will not bury Socrates; you will only bury something that belonged to him." Well spoken, thou Old World philosopher; the fuller light of Christianity comes to confirm thy conjecture, and to verify thy reasoning. No; there is no burying a man. You cannot bury a soul. — Bib. Ill. Job's certainty. — If we are sure about anything, let it be concerning the Redeemer. If we have an indefeasible claim to anything, let it be to our Redeemer. If we cling with tenacity to any truth, let it be our Redeemer's resurrection and life. Everything hangs here; this is the keystone of the gospel, the foundation of our faith, and the pinnacle of our hope — "Because I live ye shall live also." Oh, for more of Job's certainty, even if the cost were Job's afflictions! — Spurgeon.

26—29. (26) R. V., "And after my skin has been thus destroyed, yet from my flesh shall I see God" (more generally translated "without my flesh.") "The hope which here flashes for a moment through the darkness of temptation is as yet no mature faith in a happy and eternal life after death." — Oehler. shall . . God,[c] see Him manifest Himself as his friend and avenger. The connection is, but I know that my Redeemer liveth, and he who shall be after me shall stand upon the dust, and . . . I shall see God. The last words explain who Job's Redeemer or Goel is, and who He is who remaineth or shall come after him, viz. God. After his skin is destroyed and without his flesh he shall see God. Before death he shall not see Him, for he shall die under His afflicting hand (cf. ch. xxiii. 14), but he shall yet behold Him. To see God pression for calumniator."— Spk. Com.

"If there be no enemy, no fight; if no fight, no victory; if no victory, no crown."— Savonarola.

he would that his words were printed in a book.

the living Redeemer

a Je. xvii. 1; De. xxvii. 2, 3, 8; 2 Co. iii. 1-6.

b Is. liv. 5; lix. 20; Ep. i. 7; Ps. xix. 14; Jo. v. 22-29.

About the tenth century the cross became the only symbol of the Christian faith, to the exclusion of the fish, a previous emblem. From the death of Christ, it had been the symbol of redemption.

"There are men who imagine they should do well enough if they could throw the Bible overboard, and the ministers after it, and sink the whole church in the sea. It is as if a man with a shattered limb should think to better himself by thrusting the doctor and their instruments out of doors. They did not break his leg, but only propose to set it. Under the hand of the poorest of them, the limb will be better than if the shattered bone were left to heal unsplinted." — Beecher.

he possessed the root of the matter

c 1 Co. xiii. 12; xv. 53; Phi. iii. 20, 21; 1 Jo. iii. 2; Re. i. 7.

is to see Him reconciled and in peace, for this is implied in seeing Him at all, because now He hides His face (ch. xxiii. 3, 8 seq.). — Cam. Bib. (27) see, strong assurance.[a] reins, kidneys, seat of desires and affections. consumed, wasted, pine away. (28) But . . him, R. V., "If ye say, how we will persecute him!" i. e. if you continue to persecute me by the accusation, that the cause of all these afflictions is in me, then beware of Divine vengeance." — Davidson. (29) sword,[b] of justice and Divine wrath. that . . judgment, that God punishes wrong done to character.

True religion. — The root of the matter we refer to Job's goodness — his religion — which is called a good thing in God's book. I. Religion is a reality. II. Religion is a reality in the soul; it must go further than the intellect and the judgment. III. Religion is a vital reality in the soul. "Root." IV. Religion is a vital reality in the soul, ever discernible. It is "found" in man. every principle, good or evil, develops itself. It is progressive in its character, Sufferings strengthen true principles. — H. P. Bowen.

The root of the matter. — There are some seasons in which the life of a tree seems to be confined to the root; and thus it is often with the Christian. He may be in such a winter state that there may be little or no appearance of life, no present fruit, no buds and blossoms promising future fruit. There is the being of grace, but the vigor of grace is wanting. He is like a teil tree, or oak, which, through blighting winds or nipping frosts, has cast its leaves; but still there is a prospect, nay, certainty, of a revival, for "their substance is in them."—B. Beddome. The root is underground. It hides itself in darkness. Possibly it runs far for its nourishment, like that of the famous Hampton Court vine, which is said to reach to the river Thames. In human affairs it is very hard to find the roots, because men do not generally expose their inmost thoughts. History searches for causes, but it is a very tentative and precarious science. One historian will see, or thinks he sees, the cause of an event in something of which another denies the existence. We cannot even see the roots of the conduct of our daily acquaintances. In particular this difficulty is increased when there is lack of sympathy. A mean and selfish man can never discover the roots of generous action, and a noble-minded man is slow to suspect the roots of the conduct of a person of lower character We must beware of the attempts of hot-headed philanthropy to cure evils the roots of which have not yet been discovered. Else we may do more harm than good. — Pul. Com.

a Job heaps up phrases to express his assurance that he shall see God, "I shall see for myself," mine eyes shall behold," "I and not another." The whole of his misery might be expressed in saying that God hid Himself from him, and the whole of his redemption and joy will consist in seeing God. — Cam. Bib.

b Ro. xiii. 1-4; Ma. vii. 1, 2.

"Beautiful is the year in its coming and in its going — most beautiful and blessed because it is always the "year of our Lord." — Lucy Larcom.

"This life is the climax of divine goodness, as death, the child of sin, is the climax of human badness." — F. Deems.

"Life is but the way of dying, death is but the gate of life."— Isabella Craig.

CHAPTER THE TWENTIETH.

the reply of Zophar

he is impelled to speak by his thoughts

1–3. (2) thoughts . . answer,[c] my inward persuasion and conviction. for . . haste, R. V., "Even by reason of my haste that is in me," hurried by warmth of feeling. (3) check . . reproach, R. V., "I have heard the reproof that putteth me to shame." i. e. the words by wh. you have sought to check my reproaches. spirit . . understanding, i. e. my zeal. "Zophar, impelled by indignation draws a picture that is declamatory, intemperate and largely fanciful, having little connection with fact."— Genung.

The tongue is a test of the religious state, because it is the easiest and most natural outlet of the feelings and the motives within. It is like the most sensitive balance. A feeling that would not show itself in any other way will move the tongue. So that an ungoverned and unsanctified tongue proves an ungoverned and unsanctified soul. "To make a full and perfect estimate of a man's character, there must not be omitted one single solitary slightest word that ever drops from his life or his pen." The tongue is also one of the means by which the state of the soul is changed. Expressing feeling increases, not the emotion, but the source of the feeling. Angry words cultivate anger, soft words cherish gentleness of spirit, loving words increase love. "It is," says Johnstone, "by restraining the tongue that man obtains and keeps control over the animal nature." "A quarrel," says Dr. Deems, "cannot be carried on in dulcet tone." And again, "An evil tongue reacts upon the speaker, increasing his envy, hatred, jealousy, or whatever evil passion prompted the bad speech." — Peloubet.

c Ro. x. 2; Ja. i. 19, 20.

"Every real thought on every real subject, knocks the wind out of somebody or other. As soon as his breath comes back, he very probably begins to expend it in hard words. These are the best evidence a man can have that he has said something it was time to say." — Holmes.

the joy of the wicked is transient

4–7. (4) Knowest . . old, as an old fact of human observation. since . . earth, fr. the beginning of time. (5) triumphing,[d] shouting, rejoicing. joy . . moment, as his character is disclosed, what is often but not always d Ps. xxxvii. 35, 36; lxxiii. 18; Ex.

xv. 9, 10; Ju. xvi. 27-30; Est. v. 11, 12; vii. 10.

true. (6) Though, etc.,[a] even if he attain to the highest honor and prosperity. (7) Yet . . dung, as a loathsome thing.

The brief triumph of the wicked. — Titus Oates was for a season, during the reign of Charles II., the idol of many Protestants in England. Wherever he appeared, men uncovered their heads. The lives of the most powerful seemed at his mercy. A clergyman of the church of England, and professedly a determined opponent of the Papacy, his oath was credited, and many were condemned to imprisonment, confiscation, or death. Without doubt the wretch occasioned the execution of several innocent persons, and the grievous punishment of many. But an hour of retribution arrived. His cruel devices were detected, and the miserable man's punishment was terrible. He was sentenced to be stripped of his clerical habit, to stand in the pillory in various places, to be whipped from Aldgate to Newgate, and two days after to be whipped from Newgate to Tyburn. He was then to be imprisoned for life, being placed in the pillory five times every year. The dreadful sentence was carried into effect; except that, after a long period, he obtained his liberty, an impoverished, maimed, and despised man. — S. S. Mag.

Consequences of sin. — We are told that in Sierra Leone the white ants will sometimes occupy a house, and eat their way into all the woodwork, until every article in the house is hollow so that it will collapse into dust directly it is touched. It is so with this deceitful character, so honey-combed and eaten through, that though for years it may maintain its plausible appearance in the world, few people even suspecting the extent of the inward decay, on a sudden the end will come; there will be one touch of the finger of God, and the whole ill-compacted, worm-devoured thing will crumble into matchwood; "He shall be broken, and that without remedy." — R. F. Horton.

a Am. ix. 2; Ma. xi. 23.

"We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on a dial; we should count time by heart throbs. He most lives who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."—Shakespeare.

"In the ideal we are to see what we may become: in the actual we see what we have to avoid."—R. F. Horton.

life is as dream

8—10. (8) dream,[b] wh. wholly vanishes. (9) eye[c] . . him, and was dazed by his greatness. (10) to please the poor, R. V., "the favour of the poor," i. e. in their low estate they will seek to curry favor even with the poor. hands, of his sons. shall . . goods,[d] rather, his goods; wealth gotten by unlawful and violent means.

The dream of life. — I. A dream implies a dormancy in certain faculties of our nature. II. A dream fills the mind with illusive visions. 1. Man's notions as to what his life here will be are illusions; 2. Man's notions as to what constitutes the blessedness and dignities of life are illusions. III. A dream is of very short duration. — Thomas.

Traces of life. — The leaves of some trees, when they fall, leave no trace whatever behind; the scar left by their removal heals immediately; and on the smooth naked bark of the bough, in winter, there is no mark to indicate that it was once covered with foliage. There are other trees, however, on which the scars are permanent. The leaf drops off; but it leaves a seal-like impression behind on the stem; and no succeeding growth can obliterate it. Through summer's luxuriance and winter's desolation, the memory of the vanished leaf remains indelibly fixed on the tree, engraved, as if with a pen of iron, upon the bough which it once adorned. The tree may increase in size until it forms a grove by itself; but the signet mark left by the leaf, which fell from it when it was a mere sapling, still cleaves to it in the grandeur of old age. Many of the characteristic marks on the stems of palm trees and tree-ferns are due to the permanence of these scars, when their leaves are decayed and dropped off. And is not the lesson of analogy here very clear and impressive? How many there are who fade, and drop off the tree of humanity, and leave no trace of their existence behind! while others, when they fade and drop off the tree of life, leave behind them an impression which time will only make deeper — an empty space, whose perpetual vacancy reminds the survivors of an irreparable loss. — Hugh MacMillan.

b Ps. lxxiii. 20; xc. 5.

c Ps. xxxvii. 36; ciii. 16.

d Pr. vi. 31.

A dream, alas our life's a dream,
On earth below,
Like shadows on the waves we seem,
And thus we go
And when our tardy steps are yet
In space and time,
We are, and know it not, we're led To heaven sublime. — Herder.

the sins of his youth inherited by the wicked

11—14. (11) full . . youth,[e] "rather, his bones are full of his youth, but it shall lie down, etc.; in the midst of his years, when his bones are full of his youthful strength, like a vigorous marrow, he shall be cut off, and his youth go down to the grave with him." — Cam. Bib. (12) Though . . mouth,[f] though it be a pleasure to him. though . . tongue,[g] as a gourmand prolonging the taste of a sweet morsel. (13) Though, etc., see vs. 12. (14) Yet,[h] etc., sin so enjoyed shall be bitter in its consequences.

Results of sin. — That little sin is, if you would see it, like scratching with a pen through and through a writing on a parchment. What is this writing?

e Ps. xxv. 7; Pr. v. 10, 11.

f Pr. ix. 16, 17; Ps. x. 7.

g Hence we have the saying "to roll sin as a sweet morsel under the tongue," wh. is often quoted as part of Scripture.

h Pr. i. 31; Je. ii. 19.

What is this parchment? It is a title-deed to an inheritance, the inheritance of the saints in light. You are quietly erasing your name from it and blotching its fair characters. When you come to the day of account, you will show your claim, and it will be illegible. "What," you will say, "am I to lose this great possession for this trifling scratch of the pen?" "Even so," says the Inexorable; "it is precisely in this way that the inheritance is lost: not, as a rule, by deliberate and reckless destruction of the mighty treasure, but by the thoughtless triviality, the indolent easefulness. See you, it is the work of your own hand. His own iniquities shall take the wicked." He said God would not punish a poor creature like him. God does not punish him. No, there is God making level all his paths now as of old. This punishment is not God's; it is his own. His own iniquities have taken the wicked; he is held with the cords of his sins. Here then is the plain, stern truth, a law not of Nature only, but of the Universe. — R. F. Horton.

Spiritual conflict must precede spiritual peace.— The Sunday School Times.

He who has no mind to trade with the devil should be so wise as to keep from his shop.— South.

15—17. (15) He . . riches, glutted with wealth. he . . again,[a] ill-gotten wealth shall be disgorged. (16) He . . asps,[b] his wealth shall be as a poison corrupting his whole nature. (17) He, etc.,[c] he shall not enjoy prosperity, of wh. rivers, honey, etc., are emblems.

Zophar's argument. — Zophar's point is the brevity of the wicked man's prosperity, which arises from the fact that wickedness brings about its own retribution — sin, sweet in the mouth, turns into the poison of asps in the belly.

"The Gods are just, and of our pleasant vices Make instruments to scourge us."

He illustrates this theme by drawing the picture of a rapacious, oppressive man of power suddenly brought to destruction and destitution in the midst of his days, with the hand of every one that is wretched against him, and forced to disgorge that which he had greedily swallowed. Job may understand that the fable is narrated of him. — Cam. Bib.

ill-gotten wealth shall be reimbursed a Pr. xxiii. 8.

b Ro. iii. 13.

c Je. xvii. 6; Is. lviii 9-11; Ps. lxxxi. 13, 16.

vs. 17. "Is a man about to leave his native place, to reside in another country in hope of becoming rich, people say to him, 'We suppose there are rivers of ghee, and honey and milk, in the town where you are going to live.'"— Roberts.

18—20. (18) That . . restore,[d] he shall lose the fruit of his toil. shall . . down, shall not enjoy it. according to, etc., R. V., "According to the substance that he hath gotten he shall not rejoice." (19) oppressed, plundered. because . . not,[e] R. V., "He hath violently taken away an house, and he shall not build it up;" comp. Is. v. 8, 9. (20) R. V., "Because he knew no quietness within him, he shall not save aught of that wherein he delighteth," i. e. because his greed was insatiable, he shall lose what he longed for.

Oppressing the poor. — It is not always seen in the bare and open fashion of primitive times. The sheikh exacts more than is due from his tribe, the Eastern landowner grinds down his fellaheen, the baron enslaves and robs his serfs, and we denounce the manifest wrong. But is not the same evil to be seen in the more decorous injustice of modern Western civilization? The great body of workingmen is now emancipated from the tyranny of past ages, and is able to assert itself and claim its rights. But below this powerful class is a mass of unskilled workers, the helpless men and women who crowd the lower quarters of great cities — the really poor. When advantage is taken of the poverty of these miserable people to grind them down, they are being robbed. With us the sweating system takes the place of the old territorial oppression. Is the modern commercial oppression one whit less guilty than the old lordly tyranny? The evil is more disguised with us; it is more difficult to bring it home to its authors; our complicated civilization hushes it up — yet the cruelty and wickedness are as real as ever. — Pul. Com.

restitution to the poor shall be made d Je. li. 44.

e 1 Ki. xxi. 19; Is. lvii. 21.

"Lot hastened to acquire wealth. For a while all seems fair; but soon every worldly prospect is blasted, and he ends his days a degraded tenant of the desolate cave of Zoar. Ahab envied Naboth the enjoyment of his vineyard, and Jehoiakim by unjust means grasped all that came within his reach; but both of them soon ended their career in deep disgrace."— E. L. Magoon.

21—23. (21) R. V., "There was nothing left that he devoured not; therefore his prosperity shall not endure."[f] (22) In . . sufficiency,[g] in his best estate. he . . straits, in the moment of his great abundance his straitness comes suddenly upon him. every . . him, rather, "of the wretched." All those in destitution, and the lawless shall rise up against him and make him their prey. (23) When,[h] etc., in the midst of his desires, and in the moment of their satisfaction.

Riches and discontent. — "I knew a man," says one, "that had health and riches, and several houses, all beautiful and ready furnished, and who would often trouble himself and his family by removing from one house to another. Being asked by a friend why he removed so often, he replied, it was to find

he shall be in straits in the height of his prosperity f Pr. xxii 22, 23; Am. iv. 1, 2.

g Ecc. v. 13, 14; Je. xvii. 11.

h Mal. ii. 2; Nu. xi. 33; Ps. lxxviii. 29-31; Lu. xii. 20.

content in some one of them. 'Content,' said his friend, 'ever dwells in a meek and quiet soul.'"— Whitecross.

"Temptation in the line of duty God has provided for: but temptation sought and coveted God has made no provision for."—G. E. Rees.

Poverty.— A man at a toll-gate who has a million-pound note, is as badly off as the man who has not a single halfpenny: neither of the men can pass through the toll-gate. There may be a poverty of wealth as well as a poverty of destitution. So the wicked man may be in straits of all kinds; he may have plenty of money, and not know how to spend it; he may have an abundance of property, and be without thoughts, impulses of a heavenly kind, aspirations that seek the skies. The bad man may have no explanation of the miseries which torment him; he may be mad with impatience because his spirit has never been chastened by heavenly experience. The good man may have nothing, and yet may abound; he may be hungry, and yet may be satisfied: his affliction is a sanctified sorrow. — Peop. Bib.

the fate of the ungodly oppressor

24—26. (24) He, etc.,[a] "bent on plunder he is suddenly confronted by the sword of his intended victim." He flees, but is transfixed by an arrow, and dies. —Cox. (25) drawn, etc., vivid picture of the sufferings of the wounded. (26) R. V., "All darkness is laid up for his treasurers; a fire not blown by man shall devour him; it shall consume that which is left in his tent."[b] darkness, calamity. laid up, reserved, destined. fire . . him, fire of God, or perhaps an allusion to the self-avenging nature of sin.

Mistaken criticism of life.— The rich broker or manufacturer, because he washes, dresses, and has twenty servants to wait upon him, is he therefore a fine soul? Nobody will say so. Yet Christianity is so little understood in some quarters, is so much associated with the error of Zophar, that even within the church a score are of his opinion for one who is in Job's perplexity. The moral ideas and philanthropies of our generation are perverted by the notion that no one is succeeding as a man unless he is making money and rising in the social scale. So, independence of mind, freedom, integrity, and the courage by which they are secured, are made of comparatively little account. Outward magnificence is neither a symbol nor an ally of spiritual power. It hinders instead of aiding the soul in the quest of what is eternally excellent, touching the sensuous, not the divine, in man. The spread of His ideas, the manifestation of His Godhead, the coming of His Kingdom, depend not in the least on the countenance of the great and the impression produced on rude minds by the show of wealth.— Exp. B.

a Is. xxiv. 18; Am. v. 19.

b Ps. xxi. 9,

"Ambition, avarice — the two demons—these which goad through every slough our human herd, hard-traveled from the cradle to the grave; how low the wretches stoop!" —Young.

"Satan, the world, and the flesh are the three mighty foes of the child of God."—D. W. Whittle.

the emptiness of earthly possessions

27—29. (27) heaven . . earth,[c] etc., all nature in arms against him. (28) The . . depart,[d] disappear. and . . away, like water. (29) portion,[e] the lot, fate, end. heritage . . God, Job will not admit the imputation that his heritage is from God as the punishment for sin.

The emptiness of earthly possessions.— From these words I take occasion to show what a poor creature a mere worldly man is. I. As viewed in himself. 1. As it respects his present enjoyments; 2. As it respects his future prospects. II. As viewed in contrast with the godly man. Such — 1. Enjoy much in possession; 2. In reversion. Application: — (1) Seek not happiness in the way of sin; (2) Be not too intent on the things of this world; (3) Seek your happiness in God alone.— C. Simeon.

Omniscience of God.— Lord Craven lived in London when that sad calamity, the plague, raged. On the plague growing epidemic, his lordship, to avoid the danger, resolved to go to his seat in the country. His coach and six were accordingly at the door, and all things in readiness for the journey. As he was walking through his hall in order to step into his carriage, he overheard his negro, who served him as postillion, saying to another servant, "I suppose, by my lord's quitting London to avoid the plague, that his God lives in the country, and not in town." The speech struck Lord Craven very sensibly, and made him pause. "My God," thought he, "lives everywhere, and can preserve me in town as well as in the country. I will even stay where I am." He immediately ordered his horses to be taken from the coach, and the baggage to be taken in. He continued at London, was remarkably useful among his sick neighbors, and never caught the infection.— R. T. S.

c Is. xxvi. 21; Lu. xii. 2; 1 Co. v. 5.

d Zep. i. 18; Re. xviii. 17; Ma. xvi. 26.

e Ps. xi. 6; De. xxix. 18-20.

Cyrus, the Persian king, was accustomed to say, that did men but know the cares he had to sustain, he thought no man would wish to wear his crown

"A slave has but one master; the ambitious man has as many masters as there are persons whose aid may contribute to the advancement of his future."— La Bruyère.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIRST.

Job's reply

1–3. (1) Job answered, he vindicates himself fr. the charges of all his friends at once. (2) diligently, lit. hear, O hear. Serious matters call for double or diligent hearing. this . . consolations, an allusion to xvii. when Eliphaz offers the consolations of God. Their speech had failed, let them now "console" him by listening.[a] (3) Suffer me, do not interrupt. mock on, begin again your mockings.[b]

he craves leave to speak

The speech of the pulpit (vs. 3).—I. Suffer me to speak—1. Of human depravity; 2. Of Christ's atonement; 3. Of God's invitations; 4. Of Divine long-sufferance; 5. Of tender mercies; 6. Of God's promises; 7. Of threatenings; 8. Of rewards; 9. Of punishments. II. The liberty granted. "Now I have spoken," etc. 1. If your understandings will permit; 2. If you are rejecters of the Bible; 3. If you despise the counsels of heaven. But if you will not "mock on,"—(1) Forget not; (2) Pray for help; (3) Reduce knowledge to practice; (4) Think of the end of life; (5) Persevere to the end; (6) Labor to promote the glory of God. —W. Stevens.

Rule for preachers.—I was conversing with one of the first advocates in America. He said, the difficulty which preachers find in making themselves understood is, that they do not repeat enough. Says he, "In addressing a jury, I always expect that whatever I wish to impress upon their minds, I shall have to repeat at least twice, and often I repeat it three or four times, and even more. Otherwise, I do not carry their minds along with me, so that they can feel the force of what comes afterwards." If a jury, under oath, called to decide on the common affairs of this world, cannot apprehend an argument unless there is so much repetition, how is it to be expected that men will understand the preaching of the gospel without it.—Finney. Value of arguing.—Arguing for the sake of victory is of little value. It generally confirms each party in its own opinions, builds impenetrable walls around narrow and imperfect views. The only hope is that some light may flash through the crevices. But arguing for the sake of knowing the whole truth, of seeing from every point of view, of broadening knowledge, is of great value, and will be conducted without passion or bitter words. —Peloubet.

a The LXX. trans. "Let not such be your consolations."

b Job. xvii. 2.

"Listen attentively, instead of speaking with words, which you intend for consolations, but which are contumelies." —Wordsworth.

"The whole of Zophar's last speech must have left the impression on Job of a bitter sarcasm, and has dealt him the freshest, deepest blow." —Delitzsch.

If God be our guide He will be our guard. —Matthew Henry.

complaining, even to man, he may well be troubled

4–6. (4) my complaint, Vulg. my disputation.[c] to man, R. V., marg. "of man." It is not about man that he complains. It is the moral problem of the universe that perplexes him.[d] why, etc., R. V., "why should I not be impatient?" since wrong seems successful and right suffers. (5) be astonished, Job intended to say some intense things. lay . . mouth, attitude of silent awe and wonder,[e] for Job is confronted by the terrible mystery of the apparent injustice of God with men. This he is determined to solve. (6) trembling,[f] at the task which he has set for himself.

c Comp. Job vii. 13; ix. 27.

d Job xvi. 20.

e Ps. xxxix. 9; Pr. xxx. 32.

f Comp. David, Ps. cxix. 120, and Habakkuk iii. 16.

"He who desires according to Paul to be apt to teach, must first himself be taught of God." —Erasmus.

"Let your discourses be neither absolutely without ornament, nor indecently clothed with it." —Augustine.

Robert Leighton was once rebuked by his Scotch Presbytery for not "preaching to the times," and he is said to have answered, "while so many brethren are 'preaching to the times' may not Preaching.—No obstacles in the way of the Christian pulpit and Christian work ought to be named as an apology for omitting to do that work, except the obstacles within the church itself. As well might Gen. Grant have complained of the cannon and sharp-shooting of Lee's army; but for them there would have been no use for him. We are to go on with the conquest set before us.—Cyrus D. Foss. To a very large extent, preaching in the pulpit to-day is preaching in defense of the Bible instead of preaching the contents of the Bible. We spend a great deal of time in making clear and clean the approaches to the temple, and a great many of us never get any farther than the vestibule door, and we spend so much time in this way that we do not have time to go inside and worship.—Francis L. Patton. One reason why preaching is ineffectual.—In a recent lecture (1893) before the students of the Chicago Theological Institute, Mr. Moody gave the following object lesson: "The Spirit cleanses the believer through the word. People close up their Bibles and then wonder why they do not become holy." He then took a pitcher of water and began to pour it into a bottle filled with a dark fluid. The water drove out the fluid, and was rapidly making the contents look clear. Then he put the cork in the bottle and continued to pour the water. "That," he said, "illustrates the people who stop up their minds with unbelief. The word does not get in, and their minds are poisoned and tainted with evil. Many people sit in church with their minds corked up and the minister pours on the word, but it all goes outside. The people should be one poor brother preach for eternity?"—Trumbull.

prepared to receive the message as much as the minister to give it."—Peloubet.

he marvels at the prosperity of the wicked

7—9. (7) wicked live,[a] the question scarcely means, How is it, if your principles be true, that the wicked live? Job's mind is engrossed with the great problem itself, and he asks, Why in the government of a righteous God do the wicked live? They not only live, they live to old age, and wax mighty in the earth. This difficulty the friends had shirked, dwelling only on the fact that wickedness was punished in this life, in order to prove that Job must have sinned.[b] (8) seed is established, this fact contradicts the statements of all the friends; Comp. xv. 34; xviii. 19; xx. 10. (9) safe from fear, lit. peace from fear; i. e. peace itself, far removed from fear. Job's house had been broken up by calamities. rod of God, with which He smites in punishment.

Why the wicked are suffered to live (vs. 7).—I. To prolong their opportunity for becoming reconciled to God. II. For the benefit of others. III. That they may contribute to mature the piety, elevate the character, and heighten the future felicity of the saints. IV. That they may exhibit the loveliness of the Divine character. V. That they may furnish evidence of the future state of retribution. VI. That they may furnish decisive evidence of the justice of God in His final disposal of them.—W. T. Hamilton.

Treasures of the wicked.—Every man is treasuring up stores for eternity; the good are laying up treasures in heaven, where moth doth not corrupt; the evil and impenitent are "treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath." What an idea is this! Treasures of wrath! Whatever the impenitent man is doing, he is treasuring up wrath. He may be getting wealth; but he is treasuring up wrath. He may be getting fame; but he is treasuring up wrath. He may be forming pleasing connections; but he is also treasuring up wrath: every day adds something to the heap. Every oath the swearer utters, there is something gone to the heap of wrath. Every lie the liar tells, every licentious act the lewd man commits, adds something to the treasure of wrath. The sinner has a weightier treasure of wrath to-day than he had yesterday; he will have a weightier to-morrow than he has to-day. When he lies down at night he is richer in vengeance than when he arose in the morning. He is continually deepening and darkening his eternal portion. Every neglected Sabbath increases his store of wrath; every forgotten sermon adds something to the weight of punishment. All the checks of conscience, all the remonstrances of friends, all the advice and prayers of parents, will be taken into the account, and all will tend to increase the treasures of wrath laid up against the day of wrath.—G. A. James.

a Comp. Asaph's difficulty, Ps lxxiii. See also Jer. xii. 1-3; Hab. i. 12-17; Mal. iii. 14, 15.

b Job xx. 4-29.

"Patience is that by which God patiently endures the absence of a good that is loved, desired, and hoped for, and the presence of an evil that is hated, and which spares sinners, not only that He may through them execute the judicial acts of His mercy and justice, but that He may likewise lead them to repentance; or may punish with the greater equity and more grievously, the contumacious."—Arminius.

"Sure as night follows day,
Death treads in pleasure's footsteps round the world,
When pleasure treads the paths which reason shuns."—Young.

they are wealthy and seem to be happy

10—13. (10) gendereth . . calveth, these were things beyond the immediate control of man, yet even in these things God blessed the wicked. (11) They, the wicked, vs. 7. like a flock,[c] to their sports, like a joyful flock sent to the pastures. dance,[d] the common sign of joyousness and freedom from fear. (12) They, the fathers. take, R. V., "sing to." timbrel, Heb. toph:[e] French, tambourin: an instrument that is struck. harp, Heb. cinnor,[f] an instrument having strings. organ, R. V., "the pipe." (13) wealth, good, or prosperity. in a moment, "going straight down into the under-world, without struggle or pain, or any sign of the Divine displeasure."—Cox.

Frivolous amusements.—Attending places of vain and fashionable amusement tends to stifle all serious reflection, and cherish a vain and airy temper, and to promote an idle and dissolute life. It tends to make young people forget that they are sinners, and that they must die and come to judgment. It tends to render them deaf to all inward warnings of God's Spirit, and to the checks of their own consciences, and deaf to all the outward calls of the gospel, the counsels of their ministers, their parents and other spiritual friends.—Bellamy. The two boats.—In many a man's life in that harbor out of which he sails his little boat, two vessels arise. One vessel has the sound of laughter, rich and full, upon it; the sound of music and dancing upon it; gaudy colors float from its mast heads; it is the ship of the "World and its Lusts." Another ship lies in the offing, a good, stanch boat, free from things that are for the pleasures of the flesh, but filled with a royal crew, captained by one who never failed to lead his vessel safely through to the desired haven. Upon one of those two boats you and I must embark. Most of us have already put off our little boats on the sea, with the Brittany fisherman's prayer, "Keep me, O c Ps. xvii. 14.

d "Not formal dances, but skip, like lambs, in joyous, healthful play."—Fausset.

e Trans. tabret in Ge. xxxi. 27.

f Ge iv. 21; xxxi. 27; 1 Sa. x 5.

"Many Christians get cold warming themselves by this world's fires."—A. J. Gordon.

"But pleasures are like poppies spread,
You seize the flower, its bloom is shed."—Burns.

God; the sea is so large, and my boat is so small." But perhaps some are still halting between the choice of the world and the good will of our God. The two boats put out to sea; the sky is blue, the Father's face is sweet and tender, and the sea is sweet and peaceful; and the two vessels sail quickly over the waters. By and by the wind comes, and that rocky cape which every vessel must round before she reaches her haven looms up in the gathering darkness. There, while the clouds surge heavy overhead, and the night-birds sweep, and the waters pitch and toss tempestuously beneath, the "World and its Lusts" has passed away, but the good ship of the "Will of God" rides on. The storms go down and the clear sun shines out lovingly after the rain, and by and by the light breaks upon the hills of the better country, and the "Good Will of God" casts anchor in the haven of my Father's land at the very threshold of my Father's house. — Robert E. Speer.

"Look not mournfully into the Past. It comes not back again. Wisely improve the Present. It is thine. Go forth to meet the shadowy Future, without fear, and with a manly heart."—H. W. Longfellow.

14–16. (14) Therefore, R. V., "Yet they said," these ungodly men. desire not, the expression of natural enmity.[a] (15) What . . Almighty, what His special claims? The language of pride and independence.[b] profit, seeing they have all outward good, what is to be got by religion?[c] if we pray, Heb. if we meet Him: i. e. in the way of prayer. (16) their good, R. V., "their prosperity." not in their (own) hand, but in God's. They do not make it themselves. Therefore there must be some mystery in God's dealings beyond your comprehension. far from me, "or, perhaps, the counsel of the wicked be far from me![d] Job cannot refrain from repudiating their principles." — Cam. Bib.

they foster pride in their prosperity a Ps. x. 4; 2 Ti. iv. 3; Ro. i. 28; viii. 7; Jno. iii. 19.

b Ex. v. 2; Mal. iii. 14.

c 1 Ti. iv. 8.

d "Be it far from me that so I should speak, according to their way of thinking, with which, on the contrary, I disavow all fellowship."—Delitzsch.

Effects of prayer. — A young man, who was employed in a large manufactory, was frequently made the butt of ridicule by his companions because he would not join in their drinking parties and Sunday frolics. Among these persons, the foreman was most prominent. One day, as the youthful Christian was at prayer, he was overheard by this foreman, who found that he was himself the subject of his supplications. He was presenting to God the darkness and infidelity of his heart, and earnestly imploring for him the blessings of repentance and faith. The foreman, who had never known anything of the true nature of prayer before, was deeply impressed with what he heard, and wondered at the eloquence and fervor with which his own unhappy case had been pleaded before God. "I never," said he to himself, "thus prayed to God for myself." The next day he entreated the instructions of the young man, and earnestly begged his prayers for him. They knelt down together, cried to the God of all grace, and found acceptance with Him. From that day they were bosom friends, went together to the house of God, and frequently united in their prayers and thanksgivings. Their conversation adorned their profession, and the mocker became a confessor of the grace which he had so often abused and turned into ridicule.

A little boy, whose conduct made his mother say that she feared he did not pray, replied, "Yes, I do; I pray every night that God will make you and pa like my ways better."

17, 18. (17) How oft,[e] R. V., "How oft is it that," etc., i. e. not often. and how oft, etc., R. V., "That their calamity cometh upon them? That God distributeth sorrows in His anger?" On these words the stress of Job's question lies. He admits that the wicked are punished in this life, but what examples can be produced? candle,[f] reverting to Bildad's figure, ch. xviii. 5, 6. (18) stubble, etc., R. V., "That they are as stubble before the wind and as chaff that the storm carrieth away?"[g] These are all questions; not assertions as in A. V., and to all the implied answer is, "not often."

yet their life is uncertain and frail

e Gesenius supposes that the word (cammah) rendered how oft, may even be interpreted as equivalent to seldom.

f Job xxix. 3; Ps xviii. 28; Pr. xxiv. 20.

g Is. v. 24; Mat. iii. 12.

The end of the wicked. — Their frail vessels, though built of the best materials, yet corrupted by the worm of sin, being conveyed by the ebb of time down the smooth river of life, are now hurried beyond the bar of death into the fiery and unfathomable sea of Divine wrath. In this most tempestuous ocean, tossed by the furious winds of Almighty indignation upon the raging billows of insupportable torment, they suffer a speedy and eternal shipwreck. Dashed upon the rocks of ruin, or swallowed up in the gulf of despair, they are entirely lost, and not one broken piece of holiness or happiness remains, nor so much as a single plank of hope upon which they may expect, though after millions of ages, to escape to some land of rest. — J. Benson. Wealth not a shield from misery and unhappiness. — The autocrats who have been most conspicuous for unchecked power and limitless resources have also been the most conspicuous in misery. We have but to recall Tiberius, "tristissimus ut constat hominum," who, from the enchanted isle which he had degraded into the stye of his infamies, wrote to his servile

"Though we seem grieved at the shortness of life in general, we are wishing every period of it at an end. The minor longs to be at age; then to be a man of business, then to make up an estate; then arrive at honors, then to retire."—Addison.

senate that "all the gods and goddesses were daily destroying him;" or Septimus Severus, who, rising step by step from a Dalmatian peasant and common soldier to be emperor of the world, remarked with pathetic conviction, "Omnia fui et nihil expedit"; or Abderrahman the Magnificent, who, in all his life of success and prosperity, could only count fourteen happy days; or Alexander, dying "as a fool dieth;" or Napoleon I. saying, "I regard life with horror." — Farrar.

"Our lives are albums written through With good or ill, with false or true;
And as the blessed angels turn
The pages of our years,
God grant they read the good with smiles,
And blot the ill with tears."
— Whittier.

A shipwrecked soul. —

"For sadder sight than eye can know
The shipwreck of a soul."

his wickedness is visited on his children

19—21. (19) R. V., "Ye say God layeth up," etc. layeth up, reserveth. iniquity, the punishment of it. for his children, the friends maintained that the punishments of wickedness fell either on the man himself, or on his immediate offspring.[a] rewardeth, etc., R. V., "Let him recompense it unto himself, that he may know it," i. e. let the man himself suffer, not his posterity. This is the earliest remonstrance of the kind. Comp. Jer. xxxi. 29, 30, and Ezek. xviii. 20. know,[b] in sense of feel it. (20) see, R. V., "Let his own eyes see his destruction." drink, R. V., "let him drink" as out of a cup.[c] (21) what pleasure,[d] etc., i. e. how can it be punishment to a man for his children to suffer when he is gone? cut of, prematurely,

The triumph of the wicked. — How short is the triumph of the wicked! When they begin to crow, God stoppeth their breath; and judgment seizeth upon them when they think no danger near them. So, when Belshazzar was in his mirth with his nobles, the fearful hand wrote his doom upon the wall, and presently his mirth was changed into sadness, that he became as one that was stricken with a palsy; so, while Herod vaunted himself and the people honored him like a God, the angel of God smote him upon his throne, and immediately he was devoured of worms in the face of them which honored him; so, while the Philistines were triumphing and banqueting, Samson pulled the temple upon their heads; so, while the men of Ziklag were feasting and dancing, David came upon them and slew them; when the Israelites were at their manna and quails, even while the meat (saith David) was yet in their mouths, God took away their lives; when Job's children were making merry one with another, the wind came and blew down the house; while the old world was marrying and giving in marriage, the flood came and drowned them; while the steward was recounting with himself and thinking that his master knew not what policy was in his heart, suddenly his lord called him to account; while the churl was musing of his barns full of corn, and saying to himself, Be merry, my soul, that night his soul was taken from him: so, while we sin and think nothing of it, our sins mount up to heaven, and stand at the bar, and call for vengeance against us. How soon Abel's blood called for vengeance of Cain! We cannot sin so quickly but God seeth us as quickly. How many have been stricken while the oath hath been in their mouths, as Jeroboam was stricken while he spoke, that they might see why they were stricken! Though a man sin often, and steal his sins as it were without punishment, yet at last he is taken napping, even while the wickedness is in his hand, and his day is set when he shall pay for all; whether it be after twelve months or twelve years, when it cometh it will seem too soon. — H. Smith.

a Job v. 4, xx. 10; see also Ex. xx. 5; Is. xiv. 21.

b Hos. ix. 7.

c Ps. xi. 6; lxxv. 8; Je. xxv. 15, 16; Oba. 16; Re. xiv. 10.

d "If the godless receives the reward of his deeds, he should receive it not in his children, but in his own body, during life."—Delitzsch.

Comp. Eccl. iii. 22. Secretary Walsingham wrote to Lord Burleigh: "We have lived long enough to our fortunes, to our country, to our sovereign; it is high time that we began to live for ourselves and to God."

Do you want to know a prescription suitable for every pardoned sinner? It is contained in the words of the Great Physician: "Behold, thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee."

God is just though men's affairs are unequal

22—26. (22) teach God, whose ways may well be inscrutable. He reproves the attempt to decide what God must do. high, either the angels, heavenly spirits (Delitzsch); or the proud, who presume to read His secrets. (23) full strength, lit. in his perfection; that is, in the full enjoyment of everything he could desire. (24) His breasts. Some trans. "His resting places (i. e. of his flocks) are full of milk:" having reference to the milk-pails provided: or troughs for the store of milk. and his bones, R. V., "And the marrow of his bones is moistened," i. e. watered; made fresh and strong. (25) in the bitterness, having a life full of sorrow, while the other has a life full of joy. never eateth with pleasure, R. V., "never tasteth of good." (26) alike, Eccl. ix. 2.

"The ancient versions specify some part of the body as the meaning of the word (atin), and this is con-

The mental independence of God (vs. 22). — From this fact we infer — I. That all His operations must emanate from pure sovereignty. II. That all His laws must be the transcript of His own mind III. That all His dispensations should be cordially acquiesced in. This is dictated by — 1. Rectitude; 2. Expediency. IV. That all His revelations should be properly studied. 1. With an expectation of difficulties; 2. With the profoundest reverence. — D. Thomas.

Uncertainty of life. — One Lord's day, the Rev. Mr. Button of London, preached at Harlington. After a variety of pertinent remarks on the mortality of man, and the state of the soul after death, Mr. B. suggested that it was possible some one or other in the congregation might be removed by death that day; and that being the case, it became each one to put the question to himself — "Where am I likely to be? In heaven or in hell?" Returning to the afternoon service, Mr. B. was met at the meeting-house door by one of the members of the church, who said, "An affecting providence, sir, has just taken place! The congregation is assembled, and a man in the gallery is now fallen down, apparently dead; he is carried into the vestry." A medical gentleman was immediately sent for, who said that the person had died of an apoplectic fit. The awakening providence produced a deep solemnity in the congregation. "Be ye also ready; for at such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." — Whitecross. Dying words of an unbeliever. — The dying words of the late Harriet Martineau were: "I have no reason to believe in another world. I have had enough of life in one, and can see no good reason why Harriet Martineau should be perpetuated." What gloom and sadness! Now listen to St. Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day." Who, in the light of such experiences, can refrain from exclaiming, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his?" — Old Test. Anec.

firmed by the parallelism."—Wordsworth.

vs. 4. "The margin has, for breasts, 'milkpails.' Of a man who is very rich, it is common to say, 'His chattels (vessels) are full of milk.' But of a good king or governor it is said, He nourishes like the king whose breasts are full of milk. 'Yes; he so rules, that the breasts of the goddess of the earth are full of milk.'"—Roberts.

"We know God easily, provided we do not constrain ourselves to define Him." — Joubert.

27, 28. (27) thoughts, which they had not expressed. They made general observations, but they intended personal application to Job; they had insinuated his guilt. devices,[a] stratagems, malicious intrigues. (28) prince, rich or munificent chief. Job knew they meant himself by this term. dwelling . . wicked, assuming Job's were tents of wickedness bec. they had been destroyed.

God knows the thoughts of men

God's plan in life. — A crystal is sometimes formed in the embrace of a boulder of granite. To clear it of its rough enclosure, and to bring its beautiful facets to the light, nature submerges it in deep waters, shatters it by tempests, and abrades it by contact with stones and mud, and the rubbish of the sea. Thus a redeemed soul is by the plan of God immersed in the cares and toils and enticements and usefulness of a world of sin, so that by sheer resistance to evil, and abrasion with depravity, it may be polished to the transparent image of Him who made it. . . . We are like the Cologne Cathedral wh. was begun about 1250, according to plans of M. Gerard. After a time the building stopped, on account of wars and political changes. For several centuries the plans were lost. But in 1830 they were discovered, and the building is completed according to them. God has a plan for the temple of our souls. We sometimes lose sight of it, but if we are His children, every day, every experience, every opportunity, will aid in the building, till we become perfect temples, wherein God shall dwell by Spirit. — Peloubet.

[a] "The word is carefully chosen, as ambiguous. It may mean simply ingenious devices, or, more commonly, crafty, and disingenuous ones." — Spk. Com.

1 Pe. ii. 19.

A child instructed in a Sabbath school, on being asked by his teacher if he could mention a place where God was not, made the following striking and unexpected reply: "Not in the thoughts of the wicked."

29, 30. (29) go by the way, i. e. travelers, all men of wide experience and observation tell the same story.[b] tokens, i. e. the account they give of what they have seen in various lands. (30) vss. 30–34 give the travelers, testimony, which universally declares the prosperity of the wicked and the despot. reserved to,[c] R. V., margin, "spared in," i. e. when others suffer they escape. brought forth to, R. V., marg. "led away in," i. e. in safety.

the prosperous wicked reserved to destruction

Freedom of the wicked. — All the freedom that wicked men have is but like that of banished men — to wander up and down in the wilderness of this world from one den and cave to another. Plato hath long since concluded concerning the condition of sensual men, that they live "like a shellfish;" and can never move up and down but in their own prison, which they ever carry about with them. Wicked men are most narrow and confined spirits; they are so contracted by the pinching particularities of earthly and created

[b] In this appeal Job meets Bildad's appeal (Job viii 8); and Zophar's (Job xx. 4).

[c] "At the time when streams of wrath go forth, they remain untouched; they escape them as if under a special, higher protection." — Delitzsch.

things, so imprisoned in a dark dungeon of sensuality and selfishness, so straitened through their carnal designs and ends, that they cannot stretch themselves, nor look beyond the horizon of time and sense. — J. Smith.

thus Job rebuts all partial statements

31—34. (31) Who, etc.,[a] "the godless despot is secure in life, they say, for no man dare accuse him to his face or is able to requite him as he deserves." — Cox. brought to the grave,[b] in pomp and honor. remain, etc., R. V., "keep watch over,"[c] "refers to Arab custom of building a mound over the grave of a dead but honored chieftain, that he may be surrounded by his clan, who zealously keep watch over his tomb." — Cox. (33) sweet unto him, he thinks even of the grave with complacency, knowing that his memory will be cherished. every man, etc., "the prosperous wicked man has innumerable successors and imitators." (34) falsehood, R. V., "only falsehood." When Job's proofs to the contrary are subtracted from the answers of his friends, there is left in them only the wrongful, false disposition they show towards him.[d] a "Apparently, neither God nor man brings the wicked man's sins home to him.

b "The word brought implies burial in state with a procession of mourners." — Spk. Com.

Ecc. viii. 8; He. ix. 27.

c "He keeps watch over his tomb, he continues to watch, although asleep, since he is continually brought to remembrance by the monument built over his tomb." — Delitzsch.

d "Job distinctly charges them with evil intent, and wilful opposition to the truth." — Robinson.

Temporal and spiritual. — It is not true that joy and wealth are the rewards of virtuous life. It is not always the case that the evil-doer is overcome by temporal disaster. It is true that to good and bad alike death is appointed, and together they lie down in the dust. It is true that even then the good man's grave may be forsaken in the desert, while the impious may have a stately sepulchre. A new way is made for human thought in the exposure of the old illusions and the opening up of the facts of existence. Hebrew religion has a fresh point of departure, a clearer view of the nature and end of all things. The thought of the world receives a spiritual germ; there is a making ready for Him who said, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," and "What doth it profit a man to gain the whole world, and forfeit his life?" When we know what the earthly cannot do for us we are prepared for the gospel of the spiritual and for the living word. — Exp. Bib. Sin and punishment. — The state of the world as to sin and punishment is still a vexed problem to many. How can God suffer such injustice to remain in His world? "Why does He not kill the devil?" Why does He not send His lightnings to blast those who are corrupting and destroying men? Why are so many good men unfortunate, and poor, and sick, and lonely? Still, "facing the problem" is one step towards its solution, even though we seem, in Carlyle's words, to be "shouting question after question into the Sibyl-cave of destiny, and receiving no answer but an echo." Only those are hopeless who will not see and feel. — Peloubet.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SECOND.

the answer of Eliphaz

God is not affected by human character

This chapt. begins the third circle of speeches. 1—4. (1) answered, Eliphaz names the sins of Job; traces these sins to Job's impiety; entreats him to repent.[e] (2) R. V., "Can . . . . unto God? surely he that is wise is profitable unto himself." A man's actions cannot affect God:[f] his wisdom can only benefit himself. (3) any pleasure, "or advantage. Vss. 2, 3 go together, and express this single conception that God's treatment of men is not due to any respect He has to Himself, but is strictly according to the character of men." — Cam. Bib. Suggesting to Job the reason for his affliction. (4) R. V. "Is it for thy fear of Him that he reproveth thee, that He entereth with thee into judgment?" i. e. God cannot chastise a pious man.

e "Eli. shows that man's goodness does not add to, or man's badness take from, the happiness of God; therefore it cannot be that God sends prosperities to some, and calamities on others, for His own advantage. The cause of the goods and ills sent must lie in the men themselves" — Fausset.

f Job xv. 3; see Ps. xvi. 2; Lu. xvii. 10.

God's independence of man (vs. 2). — We learn — I. That God is perfectly independent of man's character, whether right or wrong. 1. He is not affected by it; 2. He will not condescend to explain His treatment of it. II. Man's character is of the utmost importance to himself. "He that is wise," etc. — Thomas.

Personality of God. — Any presentation of God as an official personage, who sits, as it is sometimes said, in the chair of state — as a mere governor of the universe — is a false presentation. God governs the universe, but He is not a mere governor. I may control men by my personal influence, but I am not a captain. I am not elected to anything. I do not act under any written law or constitution. So far as I control them, I do it by the play of my mind on theirs. I touch their interests, their sympathies, their enthusiasm. God governs the universe, not by His laws so called, but by Himself — by the direct throb of His soul. And, I repeat, any view of God which presents Him as an official personage, or in any way that leaves out personality, heart sympathy, soul — is false! — H. W. Beecher. Religion our advantage. — Men must recognize that religion is greater than they are, patriotism is greater than they are, and neither church nor country ought to be under such obligation to any man as to be unable to do without him. We are honored by the church; but honor, how little we can give! We are honored by living in the country; if we can give any little honor in return, God be praised! There are also some men who occasionally threaten to give up the ministry. Would God they would! If a man can ever threaten to leave the ministry, let him go! It is recorded that in an early Wesleyan conference Mr. Charles Wesley said that if such and such things were done he would leave the conference. His elder and greater brother said, "will some brother be kind enough to give him his hat?" That is not the way to treat great organizations, and sublime policies, and holy altars. What! a man leave the ministry, except through old age, failure of faculty, exhaustion of power? He cannot, if ever he gave himself to it at the cross, under the baptism of blood. We are not called to this ministry by men, nor by men can we be dismissed from it. Let us live in the spirit of humility, true, genuine spiritual modesty, knowing that all the advantage of religion is upon our side, and that it is not in our power to add to God's dignity. — Peop. Bib. God the true environment. — The true environment of the moral life is God. Here conscience wakes. Here kindles love. Duty here becomes heroic, and that righteousness begins to live wh. alone is to live for men. But if this atmosphere is not the dwarfed soul must perish for mere want of its native air. And its death is a strictly natural death. It is not an exceptional judgment upon Atheism. In the same circumstances, in the same averted relation to their environment, the poet, the musician, the artist, would alike perish to poetry, to music and to art. Every environment is a cause. Its effect upon me is exactly proportionate to my correspondence with it. If I correspond with the world, I become worldly; if with God, I become Divine. — Drummond.

"The Omnipotent has sown His name on the heavens in glittering stars, but upon earth He planteth His name by tender flowers." — Richter.

"It has never been as clear to us that without God the soul will die as that without food the body will perish." — Drummond.

"As night and shadows are good for flowers, so is Christ's absence of special use, and it hath rare nourishing virtue in it, and putteth an edge on hunger, and furnisheth a fair field to faith to put forth itself." — Rutherford.

5—8. (5) great, judged by the severity of the punishment. and thine, etc., R. V., "neither is there any end to thine iniquities." Regarding Job's sufferings as severe humiliations, Eliphaz plainly accuses him of the "sins which a powerful Oriental ruler naturally falls into: inhumanity, avarice, and the abuse of power." (6) for nought, comp. the Heb. laws. Ex. xxii. 26. Deut. xxiv. 10, also Neh. v. 2–11. He has taken security when perfectly able to help his brother. naked, in Script. means thinly clad.[a] (7) withholden bread, sinning against the Eastern laws of hospitality, which were held as peculiarly sacred.[b] Comp. Job's denial, xxxi. 16–22. (8) the mighty man, i. e. Job himself. He grasped the earth. honourable, spoken in satire of Job, who so thought himself.

he accuses Job of divers sins

[a] Is. xx. 2; Jno. xxi. 7; Ja. ii. 15.

[b] Ge. xviii. 4, 5; xix. 2; xxi. 14, 15; xxviii. 11; Ex. ii. 15.

Food to the hungry. — An Indian, who had not met with his usual success in hunting, wandered down to a plantation, among the back settlements of Virginia, and seeing a planter at his door, asked him for a morsel of bread, for he was very hungry. The planter bid him "Begone, for he would give him none." "Will you give me, then, a cup of your beer?" said the Indian, "No; you shall have none here," replied the planter. "But I am very faint," said the savage, "will you give me only a draught of cold water?" "Get you gone, you Indian dog, you shall have nothing here," said the planter. It happened some time after, that the planter went on a shooting party up into the woods, where, intent upon his game, he missed his company, and lost his way, and night coming on, he wandered through the forest, till he espied an Indian wigwam. He approached the savage's habitation, and asked him to show him the way to a plantation on that side of the country. "It is too late for you to go there this evening, sir," said the Indian, "but if you will accept of my homely fare, you are welcome." He then offered him some venison, and such other refreshments as his store afforded; and, having laid some bear-skins for his bed, he desired that he would repose himself for the night, and he would awake him early in the morning, and conduct him on his way. Accordingly in the morning they set off, and the Indian led him out of the forest, and put him on the road he was to go. But just as they were taking leave, he stepped before the planter, and turning around, stared full in his face, and bade him say "whether he recollected his features." The planter was now struck with horror, when he beheld in

"It is one of the thirty-two charities of the Hindoos 'to have water ready for the traveler to drink.' Hence, on the public roads, in front of the houses of charitable people, may be seen vessels filled with water, for the use of all who pass that way. But respectable men do not drink there; they go inside, and say, 'Conjum taneer,' a little water; and it is given to them." — Roberts.

Christ's provision is more than enough for a hungry world, and they who share it out among their fellows, have their own possession of it increased. There is no surer way to receive the full sweetness and blessing of the gospel, than to carry it to some hungry soul.—Maclaren.

his kind protector the Indian whom he had so harshly treated. He confessed that he knew him, and was full of excuses for his brutal behavior; to which the Indian replied, "When you see poor Indians fainting for a cup of cold water, don't say again 'Get you gone, you Indian dog!'" The Indian then wished him well on his journey, and left him. It is not difficult to say which of these had the best claim to the name of Christian.— Whitecross. Giving a stimulus to spiritual life. — A venerable colored minister, who had been pleading earnestly for foreign missions, closed his exhortation with these words: "Bredren, I've heard of churches dat's dying of 'spectability, I've heard of a church where de souls of de people is all shriveled up with selfishness, and I've heard of lots of churches, like a great barren desert, with no living waters, no waters of 'freshment running in 'em 'cause dey refuse to do de Lord's will. But, bredren, who ever heard of a church dat was killed 'cause it gave money to foreign missions? Whoever heard of a church that died 'cause it did what de Lord said? Neber! neber! Bredren, ef anybody would tell me of such a church in all dis wide univarse, I'd make a pilgrimage to dat church. I would climb up its ivy-mantled walls, and up to de top of de steeple, and lay dis great black hand on de topmost stone of dat temple, and say, 'Bressed are the dead that die in de Lord.'"—Advance.

Earthly arithmetic says, "Give, and want." Heavenly arithmetic says, "give, and grow rich."—Schauffler.

he is accused of oppressing the poor a See Ex. xxii. 22; Is. i. 17.

b Comp. Job's defense of himself in each particular, ch. xxix. 7-17.

c Comp. La. iii. 54.

"This proverbial form of speech is used when a man drags from another that which is his last resource. 'Why do you take this tax from the naked?' 'What! take a cloth from the naked? Is there no shame?'" Roberts.

"Be favorable unto the poor, which may be little; if thou wilt be aided of God against them that be mighty."—Sir Thomas Smith.

9—11. (9) widows, peculiarly helpless and dependent class in the East.[a] Comp. xxix. 13. These are the very things Job has not done. arms, supports, helps, that on which one leans. This may refer to Job's supposed violent ways as a magistrate.[b] (10) snares, ch. xix. 6. sudden fear, on account of such evil things, fearfulness of sudden calamity has taken hold of Job. (11) canst not see, or "seest thou not the darkness and the deluge that cover thee?" Do you not comprehend their meaning? abundance of waters, a common scriptural figure for affliction.[c]

Consecrated possessions. — There is no truly Christian man who keeps an unconverted pocketbook. God's universal law of unselfish service is as supreme in the domain of material possessions — in the realm of that wealth wh. extends a man's power "to bring things to pass" — as it is in any other department of man's possible efforts. The unvarying law of God wh. attaches an obligation to every opportunity and places a duty over against every right, makes no exception of wealth with its vast powers of service. God has so ordered the social life of our race that no man can make the most of his powers of mind and heart and will, until he employs those powers in the service of his fellow-men. This is an accepted law in the realm of mind and spirit. It is no less binding upon the power wh. material wealth places at a man's disposal. No man has the slightest right to say of his wealth, "It is mine; I may use it selfishly if I will." No man has arrived at a true conception of the responsibility that attaches to the possession of property until his relations through it to his fellow-men fill a larger place in his views of life than does his ability by his wealth to serve his own selfish ends. — Merrill E. Gates.

and of regarding God as indifferent

d "Eliphaz imputes to Job a scepticism like that of the Epicureans. See Ps. x. 5; lxxiii. 11; xciv. 7; Is. xxix. 15; Jer. xxiii. 23; Eze. viii. 12; ix. 9."—Wordsworth.

12—14. (12) in the height of heaven, "Eliphaz claims that under this feeling of His infinite distance from the earth Job said, How doth God know? Men's conduct was not observed by Him; the thick clouds obscured His vision."— Cam. Bib. (13) How, or what, of human affairs.[d] (14) circuit, or vault. Concerned with the higher things of heaven, and practically heedless of man.

Fatherhood of God. — The nature of God, as taught and exemplified by our Saviour, was certainly a large addition to the spiritual truth of the world. While men were yet comparatively rude, the Divine idea presented itself to them under the symbols of the state and the government, and justice and mercy were learned only in the rude ways by which men could comprehend them, through state and government; but in the hands and under the teaching of our Saviour, God is advanced, and He becomes more glorious in the fulness of the representations that are given of Him; not as any less the God of justice, and not as any less the God that administers the affairs of this world, but as seen from the standpoint of the household, and as clothed with the authority and the attributes of fatherhood in distinction from monarchy. This truth has relations that reach far beyond what we suspect. — H. W. Beecher.

The rest of Christ is not refusing the struggle, but conquering in it; not resting from duty, but finding rest in duty.—New York Observer.

15—18. (15) marked, R. V., "Wilt thou keep?" etc., is it your intention to cast in your lot with wicked men? old way, ref. to the sinners before the Flood, who, by disregard for God, filled the earth with violence;[a] Eliphaz asks Job whether he will go the length of accepting the principles and following the conduct of such men. — Cam. Bib. (16) out of time, by an untimely end. whose, etc., R. V., "Whose foundation was poured out as a stream," Job is "compared to that evil generation which by crimes like his had provoked the wrath of Heaven, and perished in the Flood." (17) do for them, R. V., "do for us." The scornful boast of the atheistic. (18) their houses, gave them prosperity, but only for a time; the punishment at last came.[b] counsel, etc., Elip. uses Job's words (xxi. 16), and applies them to Job himself.[c]

Marking the ways of men (vss. 15–17). — I. The way of wickedness an old way, but not the oldest. II. The way of God to sinners has always been the same. III. None are so high as to be out of God's reach. IV. The judgments of God are often sudden. V. Fancied security is often violently and completely overthrown. VI. The presence of God is a trouble to the wicked. From these things learn—(1) That it is a great advantage to mark the way; (2) To observe needful directions.

Passableness of God. There must be some kind of passableness in God, else there could be no genuine character in Him. If He could not be pained by anything, could not suffer any kind of wound, had no violable sympathy, He could be anything but a perfect character. A cast-iron deity could not command our love and reverence. The beauty of God is that He has feelings, and feels appropriately toward everything done; that He feels badness as badness, and goodness as goodness — pained by one, pleased by the other. There must be so much, or such kind of possibility in Him, that He will feel toward everything as it is, and will be diversely affected by diverse things, according to their quality. If wickedness and wrong stirred nothing in Him different from what is stirred by a prayer, if He felt no disaffection toward a thief, which He does not feel toward a martyr, no pleasure in a martyr, faithful unto death, which He does not in his persecutors, He would be a kind of no-character. We can hardly conceive such a being. — Bushnell. God's view of wealth. — Dr. Arbuthnot, after commenting on the great riches, and unparalleled iniquities of the the infamous Charties, concludes; "O, indignant reader! think not his life useless to mankind. Providence connived at his execrable designs, to give to after ages a conspicuous proof and example of how small estimation is exorbitant wealth in the sight of God, by His bestowing it on the most unworthy of mortals!" — Whitecross.

although He was merciful to those who denied Him a Ge. vi. 5, 7, 11, 12, 17.

b Ps. lxxiii. 18-20.

c "Eliphaz persists in the misconception that Job had denied God's moral government of the world." — Wordsworth.

"God is everywhere! the God who framed mankind to be one mighty family. Himself, our Father, and the world our home." — Coleridge.

Open evil at all events does this good; it keeps good on the alert. When there is no likelihood of an enemy's approaching, the garrison slumber at their post.

Lord, with what courage and delight I do each thing,
When thy least breath sustains my wing. — H. Vaughan.

19, 20. (19) The righteous, those really righteous, wh. you vainly boast yourself to be. see it, the proof of God's working in punishment of ungodly. laugh,[d] when the vanity of their boasting is shown by their calamities. (20) Whereas, etc., R. V., "Saying, surely they that did rise up against us are cut off, and the remnant of them the fire hath consumed. This is what the innocent are supposed to say.

The righteous saving the country. — The one deadly enemy to a country is unrighteousness. The ancient civilizations have perished by this poison. Greece and Rome did not fall till they were permeated with unrighteousness. And if ever Macaulay's vision of "some traveler from New Zealand" who "shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, stand on a broken arch of London bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's," or on Brooklyn bridge to sketch the ruins of New York, it will be because of unrighteousness alone. The righteous save the city by the hope that the leaven of righteousness will permeate the whole people. I have heard that Robert Ingersoll said that if he had made the world he would have made health catching and not disease. But it is true now that in a wide view health is more contagious; that goodness has more power to change a people than evil has. A few earnest, determined, righteous men can leaven the city. — Peloubet. Wickedness brings punishment. — The malefactor who is to be crucified carries his cross with his own body; and in like manner wickedness creates fr. itself, to be borne by itself, each several form of chastisement. But some persons are like children, who after seeing in the theatres, malefactors in gold and broidered tunics and purple mantles, crowned and dancing, admire and applaud them as happy beings, until they appear upon the stage, goaded and scourged, and with fire streaming from their gay and finely wrought apparel. — Plutarch.

the righteous rejoice in the justice of God d Pr. xi. 10.

vs. 20. "There can be little doubt that the reference is to the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah; and as all men are often spoken of as constituting one family or community, so the abandoned inhabitants of these cities are poetically represented as descendants or remnants of the wicked that perished in the flood." — Good.

"A foe to God was never true to man." — Young.

Job exhorted to that knowledge of God of which the fruit is peace

21—23. (21) Acquaint,[a] by thinking better thoughts of God come to better feelings. be at peace,[b] i. e. "from the obstinate questionings and restless doubts with which he was wearying himself in vain." — Cox. good, i. e. good fortune. (22) the law, not the Mosaic law, but, generally, instruction. his mouth, by humility and penitence drawing near to Him.[c] (23) return, as a penitent. put away, R. V., "If thou put away unrighteousness far from thy tents;"[d] "assuming that Job's tents were filled with secret spoils." — Spk. Com.

Acquaintance with God (vs. 21). — I. What this acquaintance with God is. It implies — 1. Knowledge; 2. Access; 3. Converse; 4. Love. II. That it is the duty of man to acquaint himself with God. 1. He is naturally estranged; 2. It is the highest improvement of existence; 3. It is the greatest of mercies; 4. God acquaints Himself with man. III. Motives to enforce this exhortation. 1. Character of God; 2. Effects of this acquaintance; 3. Danger of refusing; 4. Examples of the holy; 5. Promises of the text. IV. Directions to obtain acquaintance with God. 1. Get a sense of estrangement; 2. Get a humble heart; 3. Visit God often; 4. Take Christ with you; 5. Make acquaintance with friends of God; 6. Seek it earnestly, speedily; 7. Beware of all that places distance between you and God. — Janeway.

Note on vs. 23. — The monks of St. Catherine, who have a monastery on the top of Mount Sinai, dared not even have a door in their monastery; they are literally built up, and everything that is received from below comes in a basket, let down from the top of the wall by means of a rope and pulley. Both persons and goods come and go in this way. To this kind of building up, Eliphaz seems to refer. And as this was considered a sufficient protection in a general way, yet God's building up alone can be universally safe and sufficient. His providence is the grand fortification; it is not only protection, but a source of support. The inhabitants shall dwell in safety: his bread shall not fail, and his water shall be sure. From such a tabernacle the wicked, the practicers of iniquity, aggression, and wrong, shall be put far away. In such a country, and in such circumstances, what a support must such a promise be, when the words were known to be spoken by Him who cannot lie! To the case of Job these things strongly apply. He lived in Uz, in Idumea; and he himself, as well us his friends, were Edomite Arabs. His oxen and asses had already been carried away by a marauding company of Sabeans, a people that dwelt in Arabia Deserta, on the east of Uz. The Chaldeans, who carried away his camels, were banditti of the same kind. — A. Clarke. Nests in the rock. — Men who stand on any other foundation than the rock Christ Jesus are like birds who build their nests in trees by the side of rivers. The bird sings in the branches, and the river sings below: but all the while the waters are undermining the soil about the roots, 'til in some unsuspected hour the tree falls with a crash into the stream and then the nest is sunk, the home is gone, and the bird is a wanderer. But birds that hide their young in the clefts of the rocks are undisturbed, and after every winter, coming again, they find their nests awaiting them, and all their life long, brood in the same places, undisturbed by stream or storm. — H. W. Beecher.

in that case his comfort and happiness should be great

24—27. (24) R. V., "And lay thou thy treasure in the dust, and the gold of Ophir among the stones of the brooks." as dust, lit. lay it on the dust, i. e. regard it as of little value as the dust.[e] Ophir, 1 Ki. ix. 28.[f] (25) R. V., "And the Almighty shall be thy treasure, and precious silver unto thee."[g] (26) lift . . face, see ch. xi. 15; in confidence, no more ashamed by affliction. (27) hear thee, when thus thou seekest with clean hands, and a penitent heart.[h]

Delight in the Lord (vss. 26, 27). — I. The sublimity of its nature. 1. Saving knowledge of God; 2. Present enjoyment of God; 3. Future anticipation of God. II. The Divinity of its origin. The Almighty is — 1. Suited to our capacities; 2. Adequate to our necessities; 3. Durable as our existence. III. The tendency of its influence. 1. Promotes confidence; 2. Communion; 3. Obedience to God.

Preciousness of the Father's presence. — As little children will frolic and play, and talk to themselves, and sing and be happy, if every time they look up they can see their mother's form or shadow, or hear her voice, so we are, in God's greater household, to have such a consciousness of our Father's presence as shall make us happy, cheerful, contented in our sports and duties. We are dear to God. He will not forget us, nor cease to take care of us. We

---

[a] Ecc. ii. 3.

From the old F. accointer, from L. accognitare, to make known.

[b] Ps. xxxvii 27; Is. xxvii. 5.

[c] This is good advice, but it offends, because it assumes that Job is out of communion with God.

[d] Zec. i. 3; 2 Ti. ii. 19.

Consider it to be the greatest of infamy to prefer life to honor, and for the sake of living to lose the object of living. — Juvenal.

The higher and more consecrated the individual life, the clearer will probably be its recognition of its dependence upon and guidance by the God who is acknowledged in all its ways. — The Cumberland Presbyterian.

O, how compassionate and comforting God is to those who go to him with hearty confidence in their troubles! — Fénélon.

[e] "The meaning is, put away from thee the idol of precious metal with contempt; lay the Ophir under the rubble of the brooks, after it has lost for thee a previous bewitching spell." — Delitzsch.

[f] "The natives of Malacca still call their mines Ophirs."—Fausset.

[g] "Silver of treasures."—Gesenius "Silver of excellencies."—Ewald.

[h] Ps. lxvi. 19, 20; Ecc. v. 4, 5; 1 Jno. v. 14, 15.

are so much more precious than many things which He never forgets, that we stultify ourselves if we refuse to be serene, as they are serene. — Beecher.

Delight in God. — When Madame Guyon was imprisoned in the Castle of Vincennes in 1695, she not only sang but wrote songs of praise to her God. "It sometimes seems to me," she said, "as if I were a little bird whom the Lord had placed in a cage, and that I had nothing now to do but to sing. The joy of my heart gave brightness to the objects around me. The stones of my prison looked to my eyes like rubies."

"There is a play upon the words in the original between betser (gold), and betsur (a stone). Eliphaz insinuates that gold has been Job's chief god." — Wordsworth.

28—30. (28) be established, "the promise of immediate success on all enterprises has a touch of audacity." light, success. (29) When . . down, reference is to Job himself. In time of temporary distress Job shall have hope. humble,[a] Heb. him that hath low eyes, i. e. Job himself. When he is humble God will hear his prayer. (30) R. V., "He shall deliver even him that is not innocent; yea, he shall be delivered through the cleanness of thine hands."[b] These concluding words are conciliatory and humane, and not unworthy of the very aged and very devout speaker. — Cam. Bib.

and other good results shall follow

a Ps. cxxxviii. 6; Is. lvii. 15; lxvi. 2; Eze. xxi. 26; Lu. xiv. 11; Ja. iv. 6.

Jesus the sun, the light of the world. — Every tree, plant and flower grows and flourishes by the grace and bounty of the sun. Leaving out of account the eruptions of volcanoes and the ebb and flow of the tides, every mechanical action on the earth's surface, every manifestation of power, organic and inorganic, vital and physical, is produced by the sun. Every fire that burns, and every flame that glows, dispenses light and heat which originally belong to the sun. The sun digs the ore from our mines, he rolls the iron, he rivets the plates, he boils the water, he draws the train. Thunder and lightning are also his transmuted strength. And remember this is not poetry, but rigid mechanical truth. Look at the integrated energies of our world. What are they? They are all generated by a portion of the sun's energy which does not amount to one two-thousand-three-hundred-millionth of the whole." — Prof. Tyndall.

b "The irony is strikingly exhibited in Eliphaz unconsciously uttering words wh. exactly answer to what happened at last; he and the other two were delivered by God accepting the intercession of Job for them." — Fausset.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-THIRD.

1—3. (1) answered, "this chapter is inspired by a sublime and inalienable confidence in the equity of the Supreme Judge." — Cox. bitter, R. V., "rebellious," i. e. you still think it so. my stroke, lit. my hand, the hand of God on me.[c] than my groaning, "but in truth the hand of God upon me is heavier than my groaning."[d] (3) him, i. e. God. Job no longer fears the effect of being admitted to God's presence; but longs now to see Him face to face. seat, tribunal, judgment-seat.[e]

Job's answer — he longs to appear before God

c Job xix 21; Ps. xxii. 4.

d "The meaning may more simply be, True my complaint is very bitter, but it is justified by my affliction."—Spk. Com.

e Ps. lx. 7, 8.

Job's desire after God, and his doctrine of prayer (vss. 3, 4). — I. The desire expressed. It may spring from — 1. Imperfection of evangelical knowledge; 2. Providential obscurity; 3. Darkness and desertion of soul; 4. Spirit of contrition; 5. Desire after communion. II. The resolution formed. These words describe the construction of a well-ordered prayer. 1. Why does God require argument in prayer? 2. Some efficacious arguments.

Prayer found in the heart. — There is good reason to cry "Eureka!" when we find prayer in our heart. Holy Bradford would never cease praying or praising till he found his heart thoroughly engaged in the holy exercise. If it be not in my heart to pray, I must pray till it is. But oh, the delight of pleading with God when the heart casts forth mighty jets of supplication, like a geyser in full action! How mighty is supplication when the whole soul becomes one living, hungering, expecting desire. — Spurgeon. It is not the gilded paper and good writing of a petition that prevails with a king, but the moving sense of it. As to that King who discerns the heart, heart sense is the sense of all, and that which He only regards; He listens to hear what that speaks, and takes all as nothing where that is silent. All other excellence in prayer is but the outside and fashion of it; this is the life of it. — Leighton.

If only a little way ahead
Shine the print of the Master's feet,
There is glory o er all the path I tread,
And the following wondrous sweet! — Mrs. L. F. Baker.

4, 5. (4) order, lay out in order; fully present. arguments,[f] questionings, and explanations. These may be presented before God with all due humility. (5) he would answer, Job feels confident that they would not be such words as he had heard from the friends.

he would then frame his plea carefully

f Is. i. 18, xliii. 26; Da. ix, 18, 19.

Sighing for God (vss. 3, 4). — I. The speaker. 1. The awakened sinner; 2. The despairing saint; 3. The penitent backslider. II. His state of mind.

A man at his wits end, is not at his faith's end.—Matthew Henry.

Four things which are not in thy treasury,
I lay before Thee, Lord, with this petition,
My nothingness, my wants,
My sins, and my contrition.
—Southey.

he has confidence in the great mercy of God

1. A sense of distance; 2. A knowledge of a way of access; 3. An ardent desire of communion in that way; 4. A humble hope of acceptance. III. The sources of his arguments. From—1. The character of God; 2. His promise; 3. His past kindness to ourselves; 4. The work of His Son. — G. Brooks.

Man's extremity — God's opportunity.— The church in New Park street was sadly reduced in numbers, and from the position of its meeting house there seemed no prospect before it but ultimate dissolution; but there were a few in its midst who never ceased to pray for a gracious revival. The congregation became smaller and smaller, but they hoped on, hoped ever. Let it never be forgotten that when they were at their worst the Lord remembered them, and gave to them such a tide of prosperity that they have had no mourning or doubting, but more than thirty years of continued rejoicing. — Spurgeon.

6, 7. (6) R. V., "Would He contend with me in the greatness of His power? Nay, but he would give heed unto me." i. e., would He crush me with His omnipotence. Nay, He would listen to my plea.[a] (7) There, the words run literally, then a righteous man would be pleading with Him, i. e., then it would appear that the man who pleads with Him (i. e. Job) is righteous."—Cam. Bib. delivered, acquitted at once, so clear is my case.[b]

The question of fear and the answer of faith (vs. 6).—I. The inquiry of fear. 1. A true penitent has a right idea of many of God's attributes; 2. He feels that every attribute of God is against him as a sinner. 3. He feels that the exercise of power against Him would be just. II. The reply of faith. 1. The faithful soul has a right view of God in all respects; 2. He does not tremble at the thought of God's power; he now sees it exercised in his behalf.— Spurgeon.

Power with God. — A stern father has been conquered by a tear in the eye of his daughter. An unwilling heart has relented and bestowed an alms at the sight of the disappointment caused by a refusal. Sorrow constrains to pity. When importunity takes the hand of grief, and the two go together to the gate of mercy, it opens of its own accord. Sincerity, earnestness, perseverance, confidence, and expectancy are all potent instruments of power with God. — Spurgeon. How often have I seen a little child throw its arms around its father's neck, and win, by kisses and importunities and tears, what had else been refused. Who has not yielded to importunity, even when a dumb animal looked up in our face with suppliant eyes for food? Is God less pitiful than we? — Guthrie.

a "Job appeals fr. their rash censure to the justice and omniscience of the Most High."—Wordsworth.

b "There is too much self-confidence in these assertions, as Job afterwards owns, ch. xl. 4, xlii. 6."—Wordsworth.

Humble we must be, if to heaven we go;
High is the roof there, but the gate is low.
—Herrick.

the invisible God observes our ways

8—10. (8) "God, everywhere present, everywhere eludes him: he feels His omnipotent power, but in vain seeks to see His face." forward, to the east.[c] not there, in such sense that Job could trace and apprehend His dealings. backward, to the west. (9) left hand, to the north. work, "God's glorious works are esp. seen in the N. region of the sky by one in the N. hemisphere." —Fausset. hideth himself,[d] in the unexplored South, "then regarded as uninhabitable through great heat." (10) the way, marg. that is with me; i. e. which I walk in;[e] all my experience and conduct in this affliction. as gold, from the refiner's fire.[f]

The upright man's vindication. — Intro. by refer. to trials of Job. Among the most painful were the suspicions of men. They thought him very sinful because he suffered so much. Job's faith did not fail. He knew the root of the matter was found in him. Earthly friends might blame: he thought of God. Job was sure that God knew His way. So is every Christian. I. What are his reasons for this belief? 1. God had permitted it: "good men's steps ordered;" 2. Although greatly tried, he had Divine comfort in his heart; 3. God knows and sees the whole way; 4. The promises are His, and God's faithfulness not dependent on his faith: "though we believe not," etc. II. What are the lessons he draws from all this belief? 1. Not to mind the ruggedness of the road; 2. The end — heaven — must be safely reached. Learn — (1) If you are good, prayerful, etc., and have trials, never fear: God knows. Let your thought be "Even so, Father;" (2) If you are still in the broad road, God knows the way: "Thou God seest me." He is willing to lead you out of the wrong way into the right, and save you.— Hive.

He knoweth. —

I know not the way I am going,
But well do I know my guide;
With a childlike trust I give my hand
To the mighty Friend at my side.

c In describing locality, the Hebrews always imagined themselves to be looking eastward, facing the rising sun. Hence the same word is used for "forwards," and "the east;" for "backwards" and "the west;" for "the left hand" and "the north;" for "the right hand" and "the south."

d Job xxxiv. 29; Is. xlv. 15.

e "Though I know not the way that He takes, yet He knows the way that I take."—Matt. Henry.

f Ps. xii. 6; Pr. xxvii. 21; Mal. iii. 3; Jer. i. 12.

The only thing that I say to Him
As He takes it is, "Hold it fast;
Suffer me not to lose my way,
But bring me home at last."

As when some helpless wanderer,
Alone in an unknown land,
Tells the guide his destined place of rest,
And leaves all else in his hand—

'Tis home, 'tis home that we wish to reach;
He who guides us may choose the way,
Little we heed the path we tread,
If nearer home each day.

"This is the first hint we have of any suspicion on Job's part that suffering, instead of being the punishment of sin, may be a discipline of righteousness." — Cox.

Job asserts his innocence

11, 12. (11) foot hath held,[a] kept to; followed faithfully. his way, the way of His will. not declined, turned aside.[b] (12) gone back, in wilful neglect, or disobedience. Job asserts sincerity, but not perfection. esteemed, lit. hid, laid up, R. V.,[c] "treasured up." necessary food, Heb. chók, a statute, or decree. "That which is appointed for me." Prob. meaning my own law,[d] the will of the natural man.

The course of the good man (vs. 12).—I. As to its direction, it is straight onward. He does not go back. Some turn aside. Job xviii. 7; Ps. cxxv. 5; Pr. iv. 18. Others cease to walk on. Heb. x. 38. II. As to its rule. The Word of God. Job's love of the Word of God. We regard these words—I. As an honor to Job. We know not what sacred records Job possessed. In respect to what he had he esteemed them more than his daily food. 1. His desire after them was more ardent; 2. His delight in them was more exquisite; 3. His refreshment from them was more abiding. II. As a reproach to us. 1. How much fuller a revelation of God's will do we possess? 2. How low is the esteem in which it is held by us? Application: Redeem, then the time which you have lost for the attainment of Divine knowledge. — C. Simeon.

God's word. — A poor Italian woman, a fruit-seller, had received the Word of God in her heart, and became persuaded of the truth of it. Seated at her modest stall at the head of a bridge, she made use of every moment in which she was unoccupied in her small traffic, in order to study the sacred volume. "What are you reading there, my good woman?" said a gentleman, one day, as he came up to the stall to purchase some fruit. "It is the Word of God," replied the fruit vendor. "The Word of God! Who told you that?" "He told me so Himself." "Have you ever spoken with Him, then?" The poor woman felt a little embarrassed, more especially as the gentleman insisted on her giving him some proof of what she believed. Unused to discussion, and feeling greatly at a loss for arguments, she at length exclaimed, looking upward, "Can you prove to me, sir, that there is a sun up in the sky?" "Prove it," he replied; "Why, the best proof is that it warms me, and that I can see its light." "So it is with me," she replied, joyously; "the proof of this Book's being the Word of God is that it warms and lights my soul." — Bertram's Hom. Ency. Obedience. — Nothing can be love to God wh. does not shape itself into obedience. We remember the anecdote of the Roman commander who forbade an engagement with the enemy, and the first transgressor against whose prohibition was his son. He accepted the challenge of the leader of the other host, met, slew, spoiled him, and then, in triumphant feeling, carried the spoils to his father's tents. But the Roman father refused to recognize the instinct which prompted this as deserving the name of love. Disobedience contradicted it and deserved death. — Robertson.

[a] "The feet of Easterns, not being covered with shoes in early childhood, are very tenacious of their hold." — Carey.

[b] Ps. xliv. 18; cxxv. 5; 1 Th. ii. 10.

[c] Ps. cxix. 11.

[d] Job's own natural desires, as contrasted with God's law. — Delitzsch.

Ro. vii. 23.

"The carpenter's gimlet makes but a small hole, but it enables him to drive a great nail. May we not here see a representation of those minor departures from the truth which prepare the minds of men for grievous errors, and of those thoughts of sin which open a way for the worst of crimes! Beware, then, of Satan's gimlet." — Spurgeon.

There may be "an ocean round our words which overflows and drowns them," the encircling influences of God, turning even our faultiest speech to good account, neutralizing all our falterings and blunderings, and silencing our follies and perversities.—Horton.

God's decree is immutable

13, 14. (13) in one, omit the inserted word mind. Unchangeable. "Or it may mean that God stands aloof, supreme by Himself, and will not admit me or any one else to debate with Him."— Wordsworth. soul desireth, altogether beyond man's understanding. (14) thing . . appointed, he will surely accomplish whatever he has decreed for me. This is the profound enigma to Job; but it is far from being a solitary one: many such things are with him, the instance is but one out of many similar ones that happen under God's rule of the world of mankind.

Benevolence of God in creation. — The benevolence of our great Creator is chanted even by things unpleasant to the ear. "The nuptial song of reptiles,"

"In the ocean we see the wisdom of God in providing such a purifying and preserving element in nature, and the goodness of God in providing such an article as salt for the healthful use of his creatures."—John Bate.

says Kirby, "is not, like that of birds, the delight of every heart; but it is rather calculated to disturb and horrify than to still the soul. The hiss of serpents, the croaking of frogs and toads, the moaning of turtles, the bellowing of crocodiles and alligators, form their gamut of discords." Here also, we may read beneficent design. Birds are the companions of man in the lawn and forest, in his solitary walks, amidst his rural labors, and around the home of his domestic enjoyments. They are, therefore, framed beautiful to the eye, and pleasing to the ear; but of the reptile tribes some are his formidable enemies, and none were ever intended to be his associates. They shun cultivation, and inhabit unfrequented marshes or gloomy wilds. Their harsh notes and ungainly or disgusting forms serve therefore to warn him of danger, or to turn his steps to places more fit for his habitation. — Duncan.

the thought of God's greatness inspires fear

15—17. (15) his presence,[a] manifestly with him, but so little understood. (16) maketh . . soft,[b] R. V., "hath made my heart faint." Weak, crushed; unnerves me; soft with fear and dismay. troubleth, fills me with terror. (17) darkness,[c] of these woes: see ch. iii. 10. "Job complains of two things: 1. That he was not cut off (i. e. removed from the earth) before the great darkness fell upon his life. 2. That he was not covered, i. e. sheltered and protected, by the love and care of God when the dark days came."—Rawlinson.

God's power over the heart (vs. 16). — I. As the God of nature. 1. Literally; 2. Figuratively. II. As the God of providence. 1. By pecuniary losses; 2. Bereavements; 3. Personal afflictions. III. As the God of grace. 1. The means employed to effect it; 2. Its various stages and degrees: sense of fear, of sorrow, of mercy, of love; 3. Its effects. IV. As the God of justice. — Delta.

God's mysterious leading. — Mammoth Cave is a labyrinth of winding paths, 200 miles in length, in different stories, one below another. On every side there are dangers and pitfalls, — here the Bottomless Pit, there the Maelstrom, here Scylla, and there Charybdis, there "the black hole," and the Dead Sea. The darkness is absolute; it can almost be felt. No one can find his way without a guide. If left behind it is not safe to move. A friend once got left behind, and was alone in the dark, and the 20 minutes seemed an eternity. Some of our party lingered behind, and then we heard them calling to us that they had lost their way. We could see their lights, and hear their voices, but they did not know their way to us. After we had gone some little distance into its depths, we came to a hall called the Methodist Ch. Here one of the guides mounted a high rock and called our attention to a short sermon he wished to preach. The sermon was "Keep close to your guide." And we soon found that the only safety was in giving careful heed to the guide's sermon. Jesus is our guide. He never leads us into bad places. Sometimes He guides in strange ways, but always the best ways in the end. — Peloubet.

a "God's decrees, imposs. to be resisted, and leaving us in the dark as to what may come next, are calculated to fill the mind with holy awe." — Barnes.

b Ps. xxii. 14.

c Ewald, etc., propose another rendering of this verse, "I am not reduced to silence by the darkness of my affliction, or by my own countenance. wh. darkness covereth, but it is God who is my adversary, and confounds me."

"Not more certain is it that it is something outside of the thermometer that produces a change in the thermometer, than that it is something outside the soul of man that produces a moral change upon him."—Drummond.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FOURTH.

the wicked conduct of some who profess to know God

1—4. (1) not hidden, R. V., "Why are times not laid up by the Almighty? And why do not they which know Him see his days?"[d] i. e. "Why are not stated seasons reserved by the Almighty for the punishment of the wicked?" (2) Some, of the wicked. Job gives instances of the wicked doing the worst deeds with seeming impunity. landmarks,[e] boundaries, often only large stones, marking off different pastures. feed thereof, R. V., "feed them." i. e. men appropriate the land and the flocks of others, and do this openly. (3) for a pledge, they distrain the ass of the orphan and the ox of the widow for debt. (4) the poor . . together, "seems to sum up the general effect of the preceding wrongs. The poor, violently dispossessed of their fields, are forced to hide themselves away from men, among whom they had formerly lived in respect, and huddle together in obscure haunts."—Cam. Bib.

The ass in the East (vs. 3). — How various and important are the services which this humble creature renders to his master! He serves him for riding, for bearing his burdens, drawing the plough, treading the grain into the flooded soil, turning the millstone: and to all these services the female adds the nutritious beverage of her milk. To the poor man, therefore, a single ass might prove an invaluable treasure. In many cases it was the principal d "'Days of the Lord invariably mean the occasions on wh. God manifests Himself in righteousness.''—Spk. Com.

Is. ii. 12; xiii. 6; Joel i. 15; Am. v. 18.

e De. xix. 14; xxvii 17; Pr. xxii. 28; xxiii. 10.

means of support to himself and his family; a circumstance which accounts for the energetic language respecting this animal in some passages of Scripture. To "drive away the ass of the fatherless," Job denounces as a deed of atrocity which none but a proud and unfeeling oppressor could be guilty of perpetrating. — Paxton.

5—8. wild asses,[a] onagri, difficult to break in; living free on the steppe, and in the desert; they resemble the poor who are driven from their homes by violence. rising, etc., R. V., "seeking diligently for me at," hard to find in the wilderness whither they have fled. yieldeth food, "the roots and herbage of the desert." (6) corn, R. V., "provender."[b] in the field, into the tilled land they make incursions. gather, glean. of the wicked, of their oppressors; not allowed to share in the vintage, they can only glean the refuse. (7) cause, etc., R. V., "They lie all night naked without clothing," etc.[c] Some think that these are all references to the Bedouins, robbers of the desert. But the context implies rather that they are the poor who are driven to this condition, without food or clothing, by their oppressors. (8) embrace, etc., take refuge under a projecting rock.

Poverty.— This is the first visible cause of the misery. The poor regard London as an Eldorado. It seems as though they must get some employment in the vast, busy city. So they pour into it in shoals. There individually they are lost sight of. The very multitude of them drowns their separate claims and appeals. A huge mass of poverty does not touch personal sympathies. It is a horror of misery, but it does not call for the aid that the distress of one person whose exact circumstances and history are known elicits. It leads to much overcrowding, which evil means more than wretchedness. It is a distinct cause of moral deterioration, a direct source of dark vices. Herded like beasts, is it wonderful that men live like beasts? The decencies of life are impossible. All the finer feelings are crushed by coarse surroundings. The gracious influences of silence and privacy are unknown. People are forced to live and move and have their being in the midst of a noisy mob. The certain result is a break-down of civilization, and a corrupt civilization is worse than barbarism. The savagery of city slums is of a more degraded type than that of African forests.— Pulp. Com.

they are wilful as wild asses

[a] Comp. Job xxx. 5-7. Also this sentence taken fr. Ecclus. xiii. 19. "As the wild ass is the lions' prey, so the rich eat up the poor."

[b] "Mixed provender, made up of various kinds of grain, as of barley, vetches, etc., prepared for cattle."— Barnes.

[c] "All Bedouins sleep naked at night: when asked why they do this, since at night they are often attacked by enemies, they answer, that it is an old custom. Many perish in cold seasons."— Wetzstein.

9—12. (9) They, reverting to the violent man and usurer, whose wickedness seems unrecognized (vs. 4). pluck, etc., seize the very infants to sell, or make slaves of.[d] a pledge, everything he has for a pledge, or himself;[e] the next vs. indicates that special reference is to the poor man's garment. (10) They cause, etc., R. V., "So that they go about naked without clothing, and being an-hungred they carry the sheaves."[f] (11) suffer thirst, while making abundance of oil and wine for their oppressors. (12) groan, under this violent and wicked treatment. city, R. V., "the populous city," i. e. not only in the country but in the large city is this oppression. It is everywhere. folly, or wickedness. God seems to take no notice of the wrong.

Gospel blessings do not always enrich.— The church is criticised and by many in these days condemned as worthless because it is not banishing poverty. Perhaps it might be more in the way of duty and more likely to succeed if it sought to banish excessive wealth. Are we of the twentieth Christian century to hold still by the error of Eliphaz and the rest of Job's friends? Are we to imagine that those whom the gospel blesses it must of necessity enrich, so that in their turn they may be tempted to act the Pharisee? Let us be sure God knows how to govern His world. Let us not doubt His justice because many are very poor who have been guilty of no crimes and many very rich who have been distinguished by no virtues. It is our mistake to think that all would be well if no bitter cries were heard in the midnight streets and every one were secured against penury. While the church is partly to blame for the state of things, the salvation of society will not be found in any earthly socialism. On that side lies a slough as deep as the other from which it professes to save. The large Divine justice and humanity which the world needs are those which Christ alone has taught, Christ to whom property was only something to deal with on the way to spiritual good,— humility, holiness, love and faith.— Exp. Bib.

they oppress the orphan and the poor with impunity

[d] "These vss. describe the miseries of another class, those who have allowed themselves to be subjected, and become serfs and bondmen attached to the estates of the rich."— Cam. Bib.

[e] Le. xxv. 39, 40.

[f] "Their masters deny them what according to De. xxv. 4, should not be withheld even from the beasts."— Delitzsch.

13—15. (13) rebel,[g] etc., a yet more wicked class, whose wrong-doing seems to go unpunished. Such as wilfully ignore God's claims, and oppose such men love the darkness rather than the light

[g] Pr. iv. 19; Jno. iii. 19, 20; Ja. iv. 17.

"He that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts, benighted walks under the mid-day sun; himself is his own dungeon." — Milton.

"Truth is as impossible to be soiled by any outward touch as the sunbeam." — Milton.

"God loveth the cheerful giver,
Though the gift be poor or small
What doth he think of his children
When they never give at all?"

themselves to His will. (14) with the light, i. e. at early dawn, while still dark; the time when travelers set out, and the poor man goes to his work. (15) twilight, deep gloom of eventide. disguiseth, by covering it with a thick veil.

Rebelling against the light. — Off the coast of New Zealand, a captain lost his vessel by steering in the face of the warning light, till he dashed upon the rock immediately beneath the lighthouse. He said that he was asleep; but this did not restore the wreck, nor save him from condemnation. It is a terrible thing for rays of gospel light to guide a man to his doom. Sins of ignorance are truly sins, for every lawgiver takes it for granted that his subjects seek to know his laws. But the deliberate commission of known trespass, and the wilful neglect of known duty, have in them elements of great disloyalty. He who knew his Lord's will and did it not was beaten with many stripes. If a man puts his hand into the fire knowing that it burns, no one will pity him; if he wantonly enters a pesthouse, no one can wonder that he is smitten with disease. When the ice is marked "Dangerous," the warning should be sufficient for any reasonable man, and when the notice is repeated at every corner, and set up in great capital letters, he who ventures on the rotten ice will be not only a fool, but a suicide, should he perish in his rashness. — Spurgeon.

the light of day fills the violent with fear

16, 17. (16) dig through, this could be done bec. the house walls are made of clay or rubble.[a] marked,[b] etc., R. V., "They shut themselves up in the daytime," doing their evil deeds at night. (17) as the shadow, because of thier fear of being discovered.[c] know, etc., R. V., "For they know the terror of the shadow of death," i. e. midnight is familiar to them. Only the day they dread.

Housebreaking in India. — Early one morning I heard that there had been a robbery in the Indian village where I had slept. I went to the house to inquire about it, expecting to see a picked lock or broken shutter; but instead of this, I saw a hole which had been dug through the wall of the house, which strikingly reminded me of the expression in the above passage. I suppose that every Sunday-school child knows that bricks are made of clay, and in this country are burnt with fire; but in very hot countries they are often made of common earth, not clay, and dried by the sun. This is done to save expense. I built a house with bricks of this kind, and lived in it for several years. Such a house does very well when the roof is tight, and no water is allowed to get to the walls, which are easily destroyed if allowed to get wet. The thieves know that very well, and so, when they determine to break into a house of that kind, they just soften part of the wall with water, and then, with any piece of stick, they can dig a hole through large enough to get in, and so quietly as not to disturb the sleepers. — Journal of a Missionary.

"In the East, nearly all the houses are made of unburnt brick, and there is little difficulty in making a hole in the wall large enough to admit the human body." — Barnes.

b The word used means to seal, to seal up, hence the idea of shutting up, of making fast.

c Je. ii. 26.

the wicked shall pass away and be forgotten

18—20. (18) swift, etc., R. V., "He is swift upon the face of the waters,"[d] i. e. he disappears like a bubble on the stream without sign of judicial sentence. their portion, that of his descendants; but this does not hurt him who is peacefully in the grave. cursed . . he beholdeth not, his place knows him no more. He feels nothing of it. (19) snow waters, wh. are quickly licked up by burning heat; they just fade away.[e] the grave, Sheol, like a burning sun. (20) womb, fig. for his mother. broken as a tree, fig. of sudden death; tree struck by lightning, or broken by wind.[f]

Note on vs. 19. — Literally, "ransack or plunder them." The reference is to those dykes, tanks, or reservoirs of water, which, in Eastern countries, are always carefully filled during the periodical exudations of the large rivers as the Nile, Indus, and Ganges, and preserved to fertilize the soil by occasional irrigations through the rest of the year, and without which there can be no harvest. So Isa. xxxvi. 16. These exudations were uniformly ascribed, and with great reason, to heavy periodical rains, and sudden thawings of the immense masses of snow deposited in the colder months on the summits of the loftier mountains, and especially of that vast and winding chain of rocks which, under the name of Caucasus and Imaus, runs, in almost every direction from the eastern verge of Europe, to the southern extremity of India. The two physical evils here adverted to, therefore, are among the severest scourges ever inflicted upon man — the failure of the vintage and of the harvest. — Good.

d Some think Job here ironically takes up the language of the friends; but it is better to keep the idea running through Job's speech, that the wicked live and die peacefully, without evidently coming under Divine judgments. Job ix. 23; Ho. x. 7.

e "Melted snow, as contrasted with the living fountain, quickly dries up in the sunburnt sand, not leaving a trace behind." — Barnes.

f Pr. x. 7; Ecc. viii. 10; Is. xxvi. 14.

21—23. (21) He evil, etc., a review of the most painful feature of the oppressor's life. Or a further description of the violent man of high rank.[a] (22) draweth, etc., he draws to his side and makes his helpers. sure of life, lit. when he no longer believed in life; i. e. despaired of it; though he was on the brink of the grave. (23) R. V., "God giveth them to be in security, and they rest thereon, and his eyes are upon their ways." him, the oppressor. his eyes, the eyes of God.[b]

Homiletic hints (vss. 21–24). —I. Injury done to a fellow-creature; sin marked by God; that sin aggravated when the injury is done to one already in any way afflicted. II. A sin in the sight of God, not only to injure the afflicted and the destitute, but even to withhold our sympathy and aid. III. A high aggravation of sin when we not only do wrong ourselves, but endeavor by our influence to draw others into the same practice. IV. An aggravated sin to abuse God's goodness and forbearance to the practice of evil. V. Sin, though passed over for the present, yet marked for future visitation. VI. The power and pride of the ungodly but of short continuance. VII. Sinners often cut off when their prosperity has reached its highest pitch, like the tops of the ears of corn. VIII. Men spared to ripen either for mercy or judgment. — Robinson.

he omits to do good even to the widow a "Instead of doing justice to the defenceless, he scoffs at their entreaties; his one object is to raise men of might to power, to surround himself with strong and unscrupulous partisans."—Spk. Com.

b Ps. x. 14; Je. xvi. 17, xxxii. 19; Re. ii. 1, 2.

24, 25. (24) but are gone, R. V., "They are exalted; yet a little while and they are gone; yea, they are brought low," etc., i. e. right from their exalted positions the wicked pass away without suffering any special calamities. as all other,[c] like all mankind. as the tops, the natural end of the harvest field is to have the ears cut off and gathered in: so the death of the wicked is not premature or violent, but orderly and natural. (25) liar, in sense of giving a false description of the life, the lot, and the death of the wicked.

Lying. —As I am writing I take up a notice of a book on Persia, and read the author's views of Persian lying. "With one gift only can they be credited on a truly heroic scale. . . . I allude to their faculty for what a Puritan might call mendacious, but what I prefer to style imaginative utterance. This is inconceivable and enormous, . . . and it divests nine-tenths of a Persian's assurance of the smallest value." "I am convinced that a true son of Iran would sooner lie than tell the truth, and that he feels twinges of desperate remorse when, upon occasions, he has thoughtlessly strayed into veracity."— Geo. N. Curzon.

Job challenges a refutation of his words

c "Gathered up and carried off; tied together like a sheaf, and carried away."—Wordsworth.

Truth.—

> "But if a word could save me, and that word
> Were not the Truth: nay, if it did but swerve > A hair's breadth from the truth, I would not say it."
>
> — Longfellow.

"The truth cannot be burned, beheaded or crucified. A lie on the throne is a lie still, and truth in a dungeon is truth still; and the lie on the throne is on the way to defeat, and the truth in the dungeon is on the way to victory."— McKinley

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIFTH.

1—3. (1) Bildad,[d] utters a protest against the spirit of his adversary and in behalf of reverential thought concerning God. (2) Dominion and fear, power and terror, or terror inspiring power. high places,[e] heaven. He who makes peace in heaven by His power, surely will not permit man to contend with Him. (3) armies, those who wait to do His will. Applies to all Div. agencies. God can punish the wicked. Fig. is taken from the stars, which shine in the light of the sun.[f]

Bildad's Reply

man cannot be justified before God

d God is omnipotent. Man is naturally unclean."—Spk. Com e Eph. i. 20, 21.

f Is. xl. 26; Je. xxxi. 35; Mat. xxvi. 53.

The light.—Light is mysterious in nature, ineffably bright and glorious, everywhere present, swift-winged, undefiled, and undefilable. Light is the source of life, of beauty, of manifested reality, of warmth, comfort, and joy, of health, and of power. It destroys all darkness; it unites in itself purity and clearness. Without it the world would be but a mass of coldness and death. Now, what light does for the natural world, Jesus does for the world of men, for mind, soul, and spirit. He reveals God, and heaven, and truth; He shows the way; He cheers, comforts, vivifies, renews.— Peloubet. Light of revelation. — Did you ever see that electrical experiment which consists in passing a flash through letters of gold-leaf in a darkened room, whereupon some name or legend springs out of the darkness in characters of fire? There are songs all written out in my soul, which I could read, if the flash might pass through them, but the fire must come down from heaven.— Holmes.

As the mother takes the newborn babe, that can do nothing but cry, and folds it in her bosom, there to find its food, its warmth, its raiment, its everything; so God takes needy souls that can only cry out, "God be merciful to me a sinner," and wraps them up, not in official arms, but in the bosom of His love, there to find their food, raiment, their all.

Light.—

O diviner Light
Through the cloud that roofs our noon with night,
Through the blotting mist, the blinding showers,
Far from out a sky forever bright
Over all the woodland's flooded bowers,
Over all the meadows drowning flowers,
Over all this ruined world of ours, Break, diviner Light! — Tennyson.

all are impure in the sight of God a Job iv. 17, 18; xv. 14, 16.

b "There is a vast distance between God and His highest and most glorious creatures — how much more between Him and man, the worm of the dust!" — Delitzsch.

c Ps. xxii. 6; Is. xli. 14.

"God is a spirit as man is a spirit. There is no difference as to what may be termed the popular characters of spirit, between the spirit of man, and God, considered as a spirit; for God made man in His own image But there is one great and radical difference. Human and angelic spirits are finite; God, whom we worship, is Infinite." — R. Watson.

"When a person considers that he is growing little in the sight of the Lord, in reality he is finding the true grace and goodness of the God of mankind." — D. L. Moody.

Job's answer

he reproves Bildad's want of charity

d "Job intimates that he can go beyond them in the glorification of God. He extends his views to the future and unseen" — Wordsworth.

e Job iv. 17–19; xv. 14–16.

4—6. (4) can man, etc., this is only the repetition of truth dwelt on before.[a] Bildad has nothing fresh to say. clean, maintain a moral character faultless, and therefore absolutely free from condemnation. (5) R. V., "Behold even the moon hath no brightness." shineth not, with absolute perfection in God's sight.[b] (6) worm, ch. vii. 5.[c]

Note on vs. 6. — This brief ode has a certain dignity raising it above the level of Bildad's previous utterances. He desires to show that Job has been too bold in his criticism of providence. God has sole dominion and claims universal adoration. Where He dwells in the lofty place of unapproachable glory His presence and rule create peace. He is the Lord of innumerable armies (the stars and their inhabitants perhaps), and His light fills the breadth of interminable space, revealing and illuminating every life. Upon this assertion of the majesty of God is based the idea of His holiness. Before so great and glorious a Being how can man be righteous? — Watson.

God's holiness. — We must put God to the front, and then remember that the standard of holiness wh. we are to attain must never be lowered to meet the necessity of man's circumstances, but must remain the same, the absolutely true and perfect standard of God Himself. If God were ever to lower His standard to meet my requirements there could never be satisfaction thro' eternity for us creatures, because we hope to rise higher, to be nearer and nearer to God. If I found that God had lowered His standard of holiness to meet my ideas down here in my imperfection, how could I reverence him as the absolute and all-perfect One? — H. W. Webb Peploe. The incomparable holiness of God. — This is a thought that cannot be described in human language. When conscience is aroused, some thrill of the awe of it may open our minds to its sublime meaning. We start from the conception of the absolute sinlessness of God. Not a spot of evil can be found on all He is or does. But holiness is more than negative freedom from sin. It is a real excellence, and on its positive side it expands into infinity. We do not know how far goodness may go. It is like light. No one can conceive how intense this may be; after a short time it becomes too brilliant for our eyes, and we are only blinded when we look at it; but it is conceivable that its intensity may be increased a thousandfold beyond the highest degree that we are capable of perceiving. There may be a brilliancy of light compared with which the glare of a tropical noon is as dull and gloomy as an English November. So there may be a holiness which in its positive character rises above all we can conceive or imagine of goodness into infinite regions of perfection. We can see no limit to the strength and depth of love. Human love may be strong as death. Yet compared to God's love it is but as a feeble, flickering flame lost in the full sunlight. No one can conceive how full and rich God's love is. All the attributes of the Divine holiness expand into infinity. Their greatness is immeasurable and inconceivable. — Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SIXTH.

1—4. Job pours out the vials of his sarcasm on Bildad's statements. He knows God's greatness not less than Bildad; the dispute, moreover was not concerning the greatness of God, but concerning His justice. — Cam. Bib. (2) without power, they had sought to make Job feel his weakness, but they had not helped him in it. (3) counselled, since they had assumed to be his teachers. thing as it is, R. V., "sound knowledge," what sound knowledge concerning my case have you shown?[d] (4) To whom . . words, for whom is your instruction intended? evidently not for me! spirit, or breath. Intimating that Bildad had only repeated the sentiments of Eliphaz;[e] not his own, and not inspired by God.

Sympathy. — With the words of inspiriting brotherly love the truly afflicted one has borne the heaviest calamity and remained calm under the severest trials. Pain has lost its power in presence of sympathy. To lay the aching head upon the shoulder of a strong friend gives might to the weak. The truest succor for the wounded is tender sympathy, whether the wounds pierce the flesh or the spirit. But sympathy knows nothing of severity or harsh accusation. It hides offense and soothes the self-accused spirit until it has gained strength to bear the weight of condemnation. But no sign of this is present in the words of Job's friends; no sympathy is expressed by cruel reproof: "How hast thou helped him that is without power?" — Pul. Com.

admits the power of God to be unsearchable

5—8. (5) R. V., "They that are deceased tremble beneath the waters and the inhabitants thereof." Dead, etc., Job gives a description of God's rule, tracing it through every department of creation, so showing that he is not wanting either in a recognition or reverence of God the Almighty Ruler." — Delitzsch. Not dead things, but the dead. under the waters, Sheol being conceived as under the ocean. Yet God's power reaches them. (6) Hell, Ge. xxxvii. 35. naked, i. e. fully revealed. destruction, R.V., "Abaddon."[a] The abode of the dead who subsist but do not live. This dark and dreary abode is naked to the eyes of Jehovah. (7) north,[b] northern part of the heavens.[c] (8) not rent, without the clouds being rent.[d]

Notes on vs. 6. — God at any time can tell thee what plots are hatching there against thee. Consider Satan as he is God's creature, so God cannot but know him. He that makes the watch cannot but know every pin in it. He formed this crooked serpent, though not the crookedness of this serpent; and though Satan's way in tempting be as wonderful as the way of a serpent upon a rock, yet God traceth him, yea, knows all his thoughts together. "Hell itself is naked before Him," and the destroyer hath no covering. — Gurnall. These words may admonish us to labor for humility, to think basely of ourselves, and to be lowly in our own eyes, and so shall we be more acceptable to God. Our Saviour Christ hath ever been lovingly affected towards those that were of a humble mind. When the good centurion had such a base conceit of himself that he thought not himself worthy that Christ should come under his roof, oh! how highly our Saviour commendeth him! The deeper the well is, the sweeter the water; so the more humble any man is in his own conceit, the more acceptable he is to God. And as the sun, the higher he is in the firmament, the shorter shadows he maketh, so virtue and grace, the higher and more eminent it is, the less ostentation it maketh. — C. Richardson.

a Re. ix. 11.

b Some think the highest part of the earth is meant. — So Ewald.

Is. xl. 22.

c Ps. xxiv. 1, 2.

d Pr. xxx. 4; Ps. cxxxv. 7; Je. x. 13.

The doorstep to wisdom is a knowledge of our own ignorance. — Spurgeon.

Leigh Richmond's dying message to his son: "Tell him, his father learnt his most valuable lessons for the ministry, and his most useful experience, in the poor man's cottage."

he gives instances of that power

9—11. (9) holdeth back, R. V., "closeth in,"[e] (Ps. xviii. 11). (10) day . . end, R.V.. "He hath described a boundary upon the face of the waters, unto the confines of light and darkness."[f] (11) pillars of heaven, mountains, poetically are so called.[g] reproof, such the poet regards the tempest as being.[h]

Ancient cosmical theories. — Although it was left for later times and the perfection of scientific calculation to prove this statement, yet ages prior to Thales the Chaldean, or Ptolemy the Alexandrian, this fact was as above declared by revelation to the patriarch Job. The cosmical theory of ancient astronomers generally was that the earth had a discoid form, and either floated upon the ocean or was upheld by a definite support. A similar belief, with a little variation in the arrangement of the animals, was also entertained by the Buddhists of Japan and China. Traces of the myth exist in the Talmud, and its descendant the Koran. The Scandinavian Sagas repeated and modified still the same idea. Despite these opinions there yet exist indications that when once the actual condition of the Cosmos was revealed it became a scientific fact too wonderful to be wholly obscured or lost sight of; and hence it is that, like the sudden flashes of sunlight during an eclipse, here and there, among the traditions of all the ancient mythologies, glimpses of physical truth shine forth amidst metaphysical absurdities by which they are enclouded. — W. R. C. God's goodness in nature and grace. — We learn from what God does in nature, what He is doing in grace. The natural world is a great feast. It contains blessings, enjoyments, powers freely offered to all men beyond their highest dreams. All that has been given to this generation, in their highest civilization, in steam, lights, electricity, knowledge, music, art, literature has been freely offered to all ages; all these but show how many greater and better things God has waiting for us, to wh. all that has yet been received is but as the spray to the ocean, a handful of wheat to a broad harvest field.

e "Like a mighty monarch God withdraws His throne into a deep recess; and a curtain of mysterious darkness hangs before it."—Wordsworth.

Ex. xx. 21, xxxiii. 20-23; Ps. xcvii. 2.

f "He hath drawn a circular boundary upon the waters with exact proportion of light and darkness."—Robinson.

See Ge. i 1-10.

g Na. i. 5; Hab. iii. 10.

h "To the poet's ear the prolonged echoes of the thunder are the voices of the mountains expressing their consternation at the rebuke of God."—Spk. Com.

12–14. (12) divideth,[a] R. V., "stirreth up," proud, R. V., "Rahab," comp. ix. 13. "The power of evil represented by the monsters of the deep, huge saurian forms destroyed in some age of cosmic convulsions." (13) spirit, breath, putting forth of His power. garnished, etc., with blue, with cloud, with stars. Reference here, however, is to calm, succeeding storm. crooked serpent, a northern constellation was known as Draco, the dragon.[b] (14) parts, R. V., "Lo, these are but the outskirts of his ways: and how small a whisper do we hear of Him!" i. e. if what is seen and heard of God in natural phenomena is but the very infinitesimal part of His power, who is able to understand the full unfolding.

The depths of God's ways (vs. 14).— Proofs of the doctrine that God's ways are deep. In — 1 Works of nature; 2. Conduct of providence; 3. Mysteries of religion; 4. Dealings with the church. II. Reasons why so small a part of His ways are revealed. 1. His sovereignty and our dependence; 2. Disproportion between His knowledge and ours; 3. Prejudices which obscure our sight; 4. We walk by faith; 5. Contrast between present and future economy. Application: — (1) Ignorance should inspire reverence; (2) We should be cautious in judging of God's works; (3) We should acquiesce in the mysteries of revelation. — Henri Chatelaine.

Silent progress of nature. — God showed Elijah his method of progress by silent, invisible, but mighty forces, not easily measured (1 Kings xix. 11, 12). "It used to be thought that the upheaval of the continents and the rearing of the great mountains was due to cataclysms, and conflagrations, and vast explosions of volcanic force," but geologists now believe that while earthquakes and storms have done their work, the changes in the earth's surface, the lofty mountains, the movements of continents, are wrought largely by forces that work almost imperceptibly. The coral insects have slowly built up great islands and enlarged continents. The air does infinitely more for the world than tornadoes and whirlwinds. Electricity is a vastly greater power than lightning. — Peloubet.

and these are only parts of God's ways a "By His power He scourgeth the sea. By His wisdom He bindeth up its pride."—Herder.

"By His power the sea suddenly becomes tempestuous."—Luther.

b "The Zodiac, with its twelve signs or constellations, was anciently represented as a serpent with its tail in its mouth."—Robinson.

"Were I fully able to describe God," says 'Epictetus,' "I should be God myself, or God must cease to be what He is."

The bread of life is love; the salt of life is work; the sweetness of life, poetry, the water of life, faith. — Anon.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SEVENTH.

Job's protestation of sincerity

1–4. "The third speaker, Zophar, fails to come forward and Job, after a pause, resumes his discourse." — Cam. Bib. (1) parable,[c] poetic discourse, in wh. truth is concisely and figuratively expressed. (2) As God liveth, "this oath is the first we hear from Job, and appropriately introduces the most rich and elevated movement of this high strain." — Cox. judgment, R. V., "right," hath denied me justice. vexed, Heb. made my soul bitter;[d] sorely saddened me. (3) All the while, etc., R. V., "(For my life is yet whole in me, and . . . nostrils.)" the vs. is parenthetical, intended to emphasize what follows. (3) spirit of God, breath of God, as Ge. ii. 7; he is in possession of all his powers. (4) wickedness, which a mere feigned utterance of penitence would be. Job would honor God by integrity.[f]

Sincerity. — All the inducements that may be brought to urge a person to insincerity are just temptations to sin. They are attacks upon the conscience. To yield to them is a sign of weakness. The important point is that insincerity is always wrong, even when it is in the direction of self-humiliation. There may be a hypocritical penitence as well as a hypocritical pride. We cannot be too deeply humble; when the thought of our sin dawns upon us we cannot grieve over the guilt and shame of it too intensely. But if we do not feel this profound penitence it is nothing but falsehood and empty pretense to make a confession of it with our lips. For the language of penitence to exceed the feeling of it is not a mark of real humility. Any insincerity is injurious to the conscience and wrong in the sight of God, and the fact that it tends to self-depreciation rather than to self-exaltation does not alter its essential character. — Pul. Com.

c "Applied in E. to a figurative sententious embodiment of wisdom in poetic form." — Fausset.

d Ru i. 20.

e "In falsely, and contrary to my conscience, admitting myself to have been a secret and guilty transgressor."— Robinson.

f Ps. xxv. 21.

"Sincerity of purpose endeavors to see things as they are, and rejoices to find them better than suspicion feared or calumny denounced."— Drummond.

asserts that he will hold fast his integrity

5, 6. (5) justify you, by admitting that your assumptions are correct. integrity, I will not deny my blamelessness.[g] (6) righteousness, innocence of the charges you make.

Self-reproach. — Let us consider. — I. The proper office of conscience. It is twofold. 1. To judge of what is past; 2. To direct what is to come. II. Our duty in respect to it. 1. To consult its record; 2. To venerate its testimony; 3. To obey its dictates; 4. To get it enlightened and rectified. Then — (1)

g Ac. xxiv. 16; 1 Jno. iii. 21.

Guard against a guilty conscience; (2) A partial and deluded conscience; (3) An over-confident and unfeeling conscience. — Bonar.

Duty of resoluteness. — No one can be neglectful of this without doing great wrong to himself. To stand firm, entrenched by a strong will, guards the soul from the delusions that are rife enough; but that the will may be well supported, it is needful to encourage the spirit of resolute, unyielding determination. Then, with a high sense of the preciousness of conscious integrity, and with a mind adjusted to an attitude of purposed resistance against whatever would threaten to impair that integrity, the faithful one holds fast to his possession, and gains, in addition to his own quiet approval, that of all observers, and above all, that of the great Judge of human conduct. In this Job succeeds, and becomes a pattern to all tempted ones. From the depth of his acute and prolonged suffering arises the cry of holy resolve: "Till I die will I not remove my integrity from me." So that from his inmost heart cometh no reproach upon his days. — Pul. Com. — Conscience.— Man's conscience, like a ship's compass, should be corrected according to a divine standard. It must be set right by comparison with the true standard of the Sun of Righteousness, rated frequently by the Bible record, and guarded watchfully, lest by careless usage its accuracy be lost, and the soul in mid-ocean be without a guide. Unless you know how much your conscience chronometer slows or quickens in the various latitudes where you sail, you will never be able to learn your bearing accurately or to lay your course correctly.— Henry Clay Trumbull.

"Religion cannot pass away. Be not disturbed by infidelity. Religion cannot pass away. The burning of a little straw may hide the stars, but the stars are there and will reappear." —Thomas Carlyle.

"Truth and reason are common to every one, and are no more his who spake them first, than his who spake them after." —Montaigne.

7—10. (7) be . . wicked, "he who opposes my asseveration of innocence must be regarded as actuated by criminal hostility."—Fausset. It is not Job but his enemies and gainsayers who are wicked. (8) hypocrite, R. V., "godless," Job viii. 13. God taketh away,[a] "when God shall unsheath his soul?"— Cox. (9) his cry,[b] that of the godless one who must be an offense to the holy God. (10) Will he, etc., Job implies that he was himself no godless one.

the hope of the hypocrite is vain

Gain and loss for eternity.— The word hypocrite here means properly the ungodly. He loses such things as the following: — I. His soul. II. Heaven. III. Christ. This loss is great — (1) Because of what Christ is in Himself; (2) Of what He has done on the cross; (3) Of His love; (4) Of His sympathy, fellowship, and consolation; (5) Of His reward.— H. Bonar.

Neglecting God. — King Henry the Fourth asked the Duke of Alva if he had observed the great eclipse of the sun wh. had lately happened. "No," said the Duke, "I have so much to do on earth, that I have no leisure to look up to heaven." It is sad to think how hearts and time are so taken up with earthly things that they have no leisure to look after Christ and the things that belong to their everlasting peace.— Thomas Brooks.—Hopelessness of the wicked.— A dying nobleman exclaimed, "Good God, how have I employed myself! In what delirium has my life been passed! What have I been doing while the sun in its race, and the stars in their courses, have lent their beams, perhaps only to light me to perdition! I have pursued shadows, and entertained myself with dreams. I have been treasuring up dust, and sporting myself with the wind. I might have grazed with the beasts of the field, or sung with the birds of the woods, to much better purpose than any for which I have lived." — Anon.

a "One of the strongest passages to prove Job's instinctive and ineradicable faith in the immortality of the living principle."—Spk. Com.

b Pr. xxviii. 9; Je. xi. 11; xiv. 12; Eze. viii. 18; Zec. vii. 13; Ja. iv. 3.

"How shocking must thy summons be, O death,
To him who is at ease in his possession!
Who, counting on long years of pleasure here,
Is quite unfurnish'd for that world to come."

11—13. (11) by, R. V., "concerning" the hand or handiwork of God. Job proposes to state his belief concerning the Div. dispensation.[c] that . . conceal, i. e. "God's actual treatment of the wicked man, apart from all limitation." (12) have seen it, Job recognizes much of truth in what the friends had said, and some of the same things he repeats. altogether vain, in making so unworthy application of your arguments. "Why do ye cherish foolish notions?" — Delitzsch. (13) vss. 13–23 "contain Job's formal and final statement of the doom and heritage of the wicked man." — Cox This, which he is about to detail, Job goes on to say, granting it is all true, you ought not to make of it an argument to criminate me.— Barnes.

he proposes to teach the work of God

The speculative difficulties of an inquiring intellect solved by the heart of practical piety (vss. 12–28). — I. Every inquiring intellect has difficulties which it is anxious to remove. II. The principle which removes those difficulties can neither be purchased by wealth, nor attained by investigation. III. The heart of practical piety yields a satisfactory solution of all painful intellectual difficulties. 1. This is asserted by one who understands what c "This prepares us for a modification of statements wh. had been wrung fr. him, when his words flowed over fr. a spirit drunk with the poison of God's arrows. See ch. vi. 4."—Spk. Com.

"He who is not a missionary Christian will be a missing Christian when the great day comes for bestowing the rewards of service." —A. J. Gordon.

"I had rather be fully understood by ten than admired by ten thousand."—J. Edwards.

"Aim at pricking the heart, not at stroking the skin." —Jerome.

wisdom is; 2. It is proved by the nature of the case. Piety, then, is the "wisdom" — the solvent principle. — Thomas.

Blessedness of teaching. — Jesus is called "the Teacher," a blessed name. He loved to teach. It is a great blessing to be a teacher. Of few things is it more true that "it is more blessed to give than receive." The teacher learns more accurately, deeply, harmoniously, completely, by his teaching. He has new motives for learning and for obeying the truth. He has the life and inspiration which comes from living contact with other souls. He has the blessing of doing good. If people realized the greatness of the privilege of teaching, then "seven women would lay hold on one man," — the superintendent, — and ask for the opportunity to teach. Men would go to the highways and hedges to obtain a class. They would do as Dr. Payson says that ministers would do, — shout for joy, exclaiming, "I, too, am a teacher!" The ideal school is not one of few teachers and large classes, but of many teachers for the sake of the training of the church. — Anon.

he declares the portion of the wicked

a His survivors shall be buried by the pestilence."—Delitzsch.

b Ps. lxxviii. 64; Je. xxii. 18.

c Is. xxiii. 18.

"Moments seize; Heaven's on their wing; a moment we may wish, When worlds want wealth to buy." —Young.

14—17. (14) for the sword, they are slain in war. with bread, or they die in famine. (15) in death, i. e. of pestilence,[a] comp. Jer. xv. 2; xviii. 21. not weep, not buried with customary lamentations and funeral rites. For in pestilence these are omitted.[b] (16) he, the ungodly man. as the clay, in such abundance that it shall be common as clay. In raiment the wealth of the ancients greatly consisted.[c] (17) the just, bec. in righteousness is stability and continuance. As we say, in the long run, goodness pays.

Treasures of raiment (vs. 16). — According to D'Herbelot, Bokteri, an illustrious poet of Cufah, in the ninth century, had so many presents made him in the course of his life, that when he died he was found possessed of a hundred complete suits of clothes, two hundred shirts, and five hundred turbans. This anecdote proves how frequently presents of this kind are made to persons of consideration in the Levant; and at the same time furnishes a beautiful illustration of that passage in the Book of Job where the afflicted patriarch describes the treasures of the East, in his time, as consisting of clothes and money: "Though he heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay; he may prepare it, but the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver." — Paxton.

the terror of the wicked, though rich

d Is. i. 8.

"The house of the ungodly man, though a palace, is as brittle and perishable a thing, and can be as easily destroyed, as the fine spinning of a moth, or even the small case wh. it makes fr. remnants of gnawed articles, and drags about with it."—Delitzsch.

18—21. (18) as a moth, Job iv. 19, "the symbol of fragility, weakness and decay." booth, hastily put up as a temporary shelter fr. the sun. Always a very fragile construction.[d] (19) lie down, R. V., "He lieth down rich;" i. e. to sleep. not be gathered, "He shall have no funeral solemnities, but shall be carried away by a sudden destruction."— Davidson. openeth . . not, surprised by murderers, he only awakes to die. (20) take hold on, R. V., "overtake him." as waters, like a suddenly loosened flood. (21) east wind, the most vehement and destructive in Eastern countries. his place, where he made sure long to remain.

Terror of the ungodly. — Volney, a French infidel, was on board a vessel during a violent storm at sea, when the ship was in imminent danger of being lost; he threw himself on the deck crying in agony, "O, my God! my God!" "There is a God, then, Monsieur Volney?" said one of the passengers to him. "O, yes," exclaimed the terrified infidel, "there is, there is! God save me." The ship, however, got safely into port. Volney was extremely disconcerted when his confession was publicly related; but excused it by saying he was so frightened by the storm that he did not know what he said, and immediately returned to his atheistical sentiments. — Selected.

men shall treat him with scorn

"God makes of us the best that is possible: if we will not help others to be good, by our example, He will compel us to help them by being a warning."

"There is a dark and also a bright side to every pro-

22, 23. (22) cast, His thunderbolts of wrath. his hand, God's hand. "Before His hand he fleeth hither and thither." (23) clap their hands, in abhorrence of his character and joy at his fall. hiss, as at an object of execration. In all of these verses Job "meets the accusations of his friends, not by denying the truth of their descriptions but by showing that they are not true of him. He draws the lot of the wicked in more terrible hues than theirs, and defies them to trace the resemblance to his own fate. His children had not been destroyed by sword, famine and pestilence, but by the immediate hand of God. His wealth had not been transferred to the righteous. He had not been surprised out of life by flood or whirlwind, and, above all, instead of fleeing from God he had fled to God." — Cox.

The east wind is gendered on the dreary steppes of Russia. Arid plains suck out of it all its exhilarating properties. Cold regions lend it cruel barbs of ice. Even in beautiful, smiling England the east wind comes as a blast from Siberia, and the desolation of the land of exile accompanies it. Spiritual influence is like its origin. Cruel natures can only spread an atmosphere of cruelty and distress about them. No man can influence others excepting through what he possesses. We cannot permanently disguise our characters. As we are in our hearts and homes, so shall we be ultimately in our work and in the outcome of our lives. — Pul. Com. — Retribution. — If it makes no impression on a man to know that God will visit his iniquities upon him, he cannot blind himself to the fact that nature will. Do we not all know what it is to be punished by nature for disobeying her? We have looked around the wards of a hospital, a prison, or a madhouse, and seen there Nature at work squaring her accounts with sin. And we knew as we looked that if no judge sat on the throne of heaven at all, there was a judgment throne, where an inexorable Nature was crying aloud for justice and carrying out her heavy sentences for violated laws. — Drummond.

vidence, as there was to the fiery, cloudy pillar that guided God's people of old in the desert. Nature looks on the dark side and calls it sorrow and sadness; but faith sees the sun dispersing the darkness and calls it by the name of joy." — H. Bonar.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-EIGHTH.

"Having portrayed the extreme of unwisdom, the life that has not the future nor is built therefor, it is natural that Job should next speak of its contrasts, the true wisdom and foresight, whereby to build human life and character. Man cannot see as God sees, cannot reach absolute truth. But there is a wisdom for him which points to the absolute good as the needle points to the pole." — Genung.

the knowledge of natural things, as silver, iron, etc.

1, 2. (1) a vein, R. V., "mine." fine it, R. V., "which they refine." The precious ores may be discovered, no matter how carefully hidden. Men find them and bring them forth. Heb. word used means, refine by washing.[a] The ancients also refined by smelting. (2) the earth, or dust. Iron is smelted from ironstone, i. e. the metal is encompassed with earth or dust. brass, should be copper; brass is a mixed metal. stone, i. e. stone-ore.

Mining.—The poet has seen, perhaps in Idumæa or in Midian, where mines of copper and gold were wrought by the Egyptians, the various operations here described. Digging or quarrying, driving tunnels horizontally into the hills or sinking shafts in the valleys, letting themselves down by ropes from the edge of a cliff to reach the vein; then, suspended in mid air, hewing at the ore, the miners variously ply their craft. Away in remote gorges of the hills the pits they have dug remain abandoned, forgotten. The long, winding passages they make seem to track to the utmost limit the stones of darkness, stones that are black with the richness of the ore. On the earth's surface men till their fields, but the hidden treasures that lie below are more valuable than the harvest of maize or wheat. — Exp. Bib. — Gold has no value in heaven. They use it there to pave the streets with — better gold than we have down here — transparent gold. God can make gold as easily as He can make dirt, but He knows that man has set his heart on it, and what He wants, is what your heart is set on. — Moody.

[a] This would apply both to gold and to argentiferous lead.

"What ought I to do? It makes great men and women to ask that question and live up to the answer." — J. L. Kilbon.

"The knowledge of God without that of our wretchedness creates pride. The knowledge of our wretchedness without that of God creates despair. The knowledge of Jesus Christ is the middle way, because in Him we find both God and our wretchedness." — Pascal.

the darkness, the flood, the earth and the stones of it

3—6. (3) He, R. V., "Man," the miner, whose work is now vividly described. end to darkness, by opening a shaft, or carrying his lantern into the bowels of the earth. all perfection, R. V., "to the furthest bound the stones of thick darkness and of, etc.,"[b] for signs of valuable metal. shadow of death, in a darkness like death. (4) flood,[c] etc., R. V., "He breaketh open a shaft away from where men sojourn: they are forgotten of the foot that passeth by: they hang afar from men, they swing to and fro." The first clause describes how the miners sink their shaft deep down below and away from the abode of men above. There they are forgotten by the foot of those overhead, who walk oblivious of them. And the last clause describes how they "hang and swing," i, e. swing suspended in cages or from ropes as they pursue their unnatural operations.— Cam. Bib. (5) bread, thro' man's industrious agriculture. fire, "blasting of rocks was practiced on a large scale by the ancients." — Spk. Com. (6) sapphires, Ex. xxiv. 10.[d] dust of gold, gold ore.

The place of sapphires (vs. 6).— The stones which form and bind together the mounds and hills are taken from the very places where sapphires are found. For Jameson informs us that "the geognostic situation of the [b] "The stones hidden in the deepest darkness, far beneath the surface of the earth." — Delitzsch.

[c] "Man cutteth a channel or pierceth a mine road." — Wordsworth.

[d] Is. liv. 11; Re. xxi. 19.

It was customary for ancient miner to hang suspende at their work. In some parts of England we walk little thinking of the toilers beneath our feet.

"Live while you do live: to some purpose; fearlessly; follow your convictions without regard to the criticism of the world." — Henry Sherwood.

sapphire is in alluvial soil, in the vicinity of rocks, belonging to the secondary floetz trap formation and imbedded in gneiss." In reference to its geographic situation, the same writer says it is found particularly beautiful in Asia, in the Capelan mountains, in Persia, and the Island of Ceylon. Dr. Davey states that "the sapphire occurs in considerable abundance in the granitic alluvion of Matura and Saffragam (in Ceylon)." Thus, the stones of which the mound is formed are the true geognostic situation where the sapphire is found; and there can be no doubt that the workmen, in hewing and detaching the masses from the rocks, and in joining them to the mountains, did, by this secondary kind of mining, often find the precious sapphire. And it hath dust of gold.— The same mineralogist states, "that in Asia the sand of many rivers affords gold;" and it is washed down in great quantities from the mountains on the west coast of Sumatra, where it is afterwards found in the beds of rivers. — Roberts.

the hidden ways of man in the world

7—11. (7) a path, that of the miner. His is a path wh. none but man could make.[a] fowl, bird of prey. vulture, hawk or kite. This class of birds is remarkable for length and keenness of sight. (8) lion's whelps, R. V., "the proud beasts," who raven in the most dangerous places for prey. passed by it, as inaccessible to him. (9) rock, flint, or quartz; hard stone.[b] overturneth, by blasting. (10) rivers, R. V., "channels," for draining the mine. eye . . thing, when the water is drained off. (11) floods from overflowing, R. V., "streams that they trickle not."

The triumph of energy. — The miner knows his secret path and climbs it, because he is determined to search out the precious metals, no matter where he may have to go in pursuit of them. Here is manly vigor. Now, it is just this vigor joined to intelligence that gives man success in the battle of life. No one deserves to be prosperous without it. It is only an artificial state of society that allows the idle to be pampered in luxury. The healthy rule is that of St. Paul, "If any would not work, neither should he eat" (2 Thess. iii. 10). In the miner's path we have an evidence of what effort can do. This same effort is needed in every branch of life. Industry is healthy and fruitful, and the old-fashioned duty can never be lessened by any change of circumstances. If men shrink from work they proclaim that their better nature is conquered in them. It will be a bad day for England when her old spirit of enterprise is given up. In the Christian life there is a call for the miner's daring and energy. Here, too, heroic enterprises are undertaken by the nobler spirits. There are paths in spiritual experience that no one with a merely animal nature can ever see; but the brave sons of God walk thereon and find rare treasures by the way. — Pul. Com. — Result of industry. — One of Napoleon's favorite maxims was "The truest wisdom is a resolute determination." He threw his whole force of body and mind direct upon his work. Imbecile rulers and the nations they governed went down before him in succession. He was told that the Alps stood in the way of his armies, — "There shall be no Alps," he said, and the road across the Simplon was constructed, thro' a district formerly almost inaccessible. "Impossible," said he, "is a word only to be found in the dictionary of fools." — Smiles.

a "The ingenuity of man is thus contrasted with the instinctive sagacity of animals, the far-reaching and keen vision of the eagle and hawk, the strength and force of the lion." —Spk. Com.

b Pliny describes the use of iron hammers and wedges in splitting and breaking through the rocks in the search of gold: and also the process of blasting.

"Life is—to wake, not sleep;
Rise, and not rest; but press
From earth's level, where blindly creep Things perfected, more or less,
To heaven's height, far and steep."
— Browning.

the place and the price of wisdom

12, 13. (12) wisdom, true wisdom; knowledge of the great principles and plans of God. Practical skill is recognized, but man cannot reach to sound the Div. mysteries. (13) land of the living, or among men.[c]

The search for wisdom. — It is like the treasures of deep mines, and therefore it is not seen by the superficial. God does not cast His pearls before swine. There are blessings that all men — even the most heedless — have a share in. But the greatest blessings are not stumbled on unawares. These are for all who will seek them; but they must be sought. Hidden treasures are sometimes dug up from beneath ancient ruins — vessels of gold and silver that have lain for ages buried under heaps of rubbish. So Divine treasures have been hidden beneath piles of earthly and comparatively worthless things. Sin and worldliness have buried them. They need to be rediscovered. Thus man has both to recover lost spiritual riches and to mine in virgin soil for new wisdom.— Pul. Com.—Knowledge of God.— No one can understand a machine unless he knows the maker's object. No one can understand a building unless he knows the builder's purpose, — whether it was intended for cathedral or a station, a factory or a house. Much more is this true of spiritual things No one can understand life and its meaning without a knowledge of God. — Peloubet.

c "Job implies both its invaluable worth and the impossibility of buying it at any price." — Fausset.

"It is reported of one of the kings of India, he wore a ruby of that bigness and splendor that he might be seen by it in the dark; but wisdom casts a more sparkling color than the ruby; it makes us shine as angels."— J. Watson.

14—16. (14) depth, or abyss (Gen. xlix. 25). "Three great regions are mentioned, none of which is the 'place' of Wisdom, the land of the living, the deep, and the sea. The 'deep' is the primeval abyss, out of which perhaps the sea is fed,[a] lying under the earth, an almost mythological conception." — Cam. Bib. (15) gold, marg. fine gold. The ordinary word for gold is not used here, but one from a Heb. root, meaning "to shut up with care,"[b] as a precious thing. "Men cannot buy wisdom." weighed, "the precious metals were weighed out before coining was known." (16) gold of Ophir, ch. xxii. 24. onyx, Ge. ii. 12; Ex. xxviii. 20.[d] sapphire, Ex. xxiv. 10.

Providence of God in creation. — I. The remarkable provision of Divine goodness and wisdom in making the earth itself a storehouse of substance that should contribute so largely to the comfort, gratification, and improvement of the human race. II. Man's art and industry necessary to the acquisition and use of those materials which God has stored up in the earth for his benefit. III. Remarkable adaptation between the productions and contents of the earth, and the faculties given to man for their discovery and use. IV. Man's industry in searching for the precious metals an example of the earnestness and perseverance with which he should seek for the better and more enduring riches. — Robinson.

The value of wisdom. — How impossible it is to estimate the value of wisdom. It has no material equivalent. Gold can be balanced by gold, so that the one scale shall be as valuable as the other; estates may be brought into equipoise by gold; so that men shall be as willing to accept the one as the other, for the one is equal to the other in value; but put wisdom in the scale and try to find a counter-weight. How haughty is Wisdom! To gold and silver, and jewel and crystal, and onyx and sapphire, she says, Go back: ye may not touch this holy ground! They have gone far, but she will not allow them in her presence; they have been in palaces, but they shall not go in the sanctuaries: all these precious, fair-faced, sweet-voiced things have gone almost wherever they pleased to go, and they have been welcomed by standing men; but when they have gone up to the angel Wisdom, that angel has said — Back, rude vulgarity! She has no price in the market-place. — Peop. Bib. — Knowledge and wisdom. — If there is anything that may well occasion surprise, it is the thoughtlessness of dying men — their thoughtlessness with regard to their spiritual and eternal interests. They traverse seas; they explore continents; they pry into the secrets of the wilderness; they decipher old inscriptions, and scrutinize Egyptian hieroglyphs; they study the fossil autographs of dead ages on the rocky pages of the earth, till the globe becomes their library, and cataracts and currents cut the leaves of long-sealed volumes that they may be read; they question the microscope for the minute wonders of creative skill in the structure of a sand-grain, an animalcule, or a snow-flake; they dissolve air and water into their original elements, and unfold the laws that govern the combination of these elements; they track the lightning to its lair, tame it, and teach it, charged with messages, to leap along their iron wires; they penetrate the invisible realm of mind, search out its constitution, the order of its faculties, the methods of their operation, and the laws by which they are governed; they give wing to fancy, and revel in the strange, weird domain of imaginary existence, surrendering their being almost to the spell of fiction and romance; and yet — while the mind is thus roused to intense activity, while the waves of the sea of human thought roll on, and cover almost everything tangible or conceivable — the one great theme which towers above others, like the Alps above their valleys, is left, like a mountain island of the ocean, neglected and unexplored. Men are intent to study the world around, but not the world within them. They read the doom of nations, and forget their own. They decipher old crumbling monuments of stone, but translate not the inscriptions on the living tablets of the heart. They linger spellbound over the poet's page; they sit at the feet of the philosopher; they listen to the sagacity of statesmen; they are kindled to enthusiasm by the creations of the artist, or by the magnificent span of cathedral domes; and yet when a "greater than the temple," a "greater than Solomon," He that "spake as never man spake," opens His lips to reveal the secrets of the life eternal, they turn away with stolid indifference or cold contempt. — Gillett.

wisdom not to be purchased a Ge. vii. 11; De. viii. 7; Ps. xxxvi. 6.

b Heb. segor, shut up.

Comp. 1 Ki. vi. 20; marg., vii. 49; x. 21; 2 Chr. iv. 20; ix. 20.

c Heb. cethem, what is hidden.

d Heb. shoham.

"Experience gathered from books, though often valuable, is but of the nature of learning; whereas the experience gained from actual life is of the nature of wisdom; and a small store of the latter is worth vastly more than any stock of the former." — Smiles.

"Knowledge is the treasure of the mind, but discretion is the key to it, without which it is useless."

"There are no such safeguards as virtue and wisdom. The one secures the soul, the other the estate and body."

Fortune first fools the man she means to foil.

"Head-knowledge is our own, and can polish only the outside, heart-knowledge is the spirit's work, and makes all glorious within." — Adam.

"Reading maketh a full man, conference a ready man, and writing an exact man." — Bacon.

"Learning without thought is labor lost; thought without learning is perilous." — Confucius.

17—19. (17) crystal,[e] R. V., "glass," the word occurs nowhere else in the Bible. jewels, lit. "vessels." (18) coral,[f] comp. Eze. xxvii. 16. Coral was wisdom more valuable than gold or gems

e "Heb zecueith, fr. zacac, to be pure, transparent.

f LXX. and Jerome, trans., exalted or valuable things. The Rabbins refer it to the red coral.

obtained in the Red Sea. pearls, lit. what is frozen, ice; so prob. crystals are meant. (19) topaz,[a] Ex. xxviii. 17. Job refuses to admit the common idea that if a man only has wealth he can lay superior claim to wisdom. Though he be willing to give all that he has for it, wisdom is not thus to be obtained.

The supreme value and excellence of true wisdom. — The superiority of Divine wisdom or true piety over all earthly treasures evidenced — I. In its intrinsic excellence. II. In its ability to afford true and solid happiness. III. In its endless durability. — Robinson.

Wise men.— Homer was called all-wise, and said to know all things human. Aristotle, for his soaring wisdom, was called an eagle fallen from the clouds. Yet the greatest of Grecian sages professed they wanted other lights, and took it for granted the time would come when God would impart a further revelation of His will to mankind.

> "The first and wisest of them all (Socrates) profess'd
> To know this only, that he nothing knew;
> The next (Plato) to fabling fell and smooth conceits;
> A third sort (Pyrrho) doubted all things, though plain sense;
> Others (Aristotle) in virtue placed felicity,
> But virtue joined with riches and long life;
> In corporal pleasures he (Epicurus), and careless ease;
> The Stoic (Epictetus) last, in philosophic pride,
> By him called virtue; and his virtuous man,
> Wise, perfect in himself, and all possessing,
> Equal to God, oft shames not to prefer,
> As fearing God, nor man." — Paradise Regained, Book iv.

[a] According to Pliny there was an island named Topazos, on the western coast of the Red Sea, and another called Cytis, at the entrance of the sea, both noted for topazes.

"The ancient Egyp. excelled in the manufacture of glass. They had the secret of introducing gold between layers of glass; and in their bottles a gold-band alternates in a series of blue, green, and other colors." — Wordsworth.

Jerome is said to have known all that was knowable, yet was one of the most devoted students of revelation. The greatest philosophers in our own or any other country, as Newton, Faraday, and Brewster, have loved to sit with the humility of a child at the feet of Jesus, to learn wisdom out of the scriptures of truth. — Hom. Com. Advantage of knowledge. — In England a man of small fortune may cast his regards around him, and say, with truth and exultation, "I am lodged in a house that affords me conveniences and comforts which even a king could not command some centuries ago. There are ships crossing the seas in every direction, to bring me what is useful to me from all parts of the earth. In China men are gathering the tea-leaf for me; in America they are planting cotton for me; in the West India Islands they are preparing my sugar and coffee; in Italy they are feeding silkworms for me: in Saxony they are shearing the sheep to make me clothing; at home powerful steam-engines are spinning and weaving for me, and making cutlery for me, and pumping the mines, that the materials useful to me may be procured. My patrimony was small, yet I have post-coaches running day and night, on all the roads, to carry my correspondence; I have roads, and canals, and bridges, to bear the coal for my winter fire; nay, I have protecting fleets and armies around my happy country, to secure my enjoyments and repose. Then I have editors and printers, who daily send me an account of what is going on throughout the world, among all these people who serve me. And in a corner of my house I have books, the miracle of all my possessions, for they transport me instantly, not only to all places, but to all times. By my books I can conjure up before me, to vivid existence, all the great and good men of antiquity; and, for my individual satisfaction, I can make them act over again the most renowned of their exploits; the orators declaim for me; the historians recite; the poets sing; in a word, from the equator to the pole, and from the beginning of time until now, by my books, I can be where I please." — Gillett.

"Knowledge is the knowing that we cannot know." — Emerson.

"The first step to a self-knowledge is self-distrust. Nor can we attain to any kind of knowledge except by a like process." — Hare.

"Prices mount high in times of scarcity. Famine may make corn more precious than rubies. When the world had fallen far from God down into the night of sin and ignorance, true wisdom became scarce."—Pul. Com.

whence cometh wisdom?

20—22. (20) Whence, etc., repeating the question (vs. 12), which nature cannot solve. (21) hid, because it is immaterial. fowls, whose keenness of vision is remarkable; "to them the eastern wind ascribed a supreme gift of divination, so that what is hidden from them is hidden indeed." (22) Destruction, realm of Abaddon. "Death, which unlocks so many secrets, and Abaddon, the unfathomed under-world into which men sink at death, and in which so much becomes plain to them, can only repeat the dubious 'rumor' of it which they have heard." — Cox.

"Ignorance is the curse of God; knowledge is the wing wherewith we fly to heaven." — Shakespeare.

How to be wise. — How, then, shall we become more wise? By becoming more humble. How shall we grow in knowledge? By growing in grace.

How shall we become mighty men, giants, and princes? By becoming little children, trustful because helpless, confiding because self-deficient, upward-looking because made in the likeness of God. Christ will have no proud men about him. The proud He sends empty away, because they are rich in their own esteem and their hands are buried in plentifulness; but those who come humbly, broken-heartedly, contritely, without self-help or self-hope, saying, "God be merciful to me a sinner," He will send away with all heaven at their command for all possible exigencies. —Peop. Bib. — The Holy Spirit a guide to learning. — The Bible is a burglar-proof against unsanctified learning that seeks to penetrate unto its mysteries. The violent have attempted to take it by force, but the Holy Spirit alone has the key to this treasure-house, and He only knows the combination of prayer and faith by which it can be unlocked and all the treasures of wisdom and righteousness therein stored, to be found out and appropriated. God forbid that I should despise any kind of learning. On the contrary, I put my strong emphasis on the importance of it. Modifying Augustine's phrase, let us remember that the sufficiency of learning is to discover that learning is insufficient. Your responsibility is that you make the Spirit of God your private tutor and then you cannot be led very far astray.— A. J. Gordon.

"He who binds his soul to knowledge, steals the key of heaven." — Willis.

Comp. Eccl x. 20. "I would rather confess my ignorance, than falsely profess knowledge. It is no shame not to know all things; but it is a just shame to overreach in anything."— Bp. Hall.

23—25. (23) God, set out distinctly as the only centre of true wisdom.[a] "Wisdom can nowhere be found either by man or by any creatures, only by the Creator. God knoweth the place of it and is in possession of it, for He is the maker and upholder of the universe with all its agencies. And He has assigned to man as his wisdom the fear of the Lord."— Cam. Bib. (24) looketh, etc., seeing and knowing everything. (25) weight . . winds, affixing quantity to the thing that seemed to have no weight. weigheth,[b] R. V., "meteth out."

God knows the source of wisdom

God's wisdom a ground of faith. — If God has true wisdom, we can be content to leave with Him those issues of life which we cannot understand ourselves. To us many of the processes of nature are unintelligible. Not only cannot we understand the "how," but we are also perplexed about the "why." Apparently aimless and seemingly hurtful processes fill nature with dark mysteries. But these mysteries are all open to God. Of His works we can say, "In wisdom hast Thou made them all." The world was not created by a blundering Demiurge, but by an all-wise God. Our own lives are enigmas to us. We cannot understand why our plans are broken, our hopes scattered, our joys turned to bitterness. It all looks wild, chaotic, aimless, sometimes even cruel. We can but rest in the thought that God is higher and wiser than we are. — Pul. Com. "Knowledge, in truth, is the great sun in the firmament. Life and power are scattered with all its beams."— Daniel Webster.

The angel of wisdom. —

Be thou our queen, O lofty angel fair!
Worthy the sole and unobstructed rule
Of every sphere and every spirit race;
Heart-honored — heaven-ordained — predestined heir
Of the bright line of ages numberless!
Since God, creating atoms, first began
And ended with the universal world,
Thou hast beheld no equal, nay, no like.
Thee only we acknowledge, and for this Hold our arrival blessed. Empress, hail! —Bailey.

a "Wisdom belongs to His omniscience, and is declared by His omnipotence." Spk. Com.

b Is. xl. 15.

"In order to love mankind, expect but little from them; in order to view their faults without bitterness we must accustom ourselves to pardon, and to perceive that indulgence is a justice which frail humanity has a right to demand from wisdom. Now, nothing tends more to dispose us to indulgence, to close our hearts against hatred, to open them to the principles of a humane and soft morality, than a profound knowledge of the human heart. Accordingly, the wisest men have always been the most indulgent."

26—28. (26) degree, controlling the falling of the rain. way, or course. Such mastery of the great natural forces assured God's sole claim to have the secret of wisdom.[c] (27) prepared it, R. V., "established it." He caused the fullness of the Divine plan to come forth and be developed in the world. searched, etc., "alludes to the depths of the ideal contents of this wisdom." (28) fear, etc., comp. Pr. i. 7. Lord, Adonai. depart from evil, see Job's own character, ch. i. 1.

the fear of the Lord is wisdom

Wisdom and the fear of God. — Some are thought the wisest who have the least of this principle of true wisdom. We shall show — I. What it is to fear God. This is not — 1. The fear of despondency; 2. Nor the fear of terror; 3. Nor the fear of reverence; 4. Nor the fear of caution; but — (1) A c "Job is looking back to the time of creation; and he declares that though the winds, and clouds and waters may seem to be agitated and move capricl-ously, and at random, yet every movement of theirs is balanced in the scales of omnipotence."—Wordsworth.

Adonai is the Maker and Governor of the whole creation.

"No man of the human race has been in circumstances to become absolutely wise, but every one of the human family possessed of sufficient wisdom to be responsible can be good. Jesus did not say, 'Blessed are the wise in head,' but, 'The pure in heart shall see God.'"—Driver.

fear which arises from a deep and true sense of the being of God; and (2) From a knowledge and consideration of the attributes of God. We shall — II. Show how it appears that this fear of God is the true wisdom. 1. It is a true principle by which to govern our reason; 2. And by which to order our administration of justice: and by which to regulate the exercise of the duties and relations of life; 4. And to promote sincerity, uprightness, integrity, and honesty; 5. And as a principle of self-government; 6. And to save from overhaste in speech and action; 7. It preserves the mind calm in all states and conditions. — M. Hale.

True wisdom — fear of the Lord. — Mr. Hervey, in a letter to a friend, gives the following account of his views and feelings, when brought to the gates of death by a severe illness: — "Were I," says he, "to enjoy Hezekiah's grant, and have fifteen years added to my life, I would be much more frequent in my applications to a throne of grace. We sustain a mighty loss by reading so much, and praying so little. Were I to renew my studies, I would take my leave of these accomplished trifles — the historians, the orators, the poets of antiquity — and devote my attention to the Scriptures of truth. I would sit with much greater assiduity at my Divine Master's feet, and desire to know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified. This wisdom, whose fruits are peace in life, consolation in death, and everlasting salvation after death — this I would trace, this I would seek, this I would explore through the spacious and delightful fields of the Old and New Testaments."

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-NINTH.

Job sighs for the joys, etc., of the past

1—3. (1) continued, having paused to see if the friends had any reply. It was Zophar's turn to speak, but he was silenced. This chapter contains "a sorrowful retrospect of his past happiness." parable,[a] term is here used generally for a figurative speech, poss. with intimation that deep mysteries would be in it. (2) months past, or months of yore. preserved me, R. V., "watched over me," this was the secret of his former happiness. Now God has deserted him. Job could see God had preserved him from trouble, he could not feel sure that God was preserving him in trouble. (3) candle; lamp,[b] ch. xviii. 6. light . . darkness, referring fig. of lamp to his former circumstances.[c]

Spiritual declension considered (vs. 2).—I. The sources of it. 1. A remissness in secret duties; 2. An indulgence in some secret sin; 3. An undue and unnecessary entanglement of ourselves in the affairs of this life. II. The evidence of it. 1. In the spirituality of our minds; 2. In the tenderness of our conscience; 3. In the vigor of our exertion of God. III. The remedies of it. 1. By a renewed and more solemn repentance; 2. By getting a sense of redeeming love upon the soul; 3 By keeping eternity in view. Address those — (1) Who are conscious that they have occasion for this heart-rending complaint; (2) Those who are making progress in the Divine life. — C. Simeon.

Reflection grows with years. — It has been remarked upon as a misfortune that so many of the best things in life seem to be lavished upon an age that is carelessly negligent of them. Strength, energy, health, happiness, in abundance are enjoyed in youth without a thought. When these treasures are more scarce they are carefully economized and highly valued. In later years the habit of looking backward grows upon us, and reflection takes the place of heedless activity. Thus we consider and appreciate with regret in the later years of life what we disregarded in the earlier times of possession. — Pul. Com.

The past. —

Thoughts, like a loud and sudden rush of wings,
Regrets and recollections of things past,
With hints and prophecies of things to be,
And inspirations, which, could they be things,
And stay with us, and we could hold them fast,
Were our good angels, — these I owe to Thee.

— Longfellow

The echoes of the past. —

O there are voices of the past,
Links of a broken chain,

[a] Comp. Nu. xxiii 7.

"The Easterns, when they sleep, have lamps hanging near their beds, and often over their heads."—Kitto.

[b] Ps. xviii. 28; xxvii. 1.

[c] "Of all his losses that which touches him most deeply is the loss of that habitual and intimate communion with God which had been his chief good."—Cox

"Happy who walks with Him! whom what he finds.
Of flavor or of scent in fruit or flower,
Or what he views of beautiful or grand
In nature, from the broad majestic oak
To the green blade that twinkles in the sun, Prompts with remembrance of a present God
His presence who made all so fair, perceiv'd, Makes all still fairer. As with Him no scene

Wings that can bear me back to times
Which cannot come again,
Yet God forbid that I should lose
The echoes that remain! — A. A. Proctor.

Past days. —

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean.
Tears from the depths of some divine despair
Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy autumn-fields,
And thinking on the days that are no more.

Fresh as the first beam glittering on a sail
That brings our friends up from the under-world,
Sad as the last which reddens over me.
That sinks with all we love below the verge,
So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more. — Tennyson.

Is dreary, so with Him all seasons please."

"That summum bonum which is only able to make thee happy, as well in thy death as in thy life: I mean the true knowledge and worship of the Creator and Redeemer, without which all other things are vain and miserable." — Ld. Burleigh.

"The rarest attainment is to grow old happily and gracefully." — L. M. Child.

4—7. (4) youth, R. V., "in the ripeness of my days," that is in his mature manhood, then most of all he had felt the Divine presence and favor.[a] secret of God,[b] or intimate friendship: the counsel, or converse of God. Ps. xxv. 14; Pr. iii. 22. (5) with me, in granting me prosperities: when I could apprehend His presence. my children, their sudden death was the depth of Job's trouble, and the midnight of his darkness. (6) butter, Ge. xviii. 8. "Fig. for abundance of the simple luxuries of pastoral life." rock . . oil, De. xxiii. 13. "Olives flourish in stony soils." (7) to the gate, as prince and judge. street, broad place, space within the city gate. Ru. iv. 1. "Here justice was administered and even the prophets delivered their testimony to the people." — Oehler.

Job describes the occasions of past joy

Job's past happiness. — It embraced — I. His enjoyment of the Divine favor and fellowship. Observe — 1. No blessing so great, or enjoyment so sweet, as that of communion with God and the friendship of our Maker; 2. The favor of God the fountain of all real blessing and true happiness; 3. Intimate fellowship and personal friendship with God to be enjoyed in this life; 4. God's presence and favor sweeten every blessing. II. His enjoyment of outward mercies. These were — 1. Domestic comfort; 2. Outward prosperity; 3. Public honor and respect. — Robinson.

The happy past. — Job was reverting to the time of his prosperity, as is seen in the preceding verse, "when His candle shined upon my head, and when by His light I walked through darkness;" "when my children were about me, when I washed my steps with butter." To say the secret of the king is with such a person, is a strong way of describing the intimacy which exists between them. "Take care how you accuse him to the great man, because his secret is with him." "Alas! alas! his secret is no longer with me; his lamp no longer shines in my heart." — Roberts. — The past. — Think of it! the past is not only focused there, in a man's soul: it is there. All things that he has ever seen, known, felt, believed, of the surrounding world are now within him, have become part of him, in part are him; he has been changed into their image. He may deny it, he may resent it, but they are there. They do not adhere to him; they are transfused through him. He cannot alter or rub them out. They are not in his memory; they are in him. His soul is as they have filled it, made it, left it. — Drummond.

The past. —

When midnight o'er the moonless skies
Her pall of transient death hath spread;
When mortals sleep, when spectres rise,
And none are wakeful but the dead;
No bloodless shape my way pursues,
No sheeted ghost my couch annoys,
Visions more sad my fancy views,— Visions of long-departed joys. — Spenser.

[a] The time of the ripe fruits of Job's prosperity.

"Job's wish is, that he might be restored to the vigor of mature life, and to the influence and honors wh. he had then." — Barnes.

[b] "Lit. the couch, or cushion, in an Eastern divan. Hence also the society, conference, and deliberation." — Wordsworth.

"When God remained cordially in my tent." — Umbreit.

"When God took counsel with me in my tent." — Herder.

"It is with youth, as with plants; from the first fruits they bear we learn what may be expected in future." Demophilus.

"Oh! if in afterlife we could but gather the very refuse of our youthful hours." — C. Ll d.

8—10. (8) hid,[c] retired back, in reverence for dignity and age. arose, as a token of respect. They remained standing until Job had taken his seat. (9) refrained, etc., stopped talking. Comp. entrance of men of honor into any assembly now. At once all would keep a reverent silence. hand . . mouth,

Job an object of respect in the past

[c] "Illus. by following from the Talmud: 'R. Jochanan was walking and leaning on R. Chijabar-Abba. R. Eliezer perceived him and hid himself fr. him. Then said R. Jochanan, This Babylonian insulted him (R. Chija) by two things, first that he did not salute him, and then that he hid himself. But R. Jacob-bar-Idi answered him. It is the custom with them for the less not to salute the greater.'"—Delitzsch.

ch. xxi. 5. (10) nobles, this term, which princes, indicates civilized and settled, rather than patriarchal, conditions of society. These nobles were men of rank, and would now be called Emirs or Sheiks. tongue cleaved,[a] i. e. all conversation on the important matters under consideration ceased in his presence, for his wisdom was recognized, and all waited to hear him speak.

Goodness and greatness. — I. Goodness often the shortest as well as the safest way to greatness. II. A good man sure, sooner or later, to gain the esteem and confidence of his fellows. III. A man's noblest ambition — 1. To excel others in virtue, piety and benevolence ; 2. To act as the counselor and guide of his fellows ; 3. To comfort the mourners which command the multitude.— Robinson.

The hand on the mouth.— When the Easterns wish to be silent they place their hand upon their mouth, to express their intentions by action, and their sentiments by attitude. Many instances of this practice are to be found. "In one of the subterranean vaults in Egypt, where the mummies lie buried, they found in the coffin an embalmed body of a woman, before which was placed a figure of wood, representing a youth on his knees, laying a finger on his mouth, and holding in his other hand a sort of chafing-dish, which was placed on his head, and in which, without doubt, had been some perfumes."— Maillet. — The worship of mammon may be less visibly cruel than the worship of Mars, and yet in some respects it is more degrading, for it calls out no heroic qualities. The deference shown to the rich simply because they are rich is one of the most unworthy characteristics of human weakness. It is not peculiar to our own age ; this miserable sycophantic spirit was ridiculed by Roman satirists and reprobated by New Testament writers (e. g. Jas. ii. 2). Its sordid meanness humiliates all who are enslaved by it.— Pul. Com.

[a] Ps. cxxxvii. 6.

Job describes the reason of that past respect

11—13. (11) ear heard me, decide causes, and deliver sentences, as judge. blessed me, because sure of careful consideration, and a just decision.[b] gave witness,[c] by its fixed attention to the respect in which he was held. (12) poor, who had a just cause, but no counsel to plead it for him. fatherless, Job acted as protector to such as had lost their natural protectors. (13) ready to perish, in danger of being falsely condemned. widow's, etc., by saving her from unjust treatment. "One of the most beautiful ancient portrayals of virtue, founded on a Christian ideal of love and mercy, rather than on the ideal of mere justice and law-keeping, such as afterward obtained among the Scribes and Pharisees."— Genung.

The character of Job (vss. 11–16).— I. We propose to show the excellence of this character. Notice — 1. The character itself, diffusive benevolence, unblemished integrity ; 2. The excellence of it ; its aspect on society ; true of all that are in private life. II. The importance of cultivating it in ourselves and of encouraging it in others.— C. Simeon.

Helping the poor.— A gentleman from the country, passing through the streets of the metropolis, saw a poor man who had formerly been employed by him as a laborer, and his circumstances were those of extreme poverty and distress. He had come up to London to seek employment ; but, failing to obtain it was reduced to a state of extreme destitution. The gentleman gave him a shilling and passed on, perhaps scarcely recollecting the circumstance, till it was recalled to his mind by the man himself, whom, about twelve months afterwards, he met again, and whose decent clothing and cheerful looks indicated a favorable change in his circumstances. "Sir," said the poor fellow, "I am bound to bless you, and pray for you as long as I live ; that shilling you gave me has been the making of me: bad enough, I wanted it for food; but I was resolved first to turn it round: so I went up and down one of the principal streets, and collected as many hare-skins as it would purchase; these I disposed of, and contented myself with such food as the profits would afford, still reserving the shilling as my stock in trade. By degrees I saved a little more, and to you, sir, I am indebted for the foundation of it all. But for your timely aid I might have perished. May a blessing attend you as long as you live."

Mercy.—

I hold that Christian grace abounds Where charity is seen ; then, when We climb to heaven, 'tis on the rounds
Of love to men.

[b] Pr. xxix. 2.

[c] Lu. iv. 22.

Jas. i. 27.

"The quality of mercy is not strained;
It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice blessed;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes."
—Shakespeare.

A respectable merchant in London, having been embarrassed in his circumstances, and his misfortunes having been one day the subject of conversation in the Royal Exchange, several persons expressed great sorrow; when a foreigner who was present, said, "I feel five hundred pounds for him, what do you feel?"

"There are times when it would be very bad fortune not to have had bad fortune. Peter

This I moreover hold, and dare Affirm, where'er my rhyme may go:
Whatever things be sweet and fair,
Love makes them so.
'Tis not the wide phylactery,
Nor stubborn fast nor stated prayers,
That makes us saints; we judge the tree
By what it bears.—Alice Cary.

Cooper used to say that he began his career with a famous stroke of luck; he bought a lottery ticket with one of his first dollars, and, in the drawing, got a blank."

14–17. (14) put on, as if it were a robe.[a] "As a man he was lost in the justice that clothed him; and justice clothed itself in him—he was justice become a person." —Cam. Bib. diadem, or turban.[b] (15) eyes, etc., forcible refutation of the charge of hard-hearted uncharitableness brought against him by Eliphaz.[c] (16) father, father-like in tender consideration for them. the cause, etc., R. V., "because of him that I knew not," etc. Not only those who had claims on him, but strangers, any unfortunate man, he aided by his counsel and power. (17) plucked,[d] etc., severity with the wicked is as essential a part of public justice as consideration for the poor.

Job had been a public benefactor a Ro. xiii. 14; 1 Pe. v. 5.

b Heb. tsaniph, fr. tsanaph, to bind round.

Job's character (vss. 11–17). —I. His benevolence and compassion as a private individual. II. His faithfulness and justice as a magistrate. III. His boldness in opposing the wicked and oppressive. Note:—1. A truly good man a comfort to the oppressed and a terror to the oppressor; 2. A good man not deterred from duty by the fear of consequences. —Robinson.

c Job xxii

Kindness to the poor. —The benevolent Dr. Wilson once discovered a clergyman at Bath, who, he was informed, was sick, poor, and had a numerous family. In the evening he gave a friend fifty pounds, requesting him to deliver it in the most delicate manner, and as from an unknown person. The friend said, "I will wait upon him early in the morning." "You will oblige me, sir, by calling directly. Think of what importance a good night's rest may be to that poor man."

d "Job is advocate judge, sheriff, and executioner; a necessary and effective combination of offices in an imperfectly organized community."—Spk. Com

Eyes to the blind. —No man is at liberty to say, when there is a blind man to be helped, that his eyes are wholly his own, and that he must devote them to his own occupations and interests. In this way it lies within the power of every man to do good: without money, without genius, without influence, he can yet conduct a blind child across a thoroughfare, or speak a kind word to the dispirited traveler, or offer to do some deed of love to the friendless man. Beneficence does not confine itself to one line. Unhappily, in many instances, it is so confined, and thus it is in danger of falling into a mere trick or habit. Some men will give money largely who will not give any time to the promotion of good causes; others do not grudge their time, but it is next to impossible to persuade them to contribute of their substance. Each man will be judged according to his faculty and opportunity. All that some men can do is to lead the blind, cheer the lonely, advise the perplexed; these services to humanity are never set down in the subscription-lists of society: it would seem as if it was only money that could be recorded, and not service of a still richer kind.—Peop. Bib.—The gentleman. —Carlyle said of Robert Burns that there was no truer gentleman in Europe than the ploughman-poet. It was because he loved everything—the mouse, and the daisy, and all the things great and small, that God had made. So with this simple passport he could mingle with any society, and enter courts and palaces from his little cottage on the banks of the Ayr. You know the meaning of the word "gentleman." It means a gentle man—a man who does things gently with love, and that is the whole art and mystery of it. The gentleman cannot in the nature of things do an ungentlemanly thing. The ungentle soul, the inconsiderate, unsympathetic nature, cannot do anything else. "Love doth not behave itself unseemly." —Drummond.

"John Baptist Joseph Languet, vicar of St. Sulpice, at Paris, sometimes disbursed the sum of a million of livres in charities in a single year. When there was a general dearth in 1725, he sold, in order to relieve the poor, his household goods, his pictures, and some curious pieces of furniture that he had procured with great difficulty."

his past hopes

e "I shall die surrounded by my family and friends, and encompassed with honors."—Barnes.

18–21. (18) die in my nest, continue right to the end of life my comfortable circumstances.[e] Nest is figure for secure dwelling. as the sand, common fig. for boundless extent. Abundance of days compared to the multitude of the grains of sand.[f] (19) root, etc., read to "the waters."[g] So th. the waters nourished it. Job likens himself to a palm tree. dew, copious and refreshing in that land. (20) glory, honor in wh. I was held was constantly renewed. renewed,[h] gained ever new strength and elasticity.

f LXX., Vulg., and Jew interp. think ref. is to the phœnix bird, which was supposed to reappear out of its own ashes.

The phœnix, "according to the Egyptian legend, lived five hundred years, and then, setting fire to its nest, renewed its youth in the funeral pyre."

g Ps. i. 3; Je. xvii. 8; Ho. xiv. 5–7.

h Ge. xlix. 24.

Clement of Rome appealed to the phœnix as a witness for the resurrection. We smile at his credulity. But may we not appeal to the legend of the phœnix as an evidence of the instinct of immortality? Why is it so natural to us to believe that life will go on forever? Shall we put this idea down entirely to the delusion of circumstances and of our own vitality? Does it not spring from something deeper in our nature? Be that as it may, however, Christ has come to satisfy the desire and to confirm the hope. Job confessed the foolishness of his youthful dreams, yet even he in those old-world days had occasional glimpses of the life beyond the grave, and we have a grand assurance of that life in Christ and His resurrection. The mistake is to dream of an earthly immortality. The old man who cherishes fond hopes of living a little longer is not much better off than the drowning man catching at a straw. But he who has a hold on the life eternal can afford to see the years rushing away swifter than a weaver's shuttle. He must make the best of them while he has them; for this life is with him but once, and he will have to give an account of it hereafter; for there is a hereafter — a great day of God's eternity that knows no sunset. — W. F. Adeney.—The dew. — It is well known that in the hot eastern countries, where it rarely rains during the summer months, the copious dews which fall there during the night contribute greatly to the nourishment of vegetables in general. "This dew," says Hasselquist, speaking of the excessively hot weather in Egypt, "is particularly serviceable to the trees, which would otherwise never be able to resist the heat; but with this assistance they thrive well, and blossom and ripen their fruit" — Burder.

"The myth was, that the phœnix sprung fr. a nest of myrrh made by his father before death, and that he then came fr. Arabia (Job's country) to Heliopolis, in Egypt, once in every 500 years, and there burnt his father" — Fausset.

"The good opinion of honest men, friends to freedom and well-wishers to mankind, is the only reputation a wise man would ever desire."— Washington.

his past influence

22—25. (22) my words,[a] given as counsel. dropped,[b] "like a refreshing, quickening rain," fig. for eloquence, esp. in oriental poetry. (23) waited, as does a parched and thirsty land for the rain. latter rain, those wh. fall in the month of March; necess. to bring forward the harvest. (24) laughed, "I laughed on them, when they had no confidence, and the light of my countenance they cast not down."[c] "Job smiled on those who were perplexed and despondent; what seemed insurmountable difficulty or threatened disaster to them, seemed to him a thing easy to overcome and nothing to create alarm; while on the other hand the despondency of others was never able to cloud the cheerfulness of his countenance, so full was his mind of resource."— Cam. Bib. (25) way, i. e. their companionship. I delighted in the company of men and chose to walk with them. as a king, surrounded by every sign of state. army, or "in the host," i. e. among the people. comforteth, etc., a side-thrust at the friends whose intended comfortings had proved so great a failure.

a "This passage introduces a new theme, viz., Job's position among his countrymen as a statesman and leader."— Spk. Com.

b De. xxxii. 2.

c "Some read, 'I smiled kindly on those who trusted not,' i. e. in times of danger I cheered those in despondency."— Umbreit.

Review of the chapter. — I. Evidence of the statement that the fear of the Lord is wisdom. II. Proof that true piety towards God is accompanied with the purest morality and love to men. III. An example afforded of what grace can effect in restoring and renewing fallen humanity. IV. A pattern for Christians both in public and private life. V. The retrospect of a holy and useful life a source of pure and elevated comfort in sickness and adversity. VI. Example of the uncertainty of earthly comforts and riches. VII. The experience of believers in respect to the sensible enjoyment of the Divine presence and fellowship liable to fluctuation. VIII. An exemplification of the requirements of the moral law in respect to our neighbor. IX. Job exhibited in this chapter as a type of Jesus Christ the righteous.— Robinson.

vs. 22. "Of a man who speaks with great euphony, it is said, 'His words come tule tule yāka,' i. e. drop by drop."—Roberts.

A good man's influence.— Of all the good things in this world, the best are good people. These give added value to all other good things, and do much to make up for the lack of them. The influence which goes out from the life of a good man is one of the most subtle and pervasive things in the world. Men can weigh the moon, but they cannot weigh the influence of a good man. They can tell the distance of one star from another, but they cannot tell how far the influence of a good man's life will reach, nor how long it will last.— Calvin Cutler. Unconscious influence.— If you are abiding in Christ you are reproducing yourself in thousands of instances when you are wholly unaware of it. Out of the personal relationship between the soul and Christ come the fruits of holy living. The vine does not bear fruit of itself, it bears its fruit through the branches. Our unconscious influence thus becomes far more fruitful than our conscious influence. In the last great day many will bewail that they have accomplished so little, and, looking at the scanty results will say, "When saw we thee hungry, and fed thee? or athirst, and gave thee drink?" to find that unconsciously their lives had abounded in fruits well pleasing in the Master's sight. It is from such holy lives as this that is derived our Master's highest joy.— Bp. Hendrix.

"To religion, then, we must hold in every circumstance of our life for our truest comforts; for if we are already happy, it is a pleasure to think that we can make that happiness unending; and if we are miserable, it is very consoling to think there is a place of rest. Thus to the fortunate religion holds out a continuance of bliss, to the wretched a change from pain."— Oliver Goldsmith.

CHAPTER THE THIRTIETH.

1—4. (1) But now, painful contrast of present circumstances. younger than I, the expression is a general one.[a] fathers, intimating that those who insulted him in his distress were the children of the lowest and most degraded of the community. (2) strength . . me, they could not work, they are enervated, good-for-nothing fellows. in whom, etc., R. V., "Men in whom ripe age is perished," i. e. a weak and effete race. (3) R. V., "They are gaunt with want and famine: They gnaw the dry ground in the gloom of wasteness and desolation." (4) mallows, R. V., "Saltwort," a salt herb of the desert. juniper,[b] R. V., "roots of the broom." The root would only be eaten in extremity.

Friends tested by adversity. — Circumstances develop men, reveal character, and show us the real quality of things all around. Let us remember, then, that there is an inner quality of things, and that not until we have pierced to that innermost quality, do we know any man, faith, church, family, or institution. We must count our friends in the storm; we shall know what they are worth when we need them. What do you know about the man you praise so much? Let us hear all you know. Do you answer, He is so pleasant, so agreeable, so friendly, so social, so condescending; there are no airs about him or sign of superior claims? Have you ever been in real distress and invoked his aid? Have you ever attempted, honorably, to borrow money of him? Have you ever sent for him when all the winds of heaven had seized the tower of your life and shaken it? Have you ever been in a position to say to him — I am no longer popular, or esteemed by my fellow-men: you now find me solitary and wo-begone, and if you can put your hand in mine and let me feel a friend's strong grip I shall be glad? If in that hour he answered bravely, with an affirmative generosity, with a self-surrendering liberality, then grapple him to thyself with hooks of steel; he is a child of truth and of God. Men are tested by opposition. The man you find so agreeable has a piety exactly skin-deep. Refuse him his requests, oppose him in his notions, separate yourself from him in his most ardent thinking, forget to answer his letter, and the revelation will surprise you. If otherwise, then esteem him highly; write him down in the record you prize most, and which you will read in your latter days as a kind of second Bible, chronicling things that were good amongst men and helpful along all the school-road of life. — Peop. Bib. Fickleness of friendship. — In Gotthold's Emblems is an illustration of the danger of fickleness in friendship, drawn from a lute, which, having been exposed to the weather, became out of tune. A faithful friendship is like a well-tuned lute, full of sweet sounds. "Nothing, however, is sooner untuned than a lute, and nothing is more fickle than a human friend. The tone of the one changes with the weather; that of the other with fortune. With a clear sky, and a bright sun, and a gentle breeze, you will have friends in plenty; but let fortune frown, and the firmament be overcast, and then your friends will prove like the strings of the lute, of which you will tighten ten before you will find one which will bear the tension or keep the pitch."

now he is scorned by the young

[a] "It was among the chief virtues with the Orientals to show respect to the aged, and their sensibilities were peculiarly keen in regard to any indignity shown to them by the young." — Barnes.

[b] 1 Ki. xix. 4, 5; Ps. cxx. 4.

"Let me not live after my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff of younger spirits whose apprehensive senses all but new things disdain; whose judgments are mere father of their garments; whose constancies expire before their fashions." — Shakespeare.

"My way of life
Is fallen into the sear, the yellow leaf;
And that which should accompany old age,
As honor, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have; but, in their stead,
Curses not loud, but deep, mouth-honor, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, and dare not."
— Shakespeare.

5—8. (5) driven forth, as vagabonds unfit for decent society. cried, etc., outcast tribes naturally become robber-tribes. (6) R. V., "In the clefts of the valleys must they dwell." caves,[c] Heb. holes. Those living in such holes are called Troglodytes. (7) brayed, like wild asses when hungry. See ch. vi. 5; xxiv. 5. gathered together, huddled up in heaps. Delitzsch prefers the idea, "spread out in disorder, amid useless weeds of the desert." (8) fools, worthless, the refuse of society. base men, Heb. men of no name. viler, etc., R. V., "They were scourged out of the land."

Heredity. — The bane of humanity is bad heredity. We cannot get rid of it. The fathers have drunk the cup of sinful pleasures, and the children have drunk the dregs. The wondrous thing about the gospel is that it gives us a new heredity. I count that the very highest and sublimest statement of the doctrine of regeneration. A man grafting trees saws off a limb to put in the scion. If the limb is rotten he has to saw it off nearer to the trunk. We were the youth who despised him described

[c] "Dr. Richardson found a large number of such dwellings in the vicinity of Thebes, many of wh. were large, and beautifully formed, and sculptured with many curious devices. Mr. Rich also saw a large number of such caves not far from Mosul."—Barnes.

Wetzstein gives a full account of Troglodyte caves found in the districts adjoining the Hauran.

Ju. vi. 2.

"Depend upon this truth, that every man is the worse looked upon, and the worse trusted, for being thought to have no religion, in spite of all the pompous, specious epithets he may assume, of esprits forts, free-thinker, or moral philosopher; and a wise atheist, if such a thing there is, would, for his own interest and character in this world, pretend to some religion."—Chesterfield.

the treatment he received at their hands a La. iii. 14, 63; Ps. lxix. 12.

b Wordsworth reminds of resemblance bet. Job and the suffering Messiah in this matter. Is. 6; Ma. xxvi. 67; xxvii. 30; Mk. xiv. 65; xv. 19; Lu. xviii. 32.

c This causes Job's sensitive heart the most poignant pain, "because men's treatment of him comes not from genuine heart-feeling, but from a conventional idea of God's disposition."— Genung.

they take ungenerous advantage of his affliction

d Comp. Ps. cx. 6.

e Vulg. understands, "an increasing crowd of calamities."

f "Express. denotes long-continued persecutions; they proceed like grafted in Adam, but it was discovered that the branch was rotten, and then God began at the very beginning, and grafted us into Jesus Christ, the divine Son of God. Dr. Williams, of Boston, was asked, "How early do you think the training of a child ought to begin?" He replied instantly, "A hundred years before the child's birth." When God would build up a child holy in all things he goes back to the very beginning and gives us our birth in God himself: "Which were born, not of blood nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." The river of life has its sources in the very throne of God, and when we get that life, we have something in us which tends to make us do well instead of doing ill. As from Adam we had this hereditary tendency to do wrong, so when we are grafted into Jesus Christ, and given the eternal life, we have that influence impelling us to holiness. — A. J. Gordon. — Society's problem. — The section brings us face to face with a portion of the lowest stratum of humanity and the dregs of society. Such are found in most countries, Britain not excepted. It is the result not merely of vice and indolence in themselves and their fathers, perhaps for generations, but also probably of oppression and neglect on the part of their superiors. Their existence in a country often, under Divine Providence, is a retribution. It was probably due to Christianity that the description in the text was not verified in the British refugees among the mountains of Wales, and even in the Saxons after the Norman possession. The waifs and roughs, thieves and city Arabs, in the slums of London, are perhaps as much the result of harsh treatment and neglect as of personal depravity. Church and State in general are only now beginning to wake up to a sense of duty in regard to this class of society, when the case has become next to unmanagable. The great problem of the present day — what is to be done for the reclamation and elevation of the sunken masses? Much is capable of being done both by Church and State, under the impulse of loving hearts and the direction of enlightened heads. The gospel of the grace of God, suitably presented and lovingly applied, is the Divinely-appointed, and therefore the most efficient, means of restoring fallen humanity. — Hom. Com.

9—11. (9) their song, his calamities were the subject of low jesting, even by such people. byword, comp. ch. xvii. 6.[a] (10) spare . . face, "He speaks of their conduct to himself with resentment; for it was no requital of any injury he had ever done them. Yet though they might mistake Job's individual feeling to them, he was one of the class that had robbed them, and they avenged their wrongs on him with a malicious delight in the calamities that had overtaken him.[b]" — Cam. Bib. (11) my cord, taken away my strength,[c] cord being fig. for the life-power which holds together our bodily frame. loose the bridle, fig. for casting off all reverence and fear.

Contempt. — In his prosperity Job would have despised the opinion of those who now vex him with their insults. Yet he could never have been complacent under contempt. It has been well said that the greatest man in the world would receive some discomfort if he came to know that the meanest creature on earth despised him from the bottom of his heart. The pride that is quite indifferent to the good or ill opinion of others is not a virtue. Humility will set some value on the favor of the lowest. If we have a spirit of brotherliness we cannot but desire to live on good terms with all our neighbors. — Pul. Com.

12—15. (12) right hand, the place of honor; place of vantage,[d] youth, R. V., "the rabble." The base crowd of his persecutors.[e] push . . feet, jostle me out of the way. raise . . destruction,[f] like an advancing army raising ramparts, etc. (13) mar my path, embarrass his plans. set forward, urge on, as Zec. i. 15. they . . helper, R. V., "Even men that have no helper," i. e. even those who are "without kith or kin;" a proverb among Arabs to denote a worthless person. (14) R. V., "As through a wide breach they come; in the midst of the ruin they roll themselves upon me;" a figure, of how deeply "Job had been wounded by the insolence of men who but a little while since would not have dared to brook his mere glance." — Cox. wide, etc.; fig. fr. besieged fortress. (15) my soul, R. V., "mine honour."

Bearing scorn. — As Pericles was sitting before others in a meeting, a foul-mouthed fellow railed upon him all the day long; at night, when it was dark, and the meeting broke up, the fellow followed him, and railed at him, even to his door, and he took no notice of what he said; but when he came home this is all he said to him: "It is dark; I pray let my man light you home." — Jer. Burroughs. — Trials. — No trial is so sharp but a godly man may meet with it. If Satan has one dart in his quiver more fiery than another, he may shoot it at him. In respect to outward trials and sufferings, but for the inward comfort and future hope afforded them, believers, sometimes, of all men are the most miserable (1 Cor. xv. 19). Tribulation and persecution were promised by the Master. This, at times, is abundantly and amazingly realized. Witness the sufferings of the martyrs of Lyons, Smyrna, and elsewhere, in the second century. "Tortures by racks, by pincers, by faggots, by the tossings of wild beasts, by being seated in burning [iron] chairs, that the fumes of their roasting flesh might come up about them, amid scoffs and jeers from the rabble, when a word of retraction would have saved them." — Hom. Com.

Scorn. —

"He hears
On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal hiss, the sound Of public scorn." — Milton.

an invading army, making for itself a road through the wilderness." — Spk. Com.

"Tribulation is the price we pay for the robe and the crown and the palm." — Bp. Hunt.

"But, (alas!) to make me
A fixed figure, for the hand of Scorn, To point his slow, unmoving finger at."
— Shakespeare.

16—19. (16) upon, R. V., "within," He has lost all spirit. It is as if his soul had gone from him.[a] (17) bones, etc., he felt pain in the night when he looked for rest. sinews, R. V., "the pains that gnaw me," never cease. Symptoms of the disease called elephantiasis. (18) changed, R. V., "disfigured," "the purulent discharge from his ulcers disfigured and made filthy his garment, which stiffened as the discharge dried, and clung to his frame. it bindeth me about. The whole garment clung to his body as it is usual for a man's collar to cling about his throat."— Rawlinson. (19) like dust and ashes, being so long covered with them.[b] he describes his various afflictions

a "The Arabs style a fearful person one who has a watery heart, or whose heart melts away like water." —Noyes.

b Job ii. 8.

Advantages of affliction. — There was a little boy who was so crippled that he could not open his Bible, which he had always before him. A gentleman asked him why he was so fond of reading it. "I like to read the Bible," said he, "because it tells me of Jesus Christ." "Do you think you have believed on Jesus Christ?" "Yes, I do." "What makes you think so?" "Because He enables me to suffer my afflictions patiently." — Saved by affliction. — "I would gladly take your tract," said a soldier in the hospital; "but I have lost both my arms in battle; and I would gladly lose them again, were it possible, rather than not enjoy what I now possess. While I was far away in the woods and did not know I should ever live to get back to camp, I cried unto the Lord in good earnest; and He had mercy on my soul."— Use of affliction.— But you have said and done well, when you look upon it as a rod of God; and He that so smites here will spare hereafter; and if you, by patience and submission, imprint the discipline upon your own flesh, you kill the cause, and make the effect very tolerable; because it is in some sense chosen, and therefore in no sense insufferable. Sir, if you do not look to it, time will snatch your honor from you, and reproach you for not effecting that by Christian philosophy which time will do alone. And if you consider that, of the bravest men in the world, we find the seldomest stories of their children, and the apostles had none, and thousands of the worthiest persons that sound most in story died childless; you will find it a rare act of Providence so to impose upon the worthy a necessity of perpetuating their names by worthy actions and discourses, governments and reasonings. — Jer. Taylor.

vs. 16. "'Why are you so dejected, my friend?' 'Because the kettākalam, i. e. the ruinous time, has caught me.'"— Roberts.

"Affliction is not sent in vain
From that good God who chastens whom he loves."—Southey

"If reproached for covetousness, labor to manifest a larger measure of beneficence, generosity, and Christian charity. If reproached for pride, cultivate more assiduously the mind of Christ in its self-renunciation and genuine humility." — John Bate.

20—22 (20) regardest me, R. V., "lookest at me," i. e. indifferently (omit "not"). This is the worst of all his calamities, when he calls upon God he is met with indifference.[c] (21) become, Heb. changed to become. A painful comparison of the present with the former time of God's favor. thy strong hand, it was much that Job felt that his affliction was from God. (2) liftest, etc., as a mere leaf or stubble. ride upon it, driven resistlessly along. dissolvest my substance, R. V., "dissolvest me in the storm," "descriptive of the whirling, bewildering, perilous seeming spiritual experience that he is compelled to undergo." — Genung.

he mourns the apparent indifference of God

c "Compare the modern poet's wailing. 'O thou art pitiless! They call thee Light, Law, Justice, Love, but Thou art pitiless.'"— Robert Buchanan.

Sand-Storms. — At seven in the morning we left Assa Hagga, our course being due north. At one o'clock we alighted among some acacia trees at Wadi el Halboub, having gone twenty-one miles. We were here at once surprised and terrified by a sight surely one of the most magnificent in the world. In that vast expanse of desert, from W. to N. W. of us, we saw a number of

"Thou raisest me upon the stormy wind. Thou causest me to drive along and vanish in the roaring of the storm."—Delitzsch

Prayer is the rope in the belfrey; we pull it, and it rings the bell up in heaven. Keep on pulling it, and, though the bell is up so high that you cannot hear it ring, it can be heard in the tower of heaven by God, who will give you answers of peace according to your faith — Christmas Evans.

prodigious pillars of sand at different distances, at times moving with great celerity, at others stalking on with majestic slowness; at intervals we thought they were coming in a very few minutes to overwhelm us. Eleven of them ranged alongside of us about the distance of three miles. The greatest diameter of the largest appeared to me, at that distance, as if it would measure ten feet. It was in vain to think of flying; the swiftest horse, or fastest sailing ship, could be of no use to carry us out of this danger.— Bruce's Travels.

Unjust charges against God. — Job's three friends were to a large extent responsible for the patriarch's condition of mind, in which he was driven to charge God with cruelty. They had set up an impossible rule, and the evident falsehood had driven Job to desperation. A harsh orthodoxy is responsible for much unbelief. Self-elected advocates of God have thus a good deal of mischief to answer for. In attempting to defend the Divine government some of these people have presented it in a very ugly light. Whilst they have been dinning their formal precepts into men's ears on what they regard as the authority of revelation, they have been rousing a spirit of revolt, till what is most Divine in man, his conscience, has risen up and protested against their dogmas. From the days of Job till our own time theology has too often darkened the world's idea of God. If we turn from man to God Himself, we shall discover that He is better than His advocates represented him to be. When it is our duty to speak of religion, let us be careful not to fall into the error of Job's friends, and generate hard thoughts of God by narrow, un-Christ-like teachings. — W. F. Adeney.

he contemplates death as the only end

23, 24. (23) know, have abandoned all hope of life. house . . living,[a] Hades, the great involuntary rendezvous of all who live in this world. — Delitzsch. (24) R. V., "Surely against a ruinous heap he will not put forth his hand; though it be in his destruction, one may utter a cry because of these things."[b] Job characterizes himself as a heap of ruins, and, appealing to the Almighty, argues that against such a thing one does not stretch out a hostile hand; neither does one derive advantage to himself from another's calamity. — Cam. Bib. Eighteen distinct interpretations have been given of this difficult verse.

Death.— The words direct us to three things. I. The Divinity of death. The Bible ascribes death to God. 1. Nothing can bring me to death unless Thou wilt; 2. Nothing can prevent me from dying unless Thou pleasest. II. The ordination of death. 1. This appointment is very natural; 2. It is very settled. III. The universality of death. Men when living have houses of various shapes, sizes, values, according to their tastes and means, but in dying they have only one house. All go to one place. What a house is this grave! Ancient, desolate, spacious, crowded.— Homilist.

Equality in the grave.— Diogenes was not in the wrong, who, when the great Alexander, finding him in the charnel-house, asked him what he was seeking for, answered, "I am seeking for your father's bones and those of my slave; but I cannot find them, because there is no difference between them."

Release.—

"If one had watched a prisoner many a year,
Standing behind a barred window-pane,
Fettered with heavy handcuffs and with chain,
And gazing on the blue sky, far and clear;
And suddenly some morning he should hear,
The man had in the night contrived to gain
His freedom, and was safe, would this bring pain?
Ah! would it not to dullest heart appear
Good tidings?
To-day I looked on one
Who lay as if asleep, in perfect peace,
His long imprisonment for life was done—
Eternity's great freedom his release
Had brought. Shall we who loved him call him dead,
And weep, refusing to be comforted?"

[a] 2 Sa. xiv. 14; He. ix. 17.

[b] Ewald's trans. is "Howbeit will not a man in his ruinous fall stretch out his hand? in his calamity will he not complain thereof?"

"What disarrays like death? It defaces the fascination of the beautiful. It breaks the lamp of the wise. It withers the strength of the mighty. It snatches the store of the rich. Kings are stripped of trapping, trophy, treasure: 'Their glory shall not descend after them.'"— R. W. Hamilton.

"God's finger touched him, and he slept."— Tennyson.

his reasons for expecting other treatment

25—28. (25) I weep, Job appeals to the fact that he responded to the suffering poor, but God will not respond to him. (26) for good, for outward prosperity as the reward of piety and charity. evil, in sense of affliction. for light, ch. xxii. 28. (27) prevented me,[a] R. V., "are come upon me." "The bowels are the seat of feeling; and the words 'my bowels boiled' describe the tumult of feelings, griefs, regrets and pains, that worked within him." — Cam. Bib. (28) mourning,[b] "blackened, but not by the sun," rather with a hideous disease. stood up, as an innocent man crying for justice.

Job's compassion for the poor.— I. The poor when they are in trouble are great objects of compassion. II. To exercise compassion towards them is one of the principal duties of a Christian. 1. From political expediency; 2. From Christian necessity. Our exercise or neglect of charity will be the ground of the sentence that in the last day will be pronounced upon us.— C. Simeon.

Kindness to the poor. — The benevolent John Howard, well known for his philanthropy, especially his attention to prisoners, having settled his accounts at the close of a particular year, and found a balance in his favor, proposed to his wife to make use of it in a journey to London, or in any other excursion she chose. "What a pretty cottage for a poor family it would build!" was her answer. This charitable hint met with his cordial approbation, and the money was laid out accordingly.— Disappointment. — Earthly hopes may vanish in smoke, but the hope in Christ is sure. Even this may be lost sight of as the beacon-light is obscured by the driving storm; but it is not extinguished. For our Christian hope rests on the eternal constancy of God, and it concerns not fading and fragile earthly things, but the everlasting verities of heaven. Browning describes the man whose heart and life are strong against disappointment —

> "One who never turned his back, but marched breast forward;
> Never doubted clouds would break;
> Never dreamed, though right were worsted, wrong would triumph;
> Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better, > Sleep to wake."— W. F. Adeney.

29—31. (29) dragons, R. V., "jackals." owls, R. V., "ostriches;" both these creatures utter the most dismal screams,[c] and live in the midst of desolation. (30) upon me,[d] R. V., "and falleth from me," it peals off in blackened flakes. (31) R. V., "Therefore is my," etc. organ, pipe. The common wind instrument, as the harp was the stringed. The joyous music of his former life is turned to wailing.

The needed chord. —

In every heart there is music,
When touched by the Master Hand,
In every life is melody,
Sad, joyous, plaintive, grand.

But should there be a minor chord,
And fraught perchance with fears,
A quivering tone that saddens the heart,
A sound that is full of tears:

Dread not, 'tis the touch of the Master,
But list to the wondrous strain
That follows, of tender pathos,
And rises to sweet refrain.

And know that whatever the changes
Trusting soul, that may come to thee,
Be sure 'tis the one chord needed
For God's perfect harmony. — Helen Stickney.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIRST.

1—4. (1) a covenant, Job now utters his last and strongest assertions of righteousness. mine eyes,[e] "at the outset he strikes the key-note of the highest and most spiritual morality." — Cox. (2) what portion, would there be to one proved unchaste. (3) to the wicked,[f] so Job grants that if he had been wicked he might reasonably have expected the severe judgments of the a Old Eng. for unexpectedly came upon me, surprised me.

b Delitzsch thinks reference is to the dirty black dress of mourners.

"Famine in thy cheeks,
Need and oppression starveth in thy eyes,
Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back,
The world is not thy friend, nor the world's law."
— Shakespeare.

"To mortal men great loads allotted be; but of all packs no pack like poverty." — Herrick.

his forlorn and sad condition

c "Job compares his mournings to the long melancholy cries of the jackal and ostrich: described by travelers in the East as inexpressibly mournful and piercing." — Spk. Com.

d Ps. cxix. 83; La. iv. 8.

"Poverty makes people satirical — soberly, sadly, bitterly satirical." — Friswell.

Every day of meeting sorrow superbly makes the life more grand. — Anna Robertson Brown.

he appeals to God's perfect knowledge

e Mat. v. 28, 29; 2 Pe. ii. 14.

f Pr. x. 29; xxi. 15; 2 Pe. ii. 1.

Almighty. strange punishment, R. V., "disaster." (4) not see, "here 'ways' and 'steps' are said of things so slight as the glance of the eye. These are 'seen' and 'counted' by God. The thought of God in these verses is as lofty as the conception of morality is close and inward." — Cam. Bib.

God's watchfulness. — Job speaks of God as counting all his steps. Therefore God takes note of every one of them. No false step can escape His notice. The little slip is not unseen by God. He sees us stumble when we do not fall, and observes how we stray for a brief time, even though we afterwards return to the right path. This truth has an encouraging side to it. God knows how many steps we have taken; therefore if the way is long and weary He has not forgotten us, and He can give us rest and strength. He knows how many steps we have yet to take; therefore He will give us a sufficient supply of grace, whether the road be long or short, and He will not expect more of us than the length or brevity of life permits. — Pul. Com.

"This chapter is perhaps the most lovely in the whole poem, its morality is that of the Sermon on the Mount." — Cox.

"O perilous mouths, that bear in them one and the selfsame tongue, either of condemnation or approof! bidding the law, make court'sy to their will; hooking both right and wrong to the appetite, to follow as it draws." — Shakespeare.

Self-mastery. —

Saint Augustine! well hast thou said,
That of our vices we can frame
A ladder, if we will but tread
Beneath our feet each deed of shame.

. . . . .

All thoughts of ill; all evil deeds
That have their root in thoughts of ill:
Whatever hinders or impedes
The action of the nobler will;

All these must first be trampled down
Beneath our feet, if we would gain
In the bright fields of fair renown
The right of eminent domain. — Longfellow.

You must take possession of Christ for salvation; but to win a crown, Christ must take possession of you. — H. W. Webb-Peploe.

5, 6. (5) vanity, falsehood. deceit, these are personified. They have not been his companions. (6) weighed, in balances of justice. He desires that his merits be carefully weighed to see if anything has been lacking in him. Comp. Dan. v. 27.[a]

he desires to be judged by his character

The beauty of character. —

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd:
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course untrimm'd;
But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest;
Nor shall death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest:
So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee. — Shakespeare.

a "He consents to have his life tried in the most exact and rigid manner, and was willing to abide the result."— Barnes.

1 Sa. ii. 3; Ps. xliv. 21; Is xxvi. 7; Da. v. 27.

"Of all unseen things, the most radiant, the most beautiful, the most divine is character."—Drummond.

7, 8. (7) out of the way, i. e. the right way, the way of virtue. after mine eyes,[b] determined to gain what I coveted; if the mind consented to what the eye invited. blot . . hands, clean hands being emblematic of innocence.[c] (8) offspring, R. V., "the produce of my field," (comp. Lev. xxvi. 16,) let the harvests of what I have sown be destroyed. My shoots.[d] and if he has done ill, that he may suffer

Value of character.— Canning wisely wrote in 1801, "My road must be through character to power; I will try no other course; and I am sanguine enough to believe that this course, though not perhaps the quickest, is the surest." You may admire men of intellect, but something more is necessary before you will trust them. Hence Lord John Russell once observed, in a sentence full of truth, "It is the nature of party in England to ask the assistance of men of genius, but to follow the guidance of men of character."— Smiles.— Character-building.— Many men build as cathedrals were built, the part nearest the ground finished, but that part which soars towards heaven, the turrets and the spires, forever incomplete.—Beecher. — Every man has at b Nu. xv. 39; Eccl. xi. 9; 1 Jno. ii. 16.

c Job xvii. 9; Ps. xxiv. 4; Comp. Mat. xxvii. 24.

d De. xxviii. 38-41.

"I hope I shall always possess firmness and virtue enough to maintain what I consider the most enviable of all times in his mind, the ideal of what he should be, but is not. That ideal may be high and complete, or it may be quite low and insufficient; yet in all men that really seek to improve, it is better than the actual character.— Parker.

titles the character of an 'honest man.' "— George Washington.

9—12. (9) deceived, befooled.[a] woman, reference is to a married woman, and to the sin of adultery. laid wait, comp. ch. xxiv. 15. (10) grind,[b] as a bond-slave. There is reference, however, in this verse, to the deeper moral degradations of the captive. (10) this, adultery. heinous crime,[c] Hos. vi. 9, marg.; Lev. xviii. 17. Adultery was a capital crime in Israel, Deut. xxii. 22; John viii. 5. (12) fire, etc., a descrip. of the character of this sin, consuming the manhood, tending utterly to ruin and destroy a man.[d] destruction, Abaddon, or hell.

he speaks of wrongs for which, if guilty, he would deserve to suffer a Eccl. vii. 26.

b "Grinding is the work assigned in the East to the lowest slaves and esp. to women."— Spk. Com.

"Let my wife be the mill-wench to another; be his abject slave, and be treated by him with the deepest indignity."— Barnes.

c Ge. xxxviii. 24; De. xxii. 22.

d Pr. vi 27, 29, 32.

Pure characters.— Thank God, there are several cases of unsoiled character in the sacred history. No flaw was ever alleged against the beautiful Abel, the chaste and upright Joseph, the faithful Obadiah, with the heavenly seers Elijah and Elisha, or against Daniel, Ezra, and Nehemiah; and if Moses erred, it was only that "he spake unadvisedly with his lips;" and if this was set down as a sin by the Divine Lawgiver, it only shows how rigid and severe is His test, especially considering how many temptations and provocations the meekest man had to contend with. But what shall we say of Job, whom God Himself calls a perfect man, or of John, "the beloved disciple," or of St. Paul, against whom no flaw can be alleged? But, after all, how many, of whom better things might have been expected, have been painful specimens of the frailty of human nature and its fatal tendency to sin. Adam, Noah, David, and Solomon, how do all tend to humble us, to show how frail is humanity without God! — Holdich.— Pure water from pure sources.— A few years ago we were told that when we traveled in Europe, it was not safe to drink the water of the great cities. New pumping engines, new pipes of the latest pattern, new faucets in the houses could not remedy the evil. There was only one way, and that was to have pure water at the sources of supply, and this is what has been done. So that in the great capitals of Europe the water suppply is purer and safer than most of which we have boasted in this country. For ourselves, our first aim should be new hearts, purer souls, and then we can most easily have the noble outward life we are seeking.— Peloubet.

"Every permitted sin incrusts the windows of the soul and blinds our vision, and every victory over evil clears the vision of the soul, so that we can see God a little plainer."— J. Wilbur Chapman.

13—15. (13) despise . . maid servant, he might have "despised" or slighted the cause of his servants when they had ground of complaint against him.[e] But in fact he had treated them not as possessions but as persons, who had rights as well as himself, 14, 15.[f] This treatment of them was due to the feeling that all men are children of the same God,[g] who will avenge wrong done to any, whether slave or free.— Cam. Bib. (14) riseth up, to judge the cause of the despised and oppressed servant. visiteth, to make search into the matter.

he speaks of his servants as, by birth, his equals

e "This recognition of the rights of servants, and of their common origin from the same Father as their masters (vs. 15), is an evidence that slavery is a contravention of that primitive jurisprudence wh. regulated human society in the age and country of Job, and was a part of the deposit of Divine tradition to man."— Wordsworth.

f Ex. xxi. 20; Le. xxv. 43; Col. iv. 1; Ja. ii. 13.

g Mal. ii. 10; Eph. vi. 9; Col. iv. 1, 9; Philemon 16.

The sinner's defense in the day of sudden visitation (vs. 14). — I. What shall we do? 1. Shall we flee? 2. Attempt to resist? 3. Invoke the aid of our fellow sinners, saints, angels? 4. Harden ourselves to brave our fate? 5. Throw ourselves on the mercy of God, His general mercy, His mercy in Christ? II. What shall we answer? 1. That we are sinless? 2. That we were driven into sin by an irresistible necessity? 3. That we did not receive sufficient warning? 4. That we were too busy to attend to religion? 5. That our punishment is disproportionate to our guilt? 6. That we ought to be favored with a new term of probation? Apply both of these questions to individuals, and urge on them the acceptance of the only method of salvation.— G. Brooks.

The happiest man. — The happiest man on earth, nay, the only happy man, is the "man in Christ." In him thou beholdest at the same time, the most important, as well as the most mysterious phenomenon under heaven. His exterior indeed at most, but little or nothing of his dignity That which distinguishes him from others is within. Let us call up for once such an individual before us. We ask, Whence art thou? He points upwards. What is thy Father? He is an architect. What has He built? The world. What is His name? "The Lord of Hosts." What, is God thy Father? Yes, God is my Father. Why dost thou call Him thy Father? Because He loves me with paternal affection. I was begotten by Him. And dost thou possess great riches? My treasure is God. — Krummacher.—The relations of masters and servants, employers and employed, have undergone vast changes since

"I tremble," said President Jefferson once speaking of slavery in the United States, "when I remember that God is just."

"By the law of slavery, man, created in the image of God, is divested of the human character, and declared to be a mere chattel" — Chas. Sumner.

those ancient days. We all live under the equal protection of the laws of the land, and the general spirit of the law is to protect the weaker against the stronger, the poor against the encroachment of the rich. But in Christianity this relation receives a new meaning and sanctity by being brought under the great central relation in which we stand to Christ. And we have a beautiful example of the Christian treatment of the servant in St. Paul's Epistle to Philemon. To set our servants good examples, and to care for their moral and spiritual welfare, is the duty of a Christian master or mistress. — Pul. Com. Slavery. — It is observed by Homer, that "a man loses half his virtue the day that he becomes a slave;" he might have added with truth that he is likely to lose more than half when he becomes a slave-master. — Whately.

he speaks of his kindness to the poor

16—18. (16) desire, kindness to the poor was a virtue of great importance in the patriarchal ages.[a] Comp. Eliphaz's charge, ch. xxii. 7. to fail, in vain expectation of relief. (17) myself alone, without regarding the claims of strangers or guests.[b] (18) he . . me, rather, he (the fatherless) grew up with me. Job probably did not achieve his greatness; he was born to it. Even from his youth he took the place toward the poor of a patron and father.— Davidson. her, the widow; vs. 16.

Hospitality (vs. 17).— We did not arrive at the foot of the mountain till after sunset, and it was almost night when we entered the plain; but as it was full of villages, mostly inhabited by Maronites, we entered into the first we came to, to pass the night there. It was the priest of the place who wished to receive us; he gave us a supper under the trees, before his little dwelling. As we were at table, there came by a stranger, wearing a white turban, who, after having saluted the company, sat himself down to the table, without ceremony; ate with us during some time, and then went away, repeating several times the name of God. They told us it was some traveler, who, no doubt, stood in need of refreshments, and who had profited by the opportunity, according to the customs of the East, which is to exercise hospitality at all times, and towards all persons.— De la Roque.— John Howard.— His sublime life proved that even physical weakness could remove mountains in the pursuit of an end recommended by duty. The idea of ameliorating the condition of prisoners engrossed his whole thoughts and possessed him like a passion; and no toil nor danger nor bodily suffering could turn him from that great purpose of his life.

"By the law of slavery, man, created in the image of God, is divested of the human character, and declared to be a mere chattel" — Chas. Sumner.

a "Job had a good conscience in the recollection of his dealings with the poor. It could not have been for any deficiency in the exercise of these virtues that his calamities had come upon him."— Barnes.

b "The stern law of Arab. hospitality demands that whenever a guest is present at a meal, whether there be much or little, the first and best portion must be laid before the stranger." — Robinson.

Lu. xiv. 13, 14; Ro. xii. 13.

and of his aid to orphans

19—21. (19) perish, letting them die without giving them any relief.[c] (20) loins . . me, the parts of the body benefited by Job are poetically personified, and represented as thanking him.[d] (21) my help in the gate, at the place of justice, because he saw that the judges would render for him a favorable verdict.[e]

Making a poor man happy.— Dr. Brown, who was many years Bishop of Cork and Ross, observing one day, at a visitation, a stout country parson of the consistory, with a tattered gown and an old wig, particularly examined him as to the state of religion in the parish in which he officiated. The clergyman, who felt that honest poverty was no disgrace, answered the bishop's question with good sense and modesty, and said that he was a curate of about forty pounds a year, for which he did the duty of two churches; that he had a family of eight children, and not being able to afford a horse, he walked every year up to the visitation, a distance of thirty miles. He added, that if it were not for the additional labor of his own hands, with those of his wife and eldest son, they must want the necessaries of life. The bishop heard this artless story with much attention, and praising the conduct of the clergyman, said he would take the first opportunity that occurred to him to better his situation. With the Bishop of Cork to fulfil a promise was a point of duty, and not a matter of convenience, and in less than three months he presented the curate of two parishes with a living worth between four and five hundred pounds a year. The poor curate on receiving this intelligence hastened to town with the whole of his family to thank his generous benefactor. The bishop was pleased with so unsophisticated a mark of gratitude, entertained the whole family with great hospitality, and when they took their leave, presented each with some domestic gift. — Percy Anec.

c Ja. ii. 15, 16.

d "The blessing of the thankful is transferred fr. the person to the limbs wh. need, and are benefited by the warmth imparted." —Delitzsch.

e "Job had a strong party who favored him, and might readily have carried any point he liked."—Barnes

Job. xxix. 7-10.

had he failed in these duties he would deserve to suffer

22, 23. (22) arm fall,[f] the falling away of the limbs was one of the most extreme features of the disease (elephantiasis) fr. wh. Job was probably suffer-

f "Let my shoulder fall out

ing. arm, the forearm; let forearm be loosened away from the upper. bone, chanel-bone; the higher bone of the arm. (23) terror to me, the fear of God's judgments ever kept me in the ways of righteousness. his highness, etc., R. V., "his excellency, I could no nothing."[a] The majesty of God was so real to him that he dare not have persisted even had he begun such a course.

The fear of God a good man's preservative against sin. — Seen in the case of Joseph and Nehemiah as well as of Job. The consideration of God's displeasure against the sinner and the punishment threatened against the sin is one motive for resisting temptation and practicing good, though not the highest. Rather, it is the last source of defense against temptation when others fail. It is better to abstain from sin and practice good, from hatred to sin itself and from love to God and good-doing, than from fear of His wrath. In gospel exhortations to resist temptation and to do good, the appeals rather are made to the believer's gratitude for mercies received, to his position and privileges in Christ, and to the example of his Divine Master and Father, than to his fears of punishment and the Divine anger. Fear is a right and important motive, but rather for the servant than the child. "Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry: Abba, Father" (Rom. viii. 15). Yet a loving and right-minded child will fear to offend a father, even more than a servant fears to offend a master. Love is a more powerful principle than fear; yet fear may be called in to help when love is not sufficiently strong in itself. — Hom. Com.

of its shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from its bone." — Delitzsch.

a Ps. lxxvi. 7; cxix. 120.

Vs. 22. "It is said, 'If I have done as you say, may these legs be broken.' 'Yes, let these eyes be blind, if I have seen the thing you mention.' 'May this body wither and faint, if I am guilty of that crime.' 'If I uttered that expression, then let the worms eat out this tongue.' "— Roberts.

24—28. (24) gold my hope, he had shown no excessive delight in earthly possessions.[b] (25) rejoiced, as if I might confide in this gathered wealth, and so was taken away from trust in God.[c] (26) sun . . moon, as objects of worship. "The Zabian form of adoration, the earliest defection from true worship." (27) kissed my hand, "recognized form of adoration which seemed to have been observed in secret long after the public worship of sun, moon and stars had been forbidden." — Cox. (28) denied the God, R. V., "lied to God," who made both sun and moon. The crime was treason against the Supreme Being.

Spiritual idolatry (vss. 24–26). — Job declared that he had never been guilty of this great impiety. Consider then — I. The disposition here specified. An undue regard to wealth is extremely common in this world. II. The sinfulness of it. It denies in fact — 1. That God is the only source of happiness to man; 2. That He is all-sufficient to that end. Improvement: — (1) For reproof; (2) For instruction in righteousness. — Simeon.

Worshiping empty bottles. — We have read of a lady missionary in India who on visiting a certain town found the place smitten with cholera. She gave to some of the patients a specific for cholera, and ordered further supplies of the medicine for other sufferers. On her return she was delighted, on meeting the chief man of the place, to hear him say, "We have been so much benefited by your medicine that we have decided to accept also your God." To prove the reality of what he said, he led her into their temple, where she saw the empty bottles arranged in order on a shelf; and immediately the whole company of natives prostrated themselves upon the floor in worship to the bottles as a god. It is quite possible that very Christian people may sometimes fall into an analogous idolatry. An excessive reverence or admiration for certain formulas of worship, capable of conveying a true blessing when the worship is really in the Spirit, but useless as empty medicine bottles when the Spirit is lacking, may not be so remote in character from the worship of empty bottles. — D. Berger.

so also, if he had atheistically trusted in wealth

b "This not a crime wh. has been laid to his charge by his friends· his conscience, prob. more enlightened than theirs, warned him of a danger, wh. to them may have seemed trifling."—Spk. Com.

1 Ti. vi. 17; Je. ix. 23.

c "Covetousness is covert idolatry, as it transfers the heart fr. the Creator to the creature." (Col. iii. 5.) — Fausset.

1 Ki. xix. 18; Hos. xiii. 2.

The worshiper is always being assimilated to his idol. He who adores gold crushes and quenches the finer spiritual qualities; appetite for worldly things dominates the inner man.

29—31. (29) hated me, consideration for enemies was a sign of high and noble character, a foreshadowing of the spirit Christ enjoined. Eliphaz had made this rejoicing a test of righteousness.[d] lifted up myself, in malicious triumph, at the calamities of my enemies. (30) R. V., "Yea, I suffered not my mouth to sin by asking his life with a curse."[e] He had never even, in his haste, cursed an enemy or wished a death. Comp. Prov. xxiv. 17 ff.; xxv. 21 f. (31) men . . not Job, applies to the men of his tent to say whether he had ever neglected to show due hospitality. Oh, etc., R. V., "Who can find one that hath not been satisfied with his flesh?" His very servants were filled with the spirit of hospitality. The apodosis is wanting.

or if he had triumphed over his foes

d Mat. v. 43–46.

e Ro. xii. 14.

"By demanding his life with a curse or imprecation."— Spk. Com.

"Stories of judgments by wh. the want of hospitality has been visited, form an important element of the popular traditions of the Arabs."—Delitzsch

"Happy the man who sees a God employed in all the good and ill that chequers life." Cowper.

Kindness to enemies. — After the dispersion of the Spanish Armada in 1588, Juan Lomes de Medina, who had been general of twenty hulks, was, with about two hundred and sixty men, driven in a vessel to Anstruther in Scotland, after suffering great hunger and cold for six or seven days. Notwithstanding the object for which this fleet had been sent, and the oppressive conduct of the Spaniards to the Scottish merchants who traded with them, these men were most humanely treated. Mr. James Melvil, the minister, told the Spanish officer first sent on shore, that they would find nothing among them but Christianity and works of mercy. The laird of Anstruther, and a great number of the neighboring gentlemen entertained the officers, and the inhabitants gave the soldiers and marines kail, pottage and fish, — the minister having addressed his flock, as Elisha did the king of Israel in Samaria, "Give them bread and water."

or if he had been inhospitable

32—35. (32) in the street, as nobody would give him shelter. to the traveller, refers to his universal hospitality. His house was on the wayside, and welcome given to all.[a] (33) covered, etc., when h did fall into mistake and do wrong, did he cover and hide it up? as Adam,[b] could they accuse him of endeavor to cloak his sins and play the hypocrite? (34) Did I fear, R. V., "Because I feared the great multitude and the contempt of the families terrified me." went not out, as if afraid to meet any one who may have found out my fault. "Have I ever acted like a secretly guilty man?" (35) R. V., "Oh that I had one to hear me! (Lo, here is my signature, let the Almighty answer me!) and that I had the indictment which mine adversary hath written;" stating charges openly, so that he might answer them.[c]

Entertaining angels unawares. — Abraham supposed the three strangers (Gen. xviii) to be men; but his course toward them was such that he had no reason for regret when he found they were angels. That is a good way of treating everybody whom we encounter, so that if they should turn out to be angels, they would have no reason to complain of us, and we nothing to be sorry for in our treatment of them. — Trumbull. There is a classical fable that Jupiter and Mercury came down to earth to a wonderfully fertile valley that was once the bed of a lake, and being poorly clad they were treated with great neglect and disrespect by the inhabitants, who snubbed the poor but welcomed the rich. But a poor couple, Philemon and Bauces, entertained the strangers in the best way they could. As a reward their pitcher of milk was always full. The next morning the valley had become a lake, which had drowned the village and its wicked inhabitants, while the cottage of Philemon had become a marble palace.

a "In the Houran a traveler may alight at any house he pleases; a mat will be immediately spread for him, coffee made, and a breakfast or dinner set before him. It is a point of honor with the host never to receive the smallest return from a guest."—Burckhardt.

b Hos. vi. 7.

c Heb. tav, my mark, from tavah, to sign.

he could answer all unjust accusation

36, 37. (36) take it, my adversary's written accusation.[d] "Once more and for the last time he appeals to God for a fair and open trial, and once more and for the last time he proclaims his integrity to heaven."—Cox. shoulder, "as that which was his greatest honor. He would even wear it as a diadem upon his brows, as that which would give him kingly dignity and adornment."—Cam. Bib. (37) number, etc., every act of the course of my life. prince,[e] with high and royal bearing.

Report of character. — A young man's character was such as to excite universal disapprobation. He could no longer resist the pressure of public sentiment. He disposed of his property and attempted to resume business in a distant part of the country; but his character, or, rather, his reputation, had gone before him. Men regarded him with suspicion. He was unable to secure the confidence and countenance necessary to success. In this case his sins went before him to his new place of residence. The sins of men go before them still further. They go before them to the judgment, and will be ready to meet them there. What a fearful meeting! how impossible to escape from their accusings and consequences! It is related of a prisoner, that after he had toiled for months in constructing a mine from his dungeon, by means of which he hoped to escape, when at last he broke ground, and let in the light of day, which he had so fondly hoped to enjoy, the first object he saw was an armed jailor waiting to arrest him! That jailer struck far less dismay and despair to the heart of the prisoner than meeting with his sins will strike to the heart of the sinner at the day of judgment.—Jeffers.

d "Two documents would be required, the accuser's statement, and the reply of the accused. In the representation of the judgment before Osiris, Thoth, the accuser or advocate, stands before the throne with a scroll in his left hand, and the recording pen in his right: the person on trial stands behind, holding up his hand, in attestation of innocence."—Spk. Com.

e Ge. xxxii. 28.

he is willing to suffer if he has been unjust

38—40. (38) land, if the land declares I have no rightful claim to it.[f] furrows . . complain, R. V., "weep together;" the very ground cries out to f Job. xx. 19.

heaven against the wrong done to the rightful owner, (39) without money, without paying due wages for tillage. to lose their life, lit. the soul of the owners thereof to breathe out. "Oppressions which brought the owners to death, after which their land was seized without money; or oppressive appropriation of the land so that the rightful owner was brought to death through penury and misery."— Cam. Bib. (40) thistles,[a] brambles, thorns. cockle, noxious weeds. words, etc., the controversial words with his friends.[b]

Silent preaching. — We may have no words: we may be without argument, or learning, or power of exposition, and yet by suffering, as if in fellowship with Christ, we may be revealing to other men sources of truth undiscovered and unsuspected by them. Let us, then, take the largest view of life, and not the smallest; let us bring in the whole to assist the part; let us bring within our purview the great field of time in order to illustrate the immediate moment. — Peop. Bib.

Words. —

Nothing is lost: the drop of dew,
That trembles on the leaf or flower,
Is but exhaled to fall anew,
In summer's thunder shower;
Perchance to shine within the bow,
That fronts the sun at fall of day;
Perchance to sparkle in the flow
Of fountains far away.
So with our words: or harsh or kind,
Utter'd, they are not all forgot;
But leave some trace upon the mind, Pass on, yet perish not. — J. C. Prince.

a Ge. iii. 18.

b "He had vindicated his character, sustained is positions, and they had nothing to reply." — Barnes.

Job answers accusations that applied to life and conduct; we must not suppose that before the heart-searching God He declared his absolute personal righteousness. Even the good man knoweth "the plague of his own heart."

"A blemish may be taken out of a diamond by careful polishing; but if your words have the least blemish there is no way to efface it."—Confucius.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SECOND.

Elihu

his anger burns

1–3. (1) righteous . . eyes, refusing to admit their conclusion that he must be a sinner because he was so afflicted. (2) wrath, indignation, not anger. Elihu,[c] My God is He. Buzite, descendant of Buz. Ram,[d] a family of the Buzites. justified himself, was more anxious to affirm his own innocence than to find the righteousness of God in afflicting him. He had even charged God with injustice towards him. Comp. xl. 8. (3) yet had condemned, i. e. he blames them bec. though they condemned Job they were silenced by him, and unable to show his real error.

Enthusiasm. — Enthusiasm is the normal condition of the true Christian. Sometimes in the month of February, when the thermometer is away down at zero, an ignorant man says, "The sun doesn't give as much heat as usual; it must be burning out and cooling down." But on the very day when the thermometer is at zero, if you could send a pyramid of ice fifty miles in diameter, flying toward the sun at the rate of 270 millions of miles in a minute, it would melt as fast as it flew. We are at a different angle to the sun in February from what we are in July. If you are a cold Christian, you are in a wrong attitude toward Jesus Christ; away from duty, away from prayer, away in worldliness, away in unbelief, indulging in some besetting sin. When you get into the right position with reference to Christ, the blessing will descend upon you most abundantly. — Theodore Cuyler.

c "Elihu is the new wisdom of the rising world, that, like the Grecian chorus, with the sanction of the Almighty, sets at naught the subtle prejudices of the older generation." — Dean Stanley.

d "The name seems connected with Aram, and the language of Elihu is more strongly marked by Aramaic forms than any part of the book." — Spk. Com.

he commences his reply

4–6. (4) waited, a patient listener, though his feelings were aroused. till Job, etc., R. V., "to speak unto Job." elder than he, and custom did not permit the younger to speak until the seniors had quite done. (6) young, "Elihu's youth determines the character of his thought, which is self-confident, constructive, unconventional, less bound by tradition and precedent than that of his friends." — Genung. durst . . opinion, "the tone of the original is at once less boastful and more confident than the Eng. Vers." — Spk. Com.

A young man. — The elders have spoken; now is the time for youth. Wisdom does not wholly reside with age. In the present day an American freedom is doing away with old-fashioned restraints upon youth, and young people are enjoying a prominence which was once regarded as not becoming. Whether the change is wholly profitable may be gravely questioned. But most assuredly it is not without some advantages. There is an élan, a fresh-vs. 5. "When men are completely confounded, when they have not a word to say in reply, it is said 'In their vayila, i. e. mouth, there is no answer.'" — Roberts.

ness, and a vivacity which only the young can contribute to life; all the world should be thankful for the breezy vigor that accompanies youthful activity, for all the world is the better for it. — Pul. Com.

he perceives that the aged are not therefore wise

7—9. (7) Days, age should give wisdom, let it be heard. (8) spirit in man,[a] it is not mere age and experience that make men wise and able to teach others. It is according as his spirit is or is not enlightened from on high that one speaks words of wisdom or the contrary. — Rawlinson. Elihu plainly regarded himself as Divinely guided.[b] (9) Great . . wise, not by mere fact of their high position or lengthened years.[c]

Experience. — I. Experience is a possession too often dearly bought and lightly valued. To the wise it is wealth. 1. A beacon, warning from many a rock; 2. A repast: true, it has its bitter herbs; 3. A harp: the mercies of the past put a song in his mouth: 4. A book: wherein he reads of his own heart and of a gracious God. II. Experience is a trust. Days should speak — 1. Of your past mercies; 2. Of your past trials; 3. Of your past sins. III. Experience is a recorded history. Days do speak; they speak to God, and He sends a suitable reply.

Inspiration. — With the inspiration of Nature to illuminate what the inspiration of Revelation has left obscure, heresy in certain whole departments shall become impossible. With the demonstration of the naturalness of the supernatural, scepticism even may come to be regarded as unscientific. And those who have wrestled long for a few bare truths to ennoble life and rest their souls in thinking of the future will not be left in doubt. — Drummond. — Inspired instinct is greater and trustier than cultivated intellect. Let nature speak. Let all that is deepest in you have full expression. We so often talk up through the burden of our information, acquisition, attainment of any and every kind. We are kept back by the very fact that we may possibly be offending something that is written in the books. We more frequently go by the book than by the soul. By "the book" we do not mean the Book of Revelation, but the man-made book; the traditional system, doctrine, or thought; the scientific form: we are afraid lest we should offend there; and so inspired instinct has not fair play in this great process of spiritual education. If our instinct, being inspired, had fair, free, ample utterance, it would put an end to many a wordy fray. — Peop. Bib.

a Comp. Ge. xl. 8; xli. 16; Da. ii. 20, Mat. xi. 25; 1 Co. ii. 10, 12; xii. 8.

b "Understanding or ability to form a judgment is not limited to old age, but only by our allowing the spirit to rule in us in its connection with the Divine." — Delitzsch.

c Eccl. iv. 13; Jno. vii. 48; 1 Co. ii. 7, 8.

"The day following is scholar to that which went before." — Seneca.

"The virtue wh. nature denies, experience brings to wise men." — Politician.

hence, he, though young, will speak

10—13. (10) mine opinion, knowledge given him by the Almighty. (11) "In Elihu's opinion the cause of the three friends was much better than their advocacy of it." — Cam. Bib. searched out, intimating that their arguments required much searching out and hunting up. (12) attended, closely, so as to weigh well the value of what you said. convinced, refuted, convicted. (13) Lest, R. V., "Beware lest," etc.,[d] i. e. do not assert that Job was wiser than you had supposed, and his logic only to be answered by God.

Objects of wisdom. —

The wise man, says the Bible, walks with God,
Surveys far on the endless line of life;
Values his soul, thinks of eternity;
Both worlds considers and provides for both;
With reason's eye his passions guards; abstains
From evil; lives on hope; on hope, the fruit
Of faith; looks upward, purifies his soul,
Expands his wings, and mounts into the sky;
Passes the sun, and gains his Father's house,
And drinks with angels from the fount of bliss. — Pollok.

d Trans., "Lest ye should say, We have found out wisdom, God shall thrust him down, not man." — Revised English Bible.

Is. v. 21; Je. ix. 23; 1 Co. iii. 18, 19.

"In the spiritual world, he will be wise who courts acquaintance with the most ordinary and transparent facts in nature." — Drummond.

he will now deliver his opinion

14—17. (14) directed, the reason why he has not been answered is because I have not yet spoken! with your speeches, using your arguments. (15) were amazed,[e] better, are amazed. An exclamation of astonishment that they could find nothing wherewith to answer Job. left off, etc., R. V., "have not a word to say." Elihu speaks to the spectators about the condition of the three friends. (16) waited, at the close of Job's last speech. (17) mine opinion, declare my knowledge.

Avoiding censoriousness in controversy. — Mr. Newton of London was a very candid and friendly critic, and was often applied to by young authors for his opinions and remarks, which he would give very candidly, and sometimes under the name of Nibblings. On one of these occasions, a practical essay was put into his hand which he approved; but a letter was appended, addressed to an obscure and contemptible writer, who had said very unwarrantable and absurd things on the subject, and whom therefore the writer attacked with little ceremony. The following is a specimen of some of Mr. Newton's nibblings: "Were the affair mine, I would take no notice of Mr. ———; but if I did, it should be with the hope, at least with the desire, of doing good, even to him. This would make me avoid every harsh epithet. He is not likely to be benefited by calling him a fool. The evangelists simply relate what is said and done, and use no bitterness nor severity, even when speaking of Herod, Pilate, or Judas. I wish their manner was more adopted in controversy." — Whitecross.

e "It may be that Elihu here turns from the friends to Job, and so passes from the second person to the third." — Fausset.

"A man might frame and let loose a star to roll in its orbit, and yet not have done as memorable a thing before God as he who lets go a golden-orbed truth to roll through the generations of time."—Beecher.

18—20. (18) matter, R. V., "words." Though the friends can say nothing, I can. constraineth me, puts pressure on me, forcing me to speak. (19) belly, bosom, "from which the words of Orientalists in speaking seem to come more than with us; they speak gutturally."—Faussett. burst, etc., Matt. ix. 17. (20) refreshed, or that I may breathe, for he felt almost suffocated with keeping in the truth he knew.

he asserts that he is full of matter

